As yet it is extremely doubtful if we shall be able to build—anything—this year. The amount received for our building fund is negligible. Times are hard, no doubt, and our good friends simply haven't the money to send us. Just now we do not know what will happen next year, as we cannot possibly accommodate all the new applicants in our present Seminary.

Some way must be found. It does seem terrible to think of turning down applications from those who wish to devote their lives to the work of the Missions, yet they must have a roof over their head if they are to undergo a period of preparation. This time the situation is really serious as far as we are concerned. Yet we know that Providence will find a way for us. And the way may be to inspire some good benefactor to come to our assistance.

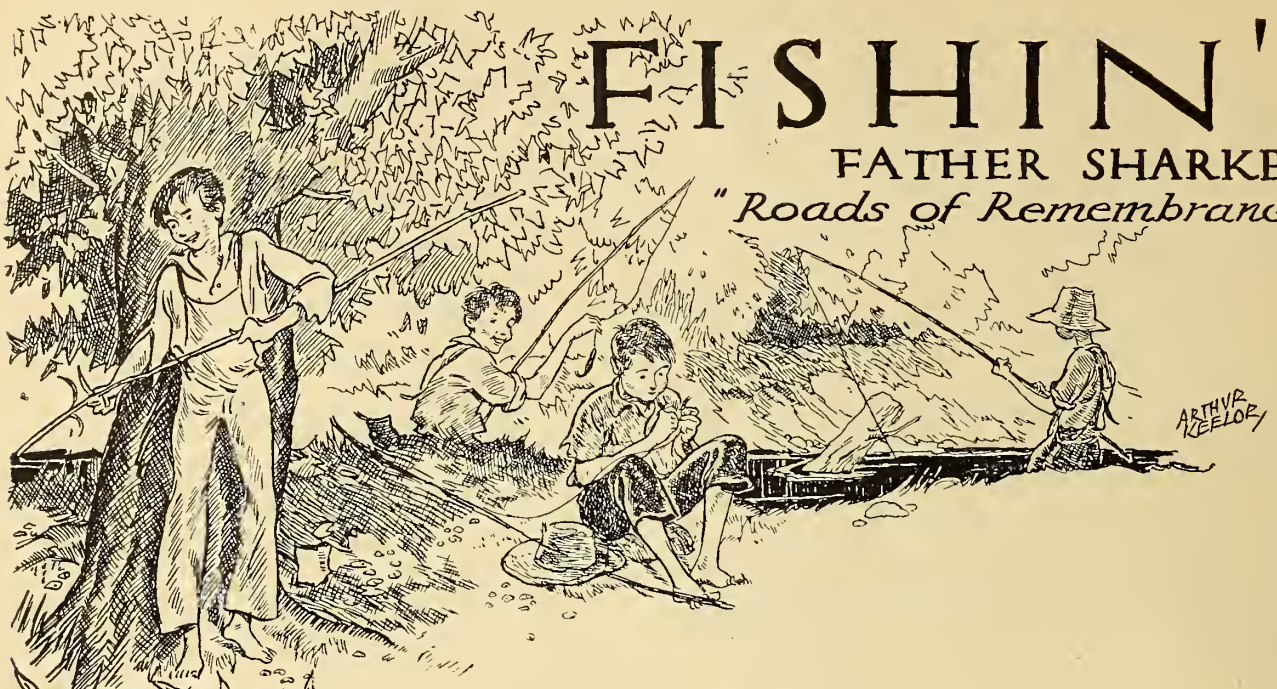
MISSIONARIES RELEASED

It was with great joy that we heard the news of the release, without ransom, of Fathers Laffan and Linehan of St. Columban's, Hangyang. They were captured on April 26th of last year and it was rumored at different times that they had been put to death. Not only for the sake of the missionaries and their dear ones at home are we glad to hear this good news, but because of its significance in China. In spite of the sufferings and death of many missionaries the Church has consistently refused to sanction the paying of ransom for those captured. To do so would be but to invite the capture overnight of every missionary the bandits could lay their hands on. A firm attitude on the part of all mission societies in this regard is the only hope for the future, as gradually even the bandits will realize that it does not pay to capture missionaries for whom ransom will never be paid.

* * * * * * * *

A great many people these days complain that it is a shame to send fine young men to China because the Chinese do not seem to appreciate or understand the motives which prompt the missionary to make such a great sacrifice. Those poor souls mean well enough. It is out of the kindness of their hearts they speak. But they do not seem to realize that no missionary worthy of the name ever goes to China for either appreciation or "understanding." As far as the missionary is concerned he goes to bring something to the Chinese, not to receive anything from them. If they are not as appreciative as they might be, it is precisely because they do not know Christianity.

* * * * * * * *



Another mistake people make in arguing about mission life in China is that they leave the poor missionary's own interests out of it altogether. The missionary himself has a soul to save. God has called him to the Foreign Mission Field. And it would be a sorry decision on his part to risk the loss of that precious soul of his by infidelity to God's grace and his sublime vocation just because there are many things to be desired in the character of the people to whom he is going.

* * * * * * * *

Only God could ask a young man to leave home forever and face the loneliness of China because only God could give the grace to sustain him in his sacrifice. Self-pitying souls had better keep far away from the Mission Field. As Bishop Defebvre well said in his lecture to our students here before leaving for China, the greatest assets of the missionary are piety and cheerfulness. Truly "a saint sad is a sad saint" as far as the missions are concerned.

* * * * * * * *

There is one paragraph in "The Life of Father Gonnet" which always impressed us greatly in regard to the missionary in China. It is part of a letter he wrote to the students of Laval. "One suffers often and much," he said, "body and soul are bruised. But at the same time there is so much good to be done, there are such great consolations that one wishes one had a thousand lives to consecrate to the service of the Master. And then, our Fathers and Brothers, who leave us for Heaven, are so content to die. It seems that the passage to eternity has lost all its terrors in the case of the missionary. Yes, long live China, regardless. It is the shortest and perhaps the surest road to Heaven."

FISHIN'

FATHER SHARKEY

"Roads of Remembrance"

THERE'S a brook that I remember, t'was the prettiest about,
Deep and clear and nicely shaded, full of lively speckled trout.
And we used to go there fishin' in the days of long ago,
With our worms and rods and tackle, Jim and Bill and Frank and Joe.

And we'd take our lunches with us so we'd have the whole day there,
Just a-sittin and a-dreamin' not a worry or a care;
Till we'd feel a kind-o tuggin' at the rod within our hand,
And we'd give a whoop of triumph as we brought our catch to land.

Well, the brook is still a-babblin' under branches red and gold
But the old gang ain't there these times as they were in days of old.
For one day, as we sat fishin' on an afternoon in Fall,
A strange shadow fell between us and we heard the Master call.

Yes, the years have slipped by quickly and the gang has dropped to four,
And poor Frank he won't go fishin' with the old gang anymore;
For the Communists they shot him when they raided Chuchufu
And my cheeks are damp and glistening and it ain't the evening dew.

Father Joe is down in Honan, Father Jim is here with me,
And we sometimes hear from Billy all alone in Kiangsi.
He has fled into the hilltops, just escaped a band of Reds,
And we're 'spectin' every moment to be hearin' he is dead.

While the old brook babbles softly at our favorite rendezvous,
And there, other lads are fishin' as we youngsters used to do.
And perhaps they'll hear the same call as our old gang heard it then,
For a lad can do no better than go fishin' souls of men.

My FIRST MISSION TRIP

BY

REV. A. GIGNAC

Home again, after my first mission trip with Fr. Beal (now becoming a grizzled veteran) to Giu Sz Ka and Suichang. The latter place is about sixty li from Sungyang. From our headquarters at Chuchow, where most of the "beginners" are located until they become acclimatized, to Sungyang, where Father Beal is located the river is navigable by river boat. Beyond Sungyang there are numerous rapids and rafts are used for carrying cargo and passengers.

It was on a cool morning in September that the "boy" and I took our departure from Chuchow. The weather had suddenly changed from intense heat (and in China that means HEAT with four capital letters) to a cool, clinging sort of dampness and I was just as well pleased that I brought along my overcoat and extra blanket for the journey. We had hired the boat outright for the trip and I was the only "passenger." But captain, steward and first class passenger all dined together on the trip, the boatman joining us as I endeavoured to swing the chopsticks into action in strict conformity to the rules of Chinese etiquette. The Chinese are always very pleased when they see a foreigner do his best to conform to their accepted way of eating.

All day long we travelled, the "boatman onward plodding his weary way," hurry was out of the question. Shortly after supper time he decided it was time to "dock" for the night so we pulled up beside two or three other boats and moored our craft by the shore. I spread my bed in the bottom of the boat and was soon lulled to sleep by the gentle lap lapping of the waters on the side of our frail little craft. Another day and night and we arrived at Sungyang where I remained with Fr. Beal over Sunday, preparing to make my first mission trip and learn from him the ins and outs of missionary and apostolic journeyings in China.

The morning of departure came at last. We hired a carrier for the trip and checked our Mass kit, bedding and hand bags aboard this human baggage car. In spite of the fact that it had rained the night before and looked as if it might start again at any moment we were anxious to be off. The going was not so bad until we came in sight of the first "Lian Ding" (rest house) when a heavy shower began to fall. We hastened our steps and were soon joined by several other wayside travellers also seeking shelter from the elements. A short conversation with them enabled us to learn the names of a few Chinese vegetables they were carrying. And then, in spite of the fact that the rain was still falling we decided to push on.

After a short walk we came upon a herd of water buffalo. The owner was leading one of them, evidently the head of the herd, and this particular bull decided it was time to stage a little show for the benefit of the foreigners passing by. Breaking loose, he singled out another bull worthy of his horns, and the fight was on. Believe me this was a bull fight, without matador or toreador or red flag. A crowd soon gathered. The buffalo put all they had into the attack and soon got tangled up in each other's horns and, although we would liked to have seen the finish, we were obliged to move on because of a cold and misty rain. At a little hamlet farther on we stopped and had the proverbial drink of tea, the only thing there is to drink as the water is not fit to take. For this the store-keeper would not accept any payment, as her husband was a Christian. Shortly before dusk we arrived at Giu Sz Ka. The boy got busy setting up our beds on planks laid over benches, and then prepared for supper. A few Christians came to see the priest and some stayed for the prayers at night.

We spent a week at Giu Sz Ka, visiting the Christians and exhorting them to come to Mass and the sacraments. The catechist explained the doctrines to them and we ourselves added a word of exhortation from time to time, telling them how important a thing it was to save one's soul, that life in this world at best was short and full of trials of every kind and that the truly wise man would work for a life of happiness that had no end. During our week's stay quite a number of Christians came for Mass and the sacraments. We also went to the home of one of the Christians, whose mother had died a few days before, to bless the coffin and afterwards the grave. As it was too far to walk back to the mission compound we accepted our host's invitation to stay for dinner. The meal was a simple one, consisting of four or five bowls of various kinds of meat and vegetables placed in the middle of the table. We all sat around, with nothing at our places but a pair of chopsticks and a little cup. The cups, of course, were all filled with Chinese wine and at a signal from our host we "jumped" into the dish containing what each one judged to be most to his liking. Cigarettes were passed around at the end of the simple meal.

On the following Wednesday we hired another carrier en route to the next mission, forty li distant. At the thirty li mark we stopped for a dinner of vermicelli, meat, Chinese wine and peanuts for dessert. We ate well and used the chopsticks to perfection. You can't imagine the price we had to pay. For the five of us, Fr. Beal, myself, the Catechist, the "boy" and the carrier the bill was 160 dong pan. In plain English that represents the exorbitant sum of sixteen cents, about three cents each.

We reached Suichang at about 2.30 and after arranging our belongings went out to visit a christian family nearby. The father has been a Christian for over thirty years. It is very amusing to hear him sing his prayers. He has a tune all his own. He comes every night for night prayers, he and his daughter, whether the priest is there or not. Would that we had more like him! We also spent a week here visiting the Christians and trying to bring back some of the "fall aways." We managed to get three to come to the Church who had not seen a priest for seven years. Both Masses on Sunday were well attended.

On our return trip to Giu Sz Ka we hired a raft as it is much cheaper than walking, strange as that may seem. Walking means hiring a carrier for the baggage and as we are not—any more than any other missionaries — overburdened with money, economy is a vital necessity. Compared with the quiet monotony of the trip up stream it was quite exciting to shoot the Rapids in this "Rapids Prince" of ours. Noon overtook us half way between towns, so hurrying our boatman a little we soon reached a small village. The raft was pulled up near a nice gravel beach and leaving our baggage in care of the faithful "lau da" or boatman, we marched down Main Street in search of a restaurant. After walking the whole length of the street we came to a house which opened on the road and which they told us was an inn. The place was crowded with Chinese, standing around talking and smoking, and the floor was littered with tables, benches and fire pots. "Dinner for four" stated the catechist. "What did the foreigners want?" "Oh, well, meat, white vegetables, vermicelli and bean curd." Meanwhile we sat sipping our tea and were the cause of much comment on the part of the regular customers. A crowd of youngsters stood around, open-mouthed, watching us. But they disappeared as soon as we began to question them as to their names, ages, etc.

It might interest you to know what this bean curd is. It looks for all the world like ice cream, but, oh boy, what a difference in taste. The self, "What a pity to spoil perfectly first time I tasted it I said to mygood beans!" Now I have acquired a taste for it and find it is not half bad. Wonderful what force of circumstances can do. To the amazement of the by-standers we seized our trusty chopsticks and soon had stick-handled our way through a healthy and fairly appetizing dinner.

The rest of the return trip was more or less uneventful. One item of interest was a "paper mill," a place no bigger than a two-car garage. Three men were working there, one stirring up the solution, other spreading this liquid in layers by means of a wooden frame inside of which was a screen. When dry each layer is a sheet of paper.

Well, dear co-workers, such are the "high spots" of my first mission trip. Had I the pen of a poet or an author I might have been able to make the trip as interesting to our readers as it was to myself. Before making it I certainly had no idea of the appalling condition of many of our mission outposts. I childishly thought they were buildings of fairly substantial construction and fairly comfortable. They are really only miserable hovels. It makes one's heart bleed to think that the Saviour who once came to us an Infant in a poor stable has no better place of abode when He comes to us on our mission trips in Chuchow district. We certainly need material assistance to put these chapels in repair. Some day we hope to have them in fairly good condition and at least a resident catechist in each place.

Yours in the Lord,

—AARON GIGNAC

IN YOUR WILL

REMEMBER OUR WORK FOR CHINA

As the number of our priests in China and students at home increases, the financial burden is becoming heavier. Add to that the cost of maintaining students in college—those who are not yet ready for the study of philosophy—and you will see why it is becoming increasingly difficult to make ends meet.

If we are to support our growing institutions here and in China we shall need much more than the day-to-day donations which are sadly insufficient even for our present needs.

WILL YOU HELP US!

Can CHANG KAI-SHEK Conquer THE BANDITS?

Rome.—The theme of press and missionary correspondence as Chang Kai-Shek emerges victor from his contest with the formidable coalition of the North is the call for another war, this time against banditry. The generalissimo recognizes the urgency of this and in his "victory speech" stated definite plans. "I intend," he said, "to divide the country into determinate regions and to confide to responsible commanders the task of cleaning up the districts assigned them. I hope that in from three to six months after the opening of the campaign the country will be relieved of the plague of communists and bandits."

While all are not so sanguine about the rapidity of the clean-up, it is the prayer of the nation that this curse be wiped out. Official circles have been particularly embarrassed by the mounting figure of Catholic missionaries captured, the total now held being 21 from six different nations, and by the brutal murder of two Protestant lady missionaries, whose deaths drew forth strong declarations in the British Parliament. The Chinese Government recognizes that as long as missionaries can be captured and tortured in so many different sections of the country it cannot pretend to be maintaining a strong administration. Missionaries, while sympathizing with the problems which have been facing Chang Kai-Shek, ask what can be more fundamental for a government than the abolition of savage outlawry.

Latest reports reveal that the two Protestant missionaries, Miss Nettleton and Miss Harrison, captured in Fukien as they sought to reach the coast, were not shot as originally stated. Instead they were very clumsily beheaded after the most excruciating torture. It comes to light that they were held for four months by a violent Communist band in a small hovel, guarded constantly by four men who never ceased to rouse them to horror by the most fearful threats and practices. The North China Herald says of them: "Death, when it came in all its horrid gruesomeness, must have been a welcome visitor to these victims of barbarous and insensate cruelty. For the exquisite torture of their long days of loneliness, scarred by the incessant visitation of physical and mental flagellation, must have surpassed the culminating horror of the final scene. There is no redeeming feature in the whole tragic recital of the bandits' dastardly conduct. It stands condemned as unworthy of the lowest beasts of the field. It should be noted throughout the world as the logical outcome of the spread of the Communist creed which the miscreants endeavored to glorify by their crime."

The secular as well as the religious press has noted the telegram of encouragement to the missionaries which the Holy Father, through Cardinal Pacelli, sent to the Apostolic Delegates at Peking last September 29: "The Holy Father, keenly rejoicing in the magnificent example of apostolic fortitude which the missionaries have given during the recent troubles, charges Your Excellency to render to all a well-merited commendation in his august name and to transmit to them the Apostolic Benediction, with a very special mention for Bishop O'Shea and Father Keng."

The "Bulletin Catholique," of Pekin, leading ecclesiastical organ in China, reveals the happiness of the missionary body at receipt of this praise from the White Shepherd of the Vatican.

"These missionaries," says the magazine, "faithful to the traditions of their predecessors, have only one law: to hold on to the very end; they have but one consolation, the thought that after this day of sacrifice they will find the light.

"The Holy Father eulogizes the moral force of the missionaries. St. Augustine tells us that fortitude 'is a love which supports easily all things because it loves'. The missionary loves China; Pere Crocq, M.E.P., after he had been given his liberty, wrote to the Apostolic Delegation: 'These condemnations to death, these tortures endured, these long months of captivity before my unexpected freedom, all these are already forfotten, for all these will serve, I have no doubt, for the glory of God and the spread of His Kingdom in this great China which I love with all my heart and which I love now more than ever because I have suffered for it.'

"Fortitude, says the same Doctor, is a force which quails neither before adversities nor death. Bishop O'Shea, C.M., who remained at Kanchow, and Father Keng at Changsha, despite the terror and the Communist occupation, when both Europeans and Chinese withdrew before the mounting wave of red peril, surely did not quail before adversity nor death."

Bishop O'Shea, who drew such distinguished praise from the Holy Father, is an American Vincentian, born at Deep River, Connecticutt, while Father Keng, likewise commended, is a Chinese priest of the Vicariate of Changsha.

These war years in China can be viewed as a blessing for the Church throughout the world in the revelation they have provided for all Christendom of the widespread spirit of heroic sacrifice which exists among the China missionaries. This spirit is epitomized in the words of two Belgian missionaries of the town of Lichwan in the Vicariate of Ichang. Bandits captured their region but they held their posts, keeping their liberty by their first aid treatment of all wounded. After two months, in place of gratitude, the ruffians one day descended on the chapel, and dragging the vestments from the sacristy, staged a masquerade in the market place. Insolence was all they received for their Medecines. "But do we resent it?" writes one of the Fathers. "Bah! We shall continue to be the slaves of these miserable fellows; for perhaps by it we can save our mission from destruction."

"Hold the ground, whatever the cost!" is the cry in the China missions. But the Catholic world hopes ardently that the distracted country will right its house and bring peace both to its own and to the thousands of apostles laboring within its borders.

Tibet, Land of Mystery

Christianity Makes Little Progress in Forbidden Land of Lamas

Tibet the impenetrable! Still the land of mystery, it is the one section of China, if you will, which defies all efforts of the missionary. Priests from the province of Szechuan, the adjoining province with its 60,000,000 inhabitants, have frequently been brought into contact with those curious nomadic people, and have worked among them assiduously but with little success. As far as the lamas, or priests, are concerned, and the country is over-run with them, their hatred of christianity is such as to render their conversion almost an impossibility.

Lamaism is a domestic religion, a heteredox form of Buddism, in a more intense form than is known in any other country. If a woman has two sons, one at least becomes a Lama, possibly both of them "and one frequently finds cases where one woman has five or six sons all priests. Those devoted to this debased religion leave the parental home, if one may call it that (for the Tibetans are wholly nomadic), at the age of six or seven, and it is expected that the mother should keep them in the lamassaries—the great monasteries which are scattered throughout the country. To realize that possibility, too, it has to be remembered that the wife and mother is the head of the household. She is the commercial and financial head, and does all the family management, which indicates that probably feminism has its rise behind the lofty Himalayas. Then the fare is most frugal. It consists almost entirely for the 365 days of the year of a queer mixture of yak butter and tea. The tea comes from China, and after being boiled in water for three or four hours is mixed with a little salt and soda and a great chunk of rancid-butter made from the milk of the yak. This, with ground roasted barley, forms almost exclusively the fare of the Tibetans. The greater part of the country was of an altitude of 13,000 feet or more, and little grows there save grass, and that but scantily. Still, the people seem to be quite as healthy as others, and are just about as long lived on the average.

"To what an extent religion is practised may be learnt from the fact that in Dureliang there is a lamassary with 7,700 priests, celibates, devoted to a religion founded on the Phallic principles. This seems strange, for Tibet is surrounded by countries peopled by either polygamous tribes, in which a man takes as many wives as he is able to keep, or polyandrous folk, where one woman sometimes has five or six husbands. These people will not tolerate foreigners in the country, and it is a difficult, not to say dangerous, business to try to gain entrance to this land of mystery."

Some years ago a French Priest, Father Devanas, was captured by some Lamas on the border at Damo, taken to one of their temples and tied to a stake. He had a luxuriant beard and his punishment was to have one hair at a time plucked out by each priest as he entered or left the temple each day. This refinement of torture continued for five weeks when the Bishop organized a rescue and brought him back into the province. The sisters did what they could to help him but the strain of the terrible ordeal he had undergone proved too much for him. His spirit was completely broken and he died.

Tibet is ruled by the mysterious Dalai Lama, a person upon whom few foreigners have ever laid eyes. His word is law in everything and there is no court of appeal. Each successive Dalai Lama is supposed to be a re-incarnation of the same being, the present occupant of the exalted office being supposedly the fifteenth edition of some previous celebrity. When one Dalai Lama dies the priests cast spells or draw lots to find the new ruler. It might happen to be a child of tender years, but once elected he is supreme and none dare refuse their homage.

Suicidal Wave Worries Chinese City

Seven in Five Days Seek Death in Hankow, As Reported in the North China Herald.

The local vernacular press is evincing anxiety about the number of suicides which are taking place in Wuchang and Hankow. Undoubtedly many such incidents occur which are never reported to the public, but there have been four attempts at suicide in the river of which one was successful and three suicides by opium within the last five days which have been the subject of enquiries by the police. The first case was that of a barber named Wu living in Wuchang. He was 28 years of age and got married last year, incurring very heavy debts over the festivities. Constantly pressed by his creditors and unable to make enough by his needle to keep himself and his wife, he jumped into the river.

The next case was a man formerly working in a cotton mill at Wuchang which suspended business some time ago. His is named Shang and was thirty years of age. There being practically nothing in the house to eat, he went out nominally for a walk. On his return he said that he was faint and went to bed, but in reality he had secured enough opium to kill himself. He leaves a wife and one child to fend for themselves. After him came an out-of-work, 40, named Shih, whose wife is too ill to do anything. To get away from his sorrows he jumped into the river at the Hankow side, but he was rescued by the river police and taken back to his home.

Love impelled the fourth to seek oblivion. He was a Middle School student nineteen years of age. His affections were centred on a girl-student, and her parents proved obdurate and reported him to the principal of the School, who proved stern. Young Mei was hauled out by the river police and after a lecture from the magistrate, was handed back to his parents. Love also accounted for the successful suicide of a young wife of the same age. She was married to an officer who left for the front during the recent campaign and had not written. She herself was ill in a small hospital, but managed to get enough opium to kill herself during the night.

A man who had come to Hankow to escape from the communists had only managed to get a job at $8 a month, and lived on the verge of starvation. When he was told that he was dismissed as there was no more work for him, he walked down to the Bund and jumped into the river from one of the hulks. He too was rescued by the police. But a small trader up at Wang Chia Teng accomplished his purpose to kill himself. His little business was a failure, but he managed to borrow a dollar and a few cents and went out to invest these in small articles to sell. He was held up and robbed of the dollar, so he spent the cents on opium and gave up the struggle.

It seems incredible that three persons should lose their lives over $1.25, but such was the case at the Ko Family Village beyond Hanyang. Stated in cash the amount looks more imposing, being 7,000 cash, and the fight about it was so strenuous that the mother and the daughter-in-law on the one side and a little boy on the other side were knocked into the village pond and drowned. Each side is now accusing the other of responsibility for the deaths.

Two other cases of drowning happened off the Shung Kwan wharf. A boy was helping his father with a net when he lost his balance and fell into the river. His father caught his clothes but lost his balance in turn, and went in too.

LITTLE FLOWER'S ROSE GARDEN

Edited by FATHER JIM

FATHER JIM'S LETTER.

Well, here's New Year and good resolutions. I wonder what most of the Buds will decide to do this year. There will be, I suppose, almost as many kinds of resolutions as there are Buds in the Garden. Of course you can almost guess what I would like you to include, that is if you have not made too many. It is a bad thing to overload oneself with good resolutions because few are likely to be kept. But as far as the Rose Garden is concerned, the daily prayer for the conversion of China and the monthly Communion are the only obligations. And we know you are all faithful to them.

I had no idea there would be so much interest in the word-building contest. So many are anxious to know just what the prizes are that this month we are printing the list and also the full conditions for entrance in the contest. Try to have your list of words in before Jan. 30th, the date to which we have extended the closing day.

Many were enquiring about Fathers Laffan and Linehan and so many prayers have been offered up by the faithful members of the Rose Garden that we are not surprised to learn the good news of their release by the bandits, without ransom. What a happy Christmas for them and their dear ones in Ireland!

The Church will never pay ransom for missionaries. Why? Three guesses. What do you think would happen in China if the bandits knew that they could get thousands of dollars for every priest or sister they captured? We leave it to the Buds to figure that out for themselves. But sometimes a little "face money" as the Chinese say, is paid, that is enough to pay the expenses incurred by the bandits in keeping the priests.

During all this trouble in China we are depending more than ever upon the prayers and Holy Communions of all our members. We must storm Heaven these days that great good may come out of all the suffering so many missionaries have had to undergo.

A Happy New Year and God Bless You All.

Affectionately,

Father Jim.

A BEAUTIFUL SUGGESTION.

Dear Father Jim,

Ruth Graves (Daisy Bell) a new member from far-away Victoria, B.C., has a beautiful suggestion to make to the Buds. We shall let her tell what it is. She writes:

"Father, it seems that if we are the Little Flower's Rose Buds we ought to follow her Little Way too. I read of something lovely the other day called 'God's Game,' I want to pass it on to you, Father.

"There are three players, The Little Flower, God and ourselves. We begin by giving The Little Flower something, a little prayer or an act of sacrifice. She offers our gift to God and He gives her a grace or favor, some rose-petal to send down to earth, to convert a sinner, help a missionary, etc. Don't you think that a wonderful game? Oh, how lovely if we could have all the Buds who wanted to sign a promise to give even just one thing to the Little Flower every day, a good act, a sacrifice, a prayer. I wonder how many of the Buds would vote for it.

Please excuse the ink smudges as I am sick in bed. Would two pen-pals please write to me?

Sincerely,

Ruth Graves (Daisy Bell).

2925 Prior St. Victoria, B.C.

I am sure, Ruth, that all the Buds will be sorry to hear that you were sick and we trust you are now as well as ever. Yes, I do think it is a very beautiful game, but I would not care to have the Buds sign any more pledges than those called for as conditions of membership. They do offer God something every day, the Prayer for the Conversion of China, and I think this would enable them to start that very child-like and beautiful game. You know that is what is so beautiful about the Life of the Little Flower, the fact that she always felt herself like a little child, being led by the hand by her Heavenly Father. And to offer up such little sacrifices freely, as well as the Little Prayer, would certainly please our little Patroness in Heaven and bring down many a shower of roses upon the Missions and upon our dear Buds themselves.

Father Jim.

MOTHER.

(Contributed by Michael Gainer.)

I knew God took two patches,
From the sun-kissed skies of blue,
Then from them made two sparkling eyes
And gave them both to you.
And you have been an angel,
Ever faithful, ever near,
And you have made of earth
A Paradise, my mother dear.

"Would you please tell Ningie to write me?" asks Rita Byrne, Bay Roberts, Nfld. "I don't know her name."

If we know anything, "Ningie" is going to be a busy correspondent for a while, especially as she tells us that her recent worries were about "Macbeth," twenty corries, choir practice, and painting Christmas Cards. She also wants to know (Ningie does) if Father Jim was in the picture on the front of the December China. Well, he was in the chapel when it was taken, perhaps in front of the camera, but we cannot say.

Did you ever, quotes the Literary Digest, sit down of an evening with a book in your hand, your faithful dog in your mouth, and your good pipe at your feet?

That is almost as bad as the absent-minded man who put his umbrella to bed and went to sleep on the umbrella-stand.

Helen Keating (Pollyanna), Fairville, N.B., wishes that CHINA would come every day, she likes it so much. There's something for the editor and Fr. Jim and Beaver and the whole staff. They all claim a share in CHINA'S popularity.

Catherine McKee, a new Bud from 47 Curzon St., Toronto, came from Motherwell, Scotland, only last April and says she will gladly tell the Buds anything they wish to know about her native country. She wishes to hear from Buds in Newfoundland.

Oh, Oh!

"Grandma," said little Willie, "were you in the Ark?"

"Oh, no, my dear."

"Then how did you keep from being drowned?"

A HALIFAX FLOWER BED
Buds from St. Joseph's Convent, who think Fr. Jim must be a relative of Santa Claus. The trophy displayed is drawn for each week and won by the class highest in punctuality.

"I think I know who Father Jim is, but I will not tell," says Annie Dawson, Bay Roberts, Nfld. I am glad the Buds are loyal to poor Father Jim in his efforts to hide his identity. It is becoming terribly hard, though, these days, with so many sleuths anxious to know "just for themselves."

Beaver asks us to thank many of the Buds from Newfoundland who kindly sent in used stamps. He says they can't send him too many.

"Bubbles," 2307 Bourbonniere St., Montreal, was the first to send in an answer to the word competition. We wish you every success, Bubbles, when it goes to the Judges.

Here's a request for Corries. Blanche Brazil (Narcissus), Spaniard's Bay, Nfld., wishes to correspond with Meadow Sweet, Lily White, Twilight Fairy, Syb, Lil "and many others." What a large order that is.

Father Jim's great worry is how to get all the Buds' letters in China. I know many will be disappointed this month, but we are doing our best to "squeeze in" as many quotations as possible.

Viola Cottreau (Violet), Meteghan, N.S., wants to know what is the age limit in regard to sending letters to the Rose Garden. I think, Violet, that the Little Flower would never put an age limit because she wants us all to be "little children," always, just like she was herself. Besides, Father Jim would certainly feel sorry if he could not hear from the Buds any more after they had reached an age limit. What do you think, Buds?

Ha! More sleuth work! "There was a priest at our house the other night who knew who you were, Father Jim, but we couldn't make him tell," says Ruth Summers, Pennywell Rd., St. John's, Nfld. There's a clue. But some time ago one of the Buds from Ottawa told us the same thing. Which goes to show that Fr. Jim is a much-travelled man at any rate.

There are now thousands of Buds saying the prayer for the conversion of China every day. No wonder we feel happy and encouraged in our work. Our "little army" will surely enable the missionaries in China to win in their struggle with the powers of evil.

"I did not see my letter in print last month, but I am trying again," says Aileen Hyde, 1236 Dufferin St., Toronto. We would like to publish your whole letter this time, Aileen, but we trust your appeal for lots of corries will be answered.

Margaret MacNeill says that Fr. Jim is like Fr. Bennet MacDonald, Summerside, P.E.I. And now if I publish my picture in answer to the many requests of the Buds, Father MacDonald would never forgive me, would he?

Dear Rev. Mysterious Father.

Yesterday as I mounted the hill to our school an army of "Buds" came running down, waving a green magazine and shouting, "Sister, our names are all in the CHINA Book." A similar invasion took place a week ago when I said: "A letter and lots of things from Father Jim." Nothing was opened until all were seated. What straight backs, folded hands and eager eyes! No need to say "pay attention." The silence was death-like, brightened by "miles and miles of smiles" and shining eyes.

As I called the name of each to get her certificate, prayer, and button, I said: "Ah, yet more, I think Father Jim must be a relative of Santa Claus."

We are sure all the Buds will be glad to accede to the request of Doris Gignac, (Tiny), Ridgetown, Ont. She would like them to say a prayer for her brother, Father Gignac, who is in Chuchow and who describes one of his mission trips in this month's issue.

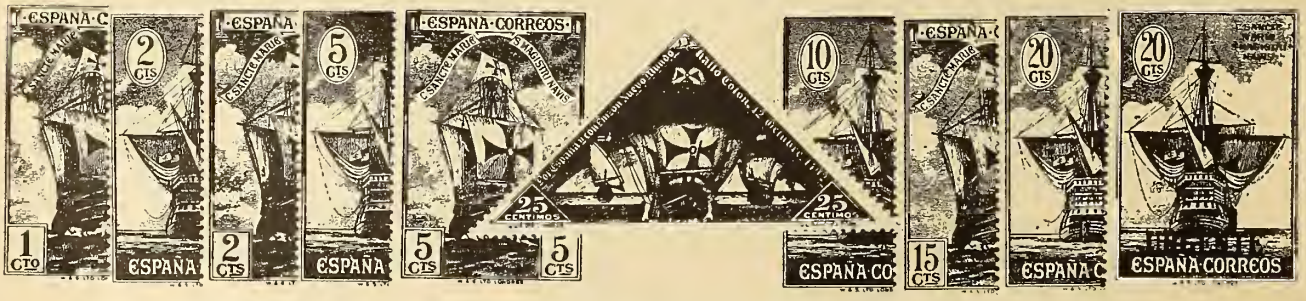
Stamp Corner

I guess Fr. Jim isn't so bad a fellow after all. I was certainly stuck this month until he came along and offered to rent me some space in the "Garden." Hope he doesn't charge too much. I just had to show the very latest in stamps to our "corner" members, the new Spanish set commemorating the discovery of America by Columbus.



It seems that Spain has had a weakness for commemoratives of late and has issued many stamps of very beautiful design.

Our Newfoundland correspondent informs us that a new air mail set is to appear there in January consisting of three values, 15 cents, 50 cents and $1.00. The new Canadian air mail is claimed to be the finest piece of engraving done on stamps in years. Of course, members of the corner can easily procure it at face value, 5 cents.

I guess that's all I can say this month as we must not trespass on too much of Fr. Jim's property. However, if he says anything to me I'll get even. I'll take his picture when he's asleep and put it in next month's Stamp Corner. That'll fool him.

Best New Year Wishes,

BEAVER.

If any of the Stamp Corner members would like this Spanish set (10 values, mint) we can procure it for them for 35 cents. First 5 values, 10 cents. Sent stamped, self-addressed envelope.

A Jew boarded a street car with a rather large boy in tow. When the conductor called "Fare," the Jew refused to pay for the boy on the grounds that he was only six years old.

A man named Dodgin was recently appointed foreman, but his name was not known to all the men under him.

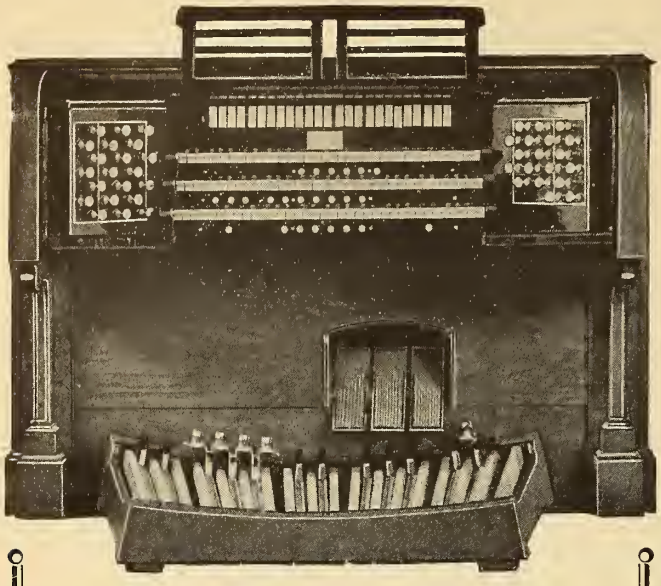
The Happy New Year Elf



WEE Jack was very weary,
All tired out with play,
And dozing by the fireplace,
He heard a small voice say:
"Perhaps he's undernourished,
I'll wait around and see,
And get from Jack a promise
This year to live with me."

Jack opened wide his eyelids,
And what do you suppose?
A little man addressed him,
All garbed in silver clothes:
"My name is Happy New Year,
Wise children promise me
To keep this resolution,
So happy they will be.

"Drink each day one quart of milk,
Eat butter pure and sweet,
With City Dairy's fresh foods
None others can compete;
And sleep with windows open,
In fresh air always play,
Nineteen thirty-one happiness
And health you'll have each day!"

The Valentine Lady

THE Valentine Lady, in garment of red,
With shiny black curls bobbed all over her head,
Came down to our school on St. Valentine's day,
And everyone wished that the Lady could stay.

Her eyes were so bright and her smile was so sweet,
The children all rushed up, the Lady to greet.
She chattered and played with us all the day long,
And taught us this wonderful, wise little song.

"St. Valentine's Day has come round once again,
And everyone's striving with might and with main
To keep up the standard in work and in play,
For that's to be happy each hour of each day!

We've all rosy cheeks and we're mentally keen,
We're really not bragging—it's plain to be seen;
The secret is simply the best of good health,
For we know that's better than all kinds of wealth."

And now, though our Valentine Lady has gone,
We keep up her standard; we all sing her song;
A quart of pure milk each one drinks every day—
We know that's the Valetine Lady's own way!

EDITORIALS

Just as we are rejoicing at the arrival of our Sisters at Chuchow, there comes from Father Serra the disquieting report that there is a possibility of losing our schools there. The Nationalist Government has long since forbidden the teaching of religion in the schools, but while this decree has been rigidly enforced in certain parts of China, in other places, notably in the north, the individual governors and mandarins have seen fit to permit the mission schools to continue unmolested.

* * * * * *

Up to the present there has been no interference with our schools at Chuchow in spite of many rumors that the decree was to be enforced there, but the recent visit of the mandarin to our priests at headquarters seems to have been the result of pressure from somewhere "higher up" regarding the enforcing of the Nanking school regulations.

* * * * * *

Of course catechism classes in the Church or elsewhere are permitted in virtue of the decree of the Constitution which permits freedom of religious worship. But if schools are to continue they must conform with the regulation which forbids absolutely the teaching of religion. Many Catholic Colleges have had to close their doors as a result of the absolute insistence by the officials upon this clause of the school regulations.

* * * * * *

However, we are still hoping for the best as the Mandarin at Chuchow has always shown himself very just and very well disposed towards our missionaries there. Were it left to him to decide the issue we feel that he would do all in his power to enable our priests to continue the all-important work of the education of the children. We ask the prayers of our readers that the final decision may not go against us.

Another priest has been added to our ranks. Father John J. MacDonald, of Windsor, N.S., who came to us from Holy Heart Seminary a little over a year ago, was ordained to the Priesthood in St. Augustine's Seminary chapel by His Lordship Bishop MacDonald, on Sunday, January 25th. Father MacDonald is the fourth to be ordained during the present scholastic year, Fathers Chafe, King and Venadam having been ordained at our Seminary by His Lordship Bishop Defebvre during his recent visit. He will probably be one of the band to leave the Seminary for China this Fall. Rumor has it that Father Chafe, much to his own disappointment, will be conscripted for service at home for a while in the capacity of Editor of CHINA next year. We speak from experience when we say that that sure is a tough break for any young man and a rude shattering of his dreams of an impending journey to the Far East. However, " 'Tis an ill wind . . . ."

* * * * * *

Some time ago we started a "building fund." But we are worried about it because its growth has suddenly stopped at the childhood stage of its existence. Some have been even unkind enough to say that it is dead, but we refuse to believe that in spite of its failure to respond to every known form of artificial respiration. "Suspended animation" we prefer to diagnose the case, praying meanwhile, as we think of next September, that the animation does not remain suspended too long.

* * * * * *

While the boys will have their joke about what is going to happen next year if we cannot build—parking space in Smithy's boiler room and upper berths in the root house—we must admit that we are not a little concerned about the prospects. The present Seminary is crowded to capacity and already new applications are coming in for next year. Perhaps a life-giving transfusion in the form of a series of cheques from our well-wishers and friends would do more than anything to bring the dormant building fund back to life and activity once more.

SISTERS Arrive in CHUCHOW

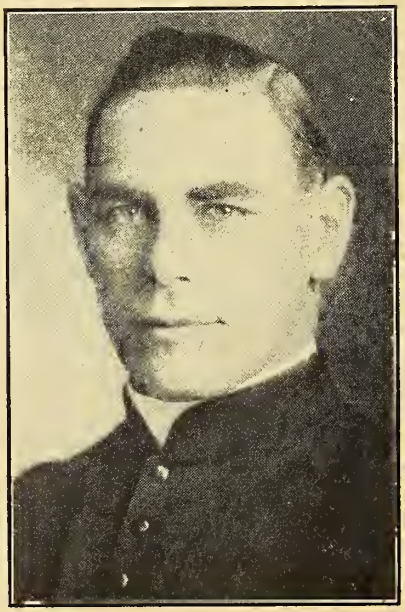
"TE DEUM LAUDAMUS."

The eighth of December, nineteen hundred and thirty, saw a new and inspiring page, written in the annals of the Church in China, especially in our district—for on that day, our own Canadian Sisters, the Grey Nuns of the Immaculate Conception, arrived in Chuchow.



Never before in the history of this city, had Catholic Sisters entered the ancient portals of Chuchow and walked up its narrow streets. Long ago Our Blessed Lord had come to this pagan city, in the advent of the first missioners; now, in the person of our Sisters, Mary the Mother of God had come, to share with Christ in that kingdom, which was their's by right of conquest. Satan, in the pagan temple on the hill above, must have cowered with fear, as he recalled those words pronounced against him in Eden—"I will put enmities between thee and the Woman—she shall crush thy head".

Although the day was far from fair, nothing could dampen the spirits of the great crowd of Christians and pagans, who had gathered to welcome the Nuns in true Chinese fashion. Many of the faithful had come from outlying districts, all dressed in their very best and excitement waxed strong. Couriers were stationed at different points down the river, who on sighting the Sisters' boats, were to race back to Chuchow with the news. Meanwhile everything was got in readiness.

The convent and the grounds around it, the mission compound and the church itself, all were gaily decorated with flags, banners and pretty lanterns. Paper pennants with something akin to our word "welcome", were given out to the schoolboys to carry and the inevitable fire-crackers were strung on long poles—everything was all set. workmen were busy with numerous odd jobs. People running here—people rushing there—it was for all the world like an ant hill.

Everything was hustle and bustle about the convent itself, where the stoves were put up in the house, furniture put in the rooms, the grounds were cleaned up—everybody was busy at some job.

The rain kept up a miserable drizzle, while we awaited news of the boats. Father Amyot had gone to Wenchow and had taken with him a servant, and had wired us of the Sisters' departure from Wenchow. The servant he had taken with him, left the boat a few li (Chinese miles) down the river, evidently determined to have the honor of breaking the glad news first. When he arrived and said that the boats were just a short distance off, great was the excitement. I never heard such a confusion and hubbub in all my life.

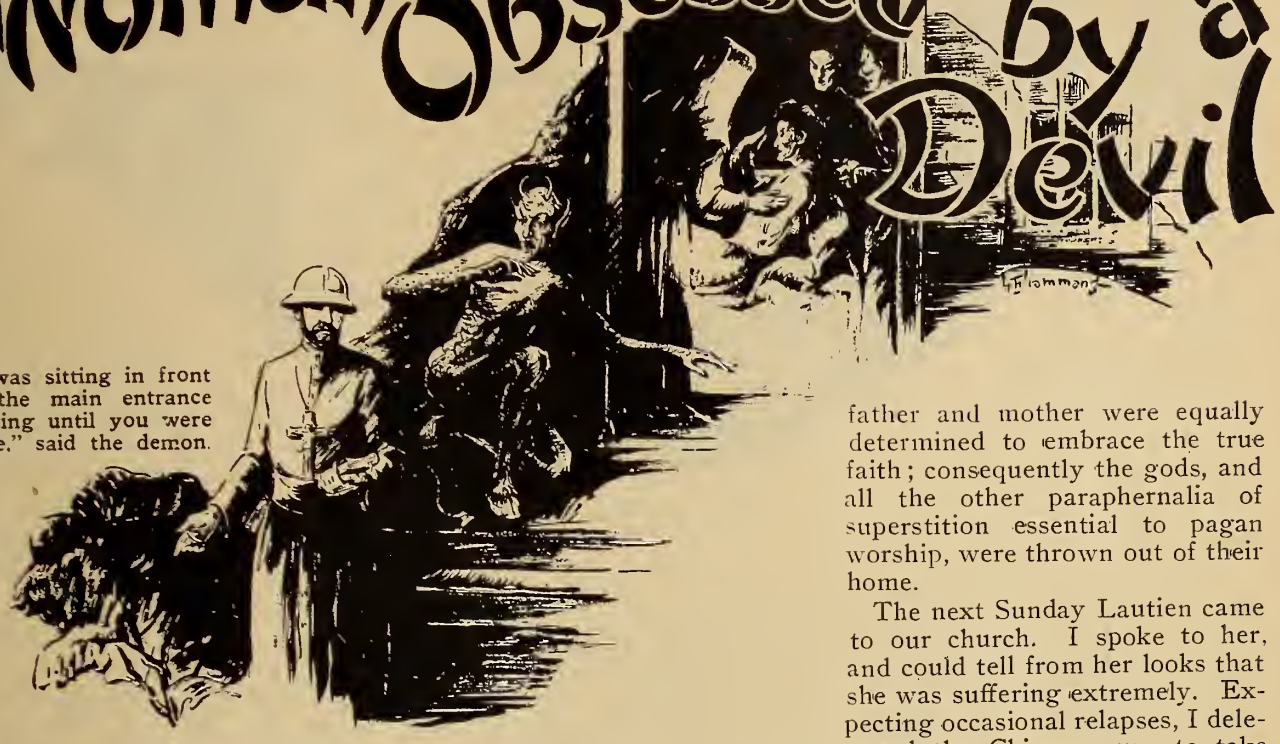
REV. JOHN J. MacDONALD
Who was ordained on Sunday, Jan. 25th, by Rt. Rev. Alexander MacDonald in St. Augustine's Seminary Chapel.

We all went down to the river (about five minutes walk from here), where schoolboys, schoolgirls and Christians all formed a guard of honor through which the Nuns were to pass. Hundreds of pagans were there, too, to swell the already large crowd.

About four thirty in the afternoon the three boats hove in sight and the three Sisters stepped ashore. They had made the wearisome trip up the river without mishap, although they had passed through a district infested by bandits. After their departure from Wenchow, the Sisters there heard that two of them had been captured by bandits and were being held for a high ranson. Our three Sisters were amused when they heard of this rumor, but God alone knows through what great dangers they passed.



Accompanied by the priests and a huge concourse of people, the Sisters walked the short distance from the river to the mission. Very fortunately, the rain had ceased just on the arrival of the Nuns.

Fire-crackers, strung on long poles, were so connected that when one was lit, a continual cannonade was kept up, from the river to the mission.

It was indeed a triumphal procession—one of joy and triumph for the Church, for Canada, for our good Sisters, ourselves and all our people and especially for the Immaculate Conception. It was indeed appropriate, that the Nuns should arrive here on the feast of their order and how happy we all were

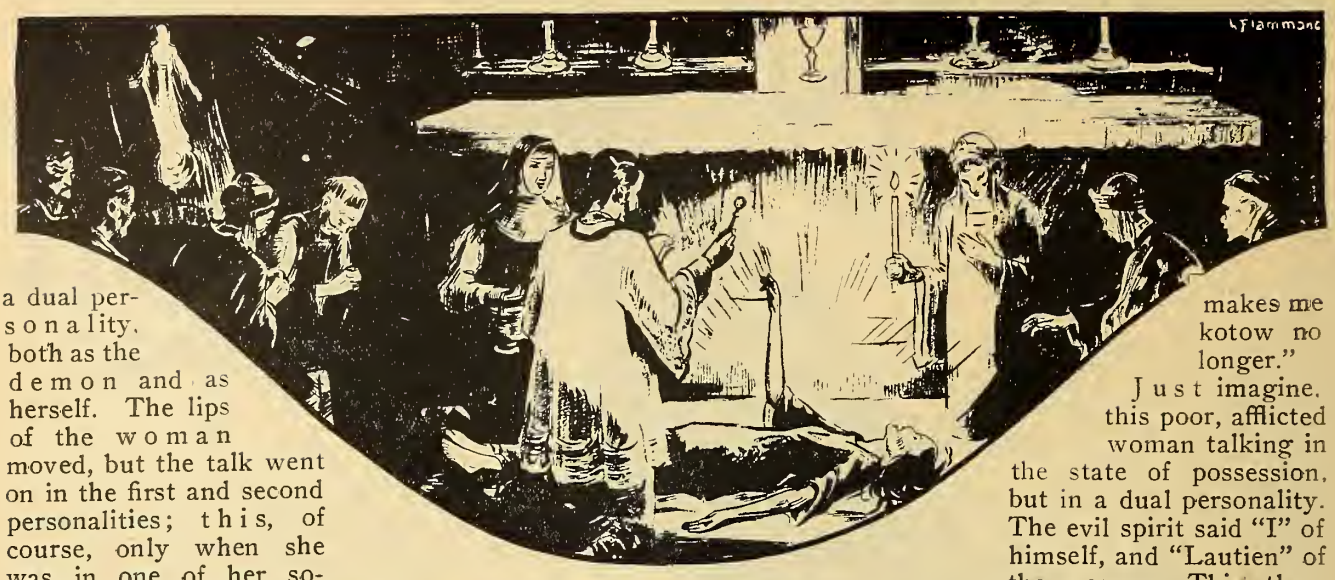
Woman Obsessed by a Devil

"I was sitting in front of the main entrance waiting until you were gone," said the demon.

Few people realize that even to-day there are persons who are actually possessed by the devil, even as in the days of the early Church. This is especially so in pagan lands, where more than in other countries "the devil, as a roaring lion, goeth about seeking whom he may devour" (I Peter, 5:8).

While at home, I wondered if I should ever come in contact with a person in such a deplorable state as "possession." It did not take me long, once I got to China, to find that in this pagan land, as in those others where Christianity is not dominant, there are fairly frequent cases of such possession, ranging from the mild to the very violent. I had secretly longed to meet such a peculiar case, though I had a feeling I would be rather skeptical.

Well, I have been blessed with such a case, so terrible and disheartening, that I now pray, "Lord, deliver me in the future from all cases of possesion, obsession, and queer doings of the spirit world." I had a ten-day bout with the devil himself, during which I experienced the darkest hours of my life.



Having been in the walled city of Junan, China, since last fall, I often went into its Eastern suburb, a place of much poverty and wickedness; endeavoring to convert these poor benighted heathens. I soon succeeded in interesting a certain doctor and his son in the Catholic religion.

Sometime ago this doctor had been called upon to cure a case, which was, of course, quite beyond his skill, and which he admitted positively to be "muoguay bjing" (devil sickness). Some of the local Christians wished to visit this woman, to pray with her, and to sprinkle holy water around her, hoping to help her. The remarkable thing was that, before they arrived, she got up and ran off, howling, "They are coming, they are coming, I can't stay here any longer!" Her father, being a sensible man, would tolerate none of her foolishness. He went after her and brought her from the home of a neighbor, though she still protested vehemently against seeing these kind women. The Christians sprinkled holy water on her, and she immediately became herself, was very gentle and kind, and even recognized the people. The Christians reported the case to me and claimed that they had routed the devil. I smiled and said to myself, "Who knows?"

Of course, after this, the unfortunate woman, whose name was Lautien, was now willing to become a Catholic, and her father and mother were equally determined to embrace the true faith; consequently the gods, and all the other paraphernalia of superstition essential to pagan worship, were thrown out of their home.

The next Sunday Lautien came to our church. I spoke to her, and could tell from her looks that she was suffering extremely. Expecting occasional relapses, I delegated the Chinese nuns to take care of her. Though they were able to bring Lautien to her senses by the use of prayer and holy water, still the relapses would recur. Finally I decided to take the case in hand myself and had Lautien brought to the mission station, to live in the women's quarters, where she could be under closer observation. She was there for a week and a half, and was normal all this time: so, not expecting anything extraordinary to happen, I went into the country for about ten days to visit my other mission stations.

I returned home on a Wednesday evening. The very next day Lautien had a slight attack, and another one on Friday, but the Sisters by means of prayer and the use of holy water had no difficulty in arousing her from these attacks. Friday, about nine o'clock, she suffered such a severe attack that the Sisters sent for me. I went over at once. What a fearful sight! Lautien was moaning as only the damned in hell can moan, then laughing, a hollow, delirious laugh of despair, as only the damned in hell can laugh. Her eyes were closed, but still she was aware of all that took place, even answering questions and chattering most mysteriously. At first this puzzled me greatly, but soon it became clear that this woman talked in a dual personality, both as the demon and as herself. The lips of the woman moved, but the talk went on in the first and second personalities; this, of course, only when she was in one of her so-called attacks. I gave her, in simple form, the blessing, but noticed no effect. I then went back to my house for my breviary. When I returned, I noticed that the Sisters and the women were trying to keep Lautien quiet. She would curse them, laugh at them, ask them questions, even answer their questions. I opened my breviary as if about to say my office, but instead recited the form of exorcism as given in the breviary. I had not even finished the preliminary prayer to St. Michael, when Lautien became very quiet, stretched herself on the bed, and turned her face to the wall. As I came to the words "In nomine et virtute Domini nostri Jesu Christi, etc." (In the name and power of our Lord Jesus Christ), Lautien first gave several tired yawns, her head turned, she opened her eyes, looked at me, stood in front of me, holding her hands like the others, and made the Sign of the Cross. I actually felt like sinking through the ground; I was so dumbfounded, and thought to myself, what stupendous power the prayer of the Church must have to accomplish such a feat! I asked the woman how she was feeling now, and she made a graceful bow and said that she was perfectly all right. I thought to myself, that certainly went fast; and yet somehow, I was still rather skeptical about the departure of the devil, for he had had possession of poor Lautien for so long that I felt he would not completely give up his control without further attempts to dominate this poor creature.

Lautien entreated me to baptize her, and as she had been studying hard, and had the necessary knowledge, I decided to comply with her request and baptize her the next day.

Hardly half an hour had gone by when I was called again. The same moanings, the same terrible laughs, etc., as before. When I was half through the formula of exorcism, Lautien cried, "Shenfu (priest), give me baptism, and all will be well." I said, "All right, in God's name." They followed me to the church, and there I baptized her and also a little girl. The child I baptized Theresa, and to Lautien I gave the name of Mary, in honor of the Blessed Virgin. This baptism took place a little before Friday noon. All afternoon Lautien was happy, free, rejoicing in her heart, convinced of a complete cure. Saturday passed, and nothing striking happened. I did not know what to make of it. If the thing does not recur, then what was it? Should it still recur, what is it then? I was saying to myself. But that very same evening I was called twice within an hour, but brought her back to her normal state. However, before I did, I said to myself, "Bird or devil, I am going to talk to this thing."

I approached close to the woman, and the grimacing face became quiet, stolid, and attentive. I said, "What are you, and who are you?"

And the answer came quietly, "I am an avenging spirit. In the house of Lautien they have destroyed my altar, and Lautien no longer burns incense to me and makes me kotow no longer."

Just imagine, this poor, afflicted woman talking in the state of possession, but in a dual personality. The evil spirit said "I" of himself, and "Lautien" of the woman. This, then, was his greatest grievance, that my Christians had swept the home of that woman of all evidences of idolatry.

Then I said, "Devil, what is your name?"

He said, "I have no name." Then he said something very peculiar: "How is it that formerly I could get into her heart, and now I can not."

Isn't it impressive to have this demon himself admitting that though formerly able to inhabit this woman's heart, he no longer had the power to do so since her baptism?

Lautien also had these terrific knots as they are described in the rubrics prefacing the rite of exorcism in the ritual. These knots are terrible things; to touch them, gave me a sensation of touching a live electric wire.

Continuing to question him, I said, "You are a fine devil, without even a name. By the grace and in the name of God I am going to expel you from this station." At this, the howling and the moaning became more intense. It increased greatly as I put on the surplice and stole, even though the woman had her eyes closed tightly. I brought her back to normal once more.

After dark, I was called to her again. I said to the devil, "How dare you come back again!" "Oh," he said, I wasn't gone far. I was sitting there in front of the main entrance waiting until you had gone." With the formula I brought the woman out of her attack, and she rested well that night. Sunday was rather quiet. The people attended Mass, we fasted that day and held an hour's adoration in the afternoon; trying to storm Heaven to obtain the relief of this poor soul.

That evening I was called for, and the demon would say, "I am going, I am going, and I will never, never come back again." But he would not keep his word, which, I suppose, was really too much to expect of the "father of lies." I felt most upset and uncomfortable. At nine that evening I prepared Lautien for Confession and Holy Communion. She was happy and eager to do anything and everything that would deliver her from this demon, who was sapping her strength and life. Early the next morning, as we were ready to go to church, Lautien had another attack. She began to curse, kick, and protest that she would not go to church. Despite this, they rushed her over, almost being obliged to carry her. I was there at the church door and saw her condition when they were bringing her in. Would you believe it —when she entered the church, she came to herself as quickly as a sleeping person does when dashed with cold water! It took a few noisy gasps, three yawns, and there she was as normal as could be, pious, willing, kind, and intelligent. She made a wonderful Confession and received her first Holy Communion.

But that day proved to be her hardest day, and mine too; as if the demon was determined to go to any length to triumph, because he feared she was slipping out of his grasp. These were certainly the darkest hours I have ever experienced.

Shortly after breakfast she had a mild attack, which I was able to overcome quickly. Remembering the quieting effect of her being in the church, I said to her, "You might as well go to the church, study or amuse yourself there and you will have peace." She took a step in that direction, and on came that demon. Do what I could, I could not bring her out, and she was such a pitiable sight. All the things that devil told me on that day! I was simply desperate and said, "Well. if you won't come to Jesus, I'll bring Jesus to you." How the demon moaned and begged me not to torture him! I went to the church and returned with the Holy Eucharist on my breast. As I came into that room, there were a few gasps like those of a drowning person, and the woman was normal. But it lasted scarcely five minutes. We prayed and sprinkled holy water, and I recited the formula of exorcism a dozen times. The woman would come to, and the go right out again. I brought the Holy Eucharist back to church and then went over and stayed there, trying to help.

A thousand tricks he brought into play to get me out of that room. He had an awful terror of me because of my priestly powers, admitting in so many words that he did fear me. "I fear you, I cannot look at you, don't touch me," he would say. Once he was cursing, and I said, "Are you calling me names?" He said, "Oh, I wasn't calling you any names. I don't dare call you names, I meant the others." "But, then, if you fear me, why don't you go?" I said, and he answered, "Let Lautien go, and I'll go too." That was one of his conditions from first to last. To which I always answered, "The woman's soul belongs to God. You'll never get her soul." He said, "Then I'll take her life. I'll choke her to death." And really, the hands of Lautien came up, and unless forcibly prevented, the woman apparently would have choked herself to death.

I was almost in despair. A thousand times I prayed that day. "In te Domine speravi, non confundar in aeternum" (In Thee, O Lord, I have hoped, let me never be confounded). Lautien's case was becoming notorious, and woe to me and my Church if I could not show the world that I could drive out this devil; for, had not Christ said to His apostles (and so to the priests of His Church), "In my name they shall cast out devils"? (Mark 16:17).

So about three o'clock that afternoon I said, "This devil is talking so much about Lautien's home and the destroyed altars there . . . . I'll just go and bless this home and hang up a holy picture, if it's the last thing I do." When I came there, the people asked me how the case was progressing, and I said, "It's terrible to-day," but I gave them a short talk on the fact that there is no kind of devil the Church did not have the power to drive out, and that I absolutely guaranteed the eventual releasing of Lautien from this demon's power. I came back and entered the church to gather light and strength before the next attack of that demon, and there was Lautien smilingly greeting me. I thought, so there's one place still where the demon doesnt dare to show up. In my absence, the Sister, in her desperation, had had Lautien carried, howling horribly, across the street and into the church, where she immediately revived, as before. That evening this unfortunate woman was happy because I allowed her to live right in the church, if necessary, even to sleep and eat there. That same Monday night poor Lautien had her first night attack. "Troubled by a demon" does not express it. In our great pity for this afflicted person we tried everything: we prayed, I used the formula of exorcism, and we even laid her on the altar. It helped for a while, and then the relapse seemed to be the more violent.

That demon was just as desperate as we were. When Lautien was free, she was the most sensible, tractable person. The Sign of the Cross was the infallible sign. When she was herself, she would make it most devoutly; otherwise she would protest, find excuses, such as, her arm was sore, etc.

That night I asked this devil, "How dare you come to this holy place?" and he said, "I'm not in the church at all, I'm standing over there outside in front of the church door." And even to this day I don't know how to take that statement. It's possible that he could work from that distance; but, then, the devil was not scrupulous about telling lies and misleading me. In the rubrics prefacing the formula of exorcism it says that the devil is wont to play on the exorcist with a view to tiring and discouraging him, trying to make him believe it is no real possession and so on. But since "this phenomenon itself is preternatural, a humanly scientific explanation is, therefore, impossible," though the devil would try to make us believe otherwise. That devil played all those tricks on me as they are given in the ritual, and many, many more.

Anyway, as it got towards dawn, we got this woman in a sort of half-quiet state that looked like sleep, and we bedded her down on a mat at the gospel side, right near the altar. Of course, the next morning she was there for Mass, Holy Communion, and prayers. That is one of the most striking things—during all those days she never missed a church service, especially not Mass and Holy Communion. The next day, Tuesday, Lautien was under the influence most of the time, but more lightly, joking and laughing. Of course, just at the time prayers were to be said, the demon had the funniest things to say, even clapping and singing; one could have actually been convulsed laughing at the funny things that demon said and did, if it were not all so horribly pitiable. This devil always pretended to have a ravenous appetite for human flesh, telling us, now to kill this person, and now that one. Lautien's meals were one of the big problems that day. I'd bring her to herself and she would start eating very nicely and politely, then suddenly on came that demon, and she would eat like a demon. Impossible to tell all she would have devoured if we had permitted her to do so.

In the course of that day that devil learned a number of things he did not seem to know before. He learned to say Sister and Shenfu ("priest" in Chinese), and he even said "Jesus." In short, he tried every kind of trick to have us let him alone. In the beginning, yawning was an unmistakable sign that Lautien was coming to herself; but the demon gradually realized that we relied on this sign, so then he would give a yawn and say, "See, I'm all right," though by close observation one could distinguish between the real and the false yawn.

A simple and authoritative adjuration addressed to the demon in the name of God, and more especially in the name of Christ crucified, was the usual form of exorcism. But sometimes in addition to words some symbolic action was employed, such as breathing (insufflatio), or laying of hands on the subject, or making the Sign of the Cross.

Off and on Lautien would really come to, either by the formula of exorcism, or by means of prayer or the use of holy water, by pressing my relic of St. Paul at the Cross to her lips, or even by putting my hand over her eyes. This demon would say sometimes, "What kind of a man are you, anyway; you've got some queer hands, they are not at all like the hands of the others." Strange how even a devil from hell must acknowledge the priestly power in these consecrated hands, which have often held the Body of Christ. To the very last, the hand of a priest on the eyes of this woman was like a firebrand to this demon.

Tuesday night that demon played his biggest trick on me. It was around midnight, and we were kneeling at the communion rail, praying and exorcising. When freed, Lautien would pray with us, and then be stubborn, as only a demon can be. Then the demon would ridicule our praying, try to distract us, and said, "I always make her forget everything. I make her stutter," and he would imitate stuttering. "She always wants to study Christian doctrine and learn the prayers, but I make her forget everything. This Lautien, I just make her laugh and make her cry, and that's all."

About this time the two catechist women moved Lautien rather roughly, and he took on a bass voice and was madder than a hornet. (Here it may be stated that during the day, among his other tricks, he would try to hide his own identity. He would say, "You say, devil, devil, what devil are you talking about? I'm Lautien" . . . . trying to pose in Lautien's own personality). But at this moment, when he was so enraged, he made a clear distinction. He said to the catechist women, "Who are you that handle me so roughly? I tell you, you can't get at me, the one you are hurting and oppressing is Lautien, you're hurting her and not me." And all this in an unusual bass voice, whereas otherwise Lautien has a rather high voice.

The demon said to me, "I have nothing against you, but that woman (the catechist) over there, I hate her."

I answered, "For that matter, you might as well hold it against me too, for that woman obeys my orders. Why don't you leave this person if you don't like the treatment?"

He said, "She's mine, and I want her soul."

I said, "Her soul is mine. I baptized her, and she's mine. You are such a clever devil and don't know that yet?"

He said, "I'm not clever at all."

"Oh, but," I said, "you've already learned a few things in these days. But I am not of yesterday either, I'm onto your tricks."

How mistaken I was in thinking I now knew all the deceitful wiles of this particular demon. He was going to show me how overconfident I was.

The catechist woman came with the blanket and spread it in the aisle in front of the communion rail. I said to the two women, "Now lay her on there and give it to this devil." And the demon, in complete control of Lautien's body, flopped her on the blanket and said, "All right, go to it, have your way, but I'll choke her to death."

Her throat began to work, she got short of breath and made choking sounds, as though an unseen hand was clutching at her larnyx. One minute, two minutes—no breath and no pulse that we could notice. A picture of death! I became terrified. What if this person should die on my hands! The two catechists sprinkled holy water and chanted prayers while I began the formula of exorcism. More fervently than ever before, I began, "Princeps gloriossissime caelestis militae, Sancte Michael Archangele, defende nos in proelio adversus principes et potestates" (most glorious prince of the heavenly host, Holy Michael the Archangel, defend us in battle against the principalities and powers) and so on. I knew the prayer by heart, I had said it so often over this poor woman. Slowly the pulse came back, and beat normally, but there was no breathing that we could notice. As they sprinkled holy water on Lautien's face, I noticed how the closed eyelids gave the slightest little jerk. I said to the two, "It's all right," and I thought of the incident in the gospel where the demon threw down the boy like dead, so that the people said, "He is dead."

Just as I finished the exorcism, the woman opened her eyes. "Shen fu," she said, "I feel so tired and heavy of heart," and she wept big tears. "Shenfu, let me go back home to-morrow; here you are, not getting any rest, and all on my account. Why should you have such a mad person as I am on your hands?"

"You are cured," I said, "and being cured, you may go back home to-morrow if you wish." I really thought this was the end of our struggle with the wicked one.

Lautien soon fell into a deep sleep. I told the two women to retire, and I gradually withdrew also, leaving Lautien in a sleep like death. I went back at one o'clock and again at three, and she was still in the same condition, to all appearances. Yet in the morning Lautien complained, "Shenfu, why did you leave me? What fear and terror I went through after you were gone! I didn't sleep a wink; I heard the stroke of every hour as it was tolled from the Protestant Church tower. But I could not open my eyes. I wanted to call for help, but could not. Just once I managed to open my eyes, and I saw the burning candle, but not a person around me."

During the day there was a continual repetition of the same old tricks and arguments, until Lautien would come to, when she would be utterly disheartened. What didn't I say and do to cheer her up and inspire her to bravery! For everything now depended on her own courage. It was certainly a special trick of the demon to make her give up the fight. As for myself, I was really quite encouraged that afternoon, for I noticed how fast we were gaining on this monster, and I thought, we will certainly get him out by repeated exorcism and prolonged spiritual exercises.

A peculiar incident happened that afternoon. The demon had always maintained that Lautien must serve him, burn incense to him and make him kotow. I once said, "Oh, why, I'll just take her place and do that for you"; so I fixed up a paper affair on the table, got a twig and said, "That's the altar and the incense, and now for the kotow." Knowing that I was a mockery of him, as I went down and touched my forehead to the floor, he crouched in a far corner, and the screaming and terror were indescribable. I jeered. "Well, I'm doing my part, what don't you like about it?" and he wailed, "Oh, you can't give me kotow, you can never give me kotow."

Suddenly he said in a commanding voice, "Those two children who destroyed my altar have come, bring them here, and I will reprimand them." And what happened? The two men who had destroyed the pagan altar in Lautien's house had just come to the mission. They were still at the front entrance, far away from us. None of us knew that they were there; yet this devil, without a name and with closed eyes, was aware of their arrival. They soon came to the room of their own accord to inquire how Lautien was getting on. "Here they are," the demon cried, "how I hate them!" and then in a weeping, moaning voice he reproved them for their crime of destroying his altar. I recited the formula of exorcism, and the woman greeted these men, and was glad to see them; perfectly normal once again.

Monday previously I had sent a special runner to our Fathers at Chumatien, with a letter asking advice and help; so, on Wednesday evening Father Rosenbaum and Father Irsigler arrived on horseback. As we three walked into the room, the possessed woman was a terror. I had her carried to the church, where she became herself for a little while, greeted the new Fathers, and apologized for giving them so much trouble.

Then we three priests consulted together and decided then and there to keep up continual prayers until this demon was finally driven out. Lautien was sitting in an easy-chair placed in the church and when she was conscious, in her own personality, joined in the prayers; otherwise she had to be kept in the chair by force. Day and night a group of Christians, with one of us priests, prayed unceasingly. Father Irsigler had ridden back to Chumatien to telegraph the Monsignor, who was in the southern mission, for faculties to apply the solemn rite of exorcism. Meantime Father Rosenbaum and I changed off with each other, as did the various groups of Christians, so that never for one instant did we cease storming Heaven that this soul might be rescued from the clutches of the evil one. We were progressing. The aim now was to get Lautien to fight the devil herself by act of faith and trust in God. I sat there from nine in the evening till midnight whispering ejaculatory prayers into her ear. About half the time she was conscious, but could not speak. The demon choked her and shook her frightfully. A vigorous nod or shake of the head, or a gesture, showed that she understood, for if I told her to make an act of faith in her heart, she would thump her chest; if I told her God was good and would certainly not let the demon harm her, she would give a vigorous nod. That's how Father Rosenbaum and I got her so far that the attacks became fewer and less violent, though in a way Lautien suffered more, since she was mostly conscious of the actions of this demon.

On Friday evening the faculties for solemn exorcism arrived. We began to apply them at once, Father Rosenbaum assisting. This rite requires about half an hour, and we applied it three times before midnight.

Coming to the questioning, and the devil was there. I thought of what Tertullian had said when addressing the pagans of his time—"Let a person be brought before your tribunals who is plainly under demoniacal possession. The wicked spirit, bidden speak by the followers of Christ, as readily makes the truthful confession that he is a demon as elsewhere he has falsely asserted that he is a god." For when I asked in the name of God and with all the backing of the whole Catholic, Apostolic Church, the devil talked right up. He persisted in the statement that he had no name. That he would not go, first Lautien must go, as he did not want her to stay in the church. To which I answered, "You have nothing to say in the matter. God has appointed you your time, and you must go!" He'd say, "All right, I'm going, I'm going right now,"—a yawn, and he was gone; but he came back.

Saturday there were fewer and lighter attacks, but the prayers and watchings continued. But in the evening we had to apply the solemn rite of exorcism twice. He changed so quickly, first the demon would be present, answer questions, then in a few moments it would be the woman in her right personality. Father Rosenbaum and I just stood there and looked at each other, absolutely non-plussed. I could have wept from discouragement. Father Rosenbaum said, "If he would only once get rough. I would even let him tell me my sins if he would only go." And there was the woman sitting in front of us, innocently fondling my big mission cross, kissing it and admiring the beauty of its workmanship. I stepped over in front of the little altar of Our Lady of Lourdes, and I vowed ten Holy Masses and two rosaries to go with each, and said, "Immaculate Mother, won't you help us crush that monster's head," for, somehow, I was being overwhelmed by an awful feeling of discouragement, probably also a temptation from the devil. I thought of all the days of fasting, prayer, and mortifications, and still the demon persisted in possessing this poor creature.

Sunday after Mass, the perpetual adoration was taken up again, and prayers were to continue if necessary during the coming Rogation days. She continued to have more or less violent attacks, but in the night, about midnight, there was rather a violent attack; I used the solemn formula, at the end of which she gave a tired yawn and Lautien woke up. Since then Lautien has been absolutely normal, and I am sure she is cured. Reception of the Sacraments and works of piety will tend to make her spiritually stronger, and immune against future visitations of this nameless demon.

It goes without saying that I learned much in these past few days. I see clearly now, all the mistakes I made in this my first case of possession. I blundered many times and gave this demon the advantage. Should I ever have another such case, I shall handle it differently. How much more clearly shall I henceforth understand the workings of the evil one! This demon gave me many visible demonstrations of the power of grace. Prayer made him helpless, and I could see how prayer really works "ex opere operato" to a great extent. Oral prayers rendered him powerless and in those last few days absolutely put him to flight. The Litany of the Blessed Virgin, the Rosary, holy water, all had a great effect. The church, the sacraments, the sacred character of the priest, relics, blest articles — he feared them all.

To give the devil his due, as the saying goes, this demon was never so savage that he would throw things. Though he did not like a crucifix in the hand, he would not throw it, but would draw away in terror. Even at the worst stage one person could always manage this

BELIEVE IT or NOT

By Fr. Sharkey.

Many strange things are seen and heard in China, to which Ripley's famous words might well be applied.

Cities With Lifeboats.

One has very often heard of ships with lifeboats, but I feel sure that few ever knew that there are cities so equipped. But it is a fact, and I myself have seen it.

Floods are common here in China and they very often take heavy toll of life and property. The last big flood in this district took place about fifteen years ago. For this reason, most cities along the rivers have a number of large lifeboats and when a flood threatens it's a case of "man the boats". Noah's Ark would sure come in handy here.

Roofed Cities.

The narrow eastern streets may have their disadvantages when it comes to questions of traffic, etc., but recently I found out one of their advantages.

In the month of July, when the fierce, eastern sun is like the heat from a furnace, bamboo mats are stretched across the streets from roof to roof. Thus they are kept shady and cool, and one sees not only a walled but a roofed city.

When Chuchow becomes like Toronto, with street-car wires, and telephone wires, things will change, but that day is still far off. Until then we can still roof over our streets and laugh at old Sol.

The Devil Cannot Travel in a Straight Line.

So the Chinese pagans say. Believe it or not. How such a belief originated I do not know, but all have great faith in it, for it gives them a chance of escaping His Satanic Majesty.

Since the devil cannot go in a straight line, mats are hung before the main door of a pagan home. The devil therefore cannot get in, for he would have to go around the mat to do so—which for him is quite impossible, according to the Chinese.

For the same reason, a wall is often built in front of the main entrance to a house or temple. To a Christian who does not know the superstitious meaning of it all, it certainly seems ridiculous to build a door and then put a wall in front of it. Evidently, to the pagans. Satan is so crooked that he cannot even travel straight.

The MacPherson Burse

Just two years ago a priest friend, Father D. MacPherson, P.P., Port Hood, N.S., started a MacPherson Burse for our Seminary. In spite of hard times, depression and what not, our good friend has managed to raise the total to $693.70, a wonderful achievement, all things considered.

Father MacPherson asks us in his latest letter, "How many of Father Jim's Buds can figure out how long it will take to get $5,000.00 at the rate we are going? Can they figure if this old man will see the Burse completed before he goes to Purgatory? With all the world suffering from depression, financially, what must be the state of the Missionaries and their charges! To lend a hand now must be true charity."

He then adds a mesage for "Chinese Scotsmen," as he puts it. "Tapaidh leibh," the only "Chinese" Scot we ever heard of, was the famous Mandarin from P.E.I., whose life story appeared in an earlier issue of CHINA. If you don't believe there was such a person, ask Father MacAuley, of St. Peter's Bay. And while we don't know Gaelic, we hazard a guess that Tapaidh leibh might be freely translated "Come across". Perhaps we are all wrong.

Following are the latest contributions to the MacPherson Burse:

Mrs. Allan MacDonald, Detroit, $5; J. Hector Gillies, $4; In Honor of the Sacred Heart and St. Joseph, Mrs. Angus Campbell, $50; Duncan Cameron, $1; Mrs. Ellen MacMaster, $2; Mrs. Susan MacIsaac, $2; Mrs. Alex. MacEachen, $5; Mrs. R. A. MacIsaac, $2; Miss Lillian Davis, $2; Mrs. Angus MacDonald, $40; Mrs. Alex. MacDonald, $2; Alex. E. Rankin, $2; Mrs. Kay, $5; Miss Mary MacDonald, $20; Alex. Cameron, $2; Mrs. John D. MacEachen, $50; Mrs. Angus Campbell, $5; Rev. D. MacPherson, P.P., Port Hood, $25; Miss Ann Beaton, $5; Miss Tina Curry, $2; Mrs. Donald Beaton, $10; Mrs. Alex. MacDougall, $1.

We take this opportunity to thank Father MacPherson and our many other kind friends whose co-operation has made possible what has already been done towards the completion of the Burse. And if we know anything, there are many other MacPhersons among our readers who will want to be represented before the Burse is completed.

For the benefit of those who may not be familiar with what a Burse means, we might say that the interest on one completed Burse of $5,000.00 enables a priest to be educated in perpetum for the Missions, that is, when one priest has gone through the Seminary, another student takes his place, and so on indefinitely. If we but had sufficient completed Burses, the financial burden of educating our priests would be appreciably lightened.

A Start.

The village milkman bought a horse for the morning round. It was not exactly a thoroughbred, but it had four legs.

One day he took his bargain to the blacksmith to have him shod. The smith regarded the weary-looking animal critically, paying particular attention to his lean body and spindly legs.

"You ought to have a horse there some day," he said at length. "I see you've got the scaffolding up."—Montreal Star.

One reason why pity overlooks many who deserve compassion is because those who are crippled above the ears don't limp.

A Big Burden.

Mrs. Greene had got a cold, and could not go to church, but she insisted that her husband should go in her place.

"Well," she inquired, on his return, "and what was the burden of the vicar's sermon?"

He sat down with a weary sigh and murmured: "All of it, my dear!" —Churchman.

The Florida beach and blue sea looked inviting to the tourist from the north, but before venturing out to swim, he thought to make sure.

"You're certain there are no alligators here?" he inquired of the guide.

"Nossuh," replied that functionary, grinning broadly. "Ain't no 'gators hyah."

Reassured, the tourist started out. As the water lapped about his chest, he called back:

"What makes you so sure there aren't any alligators?"

"Dey's got too much sense," bellowed the guide. "De sharks done skeered dem all away." — American Legion Weekly.

Scientists searching for absolute zero might observe the average man's interest in another's bad cold symptoms.

Perils of the Deep.

The wife of a man who had enlisted in the navy handed the pastor of a church the following note: "Peter Bowers, having gone to sea, his wife desires the prayers of the congregation for his safety."

The minister glanced over it hurriedly and announced: "Peter Bowers, having gone to see his wife, desires the prayers of the congregation for his safety."—Tit-Bits.

Charge.

The chairman of the gas company was making a popular address.

At this point a consumer jumped up with the shout: "Oh, what a charge they made!" — Collegian Reporter.

A Vegetarian.

While visiting a Zoo in Ireland, an American noticed a solitary sea lion and wondered why there was not a pair.

"Where is his mate?" he asked a keeper."

"He has no mate, sor," was the response. "We feed him on fish all the time."

WOMAN OBSESSED BY A DEVIL.

possessed woman, though as far as lifting was concerned, it often took three of the Sisters to carry her when in this condition, although ordinarily she weighed only about a hundred pounds. This demon was never horribly abusive, nor did he ever make impure remarks.

This unfortunate Lautien might well have cried out in the words of the psalmist, "I will say to God: Thou art my support. Why hast Thou forgotten me? and why go I mourning, whilst my enemy afflicteth me?" (Ps. 41:9); but her very own experience proves that the priests of the Church of Christ are today as powertul in combating Satan, as they were in the centuries ago when Christ "having called His twelve disciples together, He gave them power over unclean spirits, to cast them out" (Matt., 10:1).

A true story by Fr. Peter Heier, S.V.D., in "Our Missions."

SISTERS ARRIVE IN CHUCHOW.

to be able to offer to Our Dear Mother Mary, such a beautiful sheaf of lilies on her name day.

Our very first visit was to the Church, where rosary was said, followed by Solemn Benediction and the singing of the Te Deum. Father Morrison of Sung Yang was the celebrant, for he had come to Chuchow to welcome the Nuns.

After the Te Deum, all the Christions and hundreds of pagans came to pay their respects to the Sisters —Sister St. Oswald, Sister Mary Catherine and Sister Anthony. Men, women, boys and girls, even the little babes—all came, two by two, to make their bows to the Nuns. Little slips of paper were handed to each person and these entitled them to a real Chinese banquet—a bowl of steaming-hot macaroni, etc. To the Chinese, every great occasion must have its banquet.

Darkness had settled down and the many colored Chinese lanterns cast a romantic spell over it all. As I sat there watching, the Sisters themselves faded from my view and I saw in their stead, Our Immaculate Mother Mary, receiving the homage of that vast crowd of Christians and pagans. Truly the words of the Magnificat were being fulfilled—"Behold from henceforth, all generations shall call me blessed". This was Her name-day and her Immaculate Conception was being honored to-day, where it had never been so gloriously honored before.

The following morning, Solemn High Mass was sung by Father Serra, our Superior, and afterwards he blessed their convent. Through his untiring efforts and those of Father Amyot, the arrival of our Sisters at such an opportune time was made possible. And although the necessary outer buildings are not as yet fully completed, we hope to have them all ready for use early in the New Year. At present things are temporarily arranged and the Sisters are well, happy and quite comfortable.

Surely the brave, pure, self-sacrificing lives of these noble Nuns will draw many pagan souls to the feet of Jesus and Mary Immaculate. In healing the ailments of these poor people's bodies, God grant they may have a salutary effect upon their souls. Thus shall the words of Isais the prophet be fulfilled in them—"Many are the children of the desolate, more than of her that hath a husband." What a wonderful Christmas gift we are going to have to offer to the Infant Christ of Chuchow.

—Father Sharkey.

Canadian Prosperity depends on
YOU ! ! !

Did it ever occur to you that when you purchase imported clerical or choir outfits from 70% to 100% of your money goes out of this country. That the saving you make is only the difference between wage standards in other countries and your own and finally that this saving is only temporary in view of the fact that you are indirectly inflicting a hardship on the very people you look to for support. Look this matter squarely in the face and you will see that it is your duty to support those who support you.

Buy in Canada and you save by sharing in Canadian prosperity.

Safety versus High Interest

Many a man has lost his hard-earned savings because of the fatal lure of high interest. A safe, general rule to remember is — the higher the interest, the greater the risk.

Money in a Savings Account is safe, yields a fair return and, coupled with a definite plan of systematic saving, will prove to be, in a surprising number of ways, one of the finest investments available.

WHAT OF NEXT YEAR?

Next year four of our priests will "move out" for China. When they do, there will be room for four more students to "move in." It has come to that. If in the meantime we are unable to build, we cannot accept the applications that are being made to us for next year.

If we were to "double up" a few more of the present single rooms we might possibly find cramped accommodation for about five or six more, but the dining-room and chapel, the chapel especially, are overcrowded this year. Last Summer our lecture hall was partitioned off into four rooms and the lectures since then have been held in the chapel. In our present position there are only two alternatives. We must build or we cannot accept all the students who are to come next year, many of whom have already made application. And if a new building is to be ready for occupation by September, work should start on it very shortly. What are we to do?

To make a long story short, we need $125,000.00. And so far we have $595.00. If each one who reads this were to send even one dollar we should have enough to make a start and ensure an addition for next year. If any of our readers could afford to send more it would further lighten the burden.

The present is an ideal time to build. Material is cheap. Labor is plentiful and the erection of a new building would provide very welcome work for many who are now unemployed. We ask our readers earnestly to consider our problem and help us to the best of their ability.

WHAT HOPE CHINA?

There are various ways of getting one's name in the newspapers. But the most effective method of keeping out of the clutches of the columnist or the headline artist is to mind one's own business and go quietly about one's daily grind. There is nothing of "news value" in the fact that John Brown goes to work after breakfast and returns home at 5 p.m. Too many other people are doing that very thing. Unless you happen to be Rudy Vallee or the Prince of Wales or the leading scorer in the N.H.L., it is a matter of blissful indifference to the average man what kind of coffee you sip for breakfast or to what you attribute your success in life.

But depart—for one fleeting moment—from the straight and narrow path; steal $5,000.00 from your bank; hold up the corner drug store or play hockey on Sunday in Toronto. At once your name is on every tongue. With one fell swoop you crash the columns of a dozen newspapers hitherto utterly oblivious to even the heroic side of your uneventful existence. If John Brown craves publicity, let him stop chopping wood. He must have recourse to the sensational. His honest struggle to make ends meet does not interest the public. He may be the most faithful husband and most devoted father in the world and yet go down to his grave "unwept, unhonored and unsung."

It is the same with China. Up till a few years ago how often did we see her name in the papers? Most of her five hundred million people were going quietly about their business. Except when some great flood or other disaster overtook her we heard little and cared less about that great strange country across the Pacific. And now—scarcely a day goes by but the newspapers feature China. It is not within the scope of this brief article to show to what extent contact with Western civilization has been responsible for China's ills. The fact is that in comparatively recent years sufficient opium and Bolshevism and machine guns have been thrust upon a country to whom the "art" of war was unknown to enable her to provide "news" for the Western world. But we must beware of false impressions. There has been constant harping upon the ills of China and not a word about the quiet and long-suffering heroism of her honest merchants and millions of cultured people, to whom banditry and Bolshevism are as repulsive as they are to us. We hear so much about Reds and bandits that some people imagine the whole country is over-run with them; that it is not safe at all to send missionaries to China because they are sure to be captured or put to death. What is the real situation?

It is very hard to estimate the number of bandits in China. As for the Communists, when they capture a city they have recourse to the delightful practice of torturing or burying alive all those who will not join their ranks. The result is that thousands of people who do not know what the word "Communist" means join them out of sheer terror. As for the ordinary bandits, many of whom have been literally driven to the hills by failure of crops and exorbitant local taxation, even if there were 500,000 of them, which there certainly are not, it would mean only one bandit for every 1,000 people in China. If established law and order were broken down in parts of our own country, as they are in parts of China, we can safely assume that there would be that proportion of "bandits" at home, ready to prey on society if the occasion arose.

At the present time there are in China 3,343 Catholic Priests and over 5,000 Sisters. Of these, four are in captivity. In our Province of Chekiang, not a single Priest or Sister has ever been captured during the whole period of China's civil wars. When one missionary is captured—perhaps by a band of a hundred men—the whole world hears about it in a few hours. Because it is abnormal—it is news.

LONG DISTANCE PLEASE

Some people express great surprise when told that there are motor cars in China. They have not learned that Shanghai, for example, in some respects, is as modern as New York. When sometime ago a news item appeared to the effect that "Christ the King" and "The Ten Commandments" had been banned by the Government many learned for the first time that "there were movie theatres in China."

But we ourselves must confess that we were surprised when Father Morrison informed us that there was actually a means of telephone communication between Chuchow and Sungyang. Not as modern as the dial phone perhaps, or as fast as the service between Hamilton and Toronto. But a phone just the same, even though one might accomplish a man-size day's work while waiting for a call to be put through. "When you wish to put in a long-distance call here," Father Morrison writes, "you must first go to the Yamen and give the particulars to the operator, who passes the call on to the station in question. There the operator must send a messenger to call your party and this will take sometimes two hours. Very often the wrong place is called and this helps speed up the service.

On Christmas day Father Beal and I decided to send Christmas greetings to our brethren in Chuchow. So right after dinner we started for the Yamen, where the telephone is installed and gave the particulars to the operator. We were told that it would take about an hour to put the call through to "our party," who, in this case was Father Amyot.

After an hour's walk in the country we returned in high hopes to the Yamen. Our appearance was the signal for renewed activity on the part of the operator who called, and called, and conversed with somebody or other only to inform us that there were no Foreign Priests in Chuchow.

I told them that there were six priests there and that I had had a letter from them day before. Once more he called and after about ten minutes informed us that it was no use, that there were certainly no Foreign Priests there. We then guessed that he was calling the wrong place so we wrote for him the Chinese characters for our Chuchow and he at once recognized his mistake. The Chuchow he was calling was in the Vicariate of Hangchow, where Father Ouang, formerly of Kinhwa, is now Parish Priest. There is a decided difference in the pronunciation of the two names.

Once more he tried the call only to tell us that the line was broken. So our Chuchow call was all off and we returned to the Mission just in time for prayers and Benediction, after which we sang some hymns and Father Beal played the organ.

In the evening we played some records on Father Stringer's Victrola and thus consoled ourselves with our futile attempt to say "Hello" to the boys at Chuchow.

Grey Sisters Happy In Their Work

Since their arrival in Chuchow, our three Sisters have had a busy time attending to the sick and the afflicted of the district, treating, on some days, as many as a hundred cases. "We love our work," one of the Sisters writes, "but will be glad when we can have some competent help, that is, someone who has a knowledge of medicine." Happily one of them is a trained nurse, but she feels the need of further skilled assistance if they are to be able to attend properly to the crowds that ask their assistance. She tells us:

"We had the opening on the 8th, as planned. The pupils all had a holiday in our honor, and they spent it on our front steps, looking in to see what they could see and to follow us everywhere we went. As the building is still in progress, the gates have to be kept open and the people crowd in by the dozen. We had callers all day Tuesday, the majority having a pain or an ache someplace. I think the priests must have told them we were 'Cure-alls'.

"On Wednesday a man came to say that his daughter was dying. Father Serra asked us to call on her. They were pagans, but the poor man said all had given her up and if they, the Sisters, could or would do anything, he knew she would get better. We diagnosed the case as typhoid and treated her accordingly, left some medicine and now, thank God, she is improving. Father Serra accompanied us. From this call we visited an old lady who was also dying. Oh! such a hovel for any sick person to live in! Dark, no light save that of a tiny lamp burning low. That same evening a man was brought in on a stretcher, dying. We gave him conditional Baptism and I hope he is in Heaven by now. Since Saturday we have treated about fifty daily.

"Our consolations are numerous, but it is heart-rending to hear those poor people appealing for help. They are so grateful for the smallest service or least act of kindness."

CONGRATULATIONS!

Our Sisters Reach Chuchow

By REV. WM. K. AMYOT

Yes, Bishop Defebvre must have reached Shanghai on Nov. 28th, returning from his shortened visit to Europe and America. Had he received our letter? Would he grant the necessary permission for our Sisters to come to the new home and plant, being prepared for them, that was fast nearing completion? Such questions and many others passed to and fro between us with more pressing anxiety as the ever-moving time slipped by, shortening with each successive day the possibilities of the Grey Sisters of the Immaculate Conception from Pembroke, being able to reach Chuchow in time to celebrate, and open their Convent, on their Greatest of Feasts, The Immaculate Conception.

November passed. Still no word. Hope was dwindling fast, for someone would have to go to Wenchow to act as escort and arrange for boats, transportation of baggage, etc., all of which would take time. Time, those precious hours that still remained. Yes! Hours, and in a country where time means little to the majority of men. Could we still make it? Had the dead line already been reached? Monday came and was gone. No, not quite. For as the shadows began to lengthen and the dusk to draw nigh, the looked-for, longed-for, missive came. Permission had been granted. God bless our Bishop said we all. Then things began to hum. The workmen were spurred on to do their utmost, they could have no leisure now, for everybody must get busy and help. The glad news was relayed on to the waiting Sisters, a boat was ordered for the morrow, final instructions given, things were packed and at last we had entered the final lap, starting on the last leg of that long-delayed journey that was to bring the Canadian Sisters to Chuchow.

On the eve of our departure, the weather-prophets had forecast snow during the night and snow indeed we saw next day, on the peaks of several mountains, as we slipped down stream, a decided breach of weather etiquette in these parts for this time of year. The trip was the usual. The countryside tinted with reds and gold, was donning its new mantle. Autumn was fast giving way to winter, and flocks of migrating cormorants and duck added action to the quiet scene. There was little of an exciting nature except perhaps, if one might call it such, for a certain incident of which mention will be made later. Anyway, in due time, after two days, we arrived safely in Wenchow on the evening of December 3rd. The Feast of St. Francis Xavier.

The Sisters were all in high spirits, most of the packing had been done, their temporary home had been stripped of its conveniences, which had found their way into baskets or cases, and now they were using borrowed utensils, supplied by their hosts of the last long year, the Good Sisters of Charity. It would have done your heart good if you could have seen their happy faces when I arrived and told them I had come to fulfil the office I had begun last December. That I had come to take them on their way, to complete the journey to their new home in Chuchow, to their own Home, their Order's First House in the Far East. Also how we could certainly get there for the Great Feast if the weather turned not against us.

Early the next day, Dec. 4th, the boats were hired, and though it was raining, all non-perishable baggage was sent off. Surely the rain would stop in the afternoon, we thought, and then the rest could be safely transported and stowed aboard, so that we could leave bright and early next morning. But here was the rub! then it was that trouble began. Man proposes, but God disposes. The powers of darkness and storm seemed angered at the prospect of the honour to be given God on the coming Feast of His Blessed Mother, far up among the hills of this pagan land. The showers became a storm, the wind, with increasing velocity, howled around the corners, driving the torrents of rain in every direction, and whipped the waters of the harbour to fury. As time, precious time, dragged on, the storm grew worse and worse, so that the remaining baggage could not be moved. We could just sit and wait and hope. In the meantime, like little "Pollyannas", nearly everybody kept telling us we could not go, it was foolishness to try it, the storm will keep up for days like this, stay here for the Feast and be sure of making it a good one, a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush, you can celebrate the Octave Day in Chuchow, we want you here, why even the weather favours what we say. All seemed pitted against us, and tears were almost in Our Poor Sisters' eyes for they had so longed to be in Chuchow for that Great Day. Please don't say no: go, they said, we don't fear the weather. But little they knew how fear or no fear, when the weather is truly against them, the Chinese boatmen refuse to budge. Darkness fell, hope was going fast. Still, if the boats would go, we could leave in the morning; that untransported baggage could take its chance and follow later. The uncertainty was heart-rending, but we could do no more, so, like Boy Scouts, we tried to stick to their motto, "Be Prepared."

During the night the storm broke, it cleared, the wind died down. Hope returned but not for long, for by 3.30 a.m. the storm had picked up again. My boy went down to the quay about four to find out if the boats were leaving, but alas, it was of no use. As Mass ended he returned with his negative report: "We could not leave that day."

'Twas disappointing to say the least, our plans were now upset. It would require almost a miracle to bring us to Chuchow in time for Mass on the Big Day, but we could still get there for a part of the Feast, the weather being propitious. Oh well! now that "the milk was spilt" the only thing to do was to make the best of it. The wind would not prevent us loading the boats and more shopping could be done. So in true Chinese style we settled down patiently to wait and see what the Lord would bring on the morrow.

Ting-a-ling-ling 3.30 a.m. said the alarm clock. All too soon it seemed—and it was Saturday, the sixth. The full December moon had not yet gone to rest, the sky was clear, the wind had weakened. Let's go, the time has come. Again, as yesterday, through the kindness of the Mother Superior, Sister Helen, I said the Community Mass at 4.30 a.m. in the Sisters' Chapel, which, through a special privilege, enjoyed by the Sisters of Charity, on Saturdays, was followed by Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament. Our journey was to begin and to end too with a direct blessing from Our Loving Lord Himself, Who commands the waves, the wind and all creation; so how could things go wrong?

Although the day had not yet dawned, when the rickshas drew up at the door, it was quite bright for the moon still shed her light and softly looked down upon that little group of Missionaries, the Sisters of CHARITY—large always must that word be written —with their blue habits and white coronets in sharp contrast to the Canadian Sisters, in their quiet grey and black. The silence was noticeable, for once again were dear friends parting. Simple words were spoken, but that anguish of heart was there, which God seems to ask so fervently and even require as a personal sacrifice to be made for Him, from each of His chosen ones, as step by step they leave those and that which they have known and loved in this world, to come nearer and closer to Him, their Eternal Spouse. Like Arabs, we had folded our tents in the night and were silently stealing away. Good-bye! Bon voyage! and the parting had been made.

The rickshas rolled and bumped along the mile or more of narrow cobbled streets to the boats. Little was said for silence then was golden and the stillness was only broken by the sound of the runners' bells. All went well. We reached the low stone jetty in good time, the tide was rushing in, the boats were still resting high up upon the muddy banks, and the "Lao Dahs" (or boatmen) were already cooking their morning meal. It was fast growing light now, and the day promised fine. The boats had to be slid over the oozy mud, like toboggans over snow, and down "ker-swish" into the swirling eddying waters. Then it was we embarked and said good-bye to Sister Mary, who had come all the way down to the docks at that hour to see her three charges off, a mother, yes, a real mother to them to the very last.

Soon the whistle of the tug blew and of course there followed quite a commotion. More boats had to be tied on in line and all had to be reshuffled as usual several times, not without much shouting and arguing either till all were fastened. Then with more tooting we slowly got under way and Wenchow was a thing of the past. Quite a strong headwind was blowing but the day was bright and sunny. Spite of the cold and cramped quarters the Sisters took to "River Life" like ducks to water. Merrily we bobbed along . . . and about noon reached the town of Wenchee, some thirty miles up stream, where the tide stops and the motor tugs cast off their tow to pick up others waiting and then immediately head back for Wenchow.

Here it was, just as with Joseph and Mary at Jerusalem, that my charges got away from me. I had settled down to read my Breviary, thinking the while, yes, in fact I was sure of it, that the Sisters' boat was one of those following right behind. But too lightly had I judged. Too little did I realize how these rivercraft do resemble one another just so much as do the peas within a pod. (I was mistaken, it was not so, theirs was not a coming.) Besides my boy, tried and true gold, was with them and he would see that the "Lao dahs" kept doing their best. Ahead at Tsing Tien City we must of necessity pass the Customs, who, of late, had been getting very officious. My sailors were poling along steadily into the teeth of a good strong wind. Leave good enough alone,

I thought. Why stop them now for they might not easily get going again! Later I looked out. Yes! Boats were still coming along. I thought I could still pick out theirs, so there was nothing to worry about at all. The river here was wide, and all seemed quite safe. We might as well keep going, I thought, for I could easily go back those few hundred yards separating us, after passing the Customs, and see that they too came through all right. So, putting aside all cause of fear, I continued with my Office.

Tsing Tien at last! The baggage boat and mine passed with flying colours and drew up at the City gate. Then I started back to pick up the other boat. But alas! It was not there. It was not even in sight. Boatmen that passed kept saying they were coming, but darkness was too, and as minutes slipped by without sign or sight of them, I began to grow really anxious. Had I lost them here at the start? It was all my fault. I should have known better, have taken nothing for granted. Mary! Joseph! help me. You who know pray, pray they may be safe. Back, back, on I went over the rocks, through the sand and around curve after curve. Boats passed going both ways, but not that precious one. It was now quite dusk. A cold fear kept gripping at my heart. Are they gone? Are they gone? There's another boat. Yes, a single boat. I hailed it. No answer. Perhaps they didn't hear. Again I hailed. Still no sound, but what's that? Did I see something or were my eyes deceiving me? Something white, a handkerchief, a little handkerchief indeed it was, waving from beneath the close-fitting bamboo roof. Oh, what a relief! Thank God 'tis they, and all are safe. The boat pulled in to the shore, I jumped aboard expecting them to go right on but no such luck. No, having stopped, right here they'd eat their evening meal, whether we liked it or no. Patience, patience. Yes, "Patience is a virtue, possess it if you can." Still there was nought else to do but sit there and wait. Sometime later we'd reach the City. Having finished their rice and vegetables, on up the rapids we went, and reached the Customs O.K. But here they stalled again. We had to almost drive them, because for some unknown reason, they were unwilling to go on those last few remaining rods to the upper City gate that night.

Port at last. All hands on deck. We'll not stay here, we are going to the Mission Compound to sleep. Carriers were called. Then stiffly we trudged through the dark winding streets, the half mile or so to the Chapel. Here all was in order, poor but a place we could call our own, God's house amid the pagan idols. The Catechist had obeyed orders, and pasted paper over the paneless window frames, straw too, had been spread over boards on trestles and this was to be their quarters for the night. Once more the bountiful lunch prepared by the Ever Good Sisters of Charity, did its duty nobly and filled the breach. To bed! upstairs, ascend, rest ye weary ones. and thus did they pass their first night in the District of Chuchow.

Ding-ding-ding-ding. 'Tis four a.m. Arise! We'll have Mass to begin our day, then breakfast and away.

It was well past six and just getting light when we pushed off from the foot of those high grey walls and continued on our venturous way. All day we slid along. The wind had dropped, the sky was overcast, and rain fell almost continuously throughout those long, drawn-out hours, as towing, poleing, rowing along the beaches, up rapids, around curves and bends we went. Only now all three boats had to keep close together for there was to be none of yesterday's doings to-day.

About three-thirty p.m. we reached the famous "Shih Meng Dong," that cave and wonderland. Showers or no showers, we could not resist the lure to visit it. The pattering rain could not diminish but only added to the wild natural beauty of the place. "Oh if only Sister Mary could see this, how happy she would be." Yes. The whisp of falling water, the cave, the little stream, the very beauty of this enchanting spot had gripped our Sisters too. The visit over, we travelled on and at nightfall pulled up, or rather staked-in on the stony beach opposite Hai-Keu, still twenty-eight miles from our goal, with to-morrow the Feast itself. Yet, hope springs eternal in the human breast, it was still possible to arrive before the Feast be over.

Snugly we fitted into our little quarters, but not till a lengthy word battle had been fought out and won on the beach. For, according to previous promises, the Sisters' boat was to have no men in it during the night, but was to be securely tied and sandwiched in between our other two boats; the owner, however, got angry when the time came for him to fulfill his end of the contract, and objected vociferously, saying: "It was too dangerous as there were many, many bandits around." It looked quite serious for a while, but all the other boatmen supported us, and pouncing upon the dissenter, they compelled him to give in, who then found floor space elsewhere. When the hub-hub had subsided, and one by one the weary fell asleep, silence enshrouded the scene, which was only broken by the soft pattering of the rain on the roof and the occasional barking of a wandering village dog. Peacefully, tiredly did our Sisters sleep, but not their poor servant, Lucia, who could not sleep a wink, for, being Chinese, she had understood too well the conversation of the evening's row. She knew that right here we were sleeping in the very vicinity that was headquarters of the bandits in these parts, and that an hour after the disturbance just mentioned, the loaded ferry came over to our side, who, by their conversation, showed that everybody in Hai-Keu, across the way, knew we were there and all about us. What hopes of secrecy in China! But even she did not know all. How, but a quarter of a mile from here, while coming down to get them, I had passed at high noon, within fifty yards of thirty bandits, rifles and all, who were piling into a ferry to cross over to the very side of the river on which we were even now securely moored. It was here, too, Fr. Serra and Fr. Stringer previously, on different occasions, had seen the bandits. Admittedly danger there was, but not more so than during our journeyings throughout the whole of the past year. We were absolutely in the hands of God. He would look after us, bandits or no bandits. And as for the Sisters, I thought it far better in their present position to observe the old proverb, "What you don't know won't hurt you." The others slept so we slept too.

About midnight I awoke with a start, my heart pounding within me. What was that? There, there a few feet away, tampering with the rope of the Sisters' boat. My first thought was bandits. Had they come? "Jeh-neng?" (or Who's that). No answer. Then our boat trembled, some one was out there in the darkness for sure. I jumped up with a shout and was just in time to see the marauder hurriedly depart and hear it go bounding over the roofs of the nearby boats. What relief! For it was only a weasel, whose sensitive nose had detected fish in the "Lao Dahs'" larder.

At dawn our boatmen bestirred themselves. 'Twas cold and raining still. Mary's Feast, Our Sisters' Feast, The Immaculate Conception. Happy Feast!

A Holy Feast to All! Strange words they seemed and Oh, so out of tune with these surroundings. "But walls do not a prison make nor iron-bars a cage." It was the Feast, Their Feast, be externals what they may, and only God Himself knew what we'd passed safely through. Without even delaying for breakfast we started off, they could cook and eat it along the way, for we MUST reach Chuchow this day.

"Poo-kays" (or sleeping bags) were bundled up and rolled aside. The altar was prepared. And then, down into our very midst in that little crowded skiff, as it gently glided along came He, Whose delight is to be among the children of men. O Jesus, through Mary Thy Immaculate Mother, we adore Thee. We thank Thee, and still beg of Thee protection, that we may do always Thy Ever Holy Will.

After our Thanksgiving we further celebrated by doing justice to the cold roast chicken and sandwiches supplied from that copious lunch basket—as mentioned above—and thought and talked of the Present and of Home.

All day we travelled steadily on, passing boats at every rapid that were not so anxious to proceed as we in such disagreeable, rainy weather. Nearer ever nearer, step by step, we rose higher and higher from the sea, and traversed the short reaches between each rapid, coming closer, ever closer, to Chuchow and Home. Would that tower below the City never appear. O! There it is! there it is! See Sisters, we are almost there now. On, on, we go "past the old temple nestled among tall trees," past "Yoh-woo" and the Customs' boat. Joyously in welcome did they hail us. Things were livening up a bit. A little further on the school boys came running down the bank anxious to get a first look at the Foreign Sisters. The rain, which perhaps had been one of the factors that had kept the bandits away, still pattered down a little, but it could not dampen the ardour of the huge crowd of welcomers assembled far ahead at the landing stage. Just as the boats drew up, however, the last drop fell, umbrellas were put away and flags began to wave. There was Fr. Serra. Yes, and all the other priests, Parishioners assemble to bid farewell to Fr. Ouang, of Kinhwa, our "neighbour" in China, who was recently placed in charged of the important district of Chuchowfu.

too, the Catechists, school children and Christians all were there, with many pagans thrown in for luck to swell that happy throng.

Out stepped the Sisters. A few words of greeting alone could be heard, so great was the noise of the festive firecrackers and the babble of enthusiastic voices on every side. Then with bows and smiling faces the poor Sisters faced the music and ran the gauntlet through the pressing, laughing crowds that lined either side and followed in behind along the route of passing.

Straight to the Church first thing they went to the very feet of our Divine Master, Who was waiting there so lovingly to impart His Benediction, just as He had already done, three days previously, in Wenchow before our departure. It was still the Feast. Our prayers had been heard and our wishes granted; for the Grey Sisters of the Immaculate Conception had reached Chuchow safely in time to open their First House in the Far East on the Greatest of their Feasts, the Immaculate Conception (Dec. 8th, 1930). O Mary Immaculate to them and us be ever and always, Mother.

Yours in Christ,

WM. K. AMYOT.

SHE PAYS THE PRICE.

Canada is justly proud of the fact that in the abolition of slavery she led the world; and although in this act of justice and humanity, other countries followed her lead, not so China, where slavery still remains in its primitive cruelty and degradation.

Ta-ming is an honest, thrifty, and industrious Chinese farmer, but now he faces starvation and ruin. His small patch of land has failed him this year. Disease and drought have ruined his crops. Then too, sickness, followed by death, has visited his little home. Costly things these in a Chinese family. To Ta-ming three alternatives are left: he must either beg, borrow or starve. He shrinks from begging, and as for starving—well he has his wife to consider, and also little Lo-ti, the darling, and sunbeam of his home. Ta-ming then will borrow from Li-sing, the rich money-lender, enough to tide him over his present calamities. True, the sum he will borrow will be almost doubled by the exorbitant interest exacted by Li-sing, but next year, perhaps, the gods will be propitious, the crops good, and by the practice of a grinding economy, Ta-ming may be able to meet at least part of his debt, and thus keep the roof over his head.

Li-sing, the money-lender, knows his business. He does not lend rashly. True, Ta-ming is wretchedly poor, but if he be unable to meet his debt at the expiration of the given time, Li-sing will not be the loser. In fact such a turn of events may even suit Li-sing's plans better. In Ta-ming's humble home there is an excellent substitute for Li-sing's cash. He has seen and appraised, in slave value, bright, chubby, winning little Lo-ti. Willingly then does this Chinese Shylock lend his money to poor Ta-ming. The "pound of flesh" at least will not escape his covetous clutches. The day for payment arrives, and Ta-ming's hands are empty. Relentless and implacable, Li-sing names the substitute, and in dumb misery, Ta-ming is forced to submit.

The next day the mother of little Lo-ti attires the child in her poor little best. Lo-ti is told that she is going on a trip to the city with her father, and so great is her joy at this unusual privilege that she fails to notice her mother's red-rimmed eyes, the dry, choking sobs that occasionally escape her tortured breast, and the convulsive clutch of her farewell embrace. Heavy-hearted and with laggard steps Ta-ming starts down the long road, with Lo-ti, like a gay little butterfly flitting along beside him.

At last the city is reached, and they pause by the beautiful home of the money-lender. They enter, and Lo-ti gazes round in childish delight and awe. Never before has she beheld such luxury and magnificence. Poor little Lo-ti! She will soon realize that she is only a wounded captive bird in this gilded cage. Ta-ming tells her that he must leave her here a while, but that he will return soon. He cannot trust himself to bid the little one good-bye, but hurries away without even a backward glance. Left to herself, Lo-ti wanders innocently around, admiring everything she sees with wide-open, childish eyes. Then she realizes that her father is gone a long time, and in vague uneasiness, she gazes wistfully out of the window. Then she sits down very, very quiet, and very, very still. The gay little butterfly has ceased its flitting. Its wings are broken. Its days of freedom are at an end.

Never again shall little Lo-ti see father, mother, home, for she is now a life-long slave of a hard and cruel master, and a relentlessly-exacting mistress. She shall be beaten, starved, broken, to suit the whims of her pagan owners.

O you who enjoy the noble blessings which Christianity alone brought into the world, will you not, by your prayers, your alms, your encouragement, aid the missionaries who would bring to darkened China the faith from which all good things spring, "the freedom wherewith Christ hath made us free!"

Dear Buds,—

Many of the newcomers want to know if there are "any rules to our Club." For their benefit we re-state the conditions of membership, namely, that each Bud go to Holy Communion once a month for the intention of missionary vocations and say every day the Prayer for the conversion of China.

There is another intention which we should like to bring to the attention of the Buds this month. You know how delighted we all were when we heard of the release of Fathers Laffan and Linehan in China just after the members of the Garden had all been praying for their safety. We are now going to pray for Father Tierney and the other three captive missionaries in China, for there are only four now captive out of all the missionaries over there. And when you join with the Priest in saying the prayers after Mass from now on remember that the Holy Father wishes these prayers to be said for the Church in Russia. You know we have so much faith in the power of the united prayers of our little army of faithful Buds that there are many things we would like to recommend to them. Father Jim is even selfish enough to ask for one for himself once in a while.

Well, the Buds have something to say this month so I must leave space for their letters and pictures.

Affectionately,
FATHER JIM.

Knows Father Jim.

Gertrude Noonan, of St. Gregory's School, Oshawa, and all her schoolmates evidently have settled the Fr. Jim question to their satisfaction. "Our teacher showed us your picture to-day," she writes, "so I am not guessing any more." Say, wouldn't it be a terrible thing if that picture ever found its way into CHINA, provided, of course, it is really a picture of Father Jim.

And speaking of St. Gregory's School, this month we welcome twelve new Buds from among the pupils there. We trust they have all received their certificates and pins by now.

They are anxious to hear from Buds in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island so we must give the names of our new friends from the motor city of Canada. Here they are: Gordon Murphy; John Pudky (hope we got your name right, John); Constance Almond; Bernadetta Meagher; Billie Bawks; Yvette Sawyer; Irene Delong; Bernard Buckley; Mildred Habberfield; Gertrude Noonan; Norman Hannan; Betty Brockman.

We trust their appeal for Eastern correspondents will meet with a response from our Maritime Buds and those in the "Garden of the Gulf".

R. I. P.

A short time ago, from far-away Victoria, there came a letter from Ruth Graves, a sick little Bud, one who had been delicate for years. It was just one letter among hundreds, yet so sweetly did it tell of love of God and of the Little Flower and of the Missions that we could not but be impressed. Here was a rare young soul, one whom suffering cheerfully borne had endeared to God and to the Heavenly Patroness of our Little Garden.

"Oh, how lovely" she wrote, "if we could have all the Buds give even just one thing to the Little Flower every day. She offers our gift to God and He gives her a grace or favor, some rose-petal to send down to earth, to convert a sinner, to help a missionary."

She offers our gift to God! How prophetic the words and how beautiful! For that child is now in Heaven. The Little Flower has visited her little Rose Garden and picked one Rose Bud more beautiful than the rest. And she has offered our gift to God, the greatest gift, an innocent child-soul. The Rose Garden is the poorer for the loss.

In her first letter she asked for some pen-pals. No doubt the fact that she was sick prompted the generous response from members of the Rose Garden for in a letter Fr. Jim received from her a few weeks ago she told how happy she was to receive so many letters but that she was so weak she could only write one or two in return.

Ruth Graves is dead. But she has left with us a message and an inspiration. From Heaven, we know, she will pray for her little friends of the Rose Garden and help them to be more worthy of their Heavenly patroness.

Wouldn't it be nice if the Buds were to write her Father and Mother, at 2925 Prior St., Victoria, B.C., and enclose a spiritual bouquet! I am sure they would appreciate it and it would console them greatly in their bereavement.

The Word Building Contest sure was a success if we are to judge by the number of Buds who sent in solutions. Too bad there are not prizes enough for everybody. I know you are all anxious to know who were the lucky winners, so here they are. First Prize, Rose McLarnon, 2071 Cuvillier St., Montreal. Rose had a total of 306 correct words and stands well in the lead. Second, Madeline Howarth, 49 Beaufort Rd., Toronto, 257 words. Third, Francis Mooney, Apt. 27, 257 Slater St., Ottawa, 241. Fourth, Mary Kelly, Box 212, Eganville, Ont., with 238. Fifth, Angeline Sansone, 89 Oxford St., Hamilton, 235. Sixth, Teresa O'Reilly, Box 116, Eganville, Ont., 220. Seventh, Mary Mulloy, Bay Bulls, Nfld., 218. Eighth, Mary Dora McCarthy, 161 Pearson Ave., Toronto, 214. Ninth, Mary Culnan, 445 Gladstone Ave., Toronto, 213. Tenth, Donald Benninghaus, 5339 Burlingame Ave., Detroit, Mich., 204.

Honorable mention must also be made of Olga Dennis, Port Arthur, and A. B. Monbourquette, Soldier's Cove, Nfld., who had 195 and 193 correct, respectively. In most cases there were very many more words submitted than appear above but many were incorrect, some were repetitions, and some plurals.

Father Jim certainly adjusted his "specs" when two lists appeared one day from Buds in Halifax, from St. Joseph's School. One had 1114 and the other 1360 words but they must have thought we were looking for words in Polish or Russian or Esperanto. In each list there were about 180 correct words.

Here's a cheery little letter from Margaret Reynolds (Lily Fair), Hawthorne St., Antigonish, N.S. Margaret is lucky because, as she herself tells us, she has a teacher who is "a very nice teacher, and not a bit cross. Every time she tries to get cross she always laughs in the middle of it."

"When everybody has read the CHINA I take the pictures out of it and paste them on a piece of cardboard and hang it in my room."

After a while Margaret will have a picture of nearly all the Buds in the Garden, that is if they all send us their pictures. Some are a bit shy about it. I think it is a nice idea, Margaret. I hope you never give your teacher any reason to be cross, especially as she is so good to you all.

Miss Rose of Lima d'Entremont, L. E. Pubnico, N.S., thinks it would be a nice thing to have a Garden for older boys and girls, and wishes CHINA had such a thing. What do the Buds think of this suggestion?

Geneive Paquet promises to send us a picture of herself and also of the kind of snowbanks they have around Souris, P.E.I. Don't forget, Geneive, especially the picture of yourself. As for snowbanks we don't see any more up this way for the past few years.

A Valuable Suggestion.

And here's another letter about the idea of a Club for older members. It is from Miss Hilda Brotherhood, Summerside, P.E.I., who certainly has our interests very much at heart.

"I was thinking that it would be nice to form a 'Mid Summer Rose Garden' for the Buds in our town from 15 to 20 years of age. We could make it into a club and then elect president, vice-president and financial secretary. Also we could make card parties, concerts and other things like fellow clubs are doing and the proceeds could go in to the CHINA to help educate priests."

Our little friends of separate school, Greenock, Ont., who sent us $5.00, which they saved for China.

We are certainly grateful for this suggestion. As a matter of fact there are several such clubs already in existence and one of them, in Toronto, is educating one of the students in our Seminary.

For the best results I think a Club of this kind should be left to the organizers to handle themselves. We should be willing to co-operate in every way possible. It would really be a little Mission Circle, organized by friends of the Missions, and the amount of good it could do is incalculable. If some such little circles were really organized in various parts of the country, it would be a wonderful thing for us and our priests in China.

Miss Kathleen Cain, Spaniard's Bay, Nfld., would like to hear from Buds in Fairville, N.B., also from Claire and Ruth MacDonald. Kathleen sent us a very interesting account of how she spent her Christmas.

Margaret MacNeill (Peg o' My Heart) Summerside, P.E.I., has "worked her brain nearly upside down trying to think of words for the contest." Here's wishing you the best of luck, Margaret.

Francis Walshe (Bluebird), Cape Broyle, Nfld., sends a snapshot which is, we regret, too dark for reproduction. Francis says that he did not yet get any letters from the Buds so we hope somebody will drop him a line.

Bertha Richards, Summerside, P.E.I., is very anxious for correspondents and mentions it three times in her letter "to make sure I do not forget" to let the Buds know.

Naomi Smith (Shamrock) tells us she had the pleasure of hearing Fr. Fraser speak at St. Joseph's Church, Toronto, and that the Crusade Unit of their school presented him with a cheque for $100.00. What a wonderful present that was! We are deeply grateful, Naomi, to our generous young friends at St. Joseph's.

Teresa O'Reilly, of Eganville, Ont., "thinks the Rose Garden is a wonderful thing, and is always talking about it." That's what her sisters say, and as a result of her interest we have the pleasure of welcoming them both as members this month, Rita ("Live for Ever") and Katie ("Live Wire").

Mary E. Donovan, a new Bud from New Aberdeen, N.S., would like to correspond with girls about 16 or 18 years of age.

"It was the three Sisters from our Convent who left Pembroke about a year ago to aid in the great mission work" writes Anita Martin (Jolly) "and for that I'm doubly interested". All the Buds can read this month of the work of our Sisters in China.

A letter written by Tessie Metcalfe (Georgenia Rose) Bell Island, Nfld., on Nov. 16th, has just come back to us from Shanghai. It was addressed, Scarboro Bluffs, China, and, of course, went to China. It bears four postmarks, Bell Island, St. John's, Shanghai and Scarboro Bluffs, and we are sending the envelope back to Tessie as an interesting souvenir of her much travelled letter.

Canadian Prosperity Depends on FAR-SIGHTED BUYING

WE want to thank those clergy whose far-sighted buying policy of insisting on Made in Canada Choir and Clerical Outfits is enabling us to keep our staff constantly employed at wages consistent with Canadian Living Standards.

The people of Canada are being brought to realize more than ever before how economically unsound it is to purchase goods manufactured abroad simply for the sake of saving the difference between wage standards in other countries and our own.

Such a policy is not only near-sighted but also extremely unpatriotic especially on the part of the clergy whose prosperity as well as that of their churches is greatly dependent on the prosperity of Canadians.

When you buy in Canada you save by sharing in Canadian prosperity.

In all our garments we use the best British made materials procurable.

MAIN STREET.

Main Street, Chuchow, is the big Broadway of the town and the business section of the city. It is not any wider than the main corridor in China Mission Seminary, and it is paved with stones.

On both sides of the narrow street are shops of all kinds. A few only are built of stone and can boast of glass windows. Most of them are wooden and open in front, like stalls at a market. Most things in the stores are hand-made, except for a few foreign goods.

Here is a kind of grocery store, with fish, rice, vegetables and meat for sale. Beside it is a store where firecrackers are made, destined for use on the pagan feast days. Then there is the tobacco shop, where Chinese tobacco is weighed and sold in bulk. Of course there are cigarettes, too, but the other priests can tell you more about them. I still belong to the non-smokers' club. Many shops where superstitious articles are made, may be seen on every hand. The farmers, in town to sell their vegetables, buy a supply of paper money, joss sticks, etc., at these stores and then start back home.

Just around the corner here is the blacksmith shop, where shovels, nails, pans, cleavers, etc., are all made by hand and sold for a pittance. On a hot summer day, when the blacksmith and his apprentice make the anvil ring, another helper has the job of fanning them. Over the blacksmith's head is a piece of canvas or something, which is pulled back and forth by a string, thus creating a breeze.

At one end of the street is the Big Water Gate, which leads to the nearby river. At the other end is what one might call Market Square. beyond which is the official residence of the Mandarin.

The traffic problem on Main Street is quite a pertinent question. Dogs, cats, geese, ducks, hens, pigs, and babies, not to speak of carriers with all kinds of loads make the narrow way look for all the world like an Irish stew. On market days, one has to push his way through the crowds and one sees many of the aborigines, a virile race, who hate the Chinese, and only mix with them for reasons of trade. I will write about them some other time.

So this is Main Street, colorful and strange. Often I have walked along it, until now I know many faces and many know me. Many of the kiddies now greet me with —"haw fuh haw"—how are you.

Head Work.

Joe—Why does an Indian wear feathers on his head?

Josephine—Why, I guess to keep his wigwam.—Digester.

Bright.

A financier says the future is bright for those who work hard, while we say few would consider that a bright future.—Life.

Eye and Ear.

A golfer advocates "Listen" (for the impact of the club-head) as a better precept than "Keep your eye on the ball." Our preference is for "Keep your ear on the ball."—Punch.

Nae Sae Bad.

Young Angus had been out for the evening with his best girl. When he arrived home he found his father sitting up. The old man looked up and shook his head.

"Hae ye been oot wi' yon lassie again?" he asked.

"Aye, dad," replied younger Angus. "Why do ye look sae worried?"

"I was just wonderin' how much the evening cost."

"No more than half a croon, dad."

"Aye? That was no sae much."

"It was a' she had." said Angus.

HAPPYLAND

Last night while in my dreams, I played
Beside a winsome fairy maid,
Who gently took me by the hand
And led me off to Happyland.

In Happyland on Healthy Street,
The houses all are clean and neat,
And fairy children, never ill,
Dance in the sunshine, roam at will.

"Our health charm you must surely know,"
My fairy maiden whispered low,
"Just drink a lot of pure, rich milk,
It keeps you healthy,—fine as silk."

So boys and girls, I had to tell
The secret charm of keeping well,
So we can be like that gay band
On Healthy Street in Happyland.

Mother Health's Magic Colour

There's a funny old person
Who is called Mother Health;
She's keen and correct as can be,
Knows just how to live
And can see why we fail,
By her magic she reads us, you see.

She loves little children,
And tries very hard
To keep them all happy and well;
Her paint brush she dips
In the dew of the rose;
Her colour the fairies can tell.

Sallow cheeks, heavy eyes
Make her sad and despair,
No longer her brush she will wield;
She's discovered some children
Who do not drink milk,
Her very own chosen health shield.

She's alarmed by the millions
Of death-dealing germs,
That are watching to seize on their prey;
Protection she'll give you,
If you'll be advised,
Drink a quart of pure milk every day.

ST. FRANCIS XAVIER SEMINARY,
SCARBORO BLUFFS, ONT.

AN URGENT APPEAL

Dear Readers:—

For some time past we have been concerned over the fact that we have no room for the students who have applied already for admission next year. Contributions towards our building fund have been trickling in very slowly, on account of hard times and universal depression.

Now—while there is still time to build, and have a new wing ready for September—we are launching a very special and urgent appeal, praying that our kind friends will lend their support in this drive for a much-needed home for future missionaries to China.

When we began to build our present Seminary we had a fund of $35,000, due to the sale of our former property at Scarboro. At present our building fund is approximately ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS.

We hesitate to make a start with that small amount on hand, even though we could borrow the whole amount needed, but if we receive a fair response to this appeal we shall be enabled to start work at once.

Plans have already been prepared for a building which will give us what our present seminary never possessed—adequate chapel, lecture hall and dining room accommodation, as well as rooms for fifty students or more.

The present is an ideal time to build. Materials are very cheap; labor is very plentiful. The erection of a new wing would provide work for many who have long been unemployed. We earnestly request your help.

A contribution of five dollars from each of our readers would pay for the building we have in mind. Some cannot afford this amount. Others can spare very much more. God will reward any generous sacrifice you are prepared to make for a work which means so much for souls.

"And whosoever shall give to drink to one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, amen I say to you he shall not lose his reward." Matt. x 42.

Harvesting for Christ

By

FATHER SHARKEY

It was the harvest-time, when I set out last year with Father Serra, on my first mission trip. The men in the fields were gathering in their crops of vegetables, rice and grain; Autumn too, the grim reaper, was mowing down the flowers, gathering in the verdure of the hills, and the wind in the tall grasses seemed like the swish of his scythe; while we, we were going out to gather in a greater harvest, the harvest of souls.

So early one morning, we rolled up our blankets, saw that our mass kits had all the necessary requirements, got together a few other things and were off. Besides Father Serra, there were in the party, two carriers, a catechist, a boy servant and myself.

The first part of the trip we made by boat, going quite a few miles down river. It was a beautiful, Fall morning—the birds were singing, the sun shining, and overhead, the great blue ceiling of God's world, unclouded and serene. Many boats passed us by, skimming along over the water, by means of oar and sail and pike-pole.

A low, rumbling noise, now and again, would tell us that we were nearing one of the many rapids and soon we would go swirling down the current. Not far below the city, we passed a rocky headland, on which stands an old pagoda. This tower is a favorite landmark of ours, when we are travelling up the river, for when we see it, we know we are almost home. Here and there we passed a little village, hugged close to the hillside and in a grove nearby, the ubiquitous temple could be seen—a grim challenge to our zeal for souls.

After a couple of hours, we left the boat and started up through the mountains, on our way to Shan Liaow, about fifteen or more miles away. The sun was hot and the stone steps up the mountains at some places, threatened to be a Jacob's ladder, but the scenery amply repaid one for all his labor. One looked down on beautiful, green valleys and well cultivated fields, variegated squares of green and brown and gold—Mother Nature's checkered apron.

After climbing for some time, we stopped to rest at a pagan temple but the only refreshment we could procure, was a cup of boiled water, which Father Serra and I shared. It sure slaked my thirst though and I realized as only a traveller in the East can, the fuller import of those words of our Lord, concerning the reward that shall be theirs, who give even a cup of cold water in His name. All around us were hideous idols and about the temple itself was that sense of vacancy, morbidness and darkness, that is the atmosphere of a world without Christ. I felt immense relief, when we at last quit it and started on again.

We stopped for dinner at a little village, whose name I no longer remember. As we passed along the main street, the schoolboys were having one of their many recesses and it was amusing to watch the changing looks on their faces, when they spied us. At first they were surprised and afraid, then they were amused, (I had my beard then, so you know why), and before we left, we had made friends with them. While we sat on a bench out on the street, waiting for dinner, they examined our clothes and shoes and like all kids, had lots of questions to ask. Our dinner consisted of rice and eggs, washed down with tea, and quite an audience gathered to see how we handled the chop-sticks. We have become quite experts with them now.

It was about two in the afternoon, when we started on once more and the scenery all along the route was very pretty. We crossed many streams, by the aid of stepping stones, laid from bank to bank. In the rainy season such streams must be impassable, for the stones were then hardly above water. Now and then we would pass a pagan temple, standing in a grove of sacred camphor trees and at one point we saw workmen building a new one, contrary though it is to the laws of Nanking. But after all, I would rather see this people faithful to some gods, than believing in none.

The woods were turning to gold and crimson and down over the cliffs a silver cascade of water would come tumbling. Down in the valley, a young lad lay dozing under a tree, his wide straw hat keeping off the sun, while his milk-white herd of goats cropped the grass nearby. Other lads stood knee-deep in the streams, fishing, and here and there, a farmer worked in his field. They were scenes such as the pastoral poet Virgil would have loved and many of his beautiful lines came back to me, as I walked along.

We reached Shan Liaow at about five-thirty in the evening and it was a relief to get sitting down. We had outdistanced our carriers, who arrived some hours later. Soon after we were seated, the inevitable cup of tea was offered us — a Chinese custom, which the traveller certainly appreciates. We were asked too, if we would care to have a foot bath, another bit of Oriental etiquette, that is alluded to in the gospel, when Our Lord washed the feet of the disciples.

Shan Liaow is a little mountain village, the most recent mission in all our district and one that gives great hopes for the future. Away up in the mountains of Tsingtien, the blight of Communism and atheism has not reached it and it is still a part of old China —the old China that has so many admirable qualities. The most influential family of the village is Christian and if they remain faithful to the Church, there can be little doubt but that in time, the whole population will embrace Our Holy Faith.

For the time being, this Christian family has given the free use of the upper storey of their house, for a Chapel. It is not much of a home for the King of Kings when He comes, but God grant that the warmth of their love, may make this stable of Bethlehem, a wee bit more comfortable for Christ.

Supper was served soon after our arrival and we did full justice to it. We ate in the Chinese fashion, all food being in common dishes, in the centre of the table. Our host would raise his Chopsticks over one of the bowls of food and that was the invitation to eat. Now and again hot wine would be passed around, the wine-cups used being about the size of a thimble. The meal, which was more like a banquet, consisted of: fried potatoes, bean curd, fish, pork, beans, eggs, beef, some kind of a meat crisp, rice, etc. I enjoyed it very much, for everything was well cooked and clean.

After the meal, all sat around, smoking and talking, with more of the inevitable tea. Across from me, sat the old grandfather of the family—a kindly-faced, white-haired old patriarch of somewhat over seventy years. He had a long pipe, which was beautifully carved and measured about three feet, and his high hat and singular shoes were those of a day long gone by. He is indeed of Old China, and although his country is on the threshold of a great change, he will never see it and perhaps it is better so. The modern, pleasure-mad, mechanical world, has little of value to offer him in place of his simple faith and childlike innocence. He has now, all that his heart desires —for he has Jesus. Looking at him, sitting there so complacently, I could not help but recall the words of Simeon—"Now let Thy servant go in peace O Lord, according to Thy word, because my eyes have seen Thy salvation." Only baptized about a year ago, he has indeed come at the eleventh hour, but he shall receive perhaps, as much as we.

Around eight o'clock, I heard the peal of a horn. It rang out across the hills and the cliffs caught the echo and sent it back again. I was at a loss to know what it was, but I found out that it was used to call the Christians to night prayers. It was a long, tin horn, of about four feet in length and every night the head Christian would step outside his door and call the people to evening prayer. It made me think of the priests, with their silver trumpets, high up on the turrets of the Temple at Jerusalem, calling the Jews to the hour of sacrifice.

To-night, as the sound of the horn died away, I saw little lights, here and there, moving up the hillside. Pieces of bamboo are lighted and used as torches—and the flickering lights which I saw, were the different Christian families, coming to prayer.

Stone steps lead from the house below, up to the chapel and remind one of the catacombs. The chapel itself, is nothing more than an attic, open to any wind that blows and partly in use as a storeroom, for farm implements and the like. He gave us the whole world to live in and we will not even give Him a place in His own world, on which to rest His head.

After prayers, the Catechist gave a little sermon on Baptism and I understood quite a bit of it. He told them that if they had a dirty dress, they would immediately search out a pool of clean water and wash out all the stains and that in a spiritual sense, Baptism was just that. After the sermon, we all went downstairs and sat down and talked for a while. They asked many questions about Canada and opened their eyes in wonder at the tales of skyscrapers, trains, automobiles and aeroplanes. After a while all left for home and Father Serra and I after finishing our office, went to bed, for a much needed rest.

The next morning we arose early and said mass. Many Christians came and received Holy Communion. As to Bethany of old, Jesus came to this home that morning, and forgetting about their household cares, many came like Mary, to sit at His feet and listen to Him. I thought of many a gorgeous cathedral, of the pomp and splendor of their liturgy and the beauty of their singing, but somehow against this sordid background, the glory of the mass shone out more brilliantly and calvary in all its nakedness and stark reality, brought us closer to Our Lord.

We were invited out to dinner by another Christian and all the best and choicest dishes were set before us. To our objections to such lavishness and expense, the only answer was a smile. They told us that we came so seldom and that they were so honored by the visit of a priest, that it ill-befitted them to give us anything but the best. Poor people—God bless them. In the evening we had prayers and a sermon on confession.

The next day was Sunday. I said the first mass and during it, Father Serra explained the vestments and the ceremonies used at the Holy Sacrifice. Many who had gone to confession the night previous, received Holy Communion.

In the afternoon, after the holy rosary, I had the wonderful consolation of baptizing six — two boys, two girls, an elderly man and a woman. Afterwards I gave them each a holy picture and a medal. They were my first baptisms since my ordination and they indeed brought me great happiness. Pray for them, they are the first fruits of my ministry. That night the harvest moon came up, a ball of gold, and shone down on the roofs of the village, shone down on six more golden sheaves, that had been harvested and gathered into the granary of the Sacred Heart of Jesus.

The next day, our last day in Shan Liaow, the house was all decorated with paper ornaments of beautiful colors and a big banquet was given us, by the Master of the house. It is the custom in China, that the one who is the host at a banquet, either absents himself or takes the lowest place at the table. Our host did the former and left a friend of his to do the honors. There must have been about thirty different courses — watermelon seeds, persimmons, tangarines, chicken, pork, beef, potatoes, greens, bean curd, peanuts, vegetables of several varieties, eggs that had been preserved for years, meat crisp, fish, cake and cakes, wine, etc. Some of the dishes I enjoyed, but some—well, I have not yet become inured to them.

After dinner, we went to visit all the Christians, stopping at each home a few moments. At all we were treated to tea and cigarettes. In many houses, they are both pagan and Christians and it was not unusual to see on one side of the guest room a picture of Our Blessed Lord or Our Lady and on the other, pictures of some pagan god and incense bowls. Some of the homes were mere shacks and I cannot understand how they can live in them during the cold, winter months. In one house, the old man who lived there had made a figure for his wooden cross out of tinsel, found in the cigarette packages. It was a strange figure of Christ indeed, but one could not doubt the faith that had fashioned it. Please God, when I go back there again (if I ever do), I will take him a real crucifix.

A feast in China would not be a feast without noise, so in the evening a Chinese orchestra was called in, to render some popular selections. One who has never heard Chinese music can not sympathize with us but as I said to Father Serra at the time: "I can put up with anything once." It sounded like a bunch of kids beating tin pans, a dog fight and a cat chorus, all rolled in one, but the poor Christians enjoyed it, so we suffered patiently. And then one by one the party left for home and peace reigned, blessed peace.

The next moring we got up early and said mass. Afterwards we had breakfast and prepared to leave. After our baggage was packed up, we bid all good-bye and started out. All the Christians followed us to the outskirts of the village. The youngsters carried paper flags, two men went before us with trumpets and all along the way numerous firecrackers were set off.

Even after we had bid our little flock a last good-bye, they stood there on the narrow path, watching us till we were lost to view and waving a farewell, when their voice could no longer reach us.

Thus ended my first missionary journey, one that I shall always remember, one full of great joy and consolation. How I would love to go back to them again some day, to have them for my own little flock. God keep them faithful to Holy Mother Church and may each passing year see the harvest moon shine down on many golden sheaves garnered for God.

—FATHER SHARKEY.

With eleven priests in China and thirty-six priests and students altogether in Seminary and College at home we have reached the stage where an addition to our present building has become imperative.

Students will come, and priests will leave for China in increasing numbers year by year. We must provide for them a place of training where they may be enabled to realize their life's ambition, to be A MISSIONARY IN CHINA.

September is only five months away. By that time we must either have accommodation for the new students who are applying for admission, or refer them elsewhere.

You, dear reader, will help decide which course we must adopt. We earnestly appeal for your immediate help if we are to be able to accept those who are giving all they have to give—themselves—to work for souls in China.

A contribution of five dollars from each of our readers would build our new Seminary wing. Many have not that much to give. Some can afford much more.

LITTLE FLOWER'S ROSE GARDEN

Edited by FATHER JIM

Dear Buds:

Were you ever seated at night by your cheery, glowing, happy little fireside, listening to the howl of the wind and the patter of the sleet and the mighty roar of the storm outside? How safe and comfortable and cosy everything seemed indoors! The very fury of the storm seemed to make you appreciate more than ever the safety of your little home, and as mother "tucked you in" for the night, with a parting kiss, she asked you to say a little prayer for those exposed to the fury and danger of the storm. Newfoundland Buds, who have often heard the great Atlantic's roar on just such a night, and who have known the pangs of anxiety and dread for the safety of daddy or big brother perhaps hundreds of miles out to sea, will know just what we mean.

My dear Buds, when we think of you all, and then of all the little children of China, drifting, groping in the dark night of paganism, growing up without any knowledge of God or His Blessed Mother or the Saints, without ever being able to come to Him in confession or receive Him into their hearts—as we can—in Holy Communion—we feel that our little Rose Garden is like the cosy, cheery little home, and that we are the ones safe and happy while the storm and the danger have engulfed so many outside.

But there are some who have left the heat and warmth and glow of the family fireside, who have bid goodbye to home and father and mother, knowing in their heart of hearts that they would meet no more on earth. They are the missionaries who have torn themselves away from the happiness and security and love of their homes the world over and are, even now, battling through the night and through the storm-tossed sea of paganism to rescue those precious souls for whom our dear Lord has died.

Dear Buds, one and all, if Father Jim could speak but one message to you, could tell you something that he wished you to remember more than all else on earth, he would say that only in Heaven, where pagan souls are daily being borne to the loving and eternal embrace of God, and in Hell, where devils tremble at their power, only there is it fully known what great things for eternity you can accomplish by your prayers.

"During our captivity," writes Father Laffan, recently released by bandits in China, "we could feel the power of your prayers, like great waves passing over us," as he sends a message of gratitude to the children. You will recall that our Buds, together with the children in Ireland and America were all offering special prayers for his release.

Dear children, will you remember this, that from all parts of the missionary world to-day and especially from China where so many missionaries are going through such suffering and anxiety, appeals are coming for your prayers, your prayers which are more powerful than gold and silver and eloquence and ability and any and all human gifts. The conditions of membership of our Little Garden are simply that you say daily the prayer for the conversion of China and go to Holy Communion once each month for the intention of missionary vocations.

Next time you hear the storm outside and you thank God for the safety of your little home, and for daddy and mammy and the little brothers and sisters you love, think of those who have left all those behind, and aid them with your fervent prayers against the powers of evil which would snatch from the loving Heart of our Father in Heaven all those little children with whom we hope one day to be happy forever. God bless you all and keep you in His love.

Affectionately,
FATHER JIM.

A Prayer for the Conversion of China

O Lord Jesus Christ, who didst come on earth to save the souls of men, open now Thy most Sacred Heart in mercy to the people of China, who still sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, and shower Thy graces on them, that they may come to the knowledge of Thy Gospel. Bless also and protect Thy missionaries, and make their work fruitful for Thee of countless souls. —Amen.

(300 days' Indulgence)

With Ecclesiastical Approbation

Welcome to new Buds from St. Agnes School, New Waterford, all in the market for genial "corries" from everywhere. They tell us that Johnnie Mite-Box was given a place of honor in the school and during Lent many a penny saved as a result of doing without candy went to help our Missions in China. Buds, one and all we want you to meet and welcome to the Garden:

Patricia MacNeil (Mayflower); Mary McIsaac (Lily); Mary Josephine Gillis (Mayflower); Catherine McEachern (Pansy); Elizabeth Grant (Lily); Catherine Jessie Beaton; Jessie Rich (Rose); Eileen Walsh (Pansy); Helen Podgurski (Mary); Annie Carrigan (Violet); Mary MacNeil (Lily); Laura May McNeill (Lilac); Yolika Bece; Annie McLellan (Teresa); Frances Sullivan (Pansy); Elizabeth McPherson (Catherine); Effie May Gillis (Mayflower); Margaret O'Connor (Daisy); Lilliana Cavalini (Pink Rose); Eileen Roach (Daisy).

And now, Buds, we have a little task for you. We have just received a beautiful but yet a sad letter from one who timidly ventures "as far as the gate" of the Rose Garden, so that the sight of our cheery and happy Buds would brighten her path. She prefers to remain anonymous, to be, as she herself expresses it, "a silent spectator", because she feels that she is too old to enter the Garden. But we all know that nobody who wishes to join our merry band is too old. Are we not all "little children" in spirit, and is anything dearer to our Heavenly Patroness than that we should try ever to be what she was, just a "little child", being led by the Hand of God.

We must give you more of this letter because we want you to bring some of the sunshine of our Garden into the life of one who signs herself, "A Withered Rose". This poor girl has been incurably ill for years.

"I am keenly interested," she writes, "in the brave, noble souls who have left for the Mission fields and say the 'Prayer for Priests' for them every day. I have been sick ten years and although I have been to the best hospitals and specialists in the States and Canada they are not able to help me. I am gradually getting weaker and more helpless.

I am unable to go to Mass but I'd give anything on earth to be able to go and hear a good sermon. I miss them so much. When I left the convent I had planned great things, like so many others, but now, if it is not God's Holy Will that I recover I would be content with just some relief. I am willing to be deprived of what others have, the blessing of health."

Now, dear Buds, we want some of you to write this sick sufferer, and let her know that you would like to cheer and help her. Doctors cannot help. So be it. Let us all join in a petition to the Little Flower in her behalf. I shall offer Holy Mass for her on Sunday, April 19th, and I want as many Buds as possible to offer their Holy Communions on that day to the Little Flower and pray that she drop one of her Roses into the life of this poor little sufferer. We do not know what may be God's Will, but pray that she may be cured, always with resignation, as God knows best. But if it be not His Will to restore her health rest assured that our prayers will bring some gifts from Heaven to this "Withered Rose". Send your letters care of Father Jim. And remember the day, Sunday, April 19th.

Maud Lane (Bubbles) 25 Prince's St., St. John's, Nfld., is afraid Father Jim is forgetting her as none of her letters have ever appeared in "China", and she has not yet received any letters from the Buds. Well, Maud, I must make amends now and trust you will have all the corries you desire. Many thanks for the stamps you so kindly sent us.

Sally Fraser (Rambler Rose), Main St., Antigonish, remembers seeing Father John J. MacDonald play hockey for St. F. X. University and she also sees Bishop MacDonald almost every day when he is in Antigonish. Father MacDonald, as our Buds know, was ordained a short time ago and will probably be one of our mission band for China this year. And we might tell you, Sally, that Father MacDonald still has plenty of his old hockey tricks left, as many of the Senior Seminary team will vouch for.

Jessie Glover (Daisy Dimple) 572 Charlotte St., Peterboro, Ont., would like to hear from all other Buds who have the same name. She is eleven years old. Her birthday is December 18th, and she would like to know if she has a "twin" among the Buds.

How do you like Father Boudreau's Chinese hair cut? Both he and Father Gignac (left) are carrying their sun helmets these days.

A letter from Mrs. W. E. Graves, 2925 Prior St., Victoria, B.C., will be of interest to the many Buds who so kindly sent letters to Ruth during her last illness. Mrs. Graves writes: "She was so pleased to hear from the pen-pals and was sorry she could not answer them all but I am going to send them each a little note for her, as it was her wish. I am enclosing this little poem which she wrote recently. She was ill so much that she could not study so you will overlook any flaws in it." The poem is a very beautiful one and we feel sure Buds will be anxious to read it.

Christmas Eve.

By the late Ruth Graves (Daisy Bell).

Hush, oh hark, a tinkle of a bell,
Is calling my footsteps on,
A star gleam lights my wayward steps
Into the far beyond.

Do I hear the angels singing?
Soft, sweet music fills the air;
And out of the starry darkness
A sight so sweet and fair!

A stable door is opened,
And there, in a crib of straw,
A baby smiles a welcoming,
'Twas my Infant King I saw!

With eyes of such loving tenderness
That flood my weary soul
And I feel a perfect happiness,
That I have reached my goal.

Ah! hark! It is a mother's voice,
"Come kneel here and adore."
I haste in lowly love to bend
My sorrow is no more.

Then a soft, wee hand extended
Touches my lowly head;
With unbroken benediction
And my vision sweet has fled.

We have a very interesting letter from Norma Mills, 628 Parliament St., Toronto, and we feel sure that any corries who write her will be well repaid. Norma would be glad to exchange photos with some of the Buds later in the summer. Father Jim had the pleasure of speaking to Norma over the phone, as her home is in Toronto, a few miles from the Seminary.

Mary McAskill, Mt. Stewart, P.E.I., thinks that the Little Flower must certainly be pleased with the Rose Garden. She wishes the "China" would come every day. She wishes us to remind Viola Cottreau, Meteghan, N.S., that she is still expecting an answer to her letter.

Mary Grant, 2317 Blanchard St., Victoria, B.C., would like a pen-name. Although it is only about four months since she started to take "China" she feels that she has known our Garden for years.

Well, Mary, when one of our priests was in Victoria, there were three impressions uppermost in his mind, hospitality, sunshine and sleep. Father Evans and Father Gaudette certainly could make a stranger from the Far East feel very much at home; "I never saw so much sunshine in my life," he says, "for the first week I could not keep awake, due to your invigorating air out there." I might suggest "Welcome" or "Sunshine" or "Sleepy Hollow" as pen-names. Possibly sunshine fits best into our Little Garden.

"Last week," writes Roma Britten, from Arichat, N.S., "my little brothers and sisters and myself had a concert for the China Mission. The proceeds were $7.10. Kindly pray for our family, especially for my mamma and papa as it was thanks to them that we were able to have it. We also sold fudge and had a "mystery line".

You and your little brothers and sisters are just wonderful, Roma. We do appreciate your thoughtful kindness that prompted you do do so much for us and we are deeply grateful to your father and mother. I think the concert was a grand idea and you certainly did well. God bless you for your charity.

Dear Father Jim,

I am writing to say that I had a letter from Mrs. Graves (Ruth's mother) yesterday and she said that Ruth had received my letter and was glad to get it. Gee, I was proud to get a letter from her. She said she was sending me a missionary magazine and to-day I received the book which Ruth was going to send me if she had lived.

I would like some Newfoundland Buds to write me, also the Prince Edward Island Buds.

Yours affectionaely,

Christina McIntyre (Rosebud)
Pitt St., Caledonia Mines, N.S.

Well, Rosebud, we just opened a letter from Mary Margaret Hammond, Lance Cove, Bell Island, Nfld., and she says that she will tell the Buds who write her all about the Iro. Isle. How about dropping her a line.

Oh! Oh!

Dear Father Jim,

This is Black-eyed Susan writing to you. Now, I have a Very Important letter to write you. I gave up guessing altogether. Here is the point. I know your name. I have found it out at long last. It is Rev. Father———. It is very important because I will not tell who told me. It was some priest. I will tell you that much. It took Black-eyed Susan, a new Bud, to find out.

Your loving Bud,

Catherine Hayes, 27 Argyle St.,

Blood of Martyrs — Seed of Church

Shiuchow, Nov. 9, 1930.

Your Eminence:

Being assembled here at Shiuchow on the happy occasion of the consecration of the Right Reverend Mons. Canazei, we five bishops find our minds turning in a particular way to him who has the solicitude of all the Churches and to them who more directly and more intimately, in positions of direction, aid our Supreme Leader, and to them from the depth of our hearts we express our feelings and love and devotion.

In the house from which we write, everyone and everything reminds us of our dearly beloved brother, His Excellency, Bishop Versiglia, in honor of whom we came together here at the beginning of this year when we recalled his holy death. Since it has so come about that the cruel crime has turned to the glory of the Church, we open our minds entirely to the joy of the supernatural with all human sadness far removed. We experience in this instance the truth of the words of St. Paul: "Now, Brethren, I desire you should know, that the things which have happened to me have fallen out rather to the furtherance of the Gospel: So that my bonds are manifest in Christ, in all the court, and in all other places;" (Phillipp. 1:12-13).

"They Know Not What They Do"

Therefore, because of the abominable crime of certain ones of whom it may be repeated "they know not what they do," we do not wish to diminish the love and the fidelity which we have vowed to this most praiseworthy Chinese people.

The Magistrates who preside over this province of Kwangtung are pained at the remembrance of the massacre perpetrated in the month of February. They are seeking means to redeem the injury done by hunting down the culprits and, from our point of view even more important, by giving to the Catholic Church greater evidence of their good wish.

When His Excellency, the Apostolic Delegate, arrived at Canton on his way to Shiuchow for to-day's consecration, the Provincial Commissary for Foreign Affairs sent his officers to the station to receive him with honor; put an automobile at his disposition, fitted and decorated with special care because it was for the Delegate, the bishops and missionaries on the trip from Canton to Shiuchow; made certain the protection of the Delegate by sending an escort of seventy soldiers to accompany him; and, finally, he has already invited him, together with the bishops present here, to a supper at the Government Palace next Tuesday when we return to Canton.

Historic Letter to the Cardinal of Propaganda from Five Bishops of China.

Five Vicars Apostolic assembled at Shiuchow on the occasion of the episcopal consecration of the new Salesian Bishop, Mons. Canazei, Vicar Apostolic of Shiuchow and successor to the late Mons. Versiglia, killed by bandits in February, 1930, sent to His Eminence Cardinal Van Rossum, Prefect of the Sacred Congregation of Propaganda Fide, the following letter, important not only for the occasion which it commemorates, but also because of the deep sentiments expressed therein.

It is interesting to note that it is signed by two Italian Bishops, one French, one Chinese, and one American.

To Gladden Your Heart.

These things, Your Eminence, we write to you to gladden your heart, moved as we are by that Christian charity which makes the light to shine in darkness, which is the foundation of the Apostolate and without which all our labours would be in vain. The Chinese themselves, indeed, are well able to distinguish between those who love the Chinese and those who despise them.

In this Republic a completely new order of things is in the process of establishment: we believe it our absolute duty to destroy the prejudices and the suspicions against the Missions and to cooperate with the authorities in order that the new order may establish itself firmly on sound Christian principles.

The Prefect of the city of Shiucow, who was present at the consecration of Mons. Canazei, in a splendid discourse spoke the praises of the Catholic Church as the Church which directs minds to both private and public good. It is of the utmost importance that the Chinese know our upright and friendly intentions whence they may judge rightly the Christian principles and welcome us with a kindly attitude.

Kissing the Sacred Purple and presenting to Your Eminence an expression of our perfect devotion, we remain,

Your most humble servants in Christ,

(Signed)

A TREAT FOR CHUCHOW

Chuchow has seen its first airplane. A letter from Father Gignac confirms the newspaper report we saw a short time ago to the effect that a Government plane en route from Shanghai to Canton had been obliged, because of engine trouble, to make a forced landing at that city. It landed on the bank of the river only a few hundred yards from the Church, and the aviator, a young American Catholic named Brophy, was the guest of our priests during his stay.

And thereby hangs a story. The airplane arrived just at a time when the local mandarin was making things pretty hot for us regarding the school. A proclamation had been published a short time previously, forbidding all children under 16 to attend the mission school, and there were ugly rumors abroad that we were in danger of losing our whole mission property. A short time ago we asked the prayers of our readers in this emergency. Well, the arrival of the airplane was the means of the removal of the mandarin who had been so severe in enforcing the school regulations.

When Mr. Brophy had effected necessary repairs to his plane and attempted to resume his flight, the mandarin refused to let him go. He replied that he was on Government business and that he could not be detained, but to no avail. The mandarin demanded passports, and when he could not produce them, kept the flier a virtual prisoner in the city.

Then the wires began to burn. Nanking was notified. A message was received to the effect that Mr. Brophy was to proceed immediately on his way and the same message recalled the mandarin from Chuchow. We are hopeful that his successor will be better disposed towards our missionaries, and meanwhile we cannot but feel that it was something more than chance that sent this messenger of the skies at a time when things were looking so serious at Chuchow.

"And Jesus looking on him loved him, and said to him: One thing is wanting unto thee: go, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, follow me—who being struck sad at that saying went away sorrowful: for he had great possessions."—Mark 10, 21:22.)

UNABLE TO BUILD THIS YEAR

On page 69 this month you will see a picture of the proposed new building, designed to provide chapel, dining-room, lecture hall, library and rooms for fifty students or more. As we mentioned last month, we have long been handicapped for space in our present building. At present a classroom serves as a chapel and lecture hall; the library is confined to the limits of a student's room; two students have been obliged to stow themselves away somewhere in several of the small single rooms never intended to provide accommodation for more than one.

All this we state, not by way of complaint at all, but simply as a matter of fact and to let our readers know that we have been considering an extension only because of our present overcrowded condition. But missionaries will cheerfully put up with the little inconveniences occasioned by such overcrowding and rather than have new students refused admission next year any one of our present band would cheerfully sleep in the corridor or on the floor. They welcome a little discomfort as one of the very best preparations for future life on the mission field.

Well, dear readers, it may come to that. We certainly cannot do any building this year, and it may be many years before any such building can be completed. As you see it in the centre page, the new wing would cost something over $150,000. In spite of the help of many kind friends, the amount received to date for the building fund is not sufficient to warrant our making a start and running the risk of loading ourselves down with an annual interest payment of eight or nine thousand dollars. Up till now our experience has been that it takes every cent we can get to run our present Seminary and we should be obliged to reckon not merely with the erection of the proposed Seminary but with its upkeep as well. We feel that you will agree with us that prudence dictates that we should wait a while. Meanwhile our building fund will grow, even though slowly, and we trust that by next year we shall be able to erect at least part of the new wing.

As for this coming September, you will naturally wonder what provision can be made for those who wish to enter the Seminary. There will probably be four priests leaving for China. That will mean accommodation for eight new students if we allot two to each room. Should it happen that we receive more applications for admission than we can handle here we shall make provision to have some of the new men make their philosophy at one of the Catholic Colleges. For the past two years we have had students in classics at St. Jerome's College, Kitchener, and until such time as we can arrange to accommodate all here we could, as a temporary expedient at least, limit our present Seminary to students of theology. One thing is sure—some provision will be made for all the students who wish to join us even though we may not be able to build for years.

FATHER FRASER'S CAMPAIGN

In spite of the hard times everywhere, the results of Father Fraser's campaign have been fairly good and have helped in no small way during those past few months to keep the wolf from the door. It is "tough going" these days and the mail bag is never very heavily laden as in the good old days of yore. Donations have dropped to almost half of the amount received a few years ago and from time to time we are obliged to carry an overdraft to keep things going. Nobody but Father Fraser could secure such encouraging results as have attended his campaign work throughout Ontario and in Montreal. He hopes to have the pleasure of visiting many of his old friends in the Maritimes sometime this Summer.

OUR NEW EDITOR

We'd better let you see this month just what our new Editor looks like. Beginning with the June issue, Father Chafe will direct the destinies of CHINA, and from then on—except when groups are taken and there is no possibility of escape—his picture will be harder to find than hundred dollar donations to our building fund. We had to steal this one and he doesn't even want his name mentioned in this number.

Father Chafe wouldn't be on this editorial job if he consulted his own wishes, not that he loves "CHINA" less, but the other China more. He had hoped to be one of this year's departing band. Here's a wish for every possible success in his new work and the hope that some day his ambitions in regard to the real China will be realised.

Marauder "Visits" Fr. Beal

Pyx and Chalice Stolen by Sneak Thief.

Father Beal writes us from Suichang to the effect that his mission journey was rudely interrupted by the visit of a nocturnal prowler who deprived him of his Mass box, containing his chalice. The gentleman in question was not a Communist, just a plain sneak thief.

"I arrived here Tuesday," Fr. Beal writes, "and was making fine progress until 2.30 this morning. The wall of the kitchen was broken in and somebody, presumably a small boy, crawled in and opened the door. The robber had a supply of lighted joshsticks to show the way around the house, as after he had departed we found one on every second step of the stairs.

"He took my Mass box containing a gold pyx and oil-stock which was an ordination present, which I prized very highly. The chalice was an old one and not very expensive, but unfortunately I could do nothing for the Christians who came to Mass this morning. When he had disposed of the box he returned for the travelling bag. The squeaking of the floor woke me up and I asked 'Who's there?' thinking somebody downstairs was sick. There was no reply. Thinking it was just a rat I paid little attention to it, but soon another board began to creak and I decided it was time to investigate. I hunted for matches but they had been stolen, so I began to grope my way to the stairway. The thief heard me coming and I shouted to the catechist below to try and catch him. He, however, had been locked in his room and had to break a window to get out, but by this time the robber had escaped in the darkness.

"I lost no money but a good deal in Mass equipment and I hurried to the telephone to call Father Morrison, who will send another outfit for to-morrow.

"I then asked the Catechist to call a policeman, but I was told this was impossible as the 'police force' were asleep and nothing could be done about it until 6 or 6.30. As I write they are engaged in hunting down the culprit, but my guess is that the box is in some mountain cave. On the way to Yanchinuen the eating houses are not very well stocked, so no doubt they will be glad to avail of the luxury of my two tins of Libby's Irish stew.

"Well, this is the life, after all! This morning people have been coming in continually offering words of consolation and invariably asking: 'How much money did you lose?' They seem to have the idea that the priests are loaded down with money and can hardly find time to dispose of it all.

"I am feeling fine and will leave for up country Tuesday.

"Sincerely yours,

"J. L. BEAL."

FRONTISPIECE PICTURE

The lad in the picture is a Chinese farmer boy all dressed up for rainy weather. He is wearing a hat, not carrying an umbrella and a waterproof rain-coat made from the bark of palm trees. This boy was recently baptised in our own District of Chuchow.

De Profundis

'Twas in November and a cold, drizzly, mean day. All Nature's blooms were bowing their heads to rise no more. The sky was grey with black patches here and there. and the whole seemed to blend with the tile-roofed huts that meant home to some. Lifeless and cheerless was the picture.

It was no easy task to thread one's way through the miniature lakes that were scattered around, hiding the cobblestones, and making them treacherously slippy. Once in a while the low-lying smoke from someone's hearth would make wreaths around our heads. A choke and a cough and we passed on. Turning to the right, then to the left; then almost making a circle we arrived at the house.

If you stand on the street you can watch the proceedings. You won't have to peek through a window—there are none. Neither will you peer through the door—there is'nt any. Yes, that is just why, because there is no front to the house. At night a few boards are placed in grooves and the world is shut out. Drab, oh! so drab!

Can you hear that wailing? Sounds like a lost soul, so forlorn and despairing! It sends a shudder through you, does it? Over in the corner there is a rude couch. If you could see beneath the covering you would find this couch a board on two trestles. And on this lies the corpse. He is just dead a few hours. They have clothed him in a purple gown—his hands together, his fingers interlaced, holding a handkerchief. A few slate tiles prop up his head. His ashen face is covered by a cloth. Just to the side is his coffin, a rude thing, but well fitted for its purpose.

Just look around the space or room. It tells you he was a tinsmith. Hanging to the beams just

That His Excellency Bishop Scollard is intensely interested in the Work of St. Francis Xavier Seminary is shown by the generous sum of $1,269.97 just contributed by the Diocese of Sault Ste. Marie, and accompanied by a substantial personal donation.

We are deeply grateful to Bishop Scollard for this truly apostolic interest in our work for China, and to the good priests and people of the Diocese of Sault Ste. Marie. Such a splendid sum, especially at such a time as this, represents a spirit of generosity and of sacrifice on their part which is to us of great encouragement and consolation. And it places on record their attitude towards this Seminary as a functioning unit in the missionary machinery of the Church.

The low building to the left is our present Seminary; in foreground is design of our future new wing. Work on this building was to have started this spring but has been called off because of lack of funds. We hope to be able to erect at least part of it next year. The sidewalk shown parallels the Kingston Road. The estimated cost of completed building was $150,000.

Some Spring and Winter VISITORS AT CHUCHOW

By Rev. Wm. K. Amyot

Interesting? Well, I'll say it is!

Perhaps this is a little out of the ordinary, but it will give some information on what is to be seen and done here.

Some think the poor Missionary in China puts in a terrible and even dreary existence. Can it be so? Impossible! For, over and above his work, there are innumerable things to fascinate him and hold his interest if he will but turn their way. Many of the customs are strange, but one soon takes these as a matter of course and hardly notices them; you are one with them in this respect. But the things of Nature, the wonderful works of God are forever with us and always changing. The scenery, the weather, the rocks, the trees with their fruits in the various seasons, shrubs, vines and plants (many different, some few the same as those we know at home). The times for leaves, for flowers, for seeds and everything, with insects, large and small, beautiful and weird, and the ever-present birds thrown in for good measure. All are of interest!

Yet of the birds, the last but not the least, I will try to write to-night. Birds, the feathered friends of man. Birds who will cheer him when he's sad, who encourage him when he is tired or ready to give up trying, who help him when he needs it most. Truly they are wonderful creatures, the gift of our Bountiful and Loving God.

Boys and girls, have you ever watched them closely, studied them a little? If you have you will know something of what I mean. If you have not, you have been missing one of the great things in life.

Have you ever seen a wild bird idle? Asleep, you say. Hah! but was it not alert, could you catch it with your hand? Have you seen them build their nests, feed their young, or teach them how to fly? Yes they can teach us, too, if we will but only learn.

"For who more clean or neat than they?
Or who more happy all the day?"

But that is drifting away from the point. I wish to describe a few of our winter and spring visitors at Chuchow. How many of these do YOU know? (I have not a bird guide or might name them properly.)

The largest first. The Kites, huge brown hawks with wings three to four feet from tip to tip. They are live aeroplanes, forever wheeling, wheeling in the sky, sometimes close to the ground, then far from it, till they become mere specks, and all this without flapping their wings: they simply soar. One could watch them for hours as they ride on the wind, opening and closing the heavy feathers on the tips of their wings, turning their tails like rudders or as elevating planes, darting at another from above if it happens to circle too close, emitting at the same time its war cry, a kind of screech like the seagulls make when they chase each other. The would-be victim, himself a master of the air, loops-the-loop, side slips, rolls or even seems to back up as well as "zooming" if it feels like it. They seldom light where one can study them closely.

Crows. Most of them are not just like our crows, but are still decidedly crows. They are slightly larger and have a white band covering the greater part of their neck and shoulders, the head and body being black. Their "caw" is similar but much more guttural than of those at home.

Ducks. Yes, we have ducks, but cannot shoot them because we have no guns. Although most of them are fish-ducks one does see good-sized mallards occasionally. The commonest species have grey backs with black covering a part of their wings and are all white underneath. They have quite a pretty, dark reddish-brown crested head, and long, sharp saw-toothed bill with a hooked tip. Then there are the smaller down ducks, a long-necked variety that seldom fly unless they are forced to do so. They dive instead.

Sometimes, too, one sees a cormorant flying low over the water with its long yellow beak sticking straight out in front. This is the type of bird the Chinese capture and make to catch fish for them. It looks odd at times to see a man standing on a bamboo raft polling away, with coal-black birds, the size of geese, perched at either end like a lot of sullen vultures watching their prey. (The owners treat them "rough" when putting the rings on their necks to prevent them from swallowing their catch or when taking it off.) They just catch Mr. Cormorant by the neck to do it and toss him very unceremoniously up to the other end of the raft. He flutters and ruffles a bit, then is resigned to his bitter lot.

The next are magpies. Strange to say, in spite of their "gabbing" reputation, the only sound one hears them utter in these parts is a sharp squawking cry, to which they give vent but seldom. They are black-and-white birds, almost as large as crows. All-white bodies, black heads, wings half black, being white from the tip to the first joint; tail black, very long and pointed, something the style of the blackbird's tail, only longer, and their long legs give them a bobbing appearance as they walk or hop.

Another common bird is the Dove or wild Pigeon. It is a brown-grey or heather mixture in color. Has a very prim and shiny coat with a fairly long and slightly hook-tipped bill to top things off. They are timid and start off like bullets at the least sound, or upon the approach of man, making a peculiar clicking noise with their wings as a warning, just after taking to the air. Still they nest right around our dwellings. Their only song seems a gurgling "coo" in the throat, repeated very quickly, that sounds like "It's a cow," "It's a cow," or the longer call, "It's a dandy cow," repeated in like manner many times, and often quicker each time as if it was getting frightened at the sound of its own voice.

Then comes one of our finest songsters, an all-black bird, without any metallic lustre, even to its feet, having a yellow beak as its only dash of color. From its size and actions, the habit of lowering its head as it runs along the ground, its food, how it moves quickly for a short distance, then sits up, stops, looks and listens, it resembles almost perfectly our good old Canadian Robin. At time even its song is very close to that of a robin, but it has many other variations in its repertoire of songs, sometimes even rivalling the canary with its trills. A BLACK ROBIN I daresay one could safely call it.

Besides this we have another black bird. It is not a graceful looking creature, resembling in size and general appearance our starlings. It has short but deep wings that are sharply pointed, and a broad, stubby tail. Its neck is not long, and it has a peculiar tuft of black feathers almost like a comb that has slipped forward out onto the top of its fairly long and very light yellow or white beak. The only other color on this black bird are the large white splotches covering the centre half of each wing and its real yellow legs. They have been here in flocks all winter, with quite a few still remaining. They are proud-looking birds (though they have nothing to be proud about), yet when on the ground they never run, just hopping or slowly strutting from place to place. They seem only to have one cry, a garrulous squawk, something like "QUEEK' shrilly whistled.

Yes, we have some Sparrows, exactly the same as our own in Canada. They are so common in these parts that they have even crept into an old proverb, which reads: "Three things that are found everywhere, Bean Curd, Sparrows and Shaohing Men" (a certain city).

Just one more black-and-white bird; in size it is about that of a Baltimore Oriole, with its long narrow tail, pointing upward like a wren's. Its head and back are black, beak brown, body white, wings white except for a black fringe along the front edge, tail white with the edge feathers only black. This bird is primarily a grub eater. It has several sweet songs, one goes something like this: "Cheh ee, cheh ee, cheh wee, cheh wih" in a piping but low voice as if it was afraid of disturbing the older birds. One of these little songsters came, oh so often, when I was trying to play the organ, and perched on the roof nearby to accompany me with his lovely songs, keeping it up till I stopped. I guess he wanted to drown my terrible noises with some real music.

Several times also I have seen little red-breasted birds that resemble in appearance and habits the tiny English robins.

There is also a small slate-blue bird, a grub eater, that runs along the ground. It is very quick in all its movements and really pretty, but seems to have no song at all. "Alas! 'tis beautiful but dumb."

I have seen several woodpeckers, and some small seed-eating birds that look exactly like our snowbirds at home. They move in small flocks, too.

Well, that is quite a few of our winter birds, but not by any means all, just the most striking ones come readily to mind.

Here are some of our spring visitors.

The sandmartins, as at home. The great kingfisher, with crest and all, but no brown on its throat. A large species of ringed plover, with a very shiny grey coat, that is about twice the size of our "Kill-deer" in Canada. (Note: the large white plover come in summer.) Then there are birds almost like our "chick-a-dees," only not so chubby. Also the little Jenny Wren drops in for a visit now and then.

Along the river, too, one sees many little light blue-grey and white birds. Grey heads and backs, neck white as well as the under side of the body, with white wings delicately trimmed with grey, and the two outside feathers of its long narrow white tail the same light-grey. It hovers several feet above the water, moving its wings very quickly

(as if it were not a natural posture or thing to do), and then darts down towards the surface to snatch up a passing fly. They are very plentiful and are not shy.

Several birds of the Wren type, a grey-green, have also appeared with the early insects, along with some larger ones that are khaki colored, on top, have a slightly crested head, white cheeks, grey body and a fairly long bill. They are warblers and have very sweet sounding yet short songs.

It would not do to conclude this without mentioning the tiny kingfisher. A late spring visitor, but a beauty.

It is the very "spit" of the great kingfisher, in fact it might even be the model as far as shape and habits are concerned, but it differs in color. It is a dazzling, shiny, metallic blue-green that just glistens as it darts from place to place or flutters suspended three or four feet above the water before it dives. For some time I thought they were humming birds, they are so tiny, being only two and a half or three inches long.

Still there are many others that I have not mentioned, but they will have to wait till the next instalment. These few will show you that we have a great many little feathered friends in Chuchow.

Birds, birds, birds, they always make me think of St. Francis of Assisi and how he loved them, spoke to them, these perfect little creatures, loved them because they so happily carried out the will of God, their Creator.

Do we serve Him as they do? Are we doing or aiming at doing what He wishes us to do?

Perhaps He wants you, dear reader, to become a Missionary. To become a Missionary to help convert these poor Chinese, who, though men, the noblest of God's creatures, are not serving Him, but through ignorance the Prince of Darkness. The birds bring cheer to them in this life; you can cheer them for all Eternity. Come, then, be a Missionary!

WOULD-BE SUICIDE FOILED BY ODD FISH.

China Boy Recites Tale of Mid-Sea Experience That is Found 'Fishy.'

Shanghai.—Ching Chi-Kong is a China boy, who went down to the sea in ships and came back with a tall, tall tale.

He told it first to the captain of the Anchor line steamer, Circassia, which found him, bobbing like a buoy, in the middle of the Red Sea. He told it to the chief of police at Bombay, and the chief of police shipped him home without comment.

The China boy had left his father's farm near Ningpo at the age of 21 with an overwhelming urge to sail the seven seas. One of the seven, it now appears, proved plenty.

Starts at Bottom.

He shipped from Shanghai on the Dardanus of the Blue Funnel line last August. He started at the bottom—which in this case was at the top, scrubbing deck. He rose to the top—which in this case was the bottom, a fireman.

The Dardanus was ploughing through the Red Sea, 300 miles out of Bombay, when Ching decided to commit suicide. He had had some unpleasant words with the boss fireman, and in the ensuing fisticuffs had been badly bashed. For Ching Chi-Kong, with swollen jowls, blackened eyes and battered body, the sea had lost its lure and life its promise.

One morning at sunup young Mr. Ching jumped overboard. None saw him jump, but the circumstances were rather conclusive because (1) he was missing from the ship, and (2) he later was found in the sea.

Story is Fishy.

From that point on Ching's story is fishy. He discovered he couldn't drown. He floated along like a log, buoyant of body, if not of soul.

After an hour of this, he later told the captain of the Circassia, he realized the folly of self-destruction and determined to live, if such were indeed possible.

About this time a fish appeared. It glided first at a respectable distance in Ching's wake and then, bolder, came alongside. Ching eyed it with misgivings. When asked about it later, the China boy was unable to say what kind of fish it was, but he indicated that its size, if not Gargantuan, was by no means Lilliputian.

Body Strengthened.

Ching must have looked appetizing, for the fish began nibbling at him. This was something Ching Chi-Kong would not stand for. He lashed out with his hands and dispatched the fish in a thrice. Then he ate it, and the raw meat gave his body strength and his soul courage to withstand the rigors of the sea until rescued.

That is the story of Ching Chi-Kong, the China boy, as he told it two hours later to the amazed captain of the Circassia when that steamer picked him up, and it is the story he told later to the chief of police of Bombay when the Circassia put him ashore there.

They shipped him back to Shanghai on the steamer Morea. Now he has gone back to his father's farm near Ningpo, to the tedious toil of raising rice; and this, in the scoffing opinion of many members of the foreign colony here, is quite a comedown for a China boy who has wrestled, conquered and consumed a fish in the middle of the sea.

WILL FIND ROOM

In spite of the fact that our building program has been called off for this year we shall be able to accept all students who apply for admission this September.

The departure of four of our priests for China this Fall will enable us to accommodate eight more students, if necessary, and should it happen that we cannot possibly find room IN THE SEMINARY for next year's full contingent some of the philosophers, for the time being at least, can be sent to one of our Catholic Colleges.

LOOK AT THE EXPIRY DATE.

On the label of your CHINA you will see the date your subscription expires. If it is past due, may we remind you to send in your renewal.

"A PERPLEXED PASTOR."

(By a Contributing Editor, a Priest of National Reputation as a Builder and Orator.)

I am an average priest, a pastor, a much misunderstood individual. People suspect me of being a little more than human, but continue to invite me to eat their dinners and drink their wine. If I partake of the latter, they call me a "dear" and a "good fellow." If I refuse, they claim to be edified.

They expect me to have no faults, but keep on searching for them, and having discovered a few—Oh, Boy!

When I have not prepared my sermon and my mind is cloudy and my ideas chaotic, they say I am too deep; but when I have labored zealously and memorized my sermon, I am superficial.

When through "Money Talks" I meet all parish obligations, I am a "grafter"; but when I do not plead for money and the parish goes into debt, I am a "poor business man."

When my liver is out of order and I am physically ill and mentally tired. they say I look pious and saintly. When I am well and bubbling over with zeal, I am frivolous.

They think that I should love every one in the parish, and when I make a fairly good bluff at doing so, they call me a hypocrite, but when I admit that there are some that I am not crazy about, they call me a snob.

My wealthy parishioners find fault with me if I do not call upon them. The poor ones, if I do.

Some people, in my presence, pretend to be kindly interested in all things pertaining to religion. They minimize my intelligence and exaggerate their own histrionic ability.

The stingy souls who contribute a very, very small proportion of their income to the support of the Church, pity me because I have such a hard time raising funds. Those who contribute generously think I have a very nice job.

Some wonder what I do with all my time; others pity me because I have so much to do.

They want me to be more of a layman and to represent them in civic and public activities; but are forever praising Father "So and So," who is "so quiet and retiring." "He is such a holy man."

If I use forceful and catchy phrases in my sermons, they say I am sensational. If I don't, they will not come to hear me.

My salary is $50 a month, and I receive even as much as $5 for a Baptism or a wedding (sometimes), and they wonder what I do with all my money.

All stock-brokers think I am a millionaire; book-agents think I am easy; tramps know I am.

"Red-caps," Pullman car porters and dining-car waiters think I am generous, but the conductors know I'm a cheap sport.

Now, I want to tell the world:

That my Roman collar changes not my human nature. I am quite the same as other men.

That I enjoy a good time just as they do, but I prefer to choose my own kind of sport.

That a long, long time ago I got sick of applesauce and soft soap.

That I have grown immune to knocks and criticism.

That I appreciate honest praise and want no man's pity.

That I am giving the best that is in me to my work and believe that God will reward me.

That I ask no favors and seek only the opportunity to prove that I am a real man, and to try to be a real priest.

Now, there are some who, if they knew who wrote this, would say: "I'll bet he got the idea from some one else." Well, I did. —Denver Catholic Register.

LITTLE FLOWER'S ROSE GARDEN

Edited by FATHER JIM

CONDITIONS OF MEMBERSHIP

The only conditions of membership in the Rose Garden are: (1) To say every day the Prayer for the Conversion of China; (2) To go to Holy Communion once a month for the Intention of Missionary Vocations. Certificates and pins will be sent to all members.

Dear Buds:

How are you all? You like the nice fine weather? Of course you do! Spring is here, and you know what that means where a Garden is concerned. It means getting things in order for the expected harvest of summer, cleaning out the weeds, and trimming things up in fine shape. Well now, suppose we set our Garden in order. If you have been forgetting the daily prayer for the conversion of China, or neglecting your monthly Communion for the increase of missionary vocations, you have been allowing weeds to disfigure our little Garden, so now is the time to set things right and make sure that our harvest of souls will be big when the Summer time comes. If any of you have not received your certificates and pins, please let me know so that there will be nothing to prevent us from going forward at full strength.

I want to thank the many buds who so kindly sent me a greeting for Easter. It was nice of you to remember me during that glad season.

A glance at the names in this month's column will show how widely scattered are the members of our Club, and it should make us all realize that we have gathered together a real little army of happy and zealous boys and girls all anxious to do their share to help the cause of the Missions. I am very proud of you all and I appreciate all you have done and are doing, and now I want you all to unite in saying a prayer for a very special intention, one that will mean much more for the success of our future work in Chuchow. You will not fail to pray for this intention, will you?

I have often reminded you that I would be glad to have your help in making our Rose Garden more interesting. For this purpose I am going to invite everybody to take part in another contest. I want you to tell me what you would do for our Garden if you were in Father Jim's place. The title of the contest is "If I were Father Jim". Now I feel sure that many of you will be glad of this chance to tell me what you would like to see in our Garden (not forgetting, of course, to tell me how you would settle the question of Father Jim's picture). In this contest you may, if you wish, make use of the suggestions of the older members of your family, because I know that many grown-up people are very much interested in our Rose Garden. Prizes will be awarded as is usual in all our contests.

May Our Lady, Queen of May, obtain many blessings for all our buds.

Yours as ever,

FATHER JIM.

A nice long letter came from Mary Bray (Rosebud), of Moose Creek, Ont. Mary lives on a farm and she says, "there is always lots of work to be done". She prays much for the Chinese Missions, and recently she read a whole book about the "Little Flower" and found it very interesting. I am sure, Mary, that the buds will pray that you may some day fulfil that "ardent desire" of which you told me.

"I can hardly wait till the 'China' comes in," writes Hattie Boudreau (Blue-eyed Beauty) from New Waterford, C.B. Well, Hattie, I'm certainly pleased to know you are so interested in our Club. I can assure you that many of the buds eagerly await each month's "China".

So many of the buds ask for "Father Jim's picture" that I'm beginning to feel bad about "holding out" on them. "I wish I could go to your Seminary and then I could take a picture of you," says Mollie Kierans, 3979 St. Antoine, Montreal. Come right along, Mollie, but be careful of your camera.

An old friend, Michael McDonald (Arnie) writes from 119 Dominion No. 4. His best pal, Arnold Chant (Mick) also wrote me. I thank both of you for the jokes you sent along.

Hazel Needham would be delighted to get acquainted with many of the buds. She comes to our Garden as another "Pansy", from 196 Albert St., Pembroke, Ont.

"Any boys or girls who would like to know about Nfld. or the 'Viking' disaster, in which many Nfldrs. were lost, we would gladly tell them the whole story". Following that invitation, I'm inclined to think that many letters will be written to 43 Monkstown Rd., St. John's, Nfld., the home of Billy (Lilac) and Ralph (Mapleleaf) Harris. They go to school at St. Bonaventure's College with other members of our Club.

One of the pictures this month shows Catherine Williams of Eglinton St., Lindsay, Ont. She tells me something "very important", namely, that she was a pen-pal of Ruth Graves. "I received one lovely letter from her, and I am going to keep it." (Ruth was our little friend who was taken from our Garden a short time ago to join the "Little Flower" in Heaven). I feel sure that Ruth Graves will obtain from Saint Therese many "roses" for the members of our Club whom she loved so much.

This comes from Glace Bay: "Father, would you please send me one of your pictures if you can." I fear I cannot, "Daisy". All the Glace Bay buds would be after me then.

Mary E. McDonald, of St. Agnes' School, New Waterford, N.S., thinks Father Jim is not selfish in asking for "just one little prayer". Well, Mary, even "one little prayer" when said by each of our members means a great deal, and I hope nobody is forgetting the daily prayer for the conversion of China.

M. A. McAvoy, Campbellford, Ont., has our thanks for the stamps sent in.

If Irish names appeal to you, meet Kathleen O'Connell and her sister Mary from New Aberdeen, C.B. Girls from 16 to 18 years of age are invited to write to Kathleen, and Mary asks for pen-pals among girls from 11 to 13.

A real live campaigner is Marie Belliveau. She has secured 12 new members from Belliveau's Cove, Digby County, N.S. Here they are: Rose A. Thierault, Ella Belliveau, Cecile Comeau, Cuita Doucet, Regina Comeau, Elizabeth Thiuault, Alphonsine LeBlanc, Therese Dugas, Andre Blinn, Alphonse Belliveau, and Clarence Comeau. Marie, how about sending me a snap of you all taken together for next month's "China"?

A new bud comes to us from St. Lawrence, Nfld. Madeline Aylward takes "Rio Rita" as her pen-name, and wishes to hear from Ningie, Bluebell and Cherry Blossom. Madeline is 14, can play music, and has a sister a nun. Welcome to our Garden!

A hearty welcome amongst us as buds is given this month to four boys from Brooklyn, New York. Meet some more American friends: Joseph Upton and his brother Francis, who live at 436A Marion St., William Ormsby, 477 Chouncey St., and Joseph Columbus Basha, 1495 St. Mark's Ave. The last named tells me he was very interested in Fr. Gignac's mission tour, and thinks Fr. Sharkey's poem entitled "Fishin'" was very good. He wants some Nfld. buds to write him.

"Father Jim, do you think you are a bit fair letting all the buds send in their pictures to you, and you not sending us your picture, or at least putting it in 'China' I am going to drop in on you one of these fine days and see for myself what you are like. I hope to have my camera that day so that I can snap you when you don't know it. You had better look out if you don't want that to happen. I would like some of the buds to write to me, especially those who won the Contest." This is part of a letter received from Madeline Howorth (Hiede), 49 Beaufort Rd., Toronto. Now, Madeline, you are welcome to call on me, but keep your camera out of sight, because when I see a camera I get scared and make tracks for hidden places. I am glad that the booklet I sent you proved helpful.

I hope Anna Malone (Box 71, Souris East, P.E.I.) sends along those pictures she promised.

Jim Kielly (Amos) from Bay Roberts, Nfld., is interested in our Stamp Department. I hope "Beaver" found you worthy of a prize, Jim. "Are you still as mysterious as ever, Father Jim? Some day we may find out who you are, and what a surprise you will give us." You know, Jim, I am known by many as the "mysterious Father Jim", but there's not so much "mystery" about me, for a great number of buds tell me for certain that they know who I am. They even address their letters to Father Jim———(here they put some surname).

Some of the buds from Nova Scotia are very patriotic, and they never lose an opportunity to boost their Province or their home town. I hope I'm not giving myself away when I say that I have been in Nova Scotia very often, and I have even spoken to buds down there, but they didn't recognize me. Cecilia Turner, 205 Caledonia Mines, calls Glace Bay "this wonderful town." One of our senior students here will be happy to know that somebody supports him in thinking Glace Bay is quite a place. Cecilia is 14 years old, her pen-name is "Daffodil," and she promises to answer all letters received.

"We had a Novena here to St. Joseph. Our Pastor told us to make it for any intention we wished and the first thing I thought of was the conversion of China, so I made it for that." That's what I call being a friend of the Missions, and I congratulate Mary (Connie) McCormack of New Aberdeen, C.B. for being such a mission-minded bud.

A bud who writes me often is Ellen Cain (Pansy), Spaniard's Bay, Nfld. She expressed her sympathy on the loss of one of our dear little members, Ruth Graves. I hope you will keep your promise to write to Ruth's mother, Ellen. "Pansy" wants to hear from Bertha Richards and Naomi Smith, and some buds from Fairville, N.B. I shall always be glad to get a line from you.

Beatrice McCormick, whose picture appears this month, wants Nfld. buds to write to her. How about dropping a few lines to the bud from Nfld. mentioned above, Beatrice? I will send you another pin. I'm glad to learn you like the pin so much.

I had a real big long newsy letter from Margaret Campbell (Cowslip), who lives at 25 Union St., Glace Bay, N.S. Here are some of the things she wrote: "I was thinking to myself how lucky the boys and girls are in Toronto, because they can see you every day. (Now, Margaret, don't make me blush!) "I wish you would put your picture in "China." I have found out your name from a priest. I know you are from Newfoundland. I feel like telling you who told me your name only the priest told me not to tell, for if I told you he said there might be war." Well, there surely would be war—that is, provided he told you the right name. Did he tell you I came from Newfoundland? I admit I have heard a great deal about that country, from buds and others, but not even Sherlock Holmes could draw any certain conclusions from that. I don't mind telling you that a priest from Newfoundland also told me that the buds down there are hot on Father Jim's trail. I was delighted to learn of the interest your teacher has in our club, and I am proud of the buds from Saint Anne's School. Thank you, Margaret, for your spiritual helps to me. And lest I forget, this Glace Bay bud asked me to put an "ad" in our column asking for correspondents from Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. I will be looking forward to another letter from you when you have time.

I am sorry to have overlooked the matter of sending certificate and pin to Teresa Perdue, 226 McDonnel St., Peterboro, Ont. You will receive it soon, Teresa. I like your pen-name "Maple-leaf". Buds age 11 or 12 are asked to write to this new member from Peterboro.

"Mayflower" is the name that appealed to 13 year old Gertrude MacMillan from Lingan, C.B. She writes: "I began last week to cut out all the pictures of the buds and paste them in a book so that I will have them all the time. I have your picture, but no face." Perhaps it is better my face is missing from those pictures, Gertrude, it might spoil an otherwise fine picture. But never mind, some day I will allow you to complete the picture. I think it is a nice idea to keep pictures of all your fellow members of the Rose Garden. I keep them also, and I hope many more will send along their snaps. See that your brother, Thomas, sends along that snap he promised. Thomas is known as "Maple".

MORE MEMBERS OF OUR ENTHUSIASTIC BUD ARMY

From far-away Victoria comes Patricia Howard with a pen-name "Pacific Rose-Bud". This is the introduction to her letter: "I said to mamma yesterday that I was going to become a rosebud. She told me jokingly that I would make a beautiful spray. Well, even if I don't make a spray I hope I will make a good bud. I ought to, anyway, because I have red hair." We have a few red-haired members with us already, and you are a welcome addition to the number. Patricia tells me she remembers having seen Ruth Graves at Church in Victoria. She comes now, as it were, to keep the Victoria ranks at full strength since we lost Ruth.

Meet some more new members from Ontario:

Ylorese Marcoux (French Rose), 14 Wilmot Ave., Toronto.

Jessie Glover, 512 Charlotte St., Peterboro.

Carmel Littlejohn (Belle), Stone St., Gananoque.

And those from way down East:

Josephine Earle (Daffodil), 29 Field St., St. John's, Nfld.

Dorothy Hefferman (Mayflower), 193 Victoria Rd., Sydney, N.S.

Gertrude Badore, (Mayflower), Bridgeport, C.B.

Our Garden is made the richer by the addition of those buds from St. Anne's School, Glace Bay, N.S.

Bridget Terry (Golden Rod); Mary Lawrence (Starlight); Mary Steele (Bluebell); Mary Petrie (Daffodil); Helen A. Coleman (Tulip); Cathleen Jessome (Buttercup); and Lucia McIsaac.

I am happy to give a hearty welcome to those boys from New Waterford, C.B. All of them go to Mount Carmel School there, and I think it would be nice if they were to send me a group picture for our next month's column. Make yourselves happy in our "Garden." boys. and I will be expecting big things from you later on as loyal buds of the Little Flower's Rose Garden. Meet the boys: here they are:

John Prior (Mayflower): Alexander Hines (Willow Tree): Philip Coady (Juniper Tree): Patrick Muise (Plum Tree); David Chiasson (Daisy): Louis Chiasson (Lilac): Edward Poirier (Mayflower); Louie Chiasson (Bluebell).

And now let me introduce and welcome a fine lot of new girl buds, also from New Waterford. C.B. These (or most of them) come from St. Agnes' School. From them I should like to receive a group picture also.

Hattie Boudreau (Blue-eyed Beauty): Mary Morrison (Rose); Mary MacNeil: Catherine MacEachern; Helen MacNeil: Evelyn Muise (Cherry-tree): Mary Dwyer (Violet); Roddena Flurtur: Rita May Flurtur: Mary L. Chiasson (Mt. Carmel School).

I want to acknowledge a very nice letter received from one of the Sisters at St. Agnes' School, New Waterford, N.S., which tells me of the joy of the pupils when they received their certificates and pins making them members of the Little Flower's Rose Garden. I trust that their interest in the Chinese Missions will continue to increase with the years. Those buds are doing their bit to help our missionaries by their prayers and by their pennies given to Johnnie Mite-box. and to the enthusiastic Sisters I send a hearty greeting, and I assure them and their pupils that I will often remember them when offering the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass.

THE CALL OF THE WEST.

The following poem was not written by a missionary but, presumably, by some homesick adventurer. But it will give our readers an idea of the human side of the discomforts which the missionary cheerfully endures and their contrast with what he has left behind—at home.

I'm sick of the Chink and the Tartar
I'm sick of the Jap and Malay;
And far away spots on the chart are,
No place for your's truly to stay.

I've had enough undersized chicken,
And milk that comes out of a can;
The East is no region to stick in
For this one, particular man.

I'm weary of curry and rice all
Commingled with highly spiced dope,
I'm weary of bathing with Lysol
And washing with Carbolic soap.

I'm tired of itch skin diseases,
Mosquitoes and vermin and flies;
I'm fed up with tropical breezes
And sunshine that dazzles my eyes.

Oh, Lord, for a wind with a tingle,
An atmosphere zestful and keen,
Oh, Lord, once again just to mingle
With crowds that are white folks and clean.

To eat without fear of infection,
To sleep without using a net,
And throw away all my collection
Of iodine, quinine, et cet.

To know all the noise and the glamour
The hurry and fret of the West,
I'd trade all the Orient glamour
That damned, lying poets suggest.

They sing of the East as "enthralling,"
And that's why I started to roam;
But I hear the Occident calling—
Oh, Lord
but I want
HOME.

Our friend "Ningie", Jeanne O'Malley says she hasn't heard from anybody for months. Her address is now 249 Montreal Road, Eastview, Ottawa and you will find her picture in CHINA this month. Hope you have plenty of "Corries" now, Ningie.

Rita Gillson is anxious to have her name enrolled on our membership list. "Pansy" is her pen-name, and her address is 327 Talbot St., Port Arthur, Ont. Another "Pansy" also reports from Port Arthur, 410 Merrill St. Olga Dennis is her name, and she should be much interested in her new Club because she goes to the "Little Flower" School.

Here, boys, meet a future missionary, 13 years old Charlie Ferguson from 34 Harvey St., Perth, Ont. Glad to introduce you as "March Hare" to the hundreds of other boys in our Garden, and I hope some of them will answer your request for a letter.

"I have no brothers or sisters, and would certainly like to hear from some buds. I am ten years old, and attend St. Patrick's School, in Senior Third now. Interested in your Stamp Corner as well as Your Rose Garden." So writes Frank Mooney, Apt. 27, Federal Apts., 257 Slater St., Ottawa. No doubt Frank would like to meet some of the brothers and sisters who write such nice letters to Father Jim, and I hope he will not be disappointed. The imposing pen-name is "Big Chief Two Feathers."

Miss C. Rowan, R.R. 2, Renfrew, Ont., wrote a short but nice letter to me recently, and says she is faithful to the saying of her prayer for China.

Anna L. Rossetti attends St. Theresa's School. and lives at C.N.R. Tower, Grenville Ave., Current River, Ont.

"I'm very sorry, sir," replied the other, 'I was unaware that your wife wished to swear first."

REAL DIPLOMAT

Little Betty had been allowed to stay up to dinner one night on the strict understanding that she should behave very well and not ask for anything on the table.

When dessert came all the guests were attended to, but she was overlooked.

She sat despondently for a time, and then was struck by a bright idea. She exclaimed in a loud voice: "Who wants a clean plate?"

Mrs. Nouveau-Riche: "He's getting on so well at school: he learns French and Algebra. Now, Ronnie, say 'How d'ye do' to the lady in Algebra."

NO SNAP TO HIM

Mrs. Windy was greatly excited when a neighbor came in to call on her one morning.

"Just think," said she, walking over to the other end of the room, "that fellow entered in broad daylight and actually stole the clock off the mantel."

"And you say your dog was in the very same room?"

"Yes, but he couldn't do a thing," returned Mrs. Windy, loftily. "Fido is only a watch-dog."

SEE AMERICA FIRST

The inspector was looking around the class, when the teacher called his attention to a rather grubby youngster.

"This boy," she said, has an excellent knowledge of geography."

The inspector regarded the boy's nails for a moment and then remarked: "I see that. At least, he has a good deal of his own country at his finger's ends."

THE DEVIL

A boy entered a busy draper's shop and asked for "Half a yard of devil."

He persisted in request, explaining that it was to match his granny's dress.

Still he was not understood. Then he said, suddenly, "That man over there is serving what granny wants."

"Oh, it's black sateen you want," said the shopkeeper.

"Yes, sir, it's black satan," replied the boy "I knew the chap had two names, but I didn't happen to remember the one the stuff is called after."

ONCE IN A LIFETIME

The school teacher was talking to a class on science.

"Now, then, Willie Smith," she said, "name a poisonous substance."

Willie Smith, who was not gifted with an over-supply of intelligence, thought deeply.

"Aviation," he replied after a while.

The class tittered with amusement, and the teacher looked sternly at the boy.

"Explain yourself, Smith," she demanded.

"One drop will kill, ma'am," responded Willie.

QUITE TRUE

The cheap-jack auctioneer was trying hard to sell his stock of cigars.

"You can't get better, gents," he bellowed; "twenty-five in a box! You can't get better. I don't care how much you spend!"

Suddenly a voice put in from back of the crowd:

"He's right, folk," it said. "I had one last week, and I'm not better yet." —Weekly Scotsman.

Mrs. Sharp: "Oh, don't worry about the boy's small nose, Mrs. Shott. When I was born they thought I wasn't going to have a nose at tall!"

Mrs. Shott: "Oh, but it turned up later all right, didn't it?"

SPINELESS COMEBACK

Husband (feeling a twinge in his back as he tunes on the radio): "I believe I am getting lumbago."

Wife: "What's the use, dear? You won't be able to understand a word they say."

DISRESPECT

"Repeat the words the defendant used," said the lawyer.

"I'd rather not," said the witness, timidly; "they were hardly words to tell a gentleman."

"Ah," said the attorney, "then whisper them to the judge."—Montreal Star.

PLAYING SAFE

Young Hubby: "Dearest, what did you do with that rubber plant Aunt Agatha gave us?"

Young Wife: "I put it upstairs, honey. Why do you ask?"

Young Hubby: "Oh, for no particular reason. I was just wondering what kind of salad this is."

DE PROFUNDIS.

overhead there are rows of small shovels, oil cans, pots and pans, some rusty and some rustier. Where that young fellow is sitting is a bellows and an anvil—but to-day they are not used. Look towards the "doorway" and see the mob that has collected. They must see how these "Holy Fathers" take care of the dead. The next house is a store, and some are standing on the counter and watching. If they all could only understand the soothing power of the words we are saying, "Eternal rest grant unto him, O Lord!" and the rest of the beautiful prayers of the ritual for occasions like this. How near and yet how far!

Now they are putting him into the coffin. Is it lined? Yes, with straw. A little cotton is fixed around his head. There is a fresh outburst of moaning and sobbing. The top is placed on. And we withdraw. Another soul has gone its way. The evening shadows gather—night falls, and the rising wind carries to our ears the monotonous tolling of a bell in the Pagan monastery just over the way, calling the monks to sacrifice.

DOES THIS MEAN ME?

"And Jesus looking on him loved him, and said to him: One thing is wanting unto thee: go, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, follow me—who being struck sad at that saying went away sorrowful: for he had great possessions."—Mark 10, 21:22.)

"Alas, alas for those who die without fulfilling their mission, who were called to worship Christ and who plunged into this giddy and unbelieving world, who were called to fight and remained idle. Alas for those who have had gifts and talents and have not used, or misused or abused them.

"The world goes on from age to age, but the holy Angels and blessed Saints are always crying alas, alas and woe, woe over the LOSS OF VOCATIONS and the disappointment of hopes and the scorn of God's Love and the ruin of souls."

FATHER McGRATH

This month Father McGrath is going home to Saint John's for a vacation and to do some campaign work, and in October he will leave for Chuchow.

Father McGrath has done a great deal for the cause of the Foreign Missions in Canada. For the past nine years he has been intimately associated with the work begun by Father Fraser. Ordained for the Archdiocese of St. John's, Newfoundland, he for some time worked in the Cathedral parish there, but the call to the Foreign Missions opened wider to him the door of life and revealed to his eager perception a wide field of service where the volunteers were few and the labour prodigious. Unfalteringly, he embraced the opportunity others might seek to evade, and in 1922 he became the right hand man of Father Fraser in his efforts to have Canada do its share in bringing the message of the Gospel to the poor neglected heathen in China. At that time when the work of Foreign Missions was not so well known in Canada and when the work was decidedly uphill Father McGrath's assistance at the house in Scarboro was invaluable to Father Fraser. He became Editor of CHINA in 1924, and up to last month he has continued very successfully this important feature of our missionary activity. Under his capable guidance the circulation of CHINA increased from eight thousand to the rank of second among Canadian Catholic publications in point of circulation. Through the pages of this little Mission magazine he has kept thousands in touch with the work of the Missions, and has instilled into them something of his own enthusiasm and zeal for souls.

In addition to his work as Editor, Father McGrath has continued to fulfil the responsible duties of Vice-Rector since our present Seminary was opened in 1924, and he has been a member of the Seminary Board of Control since its formation seven years ago. Besides the performance of those duties, he found time to make known the needs of the Missions in many campaign tours, and from coast to coast in Canada, and in Newfoundland as well, Father McGrath has been heard pleading for support for the work that is so dear to him, the work of the education of priests for the Chinese Missions.

It was his desire to get off to the Mission Field as soon as possible, but his superiors decided that the work to be done here at the Seminary was as important for the welfare of our mission as actual service in Fields Afar, and so for nine years Father McGrath has been denied the fulfilment of his desires to experience missionary life in China. Those nine years have meant much to St. Francis Xavier's Seminary, and those who know Father McGrath can realize how much he has influenced and inspired the students in their various activities. His propensity for work is so well known to us that oftentimes he gave us reason to fear he would work himself to death. Whether it was in the lecture room, at manual labour, or in sport there was always manifested that enthusiasm which we have learned to associate naturally with "Father Bill." When he leaves for Chuchow we are going to miss him here, not alone because of his long connection with the life of the Seminary, but more especially because it will be a long time till we meet his like again—one possessed of such richness of character and such sterling human qualities.

Newfoundland may well feel proud of its first native son to devote himself to the Catholic Foreign Missions.

The Foreign Missions — and You

Any of you who have ever been present at the death-bed of a dearly-beloved parent, or who have attended the last moments of some esteemed friend, must carry the memory of that event forever in your hearts. There is something especially forceful in the last wishes of one about to leave this world, and those charged with the fulfilment of such wishes regard it as a duty most sacred; and the nearer and dearer the person is to them, so much the more urgent is their obligation.

God Himself came down from Heaven for your sake. He lived, He suffered, and He died for you. Before He returned to the bosom of His Eternal Father He committed to you a grave responsibility. It was His last day on earth, and His Apostles were gathered around Him on the mountain of His Ascension. What might the friends of Our Lord expect from Him that day as He spoke to them for the last time? Eagerly and anxiously they awaited the farewell message from their Master. Now, indeed, would they learn from the lips of their Divine Leader what He wished to leave them as a legacy; now, indeed, would they know with certainty the deepest interests of His Sacred Heart; now, indeed, would He give them the most important message for the future. Nor were they disappointed; Christ did give them a last farewell message, and it concerns each and every Christian even as it concerned the Apostles. The Divine lips opened and in solemn tones the words came forth: "GO YE INTO THE WHOLE WORLD, AND PREACH THE GOSPEL TO EVERY CREATURE."

Jesus Christ had spoken—He had given His last will and testament to the world—and in one short sentence He had entrusted His followers, every individual Christian, with the work of the Foreign Missions. Christ's last consuming care was for the propagation and spread of that Gospel which He came on earth to make known to men. He had faithfully done His share, and now He leaves to His Apostles and to all Christians the duty of sharing their Faith with others. "Go ye into the whole world and preach the Gospel to every creature." There is no danger of mistaking the extent of the work; Christ does not restrict the labourers of His followers to any particular place or to any particular nationality. "GO!" Go out into the whole wide world—go from place to place, from nation to nation—cross the seas and penetrate the wilderness—go to the very ends of the earth—and preach the Gospel to every creature. Leave no one out —go and bring the joyful tidings of salvation to the races and peoples of the North, the South, the East and the West—the soul of the Chinese, the African, or the Indian is as dear to me as the soul of the White man—I have come on earth to do the will of My Father, and it is His Will that ALL men should be saved and should be brought to the knowledge of the Gospel. This is My last request—nay, it is more—it is My Divine COMMAND—that you continue to teach all nations whatsoever I have taught you.

All down through the centuries the Church of Christ has realized the mission that her Founder entrusted to it, and she has never ceased to regard mission work as her essential duty. As it belongs to the nature of light to illumine, and to the nature of the plant to develop, so it is essential to the Church to be active in Missions. As long as the Catholic Church claims to be animated by the spirit of God; as long as she claims to be the exemplification of God's plan upon earth; as long as she will obey her Divine Founder and remain faithful to her ancient traditional customs; as long as she is the one Church outside of which there is no salvation, so long, too, must she devote herself to the Missions.

The twenty-ninth of this month will mark the first anniversary of the canonization of our Canadian Martyrs, and it is an opportune time for all of us to ask what we have done for the cause of Foreign Missions.

It is well to remind ourselves that we are the spiritual children of Martyrs. Foreign Missionaries came out here to our country from France, they came to the very territory of this Archdiocese where the only Foreign Mission Seminary of English-speaking Canada is situated, and they gave their life's blood—their last full measure of devotion—in order that Canada might be brought to a knowledge of the Gospel of Love, and if today we are enjoying the luxuries of the Catholic Faith and are proud of being Catholics, we must not forget the debt we owe to those who answered the call to the Canadian Foreign Missions three hundred years ago. We owe to the sainted Canadian Martyrs A DEBT OF GRATITUDE that can be discharged only by a lively interest in the foreign mission work of the Church. We value our Faith, it was brought to us at great sacrifice, and are we going to remain content in the enjoyment of that Faith without trying to share it with others? Whatever we have a right to be proud of, or are compelled to be proud of, also demands our absolute and lively interest. It is clear, then, that as Catholics of Canada, as enthusiastic, happy children of our Holy Church, we are obliged to be interested in her holy missions among the heathens.

There was a time, and it is not so very long past, when Canada was itself a missionary country in the strict sense of the word, but today the Canadian Church occupies a place in keeping with the prominent and honoured position of Canada among the nations of the earth. The Church in Canada is established in its normal state; that is to say, it has is own hierarchy, its religious congregations of men and women, its seminaries, its schools, its universities, its hospitals, in a word, it has all the evidences of a firmly established Church. We are proud of that, and we thank God for it, but we must come face to face with a great truth, a truth that was well expressed by Cardinal Manning when he wrote that "THE APOSTOLIC SPIRIT IS THE CONDITION OF OUR PROGRESS, IT IS THE PROOF AND MEASURE OF OUR CATHOLICITY." The time has come for Canada to show its appreciation for the Catholic Faith by its endeavours to bring that same Faith to others who "still sit in darkness and in the shadow of death." God has blessed the work that has already been done. In the Province of Quebec there is a Seminary to take care of the vocations to the Missions from that Province, and in our own humble way we are carrying on the same noble work for English-speaking Canada. Saint Francis Xavier's Seminary represents the mission-spirit of English-Canada and Newfoundland. To Father John Fraser, under God, belongs the credit of having stirred the national conscience to a realization of its duties to the foreign missions. He returned to Canada in 1918, after spending years in China as the only English-speaking foreign missionary from the whole of North America, and he founded St. Francis Xavier Seminary for the education of priests for the Chinese Missions. Under the guidance of the Bishops of Ontario who compose the Seminary Board of Control, the work has progressed, and today there are 12 priests in our District of Chuchow, and 30 priests and students at the Seminary. It is the Catholic people of Canada and Newfoundland who have helped us to build our Seminary and educate our students, and it is on those same Catholic people that we must depend to keep Canadian representatives among the missionary army that is striving so valiantly for the establishment of God's kingdom on earth.

The realization of the immense number of people who as yet know nothing of the Gospel of Christ, should arouse our people to action. Two-thirds of the human race, after 1900 years of Christianity, still know nothing of the God who created and redeemed them. Every day in China alone there are thirty-three thousand who die and appear in judgment before a God whom they have not known and have not loved. What a huge responsibility is ours—a responsibility to God and Church, to the past and to the future, a responsibility which should rouse even the most indifferent and thrill them with the flame of holy enthusiasm for the missions.

In our efforts to provide priests for work in China we have need of help, and we feel that our good Catholic people need only be reminded of the debt they owe to foreign missioners in order to enlist their support for our own young men who are preparing to leave all they hold dear to them here at home in order to share the gift of their Faith with others. If some are ready and anxious to give their lives to the great cause of propagating the Faith, surely there are others who will give of their abundance to help them.

AD MULTOS ANNOS!

"CHINA" extends heartiest congratulations to His Excellency Right Reverend Joseph A. O'Sullivan on the happy occasion of his consecration as Bishop of Charlottetown, P.E.I. As President of St. Augustine's Seminary, His Excellency showed a deep and practical interest in the work of our Seminary, and we are indebted to him for many acts of kindness to us. We could not have succeeded so well in our work without the magnificent help that St. Augustine's Seminary has given us through the years, and we rejoice in the signal honor that has been shown that Institution in the selection of its distinguished President as Canada's newest Bishop. It is our fervent prayer that God will bless abundantly his work as Chief Pastor in Prince Edward Island. It is worthy of note that the three priests ordained at our Seminary last November were the first students to be ordained after completing their full Seminary course under Bishop O'Sullivan at St. Augustine's.

SPECIAL DEVOTIONS.

On Friday, May 15th, the Devotion of the Forty Hours began in our little chapel, and on each of the three evenings during the Exposition a "Holy Hour" was given. On Friday night the sermon was preached by Rev. Father Curtis from Newfoundland, who was spending a few days with us; on Saturday night Father Chafe preached, and on Sunday night the Exposition was concluded with the Holy Hour given by Rev. Father Carroll, Vice-President of St. Augustine's Seminary.

The Annual Novena of Benedictions of the Blessed Sacrament concluded on the Feast of Pentecost. This Novena is made by our students for the intentions of all our benefactors, who share also in the prayers and good works of our Seminarians and priests throughout the year.

THE SACRED HEART AND CHINA.

Very dear to the Sacred Heart of Jesus are the souls of men which He came on earth to save. No human heart can ever fully realize the real value of one single immortal soul; only Christ Himself, the God-Man, can appreciate what it means to have souls lost forever, and if we would appreciate to what lengths God would go in order to save even one single soul then we must learn the lesson of the Incarnation, and the life, sufferings, bitter passion and death of Our Lord. What a pang of sorrow did the Sacred Heart endure when He looked down on the city of Jerusalem and thought of the people therein who were throwing away their chances of knowing Eternal Truth, and what must be the feelings of that Sacred Heart as He looks out over the great wide world today and sees so many hundreds of millions of souls who are strangers to the saving Truths of the Gospel. Who can doubt that it is the wish of the Sacred Heart that those teeming millions of souls in pagan China should be given an opportunity to know and love Him? And to whom do you think the Sacred Heart appeals for help in this mission of love and mercy if not to those who already are enjoying the knowledge and benefits of the Gospel. It is to His friends that the Sacred Heart of Jesus says: "Behold the Heart that has loved men so much and is loved so little in return," and it is to the friends of the Sacred Heart that we make a special appeal this month that they help us by their prayers in the great work of saving souls in China.

Think of our young missionaries in far-off Chuchow; is there not something very like unto the work of their Divine Master in their journeyings and experiences among the Chinese? Like Him they travel the highways and byways in search of precious souls; like Him they endure hardships and dangers; like Him they sometimes suffer disappointments in their efforts to make known to those poor pagans the higher life that Christianity can bring to them. Surely they are deserving of the help of our prayers during this Month of the Sacred Heart; ask Him to give our missionaries strength of soul and body; ask Him to shed His Grace on those people amongst whom they labour that they may be ready and anxious to listen to their words and that they may profit by them unto eternal life. If you would show your love for Christ's Most Sacred Heart what more fitting way can you do it than by praying for those souls He loves so much. Whilst all can pay Him the tribute of a prayer, perhaps there are others who could do a little more, who could make some little sacrifice to send an offering towards the completion of the Sacred Heart Burse for the education of priests for the Canadian Mission to China, priests who are sorely needed in the Mission fields.

Just a Sunday Trip to Pi-wu-ka

By Rev. Wm. K. Amyot

Bang, bang, bang, on the compound gate. Knocks, thumps, and shouts. "Hold on! Hold on! Don't break the door down," says the old patriarch who keeps the night watches, "I'm coming!" Dogs begin to bark, and muffled voices come from various quarters. "What's the row? Bandits? 'No,' only the TAH-GIAW-NENG (carry-chair men)", one could fancy them saying as they rolled over again to get a last forty winks before the bell should go. "It's only five o'clock. 'Wer Kung' is going to Pi-wu-ka this morning, that's all."

Although they were ahead of time it was not long before I was up and ready. Away we went over the now well-known route, the still and frosty air putting new life in one. Few were stirring at that chill hour except the restaurant keepers who were just lighting their fires and getting the first batch of dough-nuts (?) and buns ready for the early comers. As we proceeded, the first panels were being removed from other stores and sleepy heads were appearing. Yes, 'twas dawn.

The ferry was waiting to bear us across the river which was now greatly shrunken because of the prolonged drought. Having reached the path the freight climbed in. The chair is raised to the shoulders of two stalwarts, and with a couple of half-steps by the back carrier to even the steps, off we go at a good lively clip. Pat-pat-pat-pat go the straw-sandalled feet on the cobbled pathway, the only accompaniment in the stillness to the breathing of the labouring faded-blue-coated carriers. "Li" after "li" (i.e. Chinese miles) is covered before the hills are reached.

It was just then that the sun rose majestically in a splendour rivalling that of the evening with its magnificent tints of red and gold.

Now the countryside opened out before us in its Fall mantle of many colours. Dark green bean plants replace the rice of the previous season of which but a few scattered yellowing plots are left to show how the rest has ripened.

Father Stringer took this picture of two little schoolboys in Chuchow.

No wonder they grow rice, since each stalk divides at the top into several sprays like headed oats with close seeds, some eight to ten inches up each side of the sprigs. The lighter green of the sweet potato vines, as they creep in a tangled mass over the closely hilled plots, gives some contrast. Then there are the popular "BAH-TSE," or white vegetable, a large species of white radish, along with small patches of peanuts here and there and a dwarf variety of purple egg fruit. Of the higher plants hemp and cotton are seen occasionally, and water-lily patches are very common. There are three distinct varieties of the latter, two of which (that are grown in semi-watered fields) are cultivated for their bulbous edible roots that have a decidedly moreish taste—having neither the taste of potatoes, tapioca, nor barley distinctly, but something of each all in one. Their large leaves are pointed or round on fairly thick stiff stalks. The third variety grows right in the ponds, has large round light-green leaves and big flowers that die and leave a seed pod like that of a very large poppy. The seeds from these pods are the fruit, and they fetch high prices as a delicacy for special banquets. Sugar cane, the old standby for young and old, is seen in small patches closely fenced in (fences are an exception in these parts) near every tiny hamlet, some high, some low, depending on the supply of water.

Flowers are not lacking, pinks and mauves being the colours of the season. The large waterlilies mentioned above are either white or they have a pinkish tint. Small daisies, some of them pink and some almost gray, are sprinkled along the way. Blue flowers are still to be seen in the ponds and streams, and a kind of sweet-smelling, wild bean-flower, garnet in the centre, rich pink over the rest, which much resembles the sweet-pea in shape and perfume, are plentiful in places. Pink, blue, and white morning-glories are common, too. Then there is a large type of flowering hedge bush with flowers like single holly-hocks, some mauve with red centre and yellow stamen, and others white with yellow centre. Here and there are tall types (five to six feet high) of grass plants, with fluffy yellowish heads like a scared cat's tail, but partly arched, and they just nicely set off the scenery. In several places I saw persimmons growing. Strange to say, the fruit of these large trees does not ripen till all the leaves have fallen off. Persimmons are a juicy fruit like good average-sized tomatoes, with slippery interior and big flat seeds. About the closest resemblance to their taste that I know of would be sweet Haws that have been frozen.

It is a mid-season for the farmers, many of who, taking advantage of the lull, were busily engaged fishing at most of the small streams and ponds. Every kind of contrivance is used to catch the fish, from human hands to fine meshed scoops and drag nets. The people in this locality certainly treat the fish rough when they go after them; few people use rods.

After three hours and fifty minutes walking (not bad time for a 13-mile jaunt) we turned in at the mission gate to be welcomed by the steady drone of the prayers being chanted in unison. Some few came down to meet me, but the chant, the business of the hour, continued unabated. All eyes were ready to give me the once-over as I appeared in the chapel with my mass-box in my hand. There came a pause in the chanting of the prayers, and the old bell clanked out its warning of the coming Sacrifice, the altar was made ready, and the catechist rose to give his half-hour weekly instruction. Again the old bell shook, shivered, and clanked out its final call. Then Mass was begun for those fifty faithful souls who attended. A wee baby ran amuck about the time of the Gospel (just a little inquisitive, you know), but he was promptly retrieved by a loving parent and there were no more distractions.

Afterwards, quite a crowd pressed around, all chattering away at once as usual. Gradually it sunk in; yes, there were a couple of letters to take to Chuchow, some business about catechisms, and three school boys. Big excitement for all, and I was to have lively company on my way back to Chuchow by boat in the afternoon. Little by little the flock dispersed and peace reigned again in the chapel compound. The fruit on the "yu" tree at the door was beginning to ripen, the wall around the property was looking its best after being just recently repaired, and even the ducks were contentedly guzzling in the muddy puddle, called a pond, hardby.

About noon we set sail, baskets "poo-kay's" (i.e., sleeping bags), Mass-kit, umbrellas and all. The trip was the usual, but there were many excellent opportunities to see the regular fishermen plying their trade. Every available man, woman and child seemed at it. Whole families were manoeuvering boats in the more shallow reaches (2 to 4 feet of water) with "papa" standing on the platform in the prow, like the harpooner of old, wielding a circular net weighted on the edges; when close enough to his prey he cast this net with a spinning motion like the throwing of a lasso. After the net is cast everybody peers into the water. "Did you catch any? Did they get away?" one can almost hear the family asking. "I can't see from here. Hurry, quick, pole closer! Yes, there's one, there's one!" and immediately he jumps into the water up to his waist, reaches down and captures the fish from beneath the meshes, then he triumphantly climbs aboard again, slowly hauling in and preparing the net for the next throw. That's one method. Here's another. In the deeper places, the net is useless. This is where the cormorants have to get busy. They are swimming about like a lot of large black sea-gulls while their attendant rafts drift aimlessly around, it seems, waiting for results. Bob! Duck! Down goes one, two, no three! One scored, and up he comes with the fish squirming in his bill. With much fuss and flapping it heads for its raft and is promptly relieved of its catch and then unceremoniously flopped back into the water to repeat the trick if it can. Large drag-nets are used in some places.

These are just a few of the sights when one is travelling the "shu lu" (water road) as they call the river. With such things, the scenery, and the chattering of the school boys the time passed quickly, and almost before we knew it we were stepping along the streets of Chuchow, just as the same restaurant-keepers of early dawn were busily preparing for the "wee-nee-han", or evening meal.

Realizing the need for a new building, one of our students goes "panning for gold" in the creek that runs by our rink.

CHINA'S POPULATION.

The total population of China, according to a report of the Ministry of the Interior, amounts to 474,281,000. Szechwan Province, which contains about the same square mileage as the State of Texas, leads in population with a grand total of 47,993,000. Hupeh Province, of which Wuchang is the Capital city, comes eighth in the last, with 26,699,000 people.

PAROCHIAL MINDED.

Referring to the consecration of Bishop Liou, eleventh Chinese Bishop recently consecrated in Peking, the Ave Maria of Notre Dame, Indiana, observes. Those of us who are imaginative will fashion our picture of the scene in that remote Catholic cathedral in China. We will have in the picture the vestments we recognize everywhere. The altars and the ceremonies and the Latin prayers will not be any different from what we see and hear at home. The great white-faced, somewhat peaceful appearing congregation will be different. Different in race; in color somewhat different; in dress, too, and social outlook. But that congregation, whose race is very ancient, has a bond of union with us which should bring them closer to us than any levelling process evolved out of a socialist's dream. They have with us a kinship of spiritual brotherhood in Christ's Kingdom here. One in faith, in baptism, in sacraments. Souls like ours to be saved through the merits of the Redeemer. One heaven to reach where faith vanishes in seeing, where hope comes into the fruition of possession. Those of us, clerical, and lay, who are parochially minded and think we have done all things well when we have finished the decoration of our stone church, should suffer ourselves to be lost in some such thought as this betimes. It will stimulate us to realize that there is a horizon beyond our immediate horizon. And many such. And the widest horizon is very wide indeed. And we belong within it.

Crusade Convention, Toronto, October First to the Fourth

First Four Days of October — Great Inspirational Event Scheduled for the Last Evening — Notable Speakers to Attend

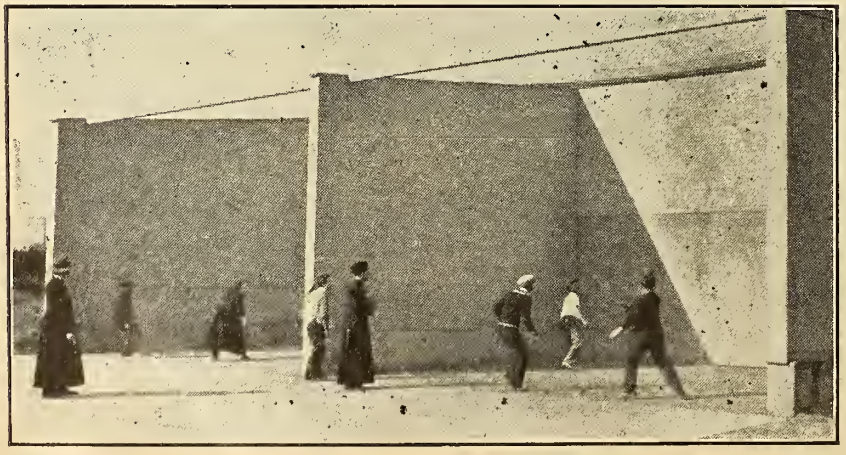
At last the good news can be announced. For the past two months your executive have been discussing dates, weighing some, choosing others, only to find they were not suited. Finally it depended on the date of a great inspirational event, and when the actual time of this became known, the dates were chosen and permission granted to make them public.

October first to fourth are the dates of the First General Convention of Canadian Catholic students—incidentally the only convention of Catholic students ever held in Canada.

The first day, Thursday, will be allotted for registration purposes, with a Crusade ritual ceremony in the evening. Friday will be devoted to the Home Missions, Saturday to the Crusade, and Sunday to the missions afar.

Sunday evening will see the close of the Convention—a closing which promises to be the most inspiring event in the annals of student endeavor. The Crusade will be in charge of the departure ceremony of three or four priests of St. Francis Xavier China Mission Seminary.

Undoubtedly the occasion of seeing four young priests bidding au revoir to mothers and fathers, friends and relatives—going to answer God's call to win souls in far away China will print an impression in our memories that time will never efface.



Now is the time for your Unit to choose a delegate. Plan to pay his or her expenses and notify Crusade Headquarters at once that your school will be represented at the Convention to be held in Toronto on Thursday, Oct. 1 to Sunday, Oct. 4th.

In order that this first Convention of Catholic students may be a huge success, it has been decided by the Crusade Executive to curtail every item of expense.

Due to the efficiency of Rev. M. J. McGrath, Chairman of the Visitors' Committee, there will be no charge for accommodation or meals during the delegates' visit to Toronto.

Practically the only item of expense will be the railway fare of visiting students.

CHURCH NEED NOT FEAR, SAYS PAPAL DELEGATE

Rome.—The Catholic Church need have no fear of the new nationalism in China, declared His Excellency Archbishop Celso Costantini, Apostolic Delegate to China, in an address to the Missionary Union of the Clergy, here. When the Chinese Government really understands the Church, noted His Excellency, it cannot help but adopt a friendly attitude.

"Truth makes way, little by little," said the speaker. "Time works for, and not against the Church. We shall continue our work full of confidence, knowing that it is the work of God. The Catholic Church is in no way incompatible with the genius of the Chinese people. It offers them no affront, but on the contrary, it offers them the best and most fruitful elements for a true rebirth, just as it did in the past to the Western world."

In the discourse, which lasted an hour and a half, His Excellency was at times visibly moved in recalling the bravery and suffering of the missionaries who had been captured by the brigands.

HALIFAX CRUSADERS HOLD SEVENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION

On Sunday, May 10th, we held our seventh Annual Convention at St. Patrick's Boys' High School. The hall was beautifully decorated with the Papal colours and St. Patrick's Boys' Band was in attendance.

The meeting opened with the singing of "God Wills It" by three hundred representatives from Mount Saint Vincent, Sacred Heart Convent, St. Patrick's Girls' High School, St. Patrick's Boys' High School, and Saint Mary's College. Rev. Dr. Curran then addressed the meeting, reminding the Crusaders of their resolutions and duties.

The Treasurers of the various units then read the yearly report, which was followed by the reading of papers by the various presidents. The papers were as follows:

"Catholic Action," Mount St. Vincent; "Theophane Venard and the Foreign Mission Seminary of Paris," Sacred Heart Convent; "The Ukranians," St. Patrick's Girls' High; "A Study of the Eastern Churches in Union with the Holy See," St. Mary's College; "The Original Crusaders," St. Patrick's Boys' High.

Resolutions were then read by Mount St. Vincent, Sacred Heart Convent, and St. Mary's College. The guests were then called upon to speak and Rev. Dean McManus, Rev. Bro. Stirling, Rev. Dr. Burns, Rev. Fr. Granville, Mr. F. Phalen, and Mr. G. Flavin answered with stirring addresses on Missionary Work, and all concluded by congratulating St. Pat's Boys for the splendid way in which the Convention had been run.

The Rev. Director then closed the meeting with a few well-chosen remarks, and all went outside for the taking of a group picture. The afternoon was concluded with Benediction of the Most Blessed Sacrament in St. Patrick's Church.

Wishing you the best of luck in your missionary enterprises,

Your Crusader,
JOHN E. LYNCH,
General Secretary Halifax Unit.

We were glad to receive the above report from the Secretary of the Halifax Unit of the C.C.S.M.C., and we congratulate the enthusiastic Crusaders of Halifax on their very successful Convention. The Mission spirit has certainly taken hold of the young men and women of Halifax, and on many occasions our Seminary has received tangible proof of their interest in the Missions.

FOR THE JAPANESE MISSIONS.

Last month we said goodbye to Father Biron and Father Laporte, the two priests from the Dominican Monastery at Ottawa who had been with us since last September. Those two sons of Saint Dominic had stayed with us in order to improve their knowledge of the English language preparatory to taking up their missionary work in Japan the coming Fall. We found much to admire in those brother-missionaries of ours, and we miss their companionship. May that cheerfulness and enthusiasm which they manifested whilst amongst us remain with them throughout the years as they labour for the salvation of souls in the Flowery Kingdom. In wishing them God-speed and every success, we are hopeful that it may be our good fortune to meet our Dominican friends again when we visit Japan en route to Chuchow.

REV. P. M. LAPPORTE, O.P.

Fathers Surprenant and Leduc, the two Dominicans who were with us last year, have been working hard in their mission in Japan, during the past nine months, and we know they are anxiously looking forward to the arrival of the new missionaries, who will have all the news for them from us. We commend their missionary work to the prayers of our readers.

LITTLE FLOWER'S ROSE GARDEN

Edited by FATHER JIM

CONDITIONS OF MEMBERSHIP

Dear Little Missionaries:

A short time after you get this issue of "China" you will be all enjoying a vacation, let us hope a well-earned one after a year of hard work in school. During those days in school I know you have thought often of the Missionaries and have prayed much for them. I want you to keep them in mind also during those happy days of holidays; remember there are young Canadian priests over in China who are doing very splendid work trying to help poor pagan Chinese to get to Heaven; those priests have made up their minds to spend their whole life doing work for God in China, and even though the fine hot weather comes, and vacation time comes for you, those priests will not have any vacation; they are going to keep right on working, and surely you will not wish to leave all the work to them during those summer months that are coming. Aren't you glad to know that you can help them? And you will, too, won't you? "But," you ask, "how can I help them? They are away over in China and I am here in Canada." Oh, if our boys and girls knew how much their prayers and Holy Communions mean to those priests in China they would never let a day pass without asking God to bless their work.

This month brings the first anniversary of the canonization of the Canadian Martyrs. Just think of it! Three hundred years ago young French priests came here to Canada to do the same thing for the people then in Canada that our Canadian priests are now doing for the people of China. Ask the Sacred Heart to bless the labours of our Canadian Missionaries even as He blessed the labours of the French Missionaries who are now Saints in Heaven.

I know it will interest our buds to know that Father Tierney, the missionary who died while a prisoner among Chinese bandits, had a great devotion to the Little Flower, and he believed it was she who saved him so long from trouble in his mission; and now the Little Flower has obtained for Father Tierney the great grace of sacrificing his life for God and immortal souls.

LITTLE FLOWER OF JESUS

Little flower of Jesus
On bended knees I pray
To drop one tiny petal
That will reach this earth one day.

While softly floating downward
To Heaven my eyes shall turn,
Forgetting the world around me,
And all its pleasures spurn.

Ever watching, ever waiting
'Till I hear the trumpet blast;
Then may I see my petal coming
As my Soul shall breathe its last.

May it fall upon my lips,
Child of Jesus hear my plea,
That my last words will be like thine:
"My Jesus I Love Thee."

Written for the Rose Garden by "A Withered Rose."

I have forwarded all letters sent me for the "Withered Rose." Well, I don't want to take up too much space so I'll sign off right here. I wish you all the very best of success in your Examinations. Be loyal buds during the holidays!

Yours,
FATHER JIM.

Here's a letter that pleased Father Jim very much.

Dear Father Jim and Buds:

"Please accept my sincere thanks and appreciation for all your prayers and Holy Communions, and Father Jim's Holy Mass, all offered for me on April 19th. It is my ardent wish that Almighty God will reward you with richest blessings, and I return to each and every one of you the happiness you have brought to me in my darkest days of illness.

God bless you all and keep you and I shall ever pray for you all."

"The Withered Rose."

The response to the request for letters for this beautiful soul was beyond my fondest expectations. I thank all the buds who wrote, and I feel sure that our little Patroness will answer our prayers. I cannot help but make mention of the letter which Teresa O'Rielly of Eganville, Ont., sent to "The Withered Rose." She asked me to read it, and I am very glad she did. I thought it was excellent, and something like a letter which the "Little Flower" herself might write.

From Mount Carmel School, New Waterford, N.S. I received many letters telling me of the interest of the pupils there in our work. One of the letters said that "Sister told us that prayers are always answered in some way." Yes, and we are hopeful that the many prayers of our buds are going to secure many blessings on our work for souls in China.

"We get the 'China' every month, and I always turn to the Little Flower's Rose Garden first. I love to read all the letters." Mary Margaret McDonald knows a good thing when she sees it, and she would like to have lots of letters from buds addressed to her home, 659 David St., Glace Bay, Nova Scotia.

"I would especially like to hear from girls in Alberta or any other Prairie Province. I'm choosing "Blondie" as my pen-name because I'm a blond. Greater and greater success to the Garden." I thank Catherine Casey, Box 156A, New Aberdeen, N.S., for her good wishes.

Belliveau's Cove, N.S.

Dear Father Jim:

"We would like to enter your Rose Garden. We are five little girls: Elizabeth Blinn, Annette Theriault, Nemerise Theriault, Evangeline Belliveau, and Yvonne Theriault. We would also like to have letters from other buds." This is the second group of new members from Belliveau's Cove, and we welcome them amongst us.

"I am a little girl ten years old. I am sending you a subscription for 'China' in this letter. I think you would be glad to have a soft west wind in your Garden, so I shall take 'Zephyr' for my pen-name. I would like to hear from Doris Gignac (Tiny) and Mary Chafe (Little Red Riding Hood). I hope they will write me. Best wishes for the missions." Catherine Maynard, Thorburn Rd., St. John's, Nfld., wrote that letter. Thank you for the subscription, Catherine; we are glad to have you with us, and I hope you will not have to wait too long for those letters.

I am a little late in showing you Catherine Chiasson's picture which she sent in February. Catherine's address is 43 Brookside St., Glace Bay, N.S., and she asks "Daisy Belle" to write to her.

Rose McNeil (Rose) and Annie McNeil (Garden-Flower) tell me that that they are doing their bit in school to help the little boys and girls of China by their spiritual and material offerings. They are two of our happy buds from Iona, C.B.

13-year-old Josephine Reynolds of 31 Beulah Ave., Hamilton, Ont., was delighted with the poem that Ruth Graves wrote for our Garden. "Could you get some of the buds from Nfld. to write to me?" she says. She has chosen a Chinese flower for her pen-name, "Lotus."

"You told us how much our prayers helped the missions in China, and if you send me a mite-box I will save up my spending money for the missions. This is the second time I have asked for a mite-box, but you didn't send me one." Barbara Hickey is the enthusiastic bud who sent this. I wrote her in answer to a very nice letter in which she told me that she had sent a spiritual bouquet to Ruth Grave's mother, and had heard from her. Barbara lives at 625 Gilmour Street, Peterboro, Ont.

One of the buds who writes me often is Evangeline Pierce (Laura), Box 116, Bridgeport, C.B. She is a member of the children's choir. She has framed the picture of the Little Flower I sent her. Buds who write her will not be disappointed.

Agnes Botell (Little Pal) of 7 Marjorie Ave., Toronto, has my thanks for the letter she sent, and especially for the excellent Spiritual Offering. She felt like "a lost sheep returning to the fold" after a long absence, but now she is in the field for at least six pen-pals. Agnes has a sister in our Club who is known as "Maple-Leaf."

Father Jim Got Caught That Time.

"Black-Eyed Susan" says she knows your name. She's not the only one. The last time I was out at the Seminary, the priest who answered the door said he'd get Fr. Jim for us, and we knew your name as soon as you came." From Honora Kennedy (Killarney Rose). We're not telling you her address for fear she would be deluged with letters. All we want to know is who was that priest who "gave me away." "Mum's the word", Honora.

From a letter received recently: "I guess I am too old to be a bud, but buds must open sometime and become roses. May I be a rose in your Garden, or will I have to remain merely looking over the fence? I am making a Novena for a very special favour, and I write to ask the prayers of your dear little buds. I promise to pray for them all. I am living away from home amongst non-Catholics, and your Garden will be a link with my Faith. If I get my request I will let you know." I'm sure our buds will be only too glad to say a "Hail Mary" for this nameless friend of ours, won't you?

Andrew Morris (Bumble Bee) of Renfrew, Ont., was one of those who wrote to "the Withered Rose." Andrew himself had been sick last year and appreciated the letters the buds then sent him, so he knew from experience how much his letter would mean. He is busy now trying to make up for lost time at school last year, but is ready to answer any letters that you send him.

"We must not be satisfied with merely fulfilling the conditions of membership in the Rose Garden, but we should try to make the Garden fragrant by good little deeds such as offering prayers for the Missions and for the sick and needy members of our Club. All can give their mite, be it ever so small, to make the spirit of our heavenly Patroness better known." These fine sentiments are expressed in a letter from Jack W. Richards, 88 Duke St. W., St. John, N.B.

Angela Haley thinks we have forgotten her because we never published her name. There have been many who joined who did not see their name listed, because to mention every member is impossible in the space allotted to us each month. Angela comes from Owen Sound, Ont., and her address is 387 15th St. E.

The Sisters at St. John's School, Arthur, Ont., have interested their pupils in the work of the Chinese Missions, and since many months ago this interest has been expressed in beautiful letters from some of the students. St. John's School is one whence almost entire classes have become buds to pledge daily prayer and monthly Communion for the two intentions expressed in our membership certificate. Acting on the principle that 'tis better late than not at all, let me introduce some buds who joined us a good while ago: Jean Dunn, Box 241; Mary Anderson (Teddy); Helen Farrell (Rose), Box 231; Rose Fitzpatrick (Sunshine); Nora Dunn (Sunbeam); Mary Farrell (Merry Sunshine), Box 100; Clara McGivney (Canadian Lassie); Marcella Doyle; Camilla Heffernan (Sunbeam); Alice McGivney (Blue-eyes), R.R. No. 1; Agatha Callaghan (Mary Lou); and Jack Anderson (Jake), whose picture appeared before.

In addition to writing to "the Withered Rose," Teresa O'Rielly wrote Father Jim a fine letter also, in which she says that if she wanted to know who Father Jim was "very very badly" she could easily find out from a relative of hers who "knows" Fr. Jim. Well, I'm not issuing any challenge to you, Teresa, but I'd be willing to bet all my old razor blades that you couldn't find out for sure. We will be very sorry to lose you when you leave our Garden. God bless you, and may you succeed in your plans for the future.

INTRODUCING SOME MORE OF OUR MEMBERS

Francis Mooney (Big-Chief-Two-Feathers—how's that for a pen-name?) finds the book about the "Little Flower's Mother" by Father Dolan very interesting. He says he likes to see the pictures of our buds in "China." How about sending your own picture that you promised, Francis?

From 10 Bayfield St., Charlottetown, comes an appeal for pen-pals from Helen Costello (Primrose); two sisters, Agnes and Mollie Maynard, are already corresponding with her, and she is delighted with them.

A new bud from Gananoque, Ont., is 12-year-old Loretta Latimer of 170 Stone St., N.

Margaret Reynolds and Claire McDonald are "very smart pen-pals" in the opinion of Marie Campbell of 55 Victoria St., Glace Bay, N.S. Marie is "Twin B," and her sister, Mary is "Twin A." I wonder how many twins we have among our members.

I'm passing this letter on to our buds in the hope that they will enjoy it as much as I did. It comes from Hamilton. "This is just a line to say that I've been in your Garden again, and it gives me much pleasure to read the letters from the buds. When I saw your appeal for letters to 'A Withered Rose' I thought I should write her as I've seen six years of sickness myself, and I felt rather ashamed of my imposture on reading of this girl. I, too, have often thought I would like to join your Garden, but Father for all my sickness I'm rather wild and wooly. Do you know any flower that might suit a person such as that? I've belonged to the Society of the Little Flower for two years now and she has been a wonderful little Saint to me. Honest, Father, I think this has saved me from being an old hen of the old hens. As there has been quite a lot of talk about those Hearth Stone corners the secular papers run, I was pretty pretty near writing in to them, but I see they are taking to writing of their operations, and I haven't had any yet so I'm out of luck there. Anyhow, I honestly hate their page as they are always "poor dearing" someone and I'd rather be called a poor fish than a poor dear. Wishing long life to the Rose Garden. Sincerely,——."

I know the sympathy of the buds will go out to Patrick O'Halligan of 8 Murphy's Square, St. John's, Nfld., who is now in the hospital suffering from meningitis. He asks for prayers for himself and his mother. I had a very newsy letter from Patrick, and I will certainly pray for him that things of which he told me will turn out all right. He sent along his picture and one of his chum, Jimmy Yetman, also of Murphy's Square, St. John's. Thanks for the stamps and for the pictures, Patrick, may you soon get well and be able to enjoy the fine summer days that are coming.

Miss Irene MacNeil, teacher at Iona Low School, sent in this Spiritual Bouquet from her class. They are very interested in our work and are trying by their prayers to help the good cause. We are very grateful to those young missionaries.

Many of us who are continually writing day in and day out will be glad to know about the new Portable Underwood Typewriter and how it can be bought on special terms for the month of June. This new machine is quiet, fast, and above all, easy to operate.

Nonsense

"A little nonsense now and then is relished by the wisest men"

Glad to Meter.

"Dear," said the poet, "I think we'd make a good couple."

"Well," sighed the girl, "dont think I'm averse."

Business Efficiency.

Employer (to applicant for job): "Do you tell lies?"

Applicant: "No, sir, but I can learn."

Safe, Anyway.

They were riding along a beautiful stretch of country highway. She was driving, and suddenly espied repair men climbing the telegraph poles.

"Why, Harry, just look at those men," she exclaimed. "Do they think I never drove a car before?"

Peak of Publicity.

First Urchin: "My father's 'ad 'is photograph taken."

Second Urchin: "That's nothing. My father's 'ad 'is fingerprints took."

An insurance company wrote out a $1,000 life policy in the name of one Samuel Johnson. Premiums were paid promptly for a few years, but suddenly stopped. After sending a few delinquent notices, the company received this reply: "Dear Sirs:—Please excuse us as we can't pay any more premiums on Sam. He died last May. Yours truly, Mrs. S. Johnson."

Teacher: "Who is the smartest man living?

Pupil: "Thomas A. Edison. He invented the phonograph and the radio so people would stay up all night, and use his electric globes."

The hotel clerk was astonished to see a guest parading through the foyer in a pair of pajamas.

"Here, what are you doing?"

The guest snapped out of it and apologized:

"Beg pardon, I'm a somnambulist."

"Well," sneered the clerk, "you can't walk around here like that, no matter what your religion is.'

The Uncertainty of It.

"Sometimes," confided Mrs. Jones to her intimate friend, "I think my husband is the most patient, gentlest, best-natured man that ever lived, an' sometimes I think it's just laziness!" —Montreal Star.

Funny.

Johnny: "Say, Dad, remember the story you told me about the time you were expelled from school?"

Dad: "Yes."

Johnny: "Well, isn't it funny how history repeats itself?"

I rose and gave to her my seat;
I could not let her stand—
She made me think of mother, with
That strap held in her hand.

What's in a Name?

Village Policeman: "This won't do. We've had too many 'Smiths' about here. Give me your real name and be quick about it, too."

Speeder: "Well, if I must, it's W. Shakespeare."

Policeman: "That's better. You can't bluff a man like me with that 'Smith' stuff."—Kitchener Record.

The Other Way 'Round.

"Were you one of the many fooling with the stock market?"

"Not me, I was serious; the market did the fooling."—From the Red Guidon.

A Sound Film.

"A film is to be made of a baby's first year," says a news item. It should be a scream.

Excited Woman: "I've lost my canary!"

Officer: "Would you mind notifying the Flying Squad?"

One good thing about the horse is that when he loses a shoe, you don't have to jack him up beside the road and nail another one on him.

Employer: "Are you a married man?"

Sambo (applicant for job): "Naw, suh—Ah makes mah own livin'."

Common Complaint.

"I believe William thinks I'm nothing but a charwoman."

"Oh, don't mind, dear. My husband complains about his toast, too."

Unarmed!

"Darling, would this be a good time to ask your father for your hand?"

"Yes, dear, he's sitting in the kitchen now in his stocking feet."—Capper's Weekly.

"You ought to typewrite your poetry, you know."

"My goodness! If I were clever enough to do typewriting, do you think I would be wasting my time on poetry?"

"I wish the boys wouldn't call me Big Bill."

"Why?"

"Because college names stick. And I'm studying to be a doctor."

Thinking Before Speaking.

The master, to impress on his pupils the need of thinking before speaking, told them to count fifty before saying anything important, and one hundred if it was very important.

Next day he was speaking, standing with his back to the fire, when he noticed several lips moving rapidly.

Suddenly the whole class shouted: "Ninety-eight, ninety-nine, a hundred. Your coat is on fire, sir!"

Double.

The Golfer: "What do you think I went around in?"

His wife: "Double."

The Golfer: "What do you mean?"

Wife: "Double what you're going to tell me."

Oh, My!

"That was greedy of you Tommy, to eat your little sister's share of pie."

"You told me, mother, I was always to take her part," replied Tommy.

Optimism.

An optimist is a man who marries the captain of a girl's debating team.

Exit.

Inspector: "Got away, has he? Did you guard all the entrances?"

Constable: "Yes; but we think he must have left by one of the exits."

"Ah done hear yo' stayed in de haunted house last night. What happened?"

" 'Bout two o'clock Ah woke up, an' a ghose come frew de side wall es if de wall wasn't dere.'

"Boy, Ah went frew de other side wall de same way."

Fond Parent: 'Yes, teacher, we seldom have to use capital punishment on Johnny."

The Bust.

A maid in great bluster
Was using a duster,
And dusting a bust in the hall,
And when she had dusted
The bust it was busted,
The bust now is dust, that is all.

Comments.

J. J. Raich would have been higher up in the contest if he had not "fallen down" on easy No. 33, which he allocated to Spain. It is the 60 Nfld. Cabot stamp, bearing picture of Henry VII, which looks for all the world like that of Christopher Columbus on the new Spanish sets.

Very few had No. 37 correct, the stamp with the crescent and star and Hebraic looking inscription. It is BRUNEI, or North Borneo. The British North Borneo Co. administered Labuan from 1890 to 1906 so we allowed LABUAN as correct also.

Brother Olier would have had first place in the contest if only he knew the 9 ct. Publicity issue of Nfld., really an easy stamp to find. He put it as from Greece. Many who won no prize at all had this correct and also the 60 ct Cabot. Strange how those who know stamps so well had tough luck on easy ones.

The Stamp Corner will be discontinued during the summer and whether it will be resumed or not in the fall will depend upon the wishes of our readers in general. While the actual members of the corner are most enthusiastic about it we doubt if it is of any interest at all to more than 5% of our readers and this being the case we question the advisability of giving a page to it each month. Let us have your opinion.

Meanwhile congratulations to the winners and best wishes for a very happy vacation to all members of the corner.

Sincerely
BEAVER.

The Moo Cow's Story

In a velvet carpet meadow,
I lay down to rest and dream,
All alone with just the cattle
Grazing on the grass so green.

When a something seemed to whisper
Listen, and you'll understand
What those gentle cows are saying,
In this peaceful valley land.

So I listened to the mooing,
And I heard one old cow say,
"Children, you must dine on clover,
'Tis the City Dairy way.

For the many little children,
We provide pure milk each day;
And the best of fare is needed
To a health foundation lay.

Clean hands milk us morn and evening,
Washing flanks and udders well.
And the flavour of sweet clover
City Dairy children tell.

Rosy cheeks and eyes that glisten,
Graceful bodies, sturdy, strong,
Built by milk from City Dairy
To help little folks along."

DOES THIS MEAN ME?

"And Jesus looking on him loved him, and said to him: One thing is wanting unto thee: go, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, follow me—who being struck sad at that saying went away sorrowful: for he had great possessions."—Mark 10, 21:22.)

"Alas, alas for those who die without fulfilling their mission, who were called to worship Christ and who plunged into this giddy and unbelieving world, who were called to fight and remained idle. Alas for those who have had gifts and talents and have not used, or misused or abused them.

"The world goes on from age to age, but the holy Angels and blessed Saints are always crying alas, alas and woe, woe over the LOSS OF VOCATIONS and the disappointment of hopes and the scorn of God's Love and the ruin of souls."

THE MISSIONARY PRIESTHOOD

A short time ago thousands of Catholic young men from Coast to Coast stowed away their school books and began to enjoy the "freedom" of a long Summer vacation. For eight or nine months they had been subject to the discipline, more or less rigorous, that was necessarily a part of their training as students. Now the surveillance of teachers is relaxed, and the responsibilities of parents are proportionately increased. Soon, for many of those young men, a decision will have to be made as to their future. Certainly for a great number of them there will be no question of returning to school; they have formed other plans, made other decisions. They will try to secure some position or other, and with that ambition, which is a privilege of youth, they will aim high to make a mark for themselves in some field of endeavour, commercial or professional. Even as we write these words we know that there will be some (even though a few) who will still be undecided as to what their future course is to be, and their indecision is due to the fact that they are feeling a call to some higher life and are uncertain as to whether or not they should heed that call. They are hesitating about heeding a vocation to the Priesthood. The remarks that follow are written in the hope of preventing their decision from placing another tombstone in the already over-crowded "graveyard of Lost Vocations", and are addressed particularly to those young men who feel called to serve God in His army of Missionary Priests.

We are painfully aware of the fact that there are many splendid young fellows who have no obstacle whatsoever to prevent them from becoming priests, and yet they never will be priests. They hear the Call of our Divine Lord, "Come, follow Me", but they fear to make a start; they are loathe to turn their gaze from the bright prospects that a career in some worldly pursuit seems to offer them, and to unselfishly consider the tremendous benefits for themselves and others that a priestly life can give them.

If you feel that you should be a priest, you are being offered a chance to embrace the highest career open to human beings, a chance to have a high place in the service of One Who is at once your Saviour, your Friend, and your King. Yours can be the inestimable privilege of living every day of your life in the closest possible union with God—you will begin each day at the altar offering the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass; you will spend your time doing good to others; teaching and instructing them that they may be able to save their immortal souls, and you will be working for those people whom Our Divine Lord loved so much, His poor and neglected. The Missionary vocation is a call to a life and service that is as nearly as possible the life and service of Christ Himself, and to any Catholic young man who wishes to make a success of his life what greater field of endeavour is open to him than that of the Missionary Priesthood?

What may the missionary hope for? He may joyfully hope for the privilege of sharing in the great work of the redemption and sanctification of souls. Today there are more than one billion people in pagan lands who know nothing of the blessings of Redemption, and their souls are in need of the help that only a Catholic missionary can bring to them. It is the will of God that those souls should be saved, but God deigns to leave to His creatures the choice of helping in this all-important work. Those poor pagan people depend for their salvation on the response that generous young hearts make to the pleadings of Christ's most Sacred Heart; and those who answer that Divine pleading are going to do something very much worthwhile with the talents and gifts they have received from God; they are going to do something which will have God's approval, and after all that is the only real genuine test of success. It matters little whether the world will regard them as foolish, or whether some of their "well-wishers" advise them that they are going to make a mistake. To the world and the worldly-wise it has not been given to understand the beauty and the richness of a soul, nor does the world appreciate the greatness of Sacrifice when the sacrifice is not directed to it.

There was a time when even good Catholic people looked with disfavour and suspicion on anyone who spoke of devoting his life to the Foreign Missions, but thank God such days are rapidly passing, and our Catholic mothers and fathers have a better appreciation of what Foreign Missions mean. They are getting more accustomed to hearing of it. Priests preach it in the churches. Teachers speak of it in the schools, and the work of the Student Mission Crusaders has made the Foreign Missions known for what they really are. People are beginning to understand that if they wish to be Catholic in spirit they must have an interest in the spread of their Faith, and they are now only too happy to know that one of their own flesh and blood is going to be an Apostle of Jesus Christ.

What Catholic parent could conscientiously object to a child becoming a missionary when they reflect on the appalling need for priests in mission lands?—a need that lends emphasis to the words of Our Lord, "the harvest indeed is great, but the labourers are few. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that He send labourers into his vineyard." Are our Catholic people fully alive to the need of the Missions, and do our Catholic youths realize the golden opportunity for Service of God that lies in an answer to a vocation to the Foreign Missions? Should God call you to the Missionary Priesthood, then may He strengthen your will to declare and carry out your intentions. Be worthy of the Saviour who asks you to serve Him—make your life successful in God's sight, the only place where real success is judged.

The NO-SHI-KAN Mission Trail

By REV. J. L. BEAL

Beginning the five-mile climb over the famous Ku Lu Ling Mountain.

This year the sun did not enter the constellation Aquarius until Feb. 17, which marks the advent of the Chinese New Year. Aquarius and Aqua being synonymous we had a long seige of rainy weather; so much so the spring visitation of the parish before Easter was getting inconveniently short. However, March came in like the proverbial lamb and gave all assurance of clear weather. By March 3rd was ready for the road.

There was something about the weather too good to last—the following four days were rain-rain-and more rain. Two bridges were washed away in the flood which cut off communication with the north side of the chapel. The fifth day I ventured out to my later sorrow. After walking seven miles to visit an old christian family I learned they had moved to another village and before I returned a washout occurred on the road. The very elements seemed opposed to my visit. Of all places in need of spiritual restoration Chu-Z-Ca holds first place. So far my exhortations have borne little fruit.

After one week of seeming fruitless endeavor I left for the next chapel where results were more gratifying but the standard is not what it should be. Many are making an honest effort and I am sure our Divine Lord will give His plenteous reward to the faithful followers.

At this chapel on Friday, March 13, perhaps a rather unlucky day, at least in my case—my mass kit was stolen during the small hours of the morning. The foundation was undermined near the back door and by the use of lighted josh-sticks he or they marched through the house. The catechist who slept downstairs was carefully locked in his room by means of a chopstick. Many of these people erroneously believe that Americans carry thousands of dollars about with them for distribution. He felt most unworthy to call in person for alms so decided to relieve me of this obligation. The new inter-urban telephone lately installed came in handy. Early Saturday morning I called Father Morrison to despatch another mass-kit so I could say Mass for Sunday. This incident brought about relations with the local constabulary. After taking tea I informed the Chief Magistrate about the theft. He expressed his regret at my loss and assured me it would be recovered and the culprit apprehended. At this writing there is no trace of the box or its contents. Conversation drifted to the building of a hospital to be governed by The Grey Sisters. But under the present regime real estate law makes it prohibitive for foreigners to buy with security. Before leaving, one of the junior officers arrived quite nonchalantly and reported the killing of three bandits, he was given a free afternoon to visit his home.

Before leaving this town I was called to administer the Last Sacraments to old Philip Wong, a staunch pillar of the church. In the absence of the catechist Philip always led in prayers and was always very charitable to the poor. He was stricken with paralysis in the left side. Immediately all the famous quacks were summoned—each wrote out a different diagnosis and prescribed different remedies. Philip is in his 69th year so a cure is hardly to be expected. After Extreme Unction he was resigned to prepare his soul for the next world and offer his present suffering to atone for past faults. The next morning I brought him Holy Communion which he received very devoutly.

Bright and early St. Patrick's Day we started for No-Shi-Kan, 160 li. The first day was rather uneventful—the scenery is about the same as other places and road quite level. Evening found us in a small pagan village with only one hotel. All available rooms were taken by the Opera Players. There was no room for us at the inn. After scouting around for a lodging place we were shown hospitality by an old man who vacated his room and slept with a neighbor. The next morning he returned early to prepare the hot water for his guests and cook the rice. At 7.30 baggage was packed and ready for the road again. This day I had looked forward to in anticipation because of the famous mountain, Ku-Lu-Ling, "Sorrowful Road Mountain," which we would climb later in the day. At 11.15 we were taking tea at a restaurant when the carrier arrived saying he couldn't go another li without having his dinner. I wished to move on to another town five li farther but to accommodate the carrier we stopped for dinner—in the meantime I finished the day's Breviary.

Two hours walking brought us in view of the mountain. "Sorrowful Road" is certainly not a misnomer. After one hour and a half of stiff climbing we reached a level landing place. Deo gratias we are at the top. Oh, no! said the boy, this is just a resting place —in other words an air station, there are two more such places before we are on top. We had outdistanced the carrier and evening was fast approaching. I noticed a small hut perched on the side of the mountain, so sent the boy over to find an auxilliary man to help the carrier along. After much talking one came along for twenty cents. Another thousand feet and we see Chuchowfu. As we were passing a narrow ledge the boy asked if I was frightened. I answered in the negative. Well, a few weeks ago two men were stabbed right here and pushed down this gorge. That sounds like adding insult to injury. I was carrying a third leg resembling an Irish thorn, so I took the lead, but nothing happened. At nightfall the other side of the mountain was fading from view and a small town covered with a blanket of smoke appeared in the distance. Here we would be welcomed by a pagan family really Catholic at heart.

A hot supper was soon prepared in true Chinese style. As I was shown to my room a bucket of hot water was brought in to wash my feet—a very old Oriental custom. My ankle was swollen quite badly so decided to tape it before retiring. Some one saw the iodine and tape — that was enough. He came in telling me his ailments. This brought a score of others ranging from toothache to chapped hands. Iodine had to stand the test for all; no one would be refused. By the time all were treated to their satisfaction it was near eleven o'clock. May God bless these good simple people and may they soon have the gift of Faith to know you are the only True God where they can find cure for their souls also.

Early next morning before the household were roused from slumber I celebrated Mass. Little did they think on that morning the King of Kings had visited their humble home. Before leaving the old man asked that a catechist be sent to them to instruct his family about our religion. There is still thirty-five li to walk and the road in many places is just a path over loose stones. The spring flood had washed away many of the little bridges, several times we sat down removed our shoes and waded across the streams rather than walk around several li dry shod. At noon we were within five li of our destination. The Catechist had come out to welcome us and to be the first to carry the glad news to the Christians. As we were passing a pagan home, the master saw us and asked the Catechist to invite the priest in for dinner, we will be very honored if he eats here. The request could not be refused.

The Catechist left before dinner was officially over, that is, the drinking of tea and eating watermelon seeds, to inform the Christians about our arrival. At two o'clock we reached the chapel where many of the Christians were waiting. They had not seen a priest since last March due to bandit activities. Above Suichang the road was not safe during the fall visitation. The Rosary and Litany was recited in thanksgiving for the safe journey.

This little community is separated so to speak from the evil influences of large cities; pagans there are but so different from others. There is a small temple but it is gradually falling into ruins. With the help of God and His Holy Grace this village will soon be Christian. A school will soon be opened for both Christian and pagan children; the doctrine will be taught daily.

After the instruction at night there were many confessions, and each morning the chapel was filled for Mass. It was a wonderful consolation to see the devotion and piety of these people—many were daily communionists. Although the road presents many difficulties it is well worth the little sacrifice to visit this chapel.

Saturday morning I was invited to a Christian family in the country where Catherine Chang was made a child of the Church. The road out there is over a steep mountain—a sister to Ku-Lu-Ling. The ceremony was followed by a banquet and the usual fireworks. Sunday morning before Mass three more were baptized in the chapel.

Sermons and Catechetical instructions were the order of the day during the mission. Monday I made arrangements for carriers to return. When this news reached the Christians a protest was raised that it would be unsafe to leave now. The following Sunday I promised to spend in our first chapel where many had not gone to the Sacraments due to the rain at the beginning of my

TORONTO CRUSADERS GIVE GENEROUS GIFT TO CHINA.

Early in June the C.C.S.M.C. unit of Loretta Abbey College, Brunswick Ave., Toronto, held a very successful end-of-term meeting at which Father Fraser was present. At the close of the meeting Fr. Fraser was handed a cheque for fifty dollars for the Chinese Missions. Such generosity on the part of the Loretta Crusaders is deeply appreciated; on many occasions they have given evidence of their active interest in our work, and we congratulate them on their spirit of enthusiasm for the Missions.

THREE ORDAINED SUBDEACONS FOR CHINA MISSION.

On June 12th at St. Michael's Cathedral, Toronto, three of our students were ordained Subdeacons by His Excellency, Bishop Murray, of Victoria. The young men ordained were: Rev. Gerald Doyle, Toronto; Rev. Wm. McNabb, St. Thomas, Ont.; and Rev. James McGillivry, Glace Bay, N. S. Mr. Roland Roberts, of Victoria, B. C., received the first two minor orders.

The ceremony which will mark the departure of four of our Priests for China is scheduled for Sunday, October 4th. This Departure Ceremony will be the grand climax of the C.C.S.M.C. National Convention, to be held in Toronto, beginning October 2nd.

A BOAT-LOAD OF MISSIONARIES.

Passengers on board the German steamer S.S. Trier on a voyage from Europe to the East had a rare opportunity of witnessing the Catholicity of the Church as well as her universal missionary effort. The vessel carried 57 missionaries of various nations and tongues bound for scattered ports, which is believed to constitute a record group for a single ship. An "Academia" was presented by the missionaries on board ship at which nine languages were used in entertaining the passengers, many of them non-Catholics.

The list of missionaries included two Benedictine Fathers of St. Ottilien bound for Korea; a Spanish Benedictine priest and lay brother on commission to decorate the Benedictine Church at Manilla, Philippine Islands; two Benedictine scholastics from Buckfast Abbey bound for Beda College at Manilla; seven Carmelite nuns for the world-famed land of Borneo; two Salesian Fathers for China and Japan respectively; 10 Salesian scholastics; nine Salesian novices for Siam; eight nuns for Siam, Japan and Hongkong; two priests and one deacon of the Society of the Divine Word for Kansu, China; three Scheut Fathers for the Philippines; two priests and three lay-brothers of the Pious Society of Missionaries for Australia; a Spanish Augustinian for the Philippines, and one Irish Jesuit priest with two scholastics for Hongkong.

IN YOUR WILL REMEMBER OUR WORK FOR CHINA

Our Legal Title is:

St. Francis Xavier China Mission Seminary

Scarboro Bluffs, Ontario

A lady in Port Credit, Ont., wishes to acknowledge a favour received through the intercession of Rev. Fr. Tierney, an Irish Missionary recently martyred in China.

Four boys from the District of Kinhwa. Father Wong (of Chuchow West, Kinhwa), sent those boys to the Minor Seminary in Hanchow, where they will make their preparatory studies, Latin, etc., for the Priesthood. Our Seminary supplied them with money to buy clothing, books and other articles necessary for their journey and studies. The boys come from families that are very poor. Pray that God may bless their youthful hearts and help them to become Priests.

REV. F. J. McGOEY

A REAL FRIEND OF THE CHINESE MISSIONS.

Rev. Father Frank McGoey, whilst yet a student at St. Augustine's Seminary, gave excellent proof of his desire to help our work, and for the past two summers he organized and conducted a campaign all over Canada for subscriptions to "CHINA." These campaigns have been a wonderful help to us and have greatly increased our circulation. The work was such as to give Father McGoey large scope for the splendid organizing ability that he possesses, and which he has used successfully in several other important works in connection with the Seminary. This summer he again organized a subscription campaign for us, but owing to his ordination to the Priesthood he has not been able to take his usual active part "in the field."

We wish to make use of this opportunity to thank Father McGoey, and to ask all our readers to pray for him that his priestly labours may be blessed with rich results. Father McGoey has been appointed Curate at St. Clair's Church, Toronto.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR.

Shortly before our students began their vacation, our Seminary was honoured by a visit from His Excellency, Most Rev. A. Cassulo, Apostolic Delegate to Canada and Newfoundland. To the assembled students His Excellency spoke words of encouragement and kindly advice, and before leaving he gave us all his blessing.

NEW FIELD OF LABOUR.

Through the kindness of Bishop Faveau of Hanchow, our institute has been asked to extend its field of labour in China to the District of Kinhwa adjoining our own District of Chuchow. Kinhwa embraces a large and populous section of the Province of Chekiang and is at present under the control of the Bishop of Hanchow. It is likely that in the near future a few of our priests will begin their work in this new territory.

THE CHURCH IN CHINA.

Peking, May 28.—Statistics released by the Apostolic Delegation at Peking, China, show that, despite the unsettled conditions in parts of China, the Catholic population rose from 2,472,619 in June, 1929, to 2,490,392, in June, 1930, a gain of 17,773. The number of foreign Priests rose from 2,011 to 2,092, a gain of 81, and the Chinese Priests from 1,371 to 1,446, a gain of 75.

The actual converts totalled 50,109, but the number of deaths and emigrations reduced the gain to 17,773. The converts for the same period the year previous (1928-1929) were only 47,637.

Interesting are the figures for the young Chinese studying to become Priests: those in the preparatory seminaries totalling 1,463, (as against 1,462 in 1929); those in the minor seminaries totalling 2,745 (as against 2,465 in 1929) and those in the major seminaries totalling 921 (as against 838 in 1929). The total increase in students for the priesthood is thus 346.

Thirty-Year Gain

Shanghai, May 28.—The Catholic Missions in China, which now have a total of almost two and a half-million members, have registered a gain of 1,800,000 in the last thirty years, against a gain of 350,000 in the preceding thirty, according to figures just released here by the Chinese Bureau of Zi-Ka-Wei, here.

Communism, civil war, famine, military service—the latter often compulsory — have served to reduce the 1930 total of increase to a mark below that of the years immediately preceding and to a fraction of the average maintained from 1905 to 1925, when the annual gain regularly totaled more than 70,000.

One reason for the diminution shown in recent years is to be found in the fact that certain of the missions have felt the need of revising their figures. In spite of real progress, attested by baptism figures, several have not hesitated to report a census total far below that of the preceding year. In this manner, the figures of the Chinese Bureau show some 20,000 names have been erased from the mission lists. The Diocese of Macao, for example, reports a decrease of 6,000. Famine mortality, too, has been high in many districts, notably Shensi and Kansu.

Statistics on religions show that there are now 3,600 Priests and 4,000 Sisters now working in China. The rate of increase in the number of Priests from 1900 to 1910 was twenty annually. From 1910 to 1920, the increase was thirty a year, and from 1920 to 1930, it was 45 yearly. Latest figures show the annual increase to be almost 100. Despite these increases, however, there is but one Priest for every 1,730 Catholics in China, while in 1900 the ratio was one for every 1,540.

Progress Less Regular

Among foreign missioners the progress has been less regular. From 1900 to 1910 the average increase was 45. In the next decade it dropped to five. From 1920 to 1930, however, the figures show an annual average of 75. It is to be noted that more than half the missioners have not yet been ten years in the field, having scarcely left the formation period, their initiation.

In 1900, ten religious congregations had charge of the mission districts in China. In 1920 there were eleven. Today 28 congregations of men send Priests to China, but some of them are just establishing themselves in the field and it would be unjust to expect from them the results that are obtained by the older Orders.

This multiplication of Missionary Institutes has led to a multiplication of mission districts—a recent movement. From 1900 to 1920, only nine new Missions were established. Forty-nine new Missions were established in the following decade, thirty of them in the last five years. These new centers necessitate the creation of administrative machinery, which takes a large number of Priests away from direct apostolic work.

In 1910, there were 730 Sisters in China, of whom about 350 were Chinese, divided among ten foreign and seven native congregations. Today there are 4,235 Sisters, 2,835 of whom are Chinese. They represent 41 Religious Congregations for Women, besides 37 purely Chinese congregations.

Latest statistics further show that the number of secondary and advanced primary schools has increased in the last two years from 342 to 467.

LOVELESS.

Can you imagine a religion without love for its actuating principle? Can you imagine worshipping a deity vindictive, capricious, selfish; a deity who regards you with scorn and antipathy; who will vent his malice upon you in this world, and then plunge you into a sea of horror in the next, and whose fickle good-will may be gained only by fulsome flattery, or by heavy bribery? Such is the religion of China, and such the disposition of its innumerable gods.

With what wonder and delight do these poor people listen to the story of our Saviour's love, portrayed for them by the Christian missionary! A God who loves them! The idea seems prepostrous. With what wistful eagerness and new-born hope do the new converts call upon God as "Our Father, Who art in heaven!"

To our boys on vacation this will bring memories of days not long ago when the "ump" had to put up with a lot—and our team had an unbroken winning streak.

YOUNG CHINESE SEMINARIAN ANSWERS EDUCATION DIRECTOR.

Kweiyang, China.—(N.C.W.C.-Fides.—A young Seminarian in St. Paul's Minor Seminary here has proven his mettle as an apologist.

The Director of Education of Kweichow, together with 70 directors of schools from all parts of the province, assembled at Kweiyang, paid an official visit to the minor seminary where a program of addresses was arranged. The Director and one of his subordinates in the course of their talks had the extreme bad taste to make a strong appeal to the students to abandon the idea of becoming helpers to the "running dogs of foreign imperialism," the term they used to designate the missionaries.

The words shocked the missionaries, but their surprise was still greater when a young seminarian immediately arose in his place and made a fearless reply. "Everywhere we hear the cries of 'Down with the foreigner!'" he said. "As a matter of fact, our machines, our new institutions, even our very clothes—everything comes from foreigners. Science is international as the long lists of scholars prove. The Catholic Church being the expression of supernatural truth is also international. True, our seminary here is maintained by foreigners. But if these foreigners should try to inculcate in us a spirit against China, we would all rise up against them. As Catholics, however, we recognize in them our leaders. As Chinese we will defend our fatherland unto death, but if it shall be necessary to defend our faith, we will likewise defend it even with our blood."

To this bold and unexpected declaration there was no reply. During the refreshments offered afterwards to the visitors, the Director of Education leaned over and whispered in the ear of the Seminary director, "I expressed myself badly a few minutes ago."

MAKING CONVERTS IN CHINA.

It is a mistaken idea to suppose that conversions are made merely by preaching to crowds on the street corners. Preaching is necessary, and is being constantly done, though rather in chapels or in village homes. The time seems not yet to have come for street-preaching; there is still too much antagonism abroad, ready to break out into active opposition or even persecution.

Just as at home, the preacher must have the example of good Catholic people as a living testimony to the faith he preaches. Indeed, the laity here play a larger part in bringing converts into the Church than they do at home. To the pagan Chinese one omnipotent God is a pretty abstract idea; they see nothing inconsistent in having many gods to whom to appeal, just as we have many saints.

But they see the fruit borne by Catholic preaching in the lives of Catholics and hear much about the Church from Catholic relatives and friends. The personality of the missioner also counts for much. If he is kindly and helpful the Catholics will spread the word around and the pagans do not then hesitate so much about coming in. On the other hand, if a priest does not appeal to them the pagans will be slow to become Catholics. Hence there is a saying "Old Christians honor God; new Christians honor the priest."

There is also the matter of superstitions. Most pagans are convinced that to give up the worship of their gods would bring bad luck. Heretofore almost the only thing that would convince them otherwise was the sight of those who had long been Catholics getting along just as well as or even better than themselves. Today the Chinese government is, without intending to, helping us in this matter, since it is destroying the idols and forbidding superstitions. Once the people see that life goes on much the same even without these they begin to realize that they are all false.

At the same time the soul of man is spiritually inclined and seeks a spiritual outlet. There are many pagans who say long prayers and others who never eat meat, not even eggs or fish. The vast majority of Chinese are peace-loving people, and they have a very good moral tradition, though not all live up to it. Many families are very strict about the conduct of their children. Hence, in our work of making converts, we seek especially those who are good living and who show good will. We show them where superstition is useless, but do not ridicule them, assuring them that God will take into account the good intentions they have had, that, in fact, His leading them into the Church is a reward for their good will in the past.

Sometimes they are slow to grasp Christian ideas and the pagan notions are deeply ingrained. Hence, we must be patient with them and gradually replace the old ideas with new. The reception of the Sacraments seems also to have a marvelous effect, and it is interesting and consoling to note how much more at home in the faith are those who have been Catholic for ten years than those just baptized, while those who have been Catholics for twenty or thirty years show a proportionately greater depth of faith and love of the Church.

A difficult matter in the conversion of a pagan people is to find an opening. The wish to convert an entire nation is not sufficient. Faith comes by hearing and a missioner cannot force pagans to listen. At times persons determine to inquire into the matters of faith simply because of the kindness of the missioner, but these cases are rare. A most effective method of gaining entrance to the hearts and minds of pagans is through the baptized Christians. That zeal so often found in the convert at home is found also in the convert from Paganism. With little persuasion the newly baptized can be turned into a zealot for the spread of the Faith. When an opening has been found into a village, the task is well begun and half done.

Pray then that the missioner of Christ looking out on the fields "White for the harvest" may find a welcome in the hearts of the Chinese.

THE CHAIR-BEARER.

A characteristic of the Chinese, which his Western brother may well envy, is the calm and even heroic fortitude with which he bears all manner of human suffering. With stoical composure he will endure the sharp incision or lacerating probe of the surgeon's knife, under conditions that would make a Westerner howl in anguish while doctors' attendants hold him down. But not a whimper nor a rebellious jerk from the Chinese. Glorying in his almost superhuman powers of endurance, he bears all with silent dignity, only his drawn features and tightened lips giving mute evidence of his agony.

The staying-powers of a Chinese seem to have no limit. Take for instance the chair-bearers, little human beasts of burden. Like their lower brethren, the horse and the donkey, they plod patiently along till they drop in the traces. In the terrific heat of a tropical day they will carry a man and his baggage for fifty miles without protest or halt. And not over level lanes nor paved roads, but up steep and rugged mountain-paths, across swollen streams, through tangled ravines, they bear their heavy burden, their bodies steaming as they trot doggedly on. While their passenger, who has only to loll, and use his fan, is weak and faint from the unbearable heat, his chair-bearers patter along manfully and uncomplainingly, even exchanging merry pleasantries whenever passing incidents arouse their ever-ready sense of humour.

Ningyuanfu (Szechwan, China) —Six Chinese dollars, 20 quarts of Chinese wine and some pieces of red cloth satisfied the Lolos, an aboriginal tribe dwelling on the borderlands of Tibet, who, deceived by the terms "Europeans" and "Sons of Europeans" generally used in that section to designate Christians, had kidnapped two Chinese boys, charges of Father Marin Ou. When they could find no Europeans from whom they might demand a ransom they put the boys to work in the field but after a few months liberated them and received the remuneration mentioned above.

This is the July - August "China". The next issue will be for September.

LITTLE FLOWER'S ROSE GARDEN

Edited by FATHER JIM

CONDITIONS OF MEMBERSHIP

Dear Little Rose Garden Friends:

I'm not going to say much to you this month, but I want to say to you once more not to forget during your vacation time that the missionaries in far away China have need of all your prayers and Holy Communions. You know it often happens that when young boys and girls get free from school for the long Summer holidays, many of them think it is all right to take the time "off" from their prayers, too. Now, this is a mistake, because when you are left to yourself you should be more careful than ever to keep up the good practices you have been doing during the year. I think you would enjoy your holidays a whole lot if you got up early in the morning and went to Holy Mass and Holy Communion. Then you can have all kinds of good fun during the day, knowing that you had done something for God the very first thing each morning. I hope every one of our buds will be able to say after holidays are over that God is pleased with the way they spent their time.

I got a whole pile of letters from buds who were anxious to tell me that they Graded in their Examinations, and I was very glad to hear that. Around Exam. time I remembered you all in my Masses.

I may have something to say next month about the answers to the contest "If I were Father Jim". I have received several poems from buds, but as I am not a poet myself I could not fix them up for publication. However, any little articles buds wish to send me for our Garden I will publish them if I think they are good enough.

May Nature's sunshine and the sunshine of God's Grace make you all enjoy a healthful, happy vacation. Sometimes say a little prayer for

FATHER JIM.

If that sick bud from Hamilton, whose long letter appeared last month will send me her name and address, I will forward her a letter from a friend which I feel sure will mean much to her.

One of our "old reliables" is Mary M. Kerr, of 82 Drummond St. E., Perth, Ont. She has enjoyed the many letters received from her 15 pen-pals, and would like Rita Byrne to let her know her address, so she can answer her letter.

THE MEMORARE OF SAINT THERESE THE LITTLE FLOWER.

Remember, O Most Gracious Little Rose Queen, your promise of never leaving any request made to you without an answer, and of coming down to earth to do good. Full of confidence in your power with the Sacred Heart we implore your intercession in our behalf and ask of you to obtain the Rose we so ardently desire. Amen.

HERE I AM!

Knowing that the "buds" and others are very keen to know something about Father Jim, I'm going to let one of the Glace Bay buds tell you all about me. She heard this from "reliable" sources, so here you are: Dear Father Jim: "You are five feet, 8 inches in height. Your hair is straight and the color between blonde and brunette. Your eyes are greenish-grey (not too much green, I hope!). You take size eight shoes (yes, sometimes, when I can't find my own!). You are right-handed. You have freckles, and you wear a Roman collar (the plot thickens!). For breakfast you drink orange-juice; for dinner, tea; (with or without milk?); and for supper, water (not such a good supper, eh?). You are quite healthy all the time (sometimes I suffer from nervous prostration when I read some of the "compliments" that come in my mail). You climb cliffs, play handball, soccer, golf, and tennis (and I like checkers, too!) And YOU ARE MEAN—you will not let anybody take your picture!" The bud who wrote me this says she has eight pen-pals.

While I'm on the subject I might say that a Toronto bud learned (also from a reliable source) that Fr. Jim is "an old stooped man with white whiskers". Now I hope you all know me. But in case you still are troubled about my identity, here are a few more hints—from another Maritime bud: "You wear glasses, but not all the time; you play ping-pong and hockey; you can swim, and you are a good singer; you have false teeth and a delicate appetite." (This last remark just shows you don't KNOW me at all!).

GOD'S LITTLE ONES.

The touching story of how two little captive children brightened the last days of Father Tierney, the Irish St. Columban Father, who died in the hands of Chinese bandits on February 28, is told by a confrere.

"Two little girls one a Catholic 12 years old, the other a pagan nine years old, were kept captive with Father Tierney. They were with him all the time and did everything they could to help him. Unable to make their way home if liberated, they were allowed to romp about as much as they wished. They were free to go over to the little market town, a few miles away, to buy little things or just to have a look. In this they were especially useful to Father Tierney. While his money lasted they would toddle down each morning to the market to buy him some meat and vegetables for his dinner.

"They attended him the whole day long. They washed his clothes and socks and did all his messages as well as they could for their size. They were happy, scarcely able to realize that their lives were in the balance. They must have consoled Father Tierney a lot. When he got seriously ill they became down-hearted and when he died they cried all the time. Even the other day when the messenger was up for the corpse the bandits told him that these two children have been crying for Father Tierney every day. Unfortunately they are still captives with the bandits; there being no one to ransom them out.

"I would give a lot to get both of them out alive for their own sakes and for the sake of Father Tierney. I'm sure it would make him glad to know a kindness had been done those who in a similar plight to his own, were kind to him in his last moments."

From Corner Brook, Nfld., one of our members writes to ask the prayers of the buds for her mother who is seriously ill.

Jack Connors is willing to tell any of the buds about the big "Air Meet" held in Kingston, Ont. Just write to him, c-o Box 53, Kingston. Send that picture, soon, John!

Three Cheers and a "Tiger" For Fairville!

Look at the picture in our Column this month, then read the two letters that follow, and you'll understand why we are cheering the buds of Fairville, N.B.

May, 1931.

Dear Father Jim:

I am writing to let you know of two one-cent fudge sales which were held in Sib Fraser's playhouse. We also had a lottery with both sales, the prize with the first sale was a 25c. script and the prize with the second sale was an embroidered towel. Both prizes were donated by friends of ours. We had a lot of goodies for sale; here is a list of what we were selling: Doughnuts, 1c.; fudge, 1c.; sandwiches, 1c.; cake, 1c.; cookies, 1c. Proceeds were for China Mission Building Fund, and we are sending you TWELVE DOLLARS ($12) from the money we made.

Well, Father, you may think this is very funny, but to us it was real work, and we enjoyed it ever so much. I think it would be a good idea if all the buds in Canada would have a one-cent sale; we could raise quite a sum of money for the Missions, don't you think so?

In closing, Father, I, with all the other buds, send best wishes and hope your Building Fund will be a success.

On behalf of the Buds of Saint Rose's School,

DOROTHY CARTON.

Dear Fr. Jim:

I am enclosing the names of 6 boys and 8 girls who want to become buds in your Rose Garden. They are: Joseph Doyle (Rob Roy); Donald Logue (Red Bird); Leo Bastarache (Sea-Gull); Murray Mullin (Plover); Perley Stevens (Blue Bird); Edmund Ried (Corntassle); Mary Mullin (Betty Lou); Doris O'Neil (Rose Marie); Margaret Doyle (China Pink); Rose Duffy (Wild Irish Rose); Elsie Kelly (Mavoureen); Florence Kelly (Flora Dora); Gertrude Crilley (Candy Tuft); Veronica Crilley (Floretta).

We have 50 on our register, and all of them are buds. I notice in a recent "China" a great number of buds from the West, but I think the buds from Fairville will exceed them all.

Wishing you every success with your excellent Rose Garden, I remain.

F.F.

From Pupils of Sen. IV. Class St. Gregory's School - Oshawa

"I believe everybody in New Waterford is interested in your Rose Garden," writes Roddena Flurtur. Well, I know our buds there are very enthusiastic, and our Garden is proud of them all.

"I am very interested in your Club. Please ask someone in Ontario or Nfld. to write to me. I wish you success with your new Building." Henrietta Somers (Daffodils), 20 Spring St., Charlottetown, P.E.I.

Ten year old Billie Bawks would like to hear from someone in Vancouver. His address is 106 Agnes St., Oshawa, Ont.

Mary Turner, of 205 Caledonia Mines, Glace Bay, wonders if she has a twin pal in the Garden; her birthday is on August 21st, when she will be 11.

"I read 'China' every month, and I like your page best," writes Kitty Galligan, 210 Renfrew St., Pembroke, Ont. Pen-name, "Bleeding-Heart".

Anna Mary Culligan told me of the preparations for the visit of the Papal Delegate to her parish in Douglas, Ont., and about a Mission given there in June. She will be glad to get a line from some girls in Nfld. Don't be afraid to send along that picture, Anna, I'm willing to take a chance on it despite what you said.

I fear at least one Toronto bud wrote me under difficulties, because her letter finishes up with this significant phrase: "I must close now because the teacher is coming to correct my grammar." Here's hoping nothing serious happened!

Margaret McDonald told me about the new Statue of St. Theresa in the church at her parish in Orwell Cove, P.E.I. Margaret is ten years old, golden-haired and blue-eyed, and wants buds of her own age to write to her.

Dorothy Heffernan liked being a bud so much that she was not satisfied till two of her sisters also joined our Club, and so at 193 Victoria Rd., Sydney, N.S., we have three who look forward each month to the coming of "China". Their names: Dorothy, Margaret (Violet), and Catherine (Buttercup).

The Rose Garden has keen supporters at Saint Rose's School, Fairville, N.B. They are all great little missionaries!

"The Call of the West."
938 Collinson St.,
Victoria, B.C.

"I am 12 years of age, and would like to correspond with girls my age I should like to hear from Mary O'Connell, and also to have pen-pals in Toronto. I am a pupil of St. Anne's, and we had the pleasure of having Fr. McGrath of your Seminary address us on the Missions. The reason I should like to hear from Mary O'Connell is because my name is Irish too.

Yours sincerely,
Noreen O'Neill (Nonie).

"Please tell some buds to write to me. I will not forget to pray for your intentions, and also that your Building Fund may increase to provide you with a new addition."

Patricia Howard,
(Pacific Rose-bud).

"I have not written to you before, because we do not get 'China', but your buds Mary Grant and Noreen O'Neill both gave me their copies after they read them, so I am well supplied. I would like pen-pals from everywhere. My pen-name, "Gloria".

Mary Hood,
1816 Quadra St., Victoria.

"Way Down East—In Newfoundland".

From Corner Brook: "I wrote you some time ago, but did not get an answer to my letter. I am 13 years old, and my teachers are Presentation Sisters. I am sending you in separate package some Nfld. stamps. Ask Nova Scotia buds to write to me."

Mary Foley.

Thanks, Mary, for the stamps. I hope you will get some letters now.

From St. Lawrence: "I'm glad that some of the buds have found out who you are, and I hope they won't keep it secret. I fared well with pen-pals; I have five. I would love to hear from Mary McAskill, P.E.I., and Norma Mills. I certainly do think our little Garden is growing, and I am proud of it."

Ena Farrell.

"I would like to hear from Rose and Blondie" — Florence Etchgary, St. Lawrence, Nfld.

Cape Broyle: "After the family rosary we all say the prayer for the conversion of China. I wish I could get letters from Toronto buds."—Aggie Hartery.

From Spaniard's Bay came a joint letter from Kathleen and Ellen Cain and Rita Hammond. I may have something to say about that letter later on.

From Saint John's: "We are glad to have a new Parish near our home now; we can go to Holy Communion more often, and the name of the Parish is St. Teresa's." — Mollie Maynard, Thorburn Rd.

Two new St. John's buds are: Anita Lawlor, 103 Long's Hill, and Margaret O'Brien, 26 McKay Street.

Mary C. Boudreau has our thanks for her letter and donation.

MURDER OF THREE PRIESTS FOLLOWED BY CAPTURE OF BISHOP OF LAOHOKOW AND FOUR ITALIAN FRANCISCANS.

Rome.—A telegram received May 20, brought news of the communist attack on the Catholic mission of Chayuenkou in the Vicariate Apostolic of Laohokow, Hupeh Province, China, in which three priests were killed and the minor seminary sacked. Bishop Hermenegild Ricci, Vicar Apostolic of Laohokow, was taken prisoner by the communists together with four Italian Franciscans, Father Lazzeri, director of the seminary; Father Santini, econome, and Fathers Geccacci and Maggini.

This news was not entirely unexpected since during the past several months Northern Hupeh has been under a continual menace from the communists. Every letter received lately from that section spoke only of sacking and killing.

The Mission Trail.

trip. I explained the reasons for the departure and will leave all in the hands of Providence. The return trip proved quite safe. Tuesday noon we were in view of Ku-Lu-Ling again—it did not look so bad from this side. We went over in true Alpine style in 2.17 flat. My travelling companions were tired out at four o'clock when we reached a small town, which has a reputation for its many opium dives. I persuaded them to go to a far better town fifteen li farther which would be much safer. They consented to my proposition after I had treated them to cakes and sugar cane.

Towards nightfall the town of Wu Shan could be seen from the mountain top. The thought of our day's journey was being completed quickened our step. We stopped at the best hotel and I was given a private room but it did not prove so quiet. During the night one of the little pigs strayed from the nest and could not find its way back. Not until the caretaker arose and put it to bed again did peace reign. This excitement wakened a baby somewhere but it was more difficult to pacify. Finally when quietness did come it was near four a.m., time to say Breviary, meditation, and Mass. We got away to an early start and arrived at Suichang in the evening—80 li. No one needed a bedtime story to induce sleep.

The mission was completed at Chu-Z-Ra on Palm Sunday with a fairly good attendance. Monday morning baggage was packed for the last lap—we reached Sung Yang in time for dinner, covering 160 country miles. Holy Week ceremonies and preparing for Easter took up the week.

In my report of the mission I have written repair work for two Chapels is urgently needed. Our mission budget is taxed now carrying on the ordinary expenses from day to day. A few hundred dollars would put the chapels in fine shape. This means sacrifice now, but what a generous reward in Eternity. By helping the missions you are helping to make our Divine Lord known and spreading His Kingdom on earth to those who still sit in darkness and the shadow of death. A noble task indeed, but there is no reward without sacrifice. In the words of St. Paul: "For that which is at present momentary and light of our tribulation worketh for us above measure an eternal weight of glory."

J. L. BEAL,
Sung Yang, Che.

Note regarding the telephone call. The catechist and I arrived at the yamen about 6.30. The operator was still in bed and refused to perform any public function until 7.30 a.m. His servant was preparing hot water and breakfast and was anxious to have the master respond more graciously to our wishes. I asked him to ask permission to put the call through as it would take at least one hour to have an answer. The operator consented and we waited, the silence was only broken by the operator's snores until the clock clicked off another hour. At 7.45 Sung Yang was answering. There was likewise much confusion around the local yamen—these foreigners are persistent in their demands and breaking the morning silence. The conversation was in English so they were all at a loss to know what it was about. There is one operator for each city and no night service established yet. Charges were 20c for calling, and 10c for receiving.

Nonsense

"A little nonsense now and then is relished by the wisest men"

Bill: "What would you suggest for a bad headache?"
John: "Put your head through a window and the pane will be gone."

Maude: "I'll give Tom credit for one thing; he gave Susie a beautiful engagement ring."
Reggie: "Yes, the jeweler told me that he gave Tom credit for that, too!"

Before and After.

He: "I'll make a little money first, then perhaps we'll get married.'
She: "After that, I suppose I'll have to make a little money last."

Broadcasting Service.

"Are you in favour of women taking part in public affairs?"
"It's all right if you really want the affairs public."—Bennington Banner.

Gentle Reminder.

The novice at golf had an uncanny genius for sending the ball into the rough. Finally his exasperated partner whispered: "You've paid your membership dues at the club, haven't you?"
"Of course," the other replied.
"Well," said the partner, quietly, "I just wanted to let you know that if you've paid, you're entitled to use the fairways."

Bouquet For Wifey.

When it came to the naming of the new mine, the prospector's wife said: "Will you name it after me, dear?"
"Yes, darling, I will," said the prospector. "Yes, I'll name it in your honour."
And from that day to this, gentlemen, one of the richest gold mines in the Black Hills of South Dakota has been known as The Holy Terror.—Chicago Post.

Try a Muzzle.

Little Daughter—"Why is father singing so much to-night?"
Mother—"He is trying to sing the baby to sleep."
Little Daughter—"Well, if I was baby I'd pretend I was asleep."—Purple Parrot.

Padlocked.

The prison vision was going round the cells, and was asking rather fatuous questions. "Was it your love of drink that brought you here?" she asked a prisoner.
"Lor', no miss," replied the man, "you can't get nothin' here!"—Bystander.

He Knew.

Teacher: "Where do bad little children go who do not put any pennies in the collection box?"
Small Boy: "Please, miss, to the movies!"

Right to the Point.

Brevity is the soul of modern journalism. A budding journalist was told never to use two words where one would do. He carried out this advice in his report of a fatal accident in the following manner:
"John Jones struck a match to see if there was any gasoline in his tank. There was. Age sixty-five."

No Flowers.

A very modern employer has ordered the following notice to be posted in his business premises:
"Any workman desiring to attend the funeral of a near relative must notify the foreman before 10 a.m., on the day of the game."

Sergeant (spotting recruit's button undone): "'Ere, you! What's this? None of your sun-bathing tricks 'ere, m'lad."—Pearson's.

Righto!

"There's lot of juice in this grape fruit."
"Yes, more than meets the eye."—Associated Magazine.

His Money's Worth.

"It's scandalous to think they're going to charge you all that money for towing three or four miles."
"Never mind, I've got the brakes on."—Boston Young Men's News.

"Four 'bawls' and I walk," remarked the tired father as the baby began to yell.

Not Worth It!

A man went into a small town store.
"Give me a nickel's worth of asafetida." he said.
The clerk made it up and handed it to him.
"Charge it," requested the customer.
"What's the name, please?"
"Honeyfunkel."
"Take it," said the clerk. "I'm not goin' to write asafetida and Honeyfunkel for five cents."

No Detraction.

The Agent—I forgot to mention that in this country house you're buying there are two very old stained-glass windows.
Mr. Newgilt—That won't matter. If they're stained too bad to be cleaned, I can put in some new ones.—Standard.

The Big Stick.

"My wife," said Steve the drug clerk, "doesn't have all her own way, not by a jugful. Of course she assumes charge of our household and its expenses, gives me an allowance, looks after the children, the servants, the cat, the dog and the canary, but you bet I can say pretty much what I like to the gold fish."

The Ocala (Fla.) Star says there is a Negro family living on the edge of that town consisting of six children, three pairs of twins. The oldest pair are named Pete and Repete, the second are Kate and Duplicate, while the babies are Max and Climax.

Professor's Wife — "Why, dear, you've got your shoes on the wrong feet!"
Professor—"Why, Mary, they're the only feet I've got."

Aspiring Youth (to prospective employer): "You'll pay me what I'm worth?"
Works Manager: "I'll do better than that—I'll give you a small salary to start with."

Arithmetic Bugs.

Major: "What are you scratching your head for, Rastus?"
Colored Private: "Aw, sah, I got 'rithmetic bugs in my haid, sah."
Major: "What are arithmetic bugs?"
Colored Private: "Dat's cooties."
Major: "Why do you call them arithmetic bugs?"
Colored Private: "Because dey add to my misery, dey subtract from my pleasure, dey divide my attention, and dey multiply like de dickens."

Knew His Parsing.

Teacher: "Parse the sentence: 'Tom married Jane.'"
Small Boy: 'Tom's a noun because he's the name of something. Married's a conjunction because it joins Tom and Jane. Jane's a verb because she governs the noun."

Domestic Fractions.

A grade school teacher was instructing a beginner's class in fractions. After cutting an apple and an orange into quarters and eighths, she asked a little girl who had not been attentive in the class what the divisions of fruit were called.
"Fruit salad," was the answer.

Willing to Please.

Cranky Customer: "Here, waiter! Take this roast beef back to the chef. It isn't fit for a jackass to eat."
Willing Waiter: "All right, Sir! I'll see that you get another helping that is."

This Will Interest You!

We are doing our utmost to educate young men for the Priesthood. They will go to China to work for the salvation of immortal souls. If you have money for which you have no immediate need, we can use that money for this great work and at the same time give you rich returns for its use. We can do this through our Annuity Plan.

What is the Annuity Plan?

Just this: You give to us any amount of money you wish. The principal will become ours. We will use it for the education of Missionary Priests, and we will pay you interest at the rate of six per cent as long as you live.

This is an absolutely safe and profitable way for you to invest money that you do not need now, and it relieves you of all worry and trouble over your investments.

Without any further attention on your part you are guaranteed the reception of six per cent on your money that perhaps is earning only three per cent for you at present—and in addition to this you are helping a cause that should be dear to the heart of every Catholic.

Are You Glad You Are a Catholic?

HOLY SCRIPTURE SAYS:
"If thou have much, give abundantly: If thou have little, take care even so to bestow willingly a little. For thus thou storest up to thyself a good reward for the day of necessity."
(TOBIAS IV, 9, 10.)

If you appreciate the gift of your Catholic faith, will you not make a little sacrifice to share it with others who are less fortunate?

CATHOLICS OF CANADA and NEWFOUNDLAND are being given an opportunity to do their bit for the Foreign Missions through the work of our Seminary—

BUT—

if we are to continue our work successfully we must provide increased accommodations to take care of the vocations of the young men who are willing to become Missionary Priests.

WILL YOU HELP US TO BUILD?

To date our BUILDING FUND is only $2,800.00 —half of which has come from one Diocese alone.

You Will Never Miss What You Give to God's Work

Even a small donation will be gratefully appreciated.

I want to help the Foreign Missions, so I am sending you..... for your Seminary Building Fund.

The New Prefecture of Chuchow

In 1918 Father John Fraser returned from the Mission Field in China to establish in Canada a Seminary for the education of young men for the Priesthood. God so blessed the work that it was found necessary to build our present Seminary in order to accommodate those who devoted their lives to the service of the Foreign Missions. A district was assigned to the new Canadian Seminary for evangelization, and now word has come from Rome that this district of Chuchow has been erected into a Prefecture-Apostolic. The decree of erection is dated June 23, 1931.

Our friends everywhere will rejoice with us at this new testimony of approval coming from the Holy See. The raising of Chuchow to the status of a Prefecture is a tribute from the Holy Father, the Pope of the Missions, to the progress of our work in China and an expression of confidence in the future of Canada's contribution to Mission work. The jurisdiction of the Church of God extends to the entire world, and the whole world is divided into well-defined sections or districts ruled over by some ecclesiastical superior appointed by the Pope. The gigantic task of regulating the activities of the Church in mission lands is centered in the Sacred Congregation of Propaganda Fide at Rome, whose head is His Eminence Cardinal Van Rossum. It has been the policy of the Holy See to confide each district in a mission country to some definitely organized group of missionaries who assume responsibility for the spread of the Faith in the area under their care. For the past six years our district of Chuchow formed part of the Vicariate-Apostolic of Ningpo, under the guidance of His Excellency Bishop Andre Defebvre of the Paris Foreign Mission Seminary. Now, by the gracious act of the Holy See, our own St. Francis Xavier Mission Institute assumes the sole responsibility and direction of Chuchow district, and has complete care of souls in this distinct and independent mission. Chuchow is separated from Ningpo and its government put in our hands under the Prefect Apostolic whom the Holy Father will name and appoint. This new Prefect Apostolic will not have episcopal consecration, but he will have the full jurisdiction of a bishop over his territory, subject only to the Sacred Congregation of Propaganda Fide.

We feel it will interest our readers to learn a few facts (aided by the map and pictures in this issue) concerning the territory in China over which we now have control. Chuchow is the largest civil prefecture of the Province of Chekiang, and contains approximately ten thousand square miles of territory, divided up into ten cities, seven large towns, and numerous villages. It is situated south of the famous old city of Shanghai, and ninety miles from the ocean port of Wenchow. The district is one of rare natural beauty, and the climate is temperate.

The City of Chuchow is the centre of missionary activity in the district. This city has a population of about forty thousand, of whom only a few hundred are Catholics. There at "Headquarters" there is a fine church, a priest's residence, a boys' school, and, since last year, a substantial new Convent in charge of three Sisters of the Grey Nuns of the Immaculate Conception from Pembroke, Ontario. It is at Chuchow that our priests spend their first year in China in order to become familiar with the language and customs before being sent off to various places for mission work, usually in pairs. The Mission property in the city of Chuchow is lighted by electricity. In addition to the church at Chuchow, there are also splendid new brick churches at Lungchuan and Sungyang, and scattered throughout the district are many oratories or chapels, for the most part very small and ill-suited to house the King of Kings when the missionary celebrates Holy Mass during a visit. At present, eleven priests are carrying on the heroic work for souls in our Prefecture, pioneers who are blazing the trail for future accomplishments that will win this section of poor pagan China for Christ. The task ahead is a mighty one; of a population of 1,500,000, only 3,000 are Catholics. As mentioned in our last issue, our Institute has been invited by Bishop Faveau of Hangchow, to take up work in Kinwha, a district adjoining the Prefecture of Chuchow, and we will soon begin our mission in Kinwha.

Whilst rejoicing in the honor done us by the Holy See, it would not be right if we failed to give expression to our sentiments of gratitude towards the good Catholic people of Canada and Newfoundland, to whose generous co-operation and unselfish sacrifices is due, under God, the success that has thus far attended our missionary efforts. Without the aid and assistance of our many kind benefactors we could not have carried on our work for souls, and the establishment of the new Prefecture has become a reality because of their whole-hearted enthusiastic support. To them, as to us, the news from Rome should bring encouragement, and with all the earnestness of which we are capable we assure the friends of St. Francis Xavier Seminary that we are deeply thankful for all they have done for us. We face the future confidently, strong in the hope that our new responsibilities with their consequent burdens will be appreciated by the people to whom we must continue to look for support. As so well stated by the Catholic Record, we believe "the erection of a Prefecture under the immediate direction of our own Canadian Seminary will bring about an increased interest in China on the part of Canadian Catholics. Hitherto our people, while doing commendable work for the Seminary, have been inclined to think only in general terms of that vast pagan country. Now our attention will be drawn necessarily to a definite area in China, and we will see to it that the confidence reposed by the Holy See in St. Francis Xavier Seminary will be justified. Now that we have our own district, we shall be piously jealous of the work entrusted to us and do all in our power to make this the best mission in China . . . . the directors of the Seminary depending upon the spiritual and temporal support they have every right to expect from the people of Canada."

More Missionaries Going to China

Sunday, October 4th, will mark another red-letter date in the history of China Mission Seminary, for four more priests are taking their departure for China with an official Church Ceremony in St. Michael's Cathedral, Toronto, on that evening. A special sermon will be preached for the occasion. The priests who are going to Chuchow this year are: Rev. Wm. C. McGrath, of Saint John's, Newfoundland; Rev. Arthur Venadam, Pomquet, N.S.; Rev. Joseph King, Newburg, Ontario; and Rev. John J. MacDonald, Windsor, N.S. Two Sisters of the Grey Nuns of the Immaculate Conception from Pembroke, Ont., will also leave this year to join the three Sisters now working in Chuchow.

When the Press of Canada records the fact that four priests are leaving for China this year from our Seminary, we wonder what the news will mean to those who read. Going to China! Just another news item, and for a great many not so very interesting at that. Will it interest YOU? Perhaps it will, if you try to realize the significance of the thing. Here are young priests, three of them but recently ordained, leaving all that they hold dear to them, country, home, and friends, to face a long, tiresome journey to a country where they will be among a new people, and face the difficulties of adapting themselves to strange customs and a strange language. Why are they doing it? They have heard the command of Jesus Christ, "Go, teach all nations," and they are anxious to do their share to help bring to Christ the souls for whom He yearns. Their mission is an answer to a call, it is a mission of love, a mission of sacrifice, and they care not if there be some who doubt their wisdom, for they have learned to estimate at its proper value the opinion of worldly-minded people. You who are seated in comfort in your own home, surrounded by things that please you, have every right to sympathize with those young generous-hearted priests, if you feel that way about it; but wouldn't it be more in keeping with the spirit of your Catholic Faith if you felt thrilled and proud to know that again Catholic Canada was giving proof of its love for God and its obedience to the wishes of Christ's Vicar on earth by the sending forth of those ardent young missionaries? Yes, "More Priests going to China" should have that effect on you; it should arouse in you a real burning desire to share in the work that those departing missionaries are going to do for souls; they are going over to China, and they are going as your representatives; they are returning thanks to God in a most practical way for the gift of their Faith and of your Faith, and surely you will not forget all about them and leave them all alone in their work after casually reading about their departure; surely you will want to do what you can to share in the merits of their work for God, and you will want to help them. Yes, you can help them; you can make their going easier, you can lift worry from their shoulders, you can cheer them up and fill them with confidence by being generous with your prayers for their success, and generous with your financial assistance to pay for their passage and provide the means to those they leave behind at the Seminary to continue the work that will assure them followers and helpers year after year. But there's one thing you can't give them! You cannot give them enthusiasm. They are satiated with enthusiasm right now, that enthusiasm that comes from the prospect of long years of waiting being over at last, life's ambition about to be realized, and near at hand gleaming conquests of priceless souls for Him Who gave His life for us all. Show those departing priests that YOU are going to play your part too.

CONGRATULATIONS!

"CHINA" takes this opportunity of heartily congratulating Rev. Francis P. Carroll on his appointment as President of St. Augustine's Seminary, and Rev. Dr. Davis on his promotion to the Vice-Presidency. St. Augustine's is fortunate in the choice of such experienced and scholarly priests, who are so well qualified by their reputation and by their long association with the Seminary, to guide its destinies and maintain its enviable record among Canadian ecclesiastical institutions. We pray that God may bless abundantly the tremendously important work confided to Father Carroll and Dr. Davis. Ad multos annos!

THANKS.

We wish to thank Hon. Justice Kelly for the gift of some volumes for our library; Dr. Cummer, late of Toronto University Dental College, for some useful articles of furniture; Miss Amour, of Toronto, for altar linens, etc., and Rev. Fr. McCardle, Goderich, Ont., for a Chalice. The kindness of those benefactors is greatly appreciated.

KWAN-YIN.

China is an idolatrous nation, and not only is idol-worship confined to the illiterate and the poor. but the wise scholars, the grave intellectual thinkers, the men of wealth and high social standing are all firm believers in its utterly foolish and childish fairy-lore. That the otherwise shrewd, intelligent and practical Chinese are totally blind to the follies of idol-worship, and ancestor-worship, and are implicit believers in all their palpable absurdities, is a problem which baffles and mystifies Western minds.

The most popular, and perhaps the only beloved idol in China is Kwan-Yin, the Goddess of Mercy. Her title explains her popularity, for the ordinary Chinese gods know nothing of the quality of mercy. They are not even interested enough in their worshippers to care whether these do right or wrong. They are simply powers who hold the good or evil fate of mortals in their hands, and are totally indifferent as to their conduct. The gods of China neither "reward the good nor punish the wicked." They simply play havoc with their victims, regardless of their virtue or vice. Even the Goddess of Mercy is indifferent to the moral well-being of her subjects. Although she is conspicuously enshrined in the home, and is a silent witness of all that goes on in the family, she continues to smile benignly on all, whether they be good and honest and peaceable, or whether they be base and cruel and unjust.

Here is the legend of Kwan-Yin, the Goddess of Mercy: she was an Indian maiden of royal birth, and she was possessed of a characteristic most unusual in the land and the times in which she lived. Kwan-Yin loved the poor and the oppressed with so passionate a love that she sacrificed her life to their betterment. Especially did her heart go out to the down-trodden women of her race, and she made a solemn vow never to marry, but to spend her life in labouring for the alleviation of their wretched and most pitiable condition. Faithfully did Kwan-Yin fulfil her courageous vow, and her fame went far and wide, so that after her death she was accorded pagan canonization, and raised to a place among the gods.

Beyond the confines of India, and away into the heart of China, her beautiful story travelled, captivating all hearts on its way, until the worship of the Goddess of Mercy became the most widely-followed cult in the Middle Kingdom. So revered is Kwan-Yin in China to-day that no desecrating hand is ever allowed to rest upon her august image. Let the dust and cobwebs gather as they will upon her venerated head, no one would dare the familiarity of brushing them away.

This is the fable of Kwan-Yin, the Chinese Goddess of Mercy. From an alien land she came to China and found there an abiding home. "Goddess of Mercy!" To Catholic hearts what a familiar ring to this title! Yes, there is another Queen of Mercy, who seeks admittance to China, and she too, comes from an alien land. She is no myth, no soulless image of clay, no idol of stone insensible to the spiritual and temporal welfare of her children. Let us petition her divine Son that she gain entrance there. To this true Mother of Mercy does the womanhood of the Western world owe its uplift. If she would obtain a like grace for the wretched grovelling womanhood of China, how easily in that land of Satanic darkness would the cause of her divine Son triumph!

SOUTH CHINA'S PROGRESS IN FIVE YEARS ASTOUNDING DECLARES MARYKNOLL GENERAL.

Hongkong. — The Very Rev. James A. Walsh, M.Ap., Superior General of the Catholic Foreign Mission Society of America, Maryknoll, while on a visitation of the society's mission in South China, declared in an interview with Father Joy, S.J., Fides Correspondent at Hongkong, that he has been pleasantly surprised in the astounding changes in South China since his last visit five years ago.

"I had been prepared for changes in South China but have been astounded at the development even since my last visit five years ago.

"I have just finished my visitation of the Kongmoon Vicariate and of the Independent Mission of Wuchow. In the Kongmoon Vicariate I travelled about 1,000 miles, visited all the missions except one.

"These 1,000 miles were covered in a little over two weeks with stop-overs of from one to two days. This record time was possible because rice dykes have been widened, roads constructed, and automobile service inaugurated. The roads are yet poor, and after heavy rains almost impassable. The autobuses are much the worse for wear and overloaded. The bridges are often shaky and unprotected and very narrow. Schedules are uncertain, but improvements are coming rapidly.

"The larger cities, Oisan, Sim Oui, Yeungkong, Kongmoon, like Shiushing in the Portuguese section, and Wuchow in the other Maryknoll mission, gave me a very pleasant surprise. Houses and shops have been transformed as the principal streets were widened, and in some instances the streets were paved with concrete. Attractive buildings, two and three storeys high, lined these streets. Sun Yat Sen memorials and new Middle Schools buildings set in generous acreage planted with trees and flowers, beautify these cities.

"The widest streets seem to be very popular as if the people were glad to be rising out of their alleys and darkened homes.

"The schools are filled and youths are anxious to learn. A European educator with whom I spoke at length on developments in South China, believes that changes are coming with a rush that will astound the world. Of course, much depends upon the continuance of peaceful conditions, but in South China, at least, a marked material development has been made even while the country was harassed and fearful.

"Primitive habits of living and means of transportation are yet common but, as a rule, the people, in increasing numbers, welcome the changes and take naturally to them.

"Soldiers who ten years ago were classed as bandits, shabbily dressed and unkempt, are winning respect. They drill smartly in the public thoroughfares and help to inspire confidence that peace has come to stay. Is this so? It is hard to tell. There are murmurs and criticisms, but certainly from what we see in South China there is a strong hope that a better day has arrived for the hard-working, long-suffering, and simple folk in this vast country."—Fides.

"About two in the afternoon along came another steamer."

GOING UP TO NINGPO

By

FATHER STRINGER

A tire that's flat can be mended;
If you run out of gas you can walk,
But a ship, when it throws its propeller,
Makes you sit down and swe,—
I mean, talk.

But who under the pale moon of Chekiang ever thought that such a thing would happen? Certainly none of our band did, else we wouldn't have gone and risked our baggage to pirates, and ourselves to become fish-food. Possibly we should have known something was in the offing. We were told the boat would leave at eight o'clock, and we arrived at the wharf about nine, and the boat left about one that afternoon. Patience, did you say? A Westerner needs lots of patience over here.

If any attempt was made to describe the baggage or cargo the ship carried, such a description would tear the eyes of my readers from their sockets, and then the subscriptions to "China" would fall off,—a woe-begone state of affairs for us over here.

The first day and night were passed in good order. We said Mass in Hai-Men. The captain, or one of them, gave us to understand we would leave about nine a.m. Yet you can't fool an old fool all the time, so we sauntered down to the boat at eight p.m., and it left an hour later. Now I wouldn't want anyone to infer from this that the Chinese in our parts are not punctual; they are very much so; the difficulty for us is to know when "punctual" has arrived. As soon as they are ready to go, they go. How does one tell when they are ready? When they go! This might sound very baffling to the tyro, but really it is very simple, and none of us have missed a boat yet, although one or two did break a record jumping from the wharf into a moving steamer.

As we sailed away from Hai Men I soon heard we had some new passengers on board. As all the rooms were taken, these latecomers were compelled to lie on deck,—the part of the deck that wasn't cluttered about with chairs, tables, wood, sugar-cane and other cargo for which there was no room in the hold. And to make sure these newcomers wouldn't walk around too much and maybe slip into the sea, the deck-hands tied their feet. Against the law, you say? But I forgot to mention these new arrivals were big, black, shiny pigs, and if you ever read "Pigs is Pigs," you will know what I mean.

Sunday morning I was awakened by the sound of the anchor chains rattling over the iron guards. Now, what in thunder were we stopped for, I wondered. There was no storm, although the boat was rolling so badly as to cause all things untied to go careening around like so many Knights of the Bar after a good tournament. We were quickly told that the propeller was gone, and there was nothing to do but hang around until some other ship came along. If the sea had been calm, it would have been much more pleasant and saved some of the Fathers that ever-present mal-de-mer. But it was the Pacific we were in, and Pacific to me now means "anything with a tendency to jump, buck, roll, etc." As I lay in my bunk, sliding now a foot down, then a foot back, I wondered just how long we would be marooned. We were, —for twenty-six hours!

Our boat carried no radio nor wireless. She just blew her old fog horn or any old kind of a horn you want to call it. It sounded like a bunch of bawling calves at mealtime. About two in the afternoon along came another steamer. They hove to and started yelling. Right then I understood some of the difficulties of the language. You see, there are tones in Chinese. High tones, low tones and a few others. On account of the ships bobbing up and down, I am afraid the high tones became low tones and vice versa,—anyway the ship sailed away and we stayed where we were.

That night about seven o'clock I decided to run over to the cabin where the other priests were staying. I was afraid that the ravages of the sea had somewhat demolished them. It was quite dark in the passageways, and I had to thread my way through cargo of all sorts and shapes. The rolling sea had amalgamated everything,—and if that isn't the right word, it expresses the right idea. The flooring was greasy and slippery, and several times I nearly took the count. In one very dark passage I saw two big containers of rice. I veered aside to pass them, and then I went sprawling in a very undignified manner. But the screeches and screams that I occasioned, the hot breath in my face, and a not-so-hot smell in my nostrils! I had fallen over several pigs that I couldn't see because they blended so well with the darkness. I hastily scrambled to my feet minus one slipper. A Chinese sailor came along and grasped a pig or two by the ears and hauled them away till I recovered my shoe. But the squealing and screaming,—it was worse than Poe's "Murders in Rue Morgue." When finally I got to the room I found the priests not so well, yet not so bad.

About nine p.m. along came another boat, and it looked right picturesque with its coloured lights. But it was too dark to do anything, and it sailed away with a promise to return in the morning. We all settled down to another night of rolls, and I found myself wishing they were another kind of rolls, for, not being sick, I had a ravenous appetite, but "old Mother Hubbard's cupboard was bare."

About day-break the steamer came up again, and the process of helping us began. There had been the odd few pirates during the night, but our two soldiers scared them off,—there was no Drake among them! The first attempt to get alongside us by our rescuer proved a failure. A guard-log was crushed, and that was sufficient to scare the masters. Then they decided to tow us; they did, but not very far. Then it was decided to transfer us. The other ship anchored about fifty feet farther away from us than was necessary, but they were taking no chances of bumping together again. A small junk came along and started plying between the two boats. A life-boat from the other ship was also swung into service, but from the way it was handled I was sincerely glad that ours was not a sinking ship. One thing I noticed almost immediately was the fact that the women did not receive the chivalrous treatment that would be tendered them by "foreign devils." They were about the last to be taken off. True, there was no slightest danger, yet I couldn't help wondering a little. Soon all were transferred, and away we sped to Chusan, where a warm and hearty welcome awaited us by the good French fathers in charge. That ended the excitement of our second trip to Ningpo and Retreat. What next?

Canadian Catholic Students to Rally in Toronto

A history-making event will occur in Toronto on October 2nd, 3rd and 4th, when, for the first time, an all-Canada Convention of Catholic Students will be held. Delegates are expected from Catholic High Schools, Academies, Convents, Colleges and Seminaries in all parts of Canada, while elementary schools will be represented by teachers.

This Congress is being promoted by the Canadian Catholic Students' Mission Crusade with a view to intensifying interest in Mission conditions and problems, both at home and afar, amongst the youth of our country, and with a view to consolidating student missionary endeavor under the Crusade organization.

Friday, Oct. 1st, will be devoted to Home Missions; Saturday, "Crusade Day," will be featured by a demonstration at St. Augustine's Seminary, where the Crusade movement had origin; Sunday, Foreign Missions Day, will culminate in the Departure Ceremony of four missionary priests for China. Features of the Convention will be: Pontifical Mass at St. Michael's Cathedral; enactment of the Crusade Ritual; addresses by several of Canada's most celebrated speakers; an inspection of St. F. X. China Mission Seminary; missionary exhibits; participation in the functions by the famous De la Salle Cadet Band.

At the business meetings questions of policy will be discussed, along with methods of promoting the spread of the Crusade Movement throughout the whole of Canada.

Excellent free accommodation is being arranged for out-of-town delegates by the Accommodation Committee under Rev. M. J. McGrath.

His Excellency Bishop Evarist Chang, Bishop of Tsining, North China.

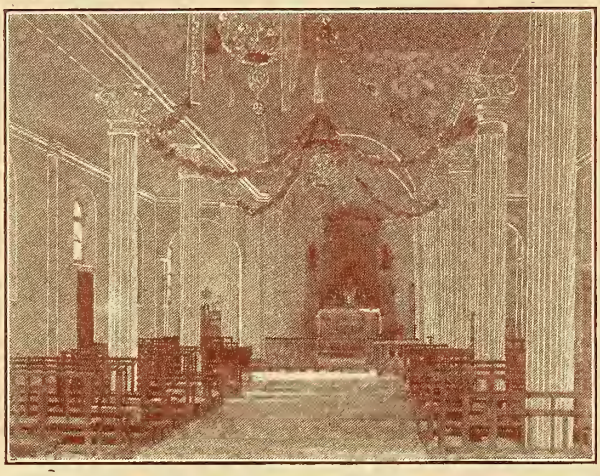
MASS CONVERSIONS IN CHINA. (Shansi, China).—Scenes resembling those recorded in the Acts of the Apostles were witnessed when His Excellency, Bishop Evarist Chang, Vicar Apostolic of Tsining in Northern China explained the doctrines of the Catholic Church to a group of 5,000 pagans of the town of Tchangkiaol. The town, which has a population of 7,000 had requested, through its leaders, to be received as a unit into the Church. To instruct the vast group of converts for catechism schools have been inaugurated under one priest and seven lay brothers.—Fides.

NEW DIRECTOR FOR C.C.S.M.C.

His Excellency Archbishop McNeil, has appointed Rev. Wm. Kennedy of St. Michael's Cathedral, Toronto, Director of the Canadian Catholic Students Mission Crusade. Father Kennedy succeeds Rev. Martin M. Johnson who has been named Bursar of St. Augustne's Seminary, Toronto.

The new Director of Crusade activities in Canada will have complete charge of the Convention to be held in Toronto Oct. 2-4. It is expected that students from every Educational Institution in Canada will be present.

Father Kennedy is well known in Ontario and many sections in Canada because of his weekly sermons broadcast from St. Michael's Cathedral, over CKGW.



In congratulating Father Kennedy, "China" bespeaks for him the hearty co-operation of all Mission Units in Canada in maintaining the Mission Crusade's wonderful success as a powerful agency in educating the youth of Canada to a realization of the needs of Catholic Foreign Missions.

LITTLE FLOWER'S ROSE GARDEN

Edited by FATHER JIM

CONDITIONS OF MEMBERSHIP

The only conditions of membership in the Rose Garden are: (1) To say every day the Prayer for the Conversion of China; (2) To go to Holy Communion once a month for the Intention of Missionary Vocations. Certificates and pins will be sent to all members.

Dear Buds:

It's really too bad we couldn't have more space for our letters, etc., this month, but we will do better next time, and we are going to have some pictures, too, that are long overdue. I am very thankful to all the buds who wrote me during vacation, and I welcome to our "Garden" the many who became buds since schools closed. I wish you all every blessing and success throughout this school year and I know you are all going to be ardent little missionaries. I want the buds in every school to be real "boosters" for the Foreign Missions and take a lively interest in the work of Canada's priests in Chuchow. And please do not forget to pray for the success of the Mission Crusade Convention which is going to mean so much to us all. Is your school sending a representative to Toronto in October? Let's hope so.

Best wishes to you all.

FATHER JIM.

We have another list of new members from Saint Agnes' School, New Waterford, N.S. I got many letters from buds there who told me how much they value their certificates and pins, and they told me of their good work for the Missions and their prayers for the priests in China. I hope those to whom I gave pen-names will like them.

Roddena Flutur (Rose Bud); Mary McIsaac (Green Eyes); Cecilia McIsaac (Estelle); Nina McNeil (Rosalind); Mary White (Anna Maria); Ursula Timmons (Marie); Mary McDonald (Mary Margaret); Alice Haley (Pansy); Agnes Hutchinson (Teresa); Catherine Dewan (Portia); Florence Oliver (Silvia); Adella McDonald (Prospero); Josephine Deveaux (Mary); Catherine Muir (Lily).

Anxious to hear from their pals of the Rose Garden are the following:

Muriel Wrice (Bud), Box 104A, New Aberdeen, N.S.

William Hunter (Sunshine), 614 Mary St., Oshawa, Ont.

Cameron O'Rielly (Dew Worm), 185 King St. W., Oshawa, Ont.

Marguerite Keys, Georgiana Street, Gananoque, Ont.

Sadie Garrah, (Tulip), Birch Street, Gananoque, Ont.

Agnes McDonald (Rose), 259 Plummer Ave., New Waterford, N.S.

THE LITTLE FLOWER

She tells of the delight she found in becoming the spiritual sister of a foreign missionary priest.

One of her spiritual brothers was a missionary in China. Her autobiography does not tell his name. He was Father Roulland, of the Paris Foreign Missions, and he is still living. He is Superior of one of his society's houses in France, and some months ago celebrated the Mass at the consecration of a church under the patronage of St. Therese.

Not only did St. Therese pray for the missions and adopt missionaries as her spiritual brothers, but she volunteered to go on the missions herself. A Carmel in Indo-China was founded from Lisieux, and she offered herself as a member of the new community.

Pope Benedict XV, assured us that all the faithful, without exception, are called to enter on the Little Way of spiritual childhood of which St. Therese is so winning an advocate. It is significant that for her the Little Way reached as far as the Missions.

To shun the missions is to lose the Way.

Sacred Heart Home, Charlottetown.

"Was it you who stole the new Editor's picture? It would be only fair that he would steal yours, and put it in the very first page of China next month. Oh, Boys, wouldn't all the buds be charmed. We are all so anxious to see what you really look like. 'Tis a wonder some of the Scarboro buds can't get a picture of you sometime. I am sending you some stamps.—Yours, Rita Donahue." Well, Rita, I'm pleading "Not Guilty"—and I must try to keep on good terms with the new Editor. I just don't know how he feels towards our Garden yet, and I want to have him on our side. Thanks for the stamps you sent. It might be interesting to you to know that more than once I have handed copies of "China" to some of the Scarboro Buds who could not wait for China to be mailed, but came to the door for it. And I certainly enjoyed watching their hurried and eager search for Fr. Jim's page.

"I would love to be one of your buds, and I am going to try to save more than one soul by my prayers. My brother Hubert joined your Garden a few years ago. There are seven children in our family." These are just a few sentences from a lively little letter from Mary Brennan, 182 Oshawa Blvd., Oshawa.

"I wish the 'China' would come every day, I like it so much. I have begun to save the pictures of the buds. Please ask Maud Lane and Jessie Glover to write to me." Clare Fraser, Main St., Antigonish, N.S.

"It is quite a long time since I wrote you, but now I come to ask for corries between the ages of 15 and 17 who are interested in Stamps. Stamp collecting is my hobby. I shall be eagerly waiting a response to this appeal. I would like to hear from Grace Podger. Had I known her address I would have written to her before. Please, Grace, write soon. I suppose it is about time to end this letter, as I'm positive I can hear somebody sighing wishing I would shut up. Best wishes to all the buds." —Sincerely, Mary Le Blanc, 1171 Victoria Rd., Sydney, N.S.

WHO CAN ANSWER THESE?

Where can a man buy a key for a lock of his hair?

Can his eyes be called an academy because there are pupils there?

In the crown of his head what gems are set?

Who travels the bridge of his nose?

Can he, when shingling the roof of his mouth, use the nails of his toes?

What does he raise from a slip of his tongue?

Who plays on the drums of his ears?

And who can tell the cut and style of the coat his stomach wears?

Can the crook of his elbow be sent to jail?

And how does he sharpen his shoulder blades?

Can he raise a cow from the calf of his leg?

Could he feed the corn on his toe?

Can he hit a ball with the bat of his eye?

How many inches does he have in his feet?

If you can answer all these, you have me beat.

"FILL THE SHIPS!"

Eminent Prelate Speaks of the Missionary Evolution of Asia.

There are revolutions throughout Asia, but they speak of a re-birth, not a crumbling, an evolution which is changing the lives of half the people of the globe. Thus Archbishop De Guebriant, Superior-General of the Paris Foreign Mission Society and head of some 1,300 Missionaries labouring in the Far East, characterizes the foment which shakes the Orient.

"Asia needs consecrated men and women," said his Excellency, "Do not let us lose time talking about so-called perils to Christianity in the East. True, there have been attacks, there will still be many tribulations, but let us go to the root immediately—the problem for the Church is to fill the ships to Asia with priests, brothers, and sisters.

"The missions of Asia already have Churches, the need is now at all cost for auxiliary workers to come to the rescue and build on the foundations laid by the missionaries. At present the missionary does everything. Let us seek to end this situation and furnish him with aids for which the Pope has so often appealed. Let us have teachers to teach, medical workers for works of medicine, contemplatives to erect houses of contemplation, all labouring in harmony, under the authority of the Hierarchy. Every religious community which has gone to Asia within the last thirty years has been convinced that planting a house in the East is putting good seed in the ground, seed which blossoms in native vocations, in works of God which bring strength and vigour to the mother societies.

"Asia is in evolution and in this profound movement of thought it is natural that there should be excesses by extremists and the wrongly led; it is only to be expected that this evolution should break forth in revolution in some instances."—Fides.

We are sending reinforcements to our priests in Chuchow. Will you help us pay for their passage and share in their work for souls.

CARDINAL O'CONNELL'S STIRRING WORDS.

"No one who has received the true Faith of Christ can rest inactive in the mere possession of it, for true Faith is always accompanied by ardent charity, and charity, by its very nature, seeks to extend itself. He who is indifferent to the propagation of the Faith in reality has lost it or never really had it, at least as a living possession. . . .

"Our answer to the missionary appeal must be that of true children of the Faith. We must, and with God's help we shall, pray, work and give freely all that we can, that our Faith which is our greatest and richest possession, may be carried onward and ever onward. Let us never forget this—to keep the Faith we must propagate it."

Three Passionist Missionaries from Cardinal O'Connell's Archdiocese sailed for China on May 23rd, to take up work in the Province of Hunan, one of the most dangerous mission sections in China.

THE MISSIONARY LIFE.

Let us pray for those who follow
In His footsteps, leaving all—
Land and home and friends and kindred—
Going gladly to His call.
Far amongst the Pagan Peoples
Where His name is yet unknown—
Far amongst the quaint pagodas
And the futile gods of stone.

In the Master's distant vineyard
There is work for all to do
Where the harvest fields are Whitest
And the labourers are few;
We who cannot make the journey
In their noble work may share—
Think of them before the Altar,
Help them with an earnest prayer.

Children from our own dear country,
Willing exiles of the Lord,
Far across the earth are scattered
Making known His sacred word,
Toiling, saving souls for Jesus,
Ministering by day and night;
Let our earnest prayer be with them—
Help them spread the Gospel light.

PLEA MADE FOR BETTER WRITE-UPS FOR BRIDEGROOM.

The poor, down-trodden male members of society who have been implicated in what the English dictionary pleases to term a wedding, and who have vainly read the newspaper reports of said festive occasion for any special mention of themselves or their sartorial splendour, have at last found a sympathizer, a champion.

This champion, who is, by the way, a lady of infinite charm and rare beauty, suggests the following as the way in which a wedding should be reported:—

Mr. S. M. C. de Benture became the bridegroom yesterday of Miss Madge Estic at one of the biggest social gatherings in Shanghai history. The groom was charmingly clad in a three-piece suit consisting of coat, pants and vest. His coat of some dark material was tastefully gathered under the arms and draped over the shoulders. It was whispered that it was the same coat that had been worn by his father and by his grandfather on their wedding days.

The vest was sleeveless and met in front. It was gracefully fashioned with pockets in front and held by a strap and buckle in the back. The groom's pants were of dark worsted and were suspended from the waist, falling in a straight line almost to the floor. The severe simplicity of the garment was relieved by the right pantalette which was caught up about four inches by a Boston Brighton worn underneath, revealing brown Holeproof above boots of pigskin, laced with strings of the same colour. The effect was inexpressibly chic. His neck was encircled by an Arrow, characterized by a delicate saw-edge, and around the collar a cravat was loosely knotted so that it rode up towards his left ear. Mr. de Benture wore no hat during the ceremonies.

Miss Madge Estic wore the conventional bride's costume and carried a bouquet.—Shanghai.

Our Seminary is overcrowded this year. We are doing our best to take care of the students who have come to us, but WE NEED FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE.

TSINGTIEN

A city of about 6,000 inhabitants. Situated on the Wenchow River (seen in the picture) between Chuchow and Wenchow, it would be a very desirable location for some future missionary from China Mission Seminary. All our missionaries will pass through Tsingtien on their way to our Mission Headquarters.

FATHER SHARKEY WRITES FROM CHUCHOW.

Chuchow, July 19th.

"We are all well here—both our priests and our sisters. Sister Oswald has been sick for the past few days, but is feeling a lot better now. May God bless you all and keep you so! You are all ever remembered in our Masses and our prayers.

"We are all anxiously awaiting the arrival of our new missionary priests and sisters. What a wonderful reunion we will have! We priests, who came over in the fall of 1929, will soon be changed to some of the other parishes in our district. Fathers Gignac, Stringer and Boudreau have progressed wonderfully in the language and have been preaching quite often.

"The weather here now is very hot, but once in a while we get a cool spell. The heat is not affecting any of us very much—at least so far. It is so hot that at Mass the candles droop like flowers. We do not do much these days. No travelling is done unless it is absolutely necessary. Everyone uses a fan, and that helps to keep one cool.

"Thanks for the lovely badges. They will give great joy to some of our poor Christians.

"Father Stringer and I visited one of the temples this morning. It is on a hill, not far from here. The place was crowded with women, who were down on their knees, adoring the idols, superstitiously burning paper, offering up imitation money and burning incense. They all chant their pagan prayers together, accompanying the chant by beating little, wooden drums. Poor people, if they only knew the good God, and would cease adoring the devil! It turns one's stomach almost, to watch this worship of Satan. During the last few days there have been pilgrimages to all the big temples, for it is some pagan feast.

"Our school is now closed for the holidays, and most of the boys have gone home, but a few are staying here, and we often go off on picnics together.. Not long ago we went to a very pretty spot. It is situated a few miles down the river, so we went by boat. The place is a lovely island, on which there is a pagan monastery, a temple and a pagoda. We left here in the morning and took our lunch with us, remaining there all day and coming home in the cool of the evening. It is a nice, cool place, and I enjoyed the outing. The monks supplied us with tea, and that helped a bit.

"I had the great joy, not long ago, of baptizing four new Christians—two boys and two girls. Our little flock is growing, slowly but surely. Pray for us and especially for our converts, that God may keep them true to our Holy Faith.

"Things are very peaceful hereabouts, thank God! The bandits have not bothered us. There seems danger of another civil war, but we are hoping the clouds will blow over."

IF we had sufficient donations to our BURSE FUND our Seminary would become SELF-SUPPORTING

BURSES —

What are they?

A BURSE is the sum of $5,000 given to the Seminary, at one time or in installments, which, being securely invested, produces sufficient revenue to support a student. The capital is not touched, but remains intact. Year after year the revenue from a single Burse would be used to educate a student. When he is ordained and goes to China as a missionary, another student would be educated, and then another, and so on indefinitely.

Those blessed with an abundance of this world's goods could spend to no better advantage than by becoming the Founder of a Burse for China Mission Seminary.

Even small donations will be gratefully received to help complete any of our present incomplete Burses.

A Burse is absolutely the most worthwhile monument to leave behind to your memory. What greater good can you do with your money than guarantee a succession of missionary priests perpetually?

Help us by sending donations to our BURSES, either to the Seminary or in care of the "CATHOLIC RECORD", London, Ont.

For Christ They are Ambassadors

There were many people in Palestine who did not know of the sending forth of the Apostles to preach the Gospel of Christ. There were many who knew but paid scant attention to the event. That was almost two thousand years ago.

* * * *

On Sunday night, October 4th, the Cathedral church of one of Canada's great cities, will resound with the solemn "Farewell" that will mark the sending forth of other Apostles of Christ. Canadian priests from Canada's Foreign Mission Seminary will be sent forth with a blessing to bring the message of the Gospel to far-off China. There will be many Catholic people in Canada who will not know of it. There will be many who know but who will pay scant attention to the event. But it is important enough to be remembered, for it teaches a lesson worth knowing.

* * * *

Surrounded as we are with the magnificent spiritual luxuries of christianity, we are apt to forget or to ignore the fact that they came to us at the cost of great sacrifice, and the Departure Ceremony this month brings to our notice that we have valiant priests who are willing, at great personal sacrifice, to make a long journey in order to bring to needy fellow creatures some of those abundant treasures of our Holy Faith. This is the splendid thing to be proclaimed, that in these modern days when so much attention is paid to small, petty, trivial things of worldly interest, there are found some who willingly sacrifice all that is dear to them in order to bring to the ignorant, the unfortunate, and the outcast, the things of supreme importance—the things that matter most.

* * * *

Even before they leave their homes and their friends, missionaries have no illusions about the nature of the work that lies ahead of them. They have no foolish hopes of converting by their lone efforts whole pagan districts or communities. They realize that they must work even to the sweating of blood before they can make any notable number of conversions; but the love of Christ is deep-rooted in their hearts and they follow the command of the Saviour blindly and unafraid, happy to do their share that the fruits of man's redemption may not be in vain for so many, and content at sowing the seed that must in due time mean a plentiful harvest-gathering. In that is their reward, and in going they have joy.

* * * *

There are some people who do not believe in foreign missions. There are even some otherwise good, honest, earnest souls who almost think it a shame that young priestly lives should be devoted to the (to them) futile task of making christians of the Chinese. But such people do not understand the motives of a missionary's sacrifice. Look at a Crucifix and think of what it means—learn the lesson of the reason for the Cross of Calvary—and you know something of the motivating force of Catholic foreign missions. Going to foreign pagan lands is one way the missionary has of showing gratitude and appreciation for the Crucifix and all it implies, and it is the Grace of God only that urges one to devote his life to this form of appreciation.

* * * *

But all cannot go to the missions. Yet all have benefited by the Redemption. It remains then for Catholics at home to be interested in those who do go to the missions. In their apostolate you are expected to serve. You cannot be indifferent to the success of their work without admitting that your Faith is weak. Many Catholics shut themselves off from the work of the missions as if it did not concern them the least bit. Think of what it means to our priests as they labour in Chuchow to know that their friends at home are solidly behind them in their efforts to save souls, and that they can count on their generous spiritual and material support. We take pride in the church's army of missionaries, we speak in enthralling periods of the far-flung line of fighters who hold their posts in every land and in every clime, and although we may not be in a position to offer ourselves for service in Fields Afar, yet we are consoled to know that we can do our bit. Did it ever strike you that when our Lord pointed out "the countries white already to harvest", His next action was to counsel prayer: "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that He send labourers into His harvest". Young priests have said "goodbye" to their loved ones, and now they are going out to foreign soil to fight Christ's battles against the powers of evil and paganism; immortal souls will be their spoils, and the Cross of the Crucified is their only weapon. They need help, they need encouragement from those at home, and it is within the power of every one of you to help turn the tide of victory; the labours of the missionaries would be all in vain unless supported by the help, the ammunition, of your prayers. During this month of the Holy Rosary ask Mary, Queen of the Missions, to help our priests in their noble work.

* * * *

We will make our own the words of Rev. Father Heneghan, missionary of St. Columban, in a recent issue of the "Far East". He writes:

"If the missionary movement were to do no greater thing than to emphasize the love of Christ, it would be bound of its nature to make the faith glow more vividly at home.

"The missionaries are going for the honour and love of the Blessed Sacrament. The Catholic at home, too, can share in this glorious venture. Though he may not be able to depart to heathen countries, yet every day he can put the force of his prayers and his spiritual life into the work.

"It is so easy to enthuse—and to miss the real meaning of the missions. Looking out on the world today, we see what great need Christ has of friends. Whole countries are deliberately rising up against Him. He is pushed aside and plotted against as if He were an enemy of the people. Surely never as today has He had such need of fearless friends, and never has there been so great an opportunity for all His lovers to rally around His standard. When men are rejecting Him, surely it is for us a high privilege to strive, with all the force of our manhood and the sincerity of our prayers, to plant His Kingdom in the hearts of the millions who have never known His Name. In China they are hungry and starving for the saving grace of God; the darkest tragedy is that they do not even know their need. Who else but Christ can bring consolation to those teeming, suffering millions? Not Buddha, nor Confucius, nor idols made with hands.

"Every morning the missionaries will meet their loved ones in the Mass, and the white peace of Christ will fall upon all their souls as gentle as the dew. Your prayers will surge around them to save them in the hour of temptation, and as they go forward each day to uphold the standard of the Cross, the thought of your loyalty will be a support.

"They are going on their journey, carrying treasures from on high, with hearts aflame, to set the hearts of others on flame with the love of God. To be dull to the living interest of this work, to ignore the mighty part you can play, is to lose a motive of action that could transform drab days and a commonplace life with a fiery glow.

"Parents and friends, out of this sorrow, will have their own secret joy. The sweetest thought that can strengthen the lonely hours for grey heads is this: 'I have reared a son to be a Leader for Christ and an apostle of the Gospel'. And they can have no greater help to meet their dying hour than the prayers of some poor coolie who has heard from the lips of their boy the words of Christ's salvation.

"Quick as thought and far-reaching as the lightning-flash is the power of prayer. From the heart of a child to the heart of God a prayer!—and instantly on some lone missionary, on some poor pagan struggling for the light, by the bedside of a man in Bagamoyo or Hanyang, or Chuchow, God's grace comes like a torrent upon the desert places of the soul. A child's Communion, the Stations of the Cross, the hurried aspirations of a working girl or a laborer—who can measure their power? Not you nor I, nor even an angel before the throne.

"These are the gifts that matter, these are the things that count. Oh, kindly people, these gifts we crave, prayers for those who are taking the boat for far lands in the Name of Christ!"

TWO IMPORTANT DATES.

On October 3rd will be celebrated the Feast of Saint Therese of the Child Jesus, Patroness of the Missions. Lovers of the "Little Flower" should ask her frequently for a "rose" for those in pagan lands who are toiling to spread God's Kingdom. Not only did St. Therese pray for the Missions and adopt missionaries as her spiritual brothers, but she volunteered to go on the Missions herself. A Carmel in Indo-China was founded from Lisieux, and she offered herself as a member of the new community. Pope Benedict XV assured us that all the faithful, without exception, are called to enter on the Little Way of spiritual childhood of which St. Therese is so winning an advocate. It is significant that for her the Little Way reached as far as the Missions. To shun the Missions is to lose the Way.

The whole Catholic world will observe Sunday, October 18th, as Mission Sunday, a day to be observed by dioceses, parishes, institutions, and individuals. The Church needs your co-operation, the Holy Father urges your participation, the missionaries look for your support, the non-Catholic world calls for your help. Your observance of Mission Sunday will evidence your love of the Divine Master and your desire to establish His Church among all nations.

AN UNKNOWN FRIEND GIVES VERY GENEROUS GIFT.

We desire to express our deepest gratitude to the kind benefactor from Pembroke, Ontario, who sent us a gift of nineteen hundred dollars recently. We do not know the name of this friend of the Missions, as he or she prefers to remain unknown, but we assure such a friend that he or she will be often remembered in the prayers of our students, and we beg God to bless one who has done so much in support of His work.

AN OPPORTUNITY.

The men and women working in the far-off mission fields give us a real opportunity of co-operating in their heroic work when they ask us for an occasional offering. Translated into various material helps and applied by skilful hands, these offerings multiply many times over the work of the missionary. How fruitful that work can be is evident from some recently published figures concerning Catholicism in China. In spite of the various revolutions and persecutions, with their consequent loss of property and workers, the Church in that country has had almost a two million increase in membership within the past thirty years. That increase, we believe, is but the first fair promise of still greater harvests to come if we can only equip our missionaries with material helps somewhat in proportion to the zeal which fires their souls.—Boston "Pilot."

IN THE LAIR OF THE BANDITS

A letter from Bishop Hou of Haimen, telling of an interesting, if trying, experience of one of his priests early this year.

It was shortly after supper on Thursday evening, about eight-thirty. We had just tendered a warm and hearty bon voyage to Father Luke Wang, who had just completed his studies at Saint Paul's Seminary in Ningpo, and was now on his way to Wenchow. We had no sooner entered the parlour than we heard a loud knock on the front gate, followed by a loud yell: "Father Yu has been attacked by bandits, and is returning." We ran out immediately, asking as we ran, "Where . . . Who?" Through the darkness we could make out the form of our old gatekeeper running to open the gate. The lock was soon unfastened. The heavy gates swung open, and in walked two chair-bearers carrying a drenched chair, for it was raining heavily that night. Huddled in the chair was our own Father Yu whom we thought was already in Ningpo by the bedside of his sick father. Greater still was our surprise when we learned that he had returned on the same boat which took him away a day and a night ago. Now he was returning dressed as a beggar and hungry (for he had not eaten a morsel since he left us), hobbling along still feeling the unwholesome effects of sea-sickness. What had happened, and what sort of an adventure had he experienced? Let us go into the parlour and listen to Father Yu tell us about it.

"Our boat left on Wednesday, Feb. 5th, at one in the afternoon. We had not gone very far when we had to drop anchor and wait for the dense fog, which enveloped us, to lift. The sun reappeared, and we continued. When the purchasing of tickets had been done with, most of the passengers prepared for bed, and as I was not on good terms with the sea I retired also. Suddenly, disturbing noises were heard. It was something like that of hunters downing their prey. Scattered staccatoed revolver shots punctuated the anxious minutes. For a moment I believed it was our guards firing at approaching bandits. It was indeed the very opposite. It was the bandits, who were already on board and overpowering the guards. Twelve brigands had come aboard that day at Haimen carrying baskets of geese with them as luggage, amongst which they had carefully concealed nine revolvers. It had been the first intention of those to disarm the six guards whom they termed 'Watch-dogs,' and once these were out of the way they would be free to deal with the purser. For a long time they searched for him but could not find him; nor were any of the officers willing to reveal his whereabouts. Already he had disguised himself as a cook and was busy preparing food for the passengers. In the midst of this tumult two boys came up to my cabin (which I occupied alone) and advised me to hide whatever I had of value. They were mumbling and repeating in low muffled tones: 'Things are not right.' By this, and by their actions, I understood the position I was in, so I proceeded to hide my money and my fur cap behind a picture which hung on the wall. A minute later a voice rang out just in front of my door, accompanied by a hard knock: 'Open the door.' I jumped out of bed and opened the door. I was greeted with 'Hand over your money!' I slipped back into bed and handed over my pocketbook in which I had intentionally left fifteen dollars. 'You will give this to the purser (the bandit purser I presume they meant), and he will return it to you when we reach port.' So he departed. A second one came in: 'Hand over your skin jacket!' 'You already have one,' I quietly told him. 'Yes, but yours is better than mine. Here, I will exchange.' A third one came in and took the exchanged jacket, leaving his cotton one instead. A fourth one came in. 'Your glasses look good to me. Hand them over.' 'Of what use will they be to you; they are for short-sighted people,' I advised him. 'Yes, yes, just it, I have sore eyes.' And so my glasses went. The last one took whatever pleased him among what was left. He made me get out of bed and give him my trousers. 'I will perish with cold if I give you these,' I told him. 'What! Cold! and you in bed with blankets to cover you!' So he took my pants, slippers, umbrella, and other objects that he had a fancy for. Thus I was gradually despoiled of everything I had. All this time the boat was being tossed up and down on the ever-increasing wild waves. Suddenly the screeching sound of the siren pierced the air. It was a conventional signal for other brigands who were already alongside in small boats to come aboard. These went through the same formalities as their predecessors. Money was their primary object. They searched everywhere for it, even in the shoes of the women. Loaded with spoils they left the boat. I thought for a moment that they had left us altogether, as there was some sort of quiet and calm. The siren sounded again. 'Ah, we are nearing Tchenghai,' I said to myself, 'and soon I will get out of bed and enjoy the calmer water.' But I soon perceived that the waves were even worse than before. It was not Tchenghai we were approaching but another bandit island-lair. The sounding of the siren was just the signal of the brigands aboard to show that they were still masters of the situation. Fortunately this last signal brought no extra visitors. I was beginning to despair of ever reaching my destination. I cannot recall how often the boat was visited and revisited, and the passengers despoiled of the little that remained with them by othe pickpockets, as the victims termed them.

The ship was going round and round all the time, a plaything for the dancing waves and in close proximity to the island-lair. Time and time again the siren would screech, bugles would sound, and guns would be fired. We thought each one was the farewell signal, or the heralding of new arrivals, and so the night passed.

In the morning a cabin-boy came to me and said: 'Do you know me, Father? I am a Christian, and my name is Saingmay. Get up, I beseech you, and dress in those wornout clothes of mine and follow me, for if you stay in your cabin you stand the chance of being taken for ransom.' This good Christian conducted me to the saloon. There I lay down with a ragged covering over me. The boy, himself, sat beside me as a nurse beside a patient. By this time I was incessantly beseeching Our Blessed Lady to help us: 'O Mary, conceived without sin, pray for us who have recourse to Thee.'

Near me were three other passengers, resting. They were revisited by a bandit, who was considerate enough to leave me alone. A second one came in and wanted to take the remaining old clothes, even to the old worn shoes, belonging to one of those passengers. 'Have pity on me,' this poor old fellow cried out. 'What!' exclaimed the brigand, 'you look for mercy from me, a bandit?' And with this he gave the poor old fellow a stroke that sent him sprawling on the floor. Again I was left unmolested. A third bandit came in and cleaned out what was left. He took a sweater from the boy standing beside me, as well as his lined jacket. Reproached by one of his comrades for his act of cruelty, he handed back the lined garment and took away the scarf I was wearing.

Finally, the women came in. One of them was carrying an urchin on her back. These ransacked the culinary department, cooking utensils, bowls, spoons, and everything worth taking. They even took gambling outfits away with them. Not content with this, they ordered one of the passengers to act as guide on the boat, and help them to take away shoes, clothes, and other things overlooked by the men. These, the passengers said afterwards, were the most cruel and merciless despoilers of all. The purser must be captured and held for ransom. Since nobody, even among the passengers, was willing to reveal his whereabouts, they threatened to sink the boat and kill all the officers unless he was brought forth. The second officer volunteered to act as intermediary on condition that they would not kill him or harm him in any way until the thirty-two hundred dollars demanded within the next fifteen days was settled for. These insatiable barbarians were not satisfied with all this, so they brought along twenty of the cabin passengers to be held for ransom. Thanks to God and His Blessed Mother, and the prudence of my cabin boy, that I was not among those taken for ransom.

In all this rumpus there were four killed, two wounded, and twenty-one taken for ransom. And I, by the Grace of God and the special protection of Our Lady, was able to return safely. The Christian cabin-boy, when all the cabin-boys had come to the saloon to exchange condolences, took the opportunity to announce to them the wonderful power of God Who had so graciously protected His priest. 'How then,' he expostulated, 'do you explain the fact that Father Yu remained unmolested while his companions were searched, robbed, and ill-treated three different times, if it was not the protecting hand of the God of the Christians that saved him?' After this episode, Father Yu went up to his cabin, and there behind the picture, intact and just as he had left them, found his money and fur cap. From a conversation overheard in the saloon, these brigands were to attack the 'Shingchowsan' which was to berth at the wharf with hundreds of dollars aboard. Fortunately, because of the dense fog, it was unable to reach the wharf on schedule time, and so for want of better prey they changed their plans and attacked the 'Shingningtchai'." This is the story as told by Father Yu, now so happy and smiling after his fortunate escape from an unpleasant adventure.

It is worthwhile noting the principals of this affair, and the situation of the bandit-lairs to which this ship was brought and pillaged and ransacked, and her passengers despoiled to a man and kept in dreadful anxiety for more than twenty-four hours. They are those islands situated three hours sail from Haimen on the coast of Chekiang and within the confines of Taichowfu and Wenchow. They are named Langkisan and Tadjingsan. Never has the Government been able to control these, especially since the inception of the Republic. And since the last Revolution the famous bandit chief, Vongyuting, originally of Wenling (formerly T'aiping), has organized these bandits and proclaimed himself their ruler in order to avenge himself on the Regulars who disbanded a force he had organized even in the city of Haimen in 1926. Since then the city of Shingho has been threatened several times by him, a host of people have been carried off for ransom, villages have been pillaged and burned, and this after heavy fighting with the Regulars. The famous occupation of the city of Haimen which lasted from the night of February 13th until the following evening was also attributed to this chieftain, and this occupation caused us no little worry and anxiety. The latest act, the attack on Shingningtai, (according to the bandits themselves) was also due to this same bandit-chief, as well as the attack on Siaokouangki last year. Military officials say that Vongyuting has been dead now for more than a year. Whether that is a fact or not remains for us to find out.

WHAT DO YOU THINK OF THIS?

A letter to Father Fraser from Father J. M. Ouang of Kinhwa District, says: "In travelling through the mountains of Tungyang, we found a turtle (of which you see a picture above); this turtle has very long feet and tail; its head is so large that it cannot be withdrawn into the shell. It eats little and does not move very much. It has been the cause of much wonder to people here because even the older people have never seen anything like it. It has a special appearance, distinct from the ordinary turtle."

WHAT CONVERTS!

Letter from a Missionary.

It was a little shack thatched with straw. The walls were made of bamboo plastered with yellow mud. The thatch had fallen down in many places, and what remained of it was weather-beaten and discoloured. Large pieces of the mud plaster had also fallen, and the bamboo saplings lay exposed, like dead bones. The shack stood on an embankment of earth—raised about two feet above the surrounding country—which served to protect it from the inundations so frequent in these parts.

At Home.

As I approached it, one wet, dreary evening in winter, it looked the picture of poverty and desolation that I found it to be. In any other country but China, it would not be considered sufficient shelter for cattle. But it was the home—God help them—of one of my Catholics and his wife and their four little children.

They have five "mow" of land—a little less than an acre. They are good people, and good Catholics. They work hard to raise enough food from their tiny farm to support life. But in spite of all they can do, they are always on the border line of starvation.

A Convert Wife.

The husband is an honest man, and that is the greatest praise I can give him. He has very little to say: his wife, Mary, does most of the talking.

Two years ago she was a pagan, but she was instructed and baptized in a neighbouring catechumenate. Now she is as faithful a Catholic as her husband. Her knowledge of Catholic doctrine is not profound, and she does not know a great many prayers. But every evening she and her husband and their little children kneel down together in their humble shack before a picture of the Sacred Heart and say their night prayers.

The husband, whose family is Catholic for generations, knows his prayers well, and Mary and her children are gradually learning from constantly hearing them recited. I was often amazed at her strong faith, for a woman who was a pagan only two years ago. Faith is a gift of God, and He gives to whom He wills. There are many who have had opportunities of study and Catholic education in our homelands who would be ashamed and confused before the simple, strong faith of my friend Mary.

Another Soul in Heaven.

As I just said, there are four children. Last year, in the winter time, Mary had her fifth little baby. Her husband and the two elder children were away begging; she was alone in her little shack with the two younger ones. In her loneliness and poverty, with no one to turn to but the God who was over her, she gave birth to her child. It lived only a few hours. But before it died, Mary herself baptized it, giving it the name of Joseph.—Irish "Far East."

RESTORING VIRTUES OF CHINA.

Medals to be Awarded as Public Recognition.

Nanking, July 5.

The various time-honoured virtues of the country—such, for example, as loyalty, filial piety, fidelity and benevolence—which have been steadily losing their hold upon the people since the influx of Western civilization, are to be revived.

At the 149th meeting of the Legislative Yuan held yesterday, a new law providing for the public recognition of virtue was adopted.

The new law, which consists of 16 articles in all, provides that tablets or medals of honour shall be conferred upon persons under either of the following two categories:—

1. Those who are distinguished for moral eminence through the practice of the virtues of loyalty, filial piety, benevolence, love, faithfulness, fidelity and peace.

2. Those who either promote and sponsor or make substantial financial contributions to such institutions as public schools, philanthropic societies and other enterprises devoted to the promotion of public welfare.

The district, municipal and provincial authorities shall be responsible for the investigation within their respective jurisdictions of cases calling for public commendation as provided for by this law.

It is understood that the law has been drafted at the instance of President Chiang Kai-shek, who, in his public pronouncements, has time and again called the attention of the nation to the necessity of reviving these time-honoured virtues.—Kuo Min.

GUIDE OF SISTERS IN THOUSAND MILE FLIGHT NOW A NUN.

Shenchow (Hunan, China)—When during the red upheaval in Hunan Province in 1926 it was necessary for five Sisters of Charity of Convent Station, New Jersey, to escape from the interior to the China Coast, a courageous and intelligent young Chinese lady, Mary Twan, acted as their guide and succeeded in bringing them safely to Shanghai. With peace restored, the Sisters of Charity entered again the Prefecture of Chenchow, confided to the American Passionists, Mary Twan accompanying them. Her request to be received as a member of the community has been heeded, and on June 4, 1931, she made her religious profession as Sister Mary Therese.

Sister Therese was born at Peking of a cultured family long in the faith, and received her education in that city. She has been connected with the Sisters of Charity of Convent Station since their arrival in China in 1924. She is the first native Sister of the Prefecture of Shenchow. (Fides.)

CHINESE CUSTOMS.

The popular religion of the Chinese is a mixture of ancestor worship, spirit worship, and superstition.

Several times a year, the family makes official offerings of food to the souls of departed ancestors, and keeps their graves on the hillsides in good condition. Wooden tablets inscribed with the names of each ancestor are also kept in the nearby clan temple, usually a dusty place which sometimes also serves as a sort of storehouse.

As for spirits, there are two kinds of them, friendly and unfriendly. Of the former, some have their little shrine in the kitchen, where morning and night incense-sticks are burned in their honor. Others, the tutelary spirits of the neighborhood, have a shrine under a nearby tree.

Unfriendly spirits have either to be won over by offerings or to be driven off by incantations, ritualistic practices, or other methods—including firecrackers.

But by far the most important part of the people's daily religion concerns itself with the paramount question of good and ill luck. Good luck, prosperity, success, wealth, happiness, and so forth, are constantly being invited by artistic inscriptions plastered or hung here and there about the house. Nothing important is done without first consulting the almanac or a fortune teller.

The women particularly are prone to all sorts of superstitious beliefs and practices. — Father Diltz, M.M., in "Boston Pilot."

THE TRIALS OF AN EDITOR.

Getting out "China" is no picnic.

If we print jokes, people say that we are silly.

If we don't print them, they say we are too serious.

If we print original matter, they say we lack variety.

If we publish things from other papers we are too lazy to write.

If we stay on the job, we ought to be out hustling for news.

If we are hustling for news, we are not attending to business in our own department.

If we don't print all contributions, we don't show the proper appreciation.

If we do print all contributions, the paper is filled with junk.

If we write in the vernacular, we have no taste.

If we write with literary flourish, we are playing to the high brows.

If we print a lot of foreign news, "who is interested in those places?"

If we don't, "that paper is too parochial."

Like as not some fellow will say we stole this. So we did.

FORMER EDITOR OF "CHINA" LEADS THIS YEAR'S MISSION BAND.

For many years Rev. Wm. C. McGrath anxiously looked forward to news from Chuchow for the pages of CHINA. Now he goes to the mission field as leader of this year's band to become "copy" himself. His going, we feel sure, will serve to increase the mission interest of the people in Newfoundland especially, since Fr. McGrath is the first priest from Newfoundland to go to the Foreign Missions. His successor at the editorial desk will be sure of one "over there" who will appreciate what it means to have news from the "firing line."

REV. GERALD DOYLE ORDAINED FOR CHINESE MISSIONS.

At Peterboro, on Sept. 6th, His Excellency Bishop Denis O'Connor raised to the Holy Priesthood Rev. Gerald Doyle, of Toronto. On the following Sunday, Father Doyle celebrated his first Solemn High Mass in his parish church, Our Lady of Lourdes, Toronto. Assisting him in this solemn function were his two brothers, priests, Rev. Basil Doyle, C.S.P., acting as deacon, and Rev. Bernard Doyle, parish priest of Welland, Ont., as subdeacon. Rev. Dr. McRae, President of the Seminary, delivered the sermon for the occasion. It was a singular privilege for Father Doyle's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Doyle, 73 Huntley St., to witness three of their sons together at the altar. A daughter is a member of the Sisters of Loretto, Toronto.

Father Gerald has been with us for the past five years, but he will be leaving for Rome soon to take a post-graduate course through the kindness of some personal friends. We wish him a pleasant trip and every success during his sojourn in the Eternal City.

SISTERS TO ACCOMPANY PRIESTS.

Two Nuns from the Convent of the Grey Sisters of the Immaculate Conception, Pembroke, Ont., will sail with our priests October 10th from Vancouver on the "Empress of Japan."

LITTLE FLOWER'S ROSE GARDEN

Edited by FATHER JIM

CONDITIONS OF MEMBERSHIP

Hello, Everybody!

You can see by the number of letters this month that the holidays did not slow us up any; all those letters were received sometime before schools re-opened in September. Now I'm not going to take up any of our valuable space beyond reprinting a section of a letter received from an adult friend of the buds. I am printing this letter as an answer to any who might be wondering just why "China" devotes so much space to the letters of school children. It is to the growing youth of Canada and Newfoundland that we must look for the future supporters of Missionary works, and for the vocations that will keep the Canadian Mission at full strength in China. We feel that the Rose Garden is one way to interest them in the work of the Missions, and we have been thrilled by the unexpected response of school children everywhere. They are praying for our work, and their prayers are our most valuable asset. They are conscious of the fine part they are playing in helping to spread their Catholic Faith, and I want you buds, all of you, to continue in the future as active and as enthusiastic as you have been for the past few years. God is certainly pleased with your fine efforts. Here is the letter; it came from a city in Ontario: "Dear Father Jim: I feel rather adventuresome, as this is my third letter to an unknown person. I am not a member of the Little Flower's Rose Garden, but of our dear Lord's own garden that He has transplanted in the shadow of His cross. I have not been able to leave my bed for five years. However, that does not prevent me from enjoying the fragrance of the Little Flower's Garden in the pages of 'China'. I am always delighted with it, and I am sure it is doing much to spread the missionary spirit among children; years alone will witness its marvellously good results. It is the will of God for me to be inactive, but I like to think that my poor prayers help a little. I always dedicate Tuesdays to the Missions and offer everything that day for them."

Next month I hope to have a letter for you written by one of the priests who is going to China this month. Don't forget to pray for these four priests now on their way to China, and say a prayer sometimes for

Your friend,

FATHER JIM.

PRAYER TO MY LITTLE ANGEL.

Dear Guardian, never let me fail
Each night before I go to sleep
To fondly kiss my Crucifix
And place my soul in Jesus' keep.

For I must tell Him that I love Him,
That I trust and thank Him, too;
May He grant me peace and pardon
If this day I've been untrue.

And if before the bright morn wakens
He should call my soul away,
Be thou near me, little Angel,
With my dear ones softly pray.

But if another day be waiting
And I should see the morning bright,
Then my prayer and 'membrance shall be
For some soul that dies tonight.

An Interested Friend!

The verses "To My Little Angel" were sent in by Marguerite S., Toronto, who writes: "Although I am too old to be a rose bud in your Garden, I am, nevertheless, very much interested, and may I just be a Hollyhock outside your garden fence who takes a peep now and then to see how the rose buds are coming along. What a great little club you have, thanks to your wonderful little workers." I certainly appreciate the nice letter from Marguerite S., and I hope she continues to be interested in us. I wish to thank her for the generous donation which accompanied her letter.

I feel sure the buds will wish Teresa O'Reilley, of Eganville, every success in her new life. She has entered the Convent, and thereby has withdrawn from the circle of the club, but will continue to pray for us all and for the intentions that are so dear to all the buds.

From Newfoundland.

We welcome amongst us Rose Boulos, 184 Water St., St. John's, and the many buds whom Patrick O'Halligan encouraged to join the Garden. Also Margaret Earle, of 29 Field St., St. John's, and some new members from St. Lawrence, Nfld. Ena Farrell claims she knows Father Jim "from his handwriting". I'll admit it's pretty bad, but perhaps somebody else can write just as badly, and I'll take care to use a typewriter in future. Aggie Hartery, Cape Broyle, told me of the interest of the buds in Cape Broyle, and how they were eager to read the letter I wrote to her.

Miss Christina Small, of McKinnon's Hr., N.S., sent us a generous spiritual offering, and asks for buds in Glace Bay and Sydney to write to her. Thank you, Christina!

"I have been an interested admirer of your Little Flower's Club for a long time. 'Midnight Sun' will be my pen-name. I want a lot of the buds to be my pen-pals," writes Gerald Keliher, of 2 Cottage St., Glace Bay, N.S.

Yes, I am! No, I'm Not!

"I suppose you think I have dropped out of the Club, but I have not. I would not drop out for anything. I suppose you are very busy attending to your Garden; you have so many 'flowers' that I think you are the busiest gardener I know. At last, I believe I know who you are. You are Father ———. I feel sure you are." This from Agnes Maynard, Thorburn Rd., St. John's.

"I wish the 'China' would come every day instead of only once a month. I have a lot of corries, most of them from Ontario," says Marguerite Dawson, Riverhead, Harbor Grace, Nfld.

CECILIA WALL

A LITTLE SOUL IS SAVED.

Windsor, Ont.

"Seeing many lovely things in 'China' about the Rose Garden, I decided to become a member. With this letter I am sending a gift of five dollars for a little Chinese baby. I would like to have it called Mary, because I have great devotion to the Blessed Virgin." Cecilia Wall, 1020 Ouellette Ave.

George and Fred. Fairhart, of 40 Simcoe St., Oshawa, Ont., are two young lads who are going to try hard to be good little friends of the Missions. Their sister, Linda, (Fairy) is going to keep them reminded of the Rose Garden rules.

Buds to the Fore!

From two Bridgeport, C.B., buds came letters telling me of successes at school. One came first in her class, and another got a prize for the best sewing. I wish the one who is good at sewing were around sometimes after my trousers get badly injured trying to keep up with the "youngsters" in some of the games here.

"I am sending you some stamps for the Chinese Missions. I will continue to save them for you. My aunt, who is a nun, sends us 'China' often." From Gertrude Coffey, Angel's Cove, Placentia, Nfld. I gave you "Bernardette" as a pen-name, Gertrude.

Buds from Bay Roberts, Nfld., Help Our Building Fund.

"Enclosed you will find a money order for three dollars and fifty cents, a little donation to your Building Fund. This was collected by some of my pupils, the buds of your Rose Garden, and they would ask in return only a prayer for their success in school. Wishing you and 'China' every success, I remain, Yours sincerely, Margaret Dawson." This letter came to one of the priests at the Seminary who felt that Father Jim would be glad to publish it, since it concerned his buds. I am very pleased with the members of our Club in Bay Roberts for their generous help, and I certainly will consider it a duty to pray often for them.

A Very Nice Club!

"I do think ours is a very nice club, and I feel sure that Little Flower is very pleased with the devotion shown to the Mission cause by all the members. I am one of those who know who you are. I found out from the same priest as 'Black-Eyed Susan'. In reply to Teresa Keylar, of 3 Hillside Ave., Glace Bay, I say thanks for the compliment to our Club, but you are not "one of those who know" me.

Ottawa Brook, C.B.

Enclosed you will find the spiritual bouquet my pupils made for China Mission.

FR. JIM BEING BLACKMAILED! HELP!

A friend from ——— told us who you were, and what you were like, so here goes! . . . We hope you will not laugh too much when you read this description, but you will be surprised when you receive a snap of yourself some day soon. Father Jim, you are not fair with us; you ask us to send in our pictures and you will not show us yours. But we do not have to wait till you put it in, as we have a snap of you already and we are going to get more developed and send one to each of our pen-pals, and if you don't put it in this month's 'China' we are going to play a trick on you." The letter above is signed by three buds, but I'm not saying where they live. If you are corresponding with them you may be in luck—and you may be out of luck! ———

A "Rose" That Was Granted.

From Victoria, B.C., came a beautiful letter containing the following little story of one of our former buds who is now in Heaven. "Ruth Graves was a great lover of the Little Flower. I will now tell you something which took place between Ruth and myself. It was on Easter Saturday last year. I had had the pleasure of helping to decorate the Little Flower's Shrine, and Ruth was sitting in the church close by; she nearly always went round by the Little Flower's Shrine. Well, when we had finished I went and spoke to Ruth, and the two of us stood there looking at the shrine. I said to her: 'Doesn't the statue look real? One would think the Saint was going to pluck that rose and give it to us'. Ruth looked at me, and holding out her little hand, said: 'Let's ask her, shall we?' Those were the words she said. I wonder if she got what she asked for? She was a dear little girl and very clever. She just loved to cut out little baskets and paint flowers on them and write beautiful prayers inside them and then give them to her friends. I have one she made and gave to me on New Year's Day."

Margaret Byrne, 196 Celina St., Oshawa, "heard many people talking about the Rose Garden" so she wants to become a member. Evidently those people were saying something good about us. Anybody who wants to say anything against us is welcome to write, but we don't anticipate a flood of such letters.

A "Shamrock" right from Ireland! Kathleen Leonard, Lisahally, Londonderry, Ireland.

A LITTLE FRIEND WRITES TO FATHER FRASER.

The readers of "CHINA" and those who assisted at Father Fraser's lecture are familiar with the little boy holding up the Little Flower's picture—the only convert in a large pagan family.

On July 10th he wrote:—"I received your last letter and it gave me great happiness. I am so happy to know that you are well and having success in your holy work. Thanks very much for the lovely badge of St. Teresa, which I certainly appreciate. Have heard that you are travelling through Canada, preaching on the missions, and hope your kind countrymen will help our poor people.

"I am fine and have wonderful news for you. Within a month, I think I will be going to Ningpo, to study for the priesthood. All my people are willing, and at present there seem to be no obstacles in my way. God has been very good, and I feel that I owe much of this great grace to your kind and continual prayers for me. I am very anxious to study for the priesthood, so that I will be able to convert my poor people.

"I am now staying here at the Mission for the holidays, and all the priests are very kind to me, also the masters. I am hoping and praying every day that you may soon return to China. I went to a picnic to Ne Meng San, and I took sick from the heat. A rash covered my whole body and I fainted on the way home. Now, however, I am as well as ever. It is very hot now, and in the evening after sundown, we generally all go down to the river for a swim. The country hereabouts is very peaceful. This will be all for now. Good-bye and God bless you. Pray for me, as I do for you.

"Your spiritual child,
"KWAEH-LING."

(Later, July 18th)

"When I sent you my last letter, I thought that I could go to the seminary, and I was very happy. At first my mother's father, who is my guardian, said that he would have nothing to do with the case, and all the others consented to my going to Ningpo to study for the priesthood. When my mother's father heard of that, he heaped abuse upon them. But even then I thought I could go. Recently, however, I went to see my mother's father, and he refused to let me go.

"Of course I feel very unhappy, for my heart was set on studying for the priesthood. Now, I do not know what I can do. I am now at the Mission, and feel happy here. A few of the others are here too. Two seminarians from Ningpo are here on their vacation. I am studying English now, and like it very much. Perhaps after a short time I will be able to speak a little. For the past few days I have been sick, but it is nothing serious. Please pray for me, for I am at a loss to know what to do. I pray for you always, and want to thank you again for all your kindness to me in the past. Good-bye, dear Father. Once again I ask you for your kind prayers and a remembrance at Mass.

"Your child in Christ,
"KWAEH-LING."

THE MISSIONS AND OUR SCHOOLS

If the interest of our Catholic Schools in the Mission work of the Church needed any proof, it was strongly emphasized at the National Convention of Catholic Students held last month in Toronto. From points all over Canada came delegates to play their part in the great demonstration of loyalty to the Missions as represented by the C.C.S.M.C. Movement. For three busy days they carried out a programme that gave definite assurance of the mighty part that our Schools are going to play in the future history of Home and Foreign Missions in our country, and by attending their meetings and their various public gatherings we, personally, were greatly inspired by their enthusiasm and their whole-hearted earnestness.

* * * *

The school is the hope of the missions. There can be no doubt about it. If the hearts and minds of the children are practically instructed in the responsibilities and duties of mission-work, the present generation will grow up filled with zeal and love for all that the missions mean, and their interest will bring new life and prosperity to the great important work of the propagation of the faith. Those in school are in the formative period of life, and habits that begin to shape in early years will cling to them throughout the years. If the missionary spirit shall take possession of our entire Catholic people; if it shall become a force and power for the growth of the Church, then the heart of the student boys and girls in our country must be familiarized with it, for if the Home and Foreign Missions are to make any notable progress as the years go on, it will be due in great measure to the attitude of our young people as they grow to responsible adult age.

* * * *

Always, the greatest need of the Church is for ever-increasing numbers of missionaries to continue and enlarge her missionary activities, and if our schools even for one single generation were to fail in their work of fostering vocations, the spread of the faith would be seriously retarded at home and abroad. It is in the Catholic classroom that are planted those seeds of Divine vocation that mature into the heroic lives of our missionary priests and sisters.

* * * *

"More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of". Catholics everywhere realize this, and certainly the boys and girls in our schools have done wonderful things for the cause of Christ by their spiritual assistance given generously at all times. Our Seminary is greatly indebted to students everywhere for their magnificent help in this regard, and it gives us untold encouragement to know that throughout the length and breadth of Canada and Newfoundland the children in the schools are constantly praying for our work. Above all things else we value their prayers and Holy Communions, and it will not be amiss to pay a tribute to those little missionaries who have become members of the "Little Flower's Rose Garden" conducted in "China" by Father Jim.

* * * *

Read through our donation list any month and you will see how generous many of the schools are with their material offerings. Frankly, we admit that the giving of material gifts is the least important of the school's missionary activities; rendering help, spiritually, and becoming educated to the needs of the Missions take precedence, but it only goes to prove that when the more important features are stressed the lesser important will be taken care of as a result. Certainly, we appreciate the sacrifices that many of our schools are making on behalf of the Missions when they send such generous donations to us and to other mission enterprises, and we know that the giving of such assistance cannot fail to bring a blessing on those who so co-operate in the propagation of the faith.

* * * *

And now let us say a word in appreciation of the efforts of the teachers, the good Sisters and Christian Brothers and lay-teachers. To them primarily belongs the credit for the spread of the mission-spirit amongst their youthful charges. The remarkable development of "mission-mindedness", and especially the whirl-wind progress of the Student Crusade Movement in so many places is largely due to them, and the movement for a more lively participation of the schools in arousing interest in the missions has been warmly welcomed in their circles. Those self-sacrificing teachers know that acquaintance with missionary work stirs the noblest chord and the purest sentiments within the soul of the pupil, and arouses the most powerful motives for love of God and one's neighbour, lifting up the youthful heart to higher purposes and nobler aims. Through our schools, knowledge of, and love for the missions will be carried into our Catholic families, and the school favouring mission work will become an important factor in the service of the noblest work, the salvation of the heathen. May God bless abundantly the work of the C.C.S.M.C., and may its three-fold object of mission education, spiritual assistance to the missions, and almsgiving for the missions make it a most powerful ally in the work at Home and in Fields Afar.

The Catholic Missionary Priest

A Sermon Preached in St. Michael's Cathedral, Toronto, October 4th, 1931, by Rev. Dr. John J. O'Gorman of Ottawa.

This evening, William McGrath, Joseph King, Arthur Venadam and John Joseph Macdonald, priests of the Catholic Church, have assembled in this Cathedral of St. Michael to ask God to bless their departure for the Prefecture Apostolic of Chuchow, China, where they will work as missionaries. This departure ceremony, held in Toronto's Catholic Cathedral, in the presence of your venerated Archbishop, of representative clergy, of young missionary crusaders and of people from every walk of life, is a public event calculated to arouse comment in the community. Even among Catholics the reaction will not be uniform. Most Catholics, knowing by faith the divine origin and absolute necessity of the priestly office and knowing by experience the manifold benefits and blessings which they and theirs have derived through priestly persons, will eagerly desire that those at the end of the earth may likewise share in the same advantages. Other Catholics, because they are weak in faith or negligent in practice, or because they perhaps have had unhappy personal relations with some individual priest, are this evening lukewarm or critical. Though they believe that Christ died just as much for the Chinese of Chuchow as for the Canadians of Ontario, though they admit that Christ's command to teach and sanctify all creatures cannot be fulfilled unless missionaries are in every part of the world, nevertheless this belief of theirs is notional rather than practical, and they are as interested in foreign missions as Dives was in Lazarus. If this solemn missionary departure thus produces diverse reactions even among Catholics, it is only to be expected that it should react in an even greater diversity of manner on non-Catholics, on those who do not believe in a divinely transmitted priestly power and jurisdiction. Some non-Catholics will say: These four priests are earnest Christians and their ministry, if they exercise it in a faithful manner, cannot but help the Chinese. Others will pay no attention at all to the work begun here this evening. On the other hand, some few will say: Sacerdotalism is an evil institution which retards the progress of humanity; the better the individual missionary happens to be, the worse it is for humanity; for it is the case of a good man lending the whole force of his personality to an evil cause: therefore the public celebration of this departure of missionaries is a challenge to those who hate the priesthood. Persons belonging to these various groups—fervent Catholics, friendly non-Catholics, indifferent non-Catholics and fanatically unfriendly non-Catholics — will pass judgment on this evening's ceremony. Therefore, if one would interpret the significance of this sending forth of priests to China, one must first explain the origin, nature and necessity of the Catholic priesthood. Then when we all sufficiently realize that God established the priesthood to offer Him worthy sacrifice and to give men divine gifts, we shall be in a position to appreciate the purpose and advantage of sending priests to the pagan Chinese of Chuchow.

Our study of the priesthood must, to be satisfying, answer these four questions: Whence is it? What is it? Why is it? Of what use is it? Of these four questions, the one dealing with the origin of the priesthood naturally comes first.

Origin and Need of the Priesthood.

The priesthood is as old as humanity and answers a fundamental need of humanity. This fundamental need may be stated in six words: man needs a mediator with God. For since the criminal revolt of the father of the human race, a revolt intensified by the subsequent personal sins of His children of every generation, man is separated from God by a triple obstacle, ignorance, injustice and spiritual death. Though man by beholding visible things can know with certainty Him who made them, this knowledge is neither errorless, nor direct nor complete. While the will of man can love both his fellow creature and also his God as far as he knows Him, this natural rectitude can neither satisfy for the injustice of the inherited sin of nature, nor withstand permanently the temptations from the world, the flesh and the devil. Wonderful beyond telling as is the human life of an immortal soul and mortal body, by no process within the power of nature can it evolve into that divine life which is the privilege of the sons of God. Ignorance, sin and death are the inseparable companions of our fallen nature. They form the triple cause of our estrangement from God.

The paltry and usually distorted remnant which remained of the primeval revelation granted man by God was sufficient to make men long for reconciliation with the divine Ruler. To answer this need of reconciliation, there arose in every religion a class of men known as priests. A priest, in the broad historical sense of the word, is a man who is, or attempts to be, an intermediary between God and man. His task is to teach men what they should know about God and His holy will, to satisfy divine justice by expiating in sacrifice the injustice of sin, and to communicate to man the god-like life which his sin forfeited. The pagan priesthood, which was itself infested with ignorance, sin and spiritual death, was incapable of bringing to those who sought its ministrations God's light, love and life. The patriarchal and Jewish priesthood, though possessing from God revealed truths, and sacrificial and sacramental rites, was but a preparation for and type of that real priest Who from the treasures of His own knowledge revealed to men all they require to know of God, Who out of His own sinless and infinite goodness by His Passion and Death superabundantly expiated all the injustice of sin, and Who by communicating to men an infusion of His own divine life makes them once again living children of the Eternal Father. It was as a priest that Christ taught, it was as a priest that Christ paid by His Blood the price of our redemption, and it is as a priest that Christ communicates by grace the fruit of that redemption to the souls of men. He it is of whom both the Old Testament and the New contain that sublime declaration: "Thou art a priest forever."

Sister Mary Daniel of the Grey Nuns of the Immaculate Conception, Pembroke, Ont., who has gone to Chuchow.

Christ's Priesthood.

It was in order that he might be our priest that the Son of God took hold of the seed of Abraham and became man. "Wherefore it behooved him in all things to be made like unto his brethren, that he might become a merciful and faithful high-priest before God, that he might be a propitiation for the sins of the people . . . . Whereas indeed he was the Son of God, he learned obedience by the things which he suffered and, being consummated, he became to all that obey him, the cause of eternal salvation, called by God a high priest according to the order of Melchisedech . . . . For it was fitting that we should have such a high priest, holy, innocent. undefiled, separated from sinners, and made higher than the heavens, who needeth not daily as the (other) priests to offer sacrifices first for his own sins and then for the people's; for this he did once in offering himself . . . . For the (Jewish) law, having a shadow of the good things to come not the very image of the things, by the self-same sacrifices which they offer continually every year, can never make the comers thereunto perfect . . . . For it is impossible that with the blood of oxen and of goats, sin should be taken away . . . . But Christ being come, a high priest of the good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle not made with hands, that is, not of this creation. neither by the blood of oxen or of calves, but by his own blood, entered once into the holies, having obtained eternal redemption. For if the blood of goats and of oxen, and the ashes of a heifer being sprinkled sanctify such as are defiled to the cleansing of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ, who by the Holy Ghost offered himself unspotted to God, cleanse our conscience from dead works, to serve the living God. And therefore he is the mediator of the New Testament."

The whole teaching of this Epistle to the Hebrews from which these words are taken may be summed up in one sentence: Christ, the Son of God, is the mediator and therefore the priest of the new and eternal testament; for priest and mediator are synonymous terms. There is therefore but one priest as there is but one mediator. "God our Saviour will have all men to be saved and to come to the knowledge of the truth. For there is one God and one mediator of God and men, the man Christ Jesus, who gave himself a redemption for all."

Christ's Priests.

While Christ's priesthood is eternal, for He is, "a priest forever," "always living to make intercession for us," "our advocate with the Father, the propitiation for our sins," He no longer visibly teaches men as He did in Galilee, in the land beyond the Jordan and in the Holy City; He no longer visibly offers up His Body and Blood unto the remission of sins as He did at the Last Supper and upon the Cross. He no longer audibly says to the repentant sinner, as He did to the paralytic, "Son, thy sins are forgiven thee." For it was part of the eternal economy of the redemption that Christ should choose certain men and give them a share in His priesthood, so that through them all men might receive the fruits of His sacrifice all days even to the consummation of the world. These priests of His are but channels, He is the source; they are but instruments, He is the workman. Yet, nevertheless, He willed that they should be for men necessary channels and indispensable instruments. Without the ministry of the Christian priesthood, men cannot enter heaven. For while the Catholic Church does not despair of the salvation of those who through no fault of their own are outside her visible fold and hence deprived of the direct services of her priesthood, for God grants sufficient grace to all adults for salvation, she nevertheless teaches that these lesser lights and graces which can sanctify those men of good will who are invincibly ignorant of her divine mission are obtained by them indirectly through the ministrations of the Christian priesthood; for all sanctifying grace comes to men from Christ through the sacrifice of the Mass and the sacraments, whether the latter be actually received or only implicitly desired. Only through His priests will Christ exercise on earth the three functions of His priesthood: the prophetical, whereby He dispels ignorance by teaching divine truth; the sacrificial, whereby He atones for sin by offering a divine sacrifice; and the pastoral, whereby He destroys spiritual death by infusing divine life.

The men whom Christ chose to share His priesthood and convey its benefits to mankind were the apostles and their lawful successors. On them He conferred the prophetical office when He said: "All power is given to me in heaven and on earth. Going therefore make disciples of all nations . . . teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and behold I am with you all days even to the consummation of the world." The living Christ still teaches men but He does so through His priests. On the same apostles, He conferred at the Last Supper the sacrificial office of His priesthood. For to them He said: "You have not chosen me, but I have chosen you . . . And whilst they were at supper, Jesus took bread and blessed and broke and gave to his disciples and said: "Take ye and eat. This is my body which is given for you. This do for the commemoration of me." And taking the chalice, He gave thanks and gave to them saying: "Drink ye all of this—for this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many unto the remission of sins. This do, as often as you shall drink, for the commemoration of me." By these words Christ gave the apostles, and through them, their successors in the priesthood, the command and the power to change bread and wine into His Body and Blood and to offer Him as a sacrifice for the remission of sins. Thus through them He continues His own eucharistic sacrifice, offering in an unbloody manner what was bloodily immolated on the Cross. To these same apostles, and their successors in the priesthood, Christ gave on Easter Sunday evening that part of the pastoral office which includes the forgiving of sins and the imparting of supernatural life to men. "Peace be to you. As the Father has sent me, I also send you. And when He had said this He breathed on them, and He said to them: "Receive ye the Holy Ghost. Whosesoever sins you shall forgive, they are forgiven them; and whosesoever (sins) you shall retain, they are retained." These powers in no way interfere with Christ's unique mediatorship; no more than human parenthood interferes with the unique Fatherhood of God. For Jesus Christ, the Incarnate Son of God, is the source of divine truth; He is the sacrifice which merited our redemption; He is the life that takes away our death by incorporating us as His living members. He established, once for all, a complete revelation, a perfect sacrifice and an inexhaustible river of living grace; and yet it is His will that this revelation cannot be known by men in its integrity and perfection, that this sacrifice cannot be offered on earth as a clean oblation from the rising to the setting of the sun, and that this divine life of grace cannot normally be transmitted to men, save through the Christian priesthood. Those and those only who have received from the apostles by the laying on of hands in Holy Orders the power of the priesthood are able to teach revealed truths with authority, to offer up Christ's eucharistic sacrifice in expiation of sin, and to administer the sacraments that bring divine life to men.

The Priest a Mediator.

They, therefore, who thus share Christ's priesthood are appointed by Christ mediators between Him and men. A Catholic priest is, therefore, owing to the share Christ has given him in His own priesthood, a secondary mediator between God and men. He is a mediator, because he removes the three obstacles which estrange God and man, ignorance, injustice and death. He removes spiritual ignorance by preaching the whole doctrine of Christ, contained in the divinely inspired Scriptures and in the apostolic traditions; he expiates injustice by the propitiatory value of Christ's eucharistic sacrifice, which he, as Christ's agent, offers in the Mass; he restores spiritual life by forgiving, as Christ's ambassador, the sins of men, and he develops it by distributing as Christ's steward, the Bread of Life. Thus it is that the ministry of reconciliation, which constitutes Christ's priesthood, is shared by all the priests of His Church. In the very same verse in which St. Paul tells the Corinthians that "God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself," he adds, "and he hath placed in us the word of reconciliation. For Christ therefore we are ambassadors, God as it were exhorting by us. All things are God's who hath reconciled us to himself by Christ and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation." Priests therefore, as the Holy Ghost teaches us through St. Paul, are ambassadors of Christ; priests, therefore, have a share in Christ's own ministry of reconciliation; priests, therefore, since they share Christ's mediatorship, are mediators between God and man.

The priest, as mediator, fills three functions, the prophetical, the sacrificial and the pastoral; he teaches God's revelation, he offers up Christ's sacrifice in the Mass and he imparts the divine life of grace through the sacraments. The study of each one of these three functions casts a flood of light on the nature and utility of the priesthood.

The Priest as Preacher.

It is evident that the first step of man towards God must be to know who God is and what He wants. This information is contained in the gospel of Christ and hence it is this Gospel which must be taught to men. Christ made His priests spokesmen of God when He said, "Go ye into the whole

NEW-COMERS and "OLD-TIMERS"

Some observations by Rev. Father Joy, S.J., Hongkong. They have a special interest in view of the arrival of our missionaries in China this month.

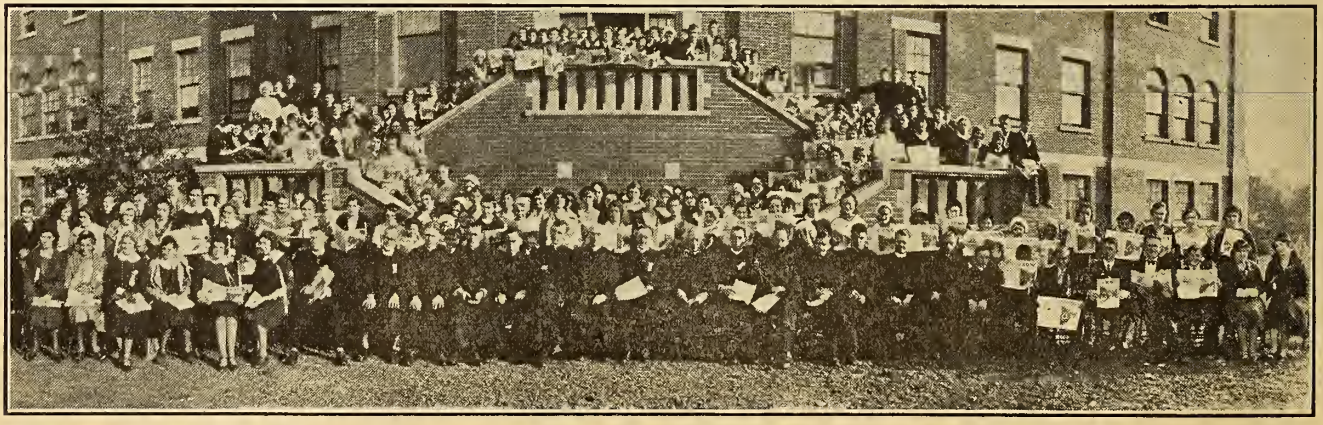
This morning and this afternoon a perfect avalanche of missionaries descended upon us. Germans, Spaniards, French, Italian, Hungarian—it was a perfectly Pentecostal gathering from the ends of the earth and from all nations. They had just come off two ships from Europe, and were bound for the northern provinces of China. Hence their stay was short. They were just "passing through," and looked in for a few moment to greet their fellow-labourers in the Southern part of the field.

The Enthusiasm of Youth.

They were all "fresh-run,' as fishermen say of salmon newly arrived in the rivers from the sea. Most of them were young—were, in fact, but a few months ordained, and were to begin their life-work in the missions. It is interesting to meet these men fresh from home in these days. We read in their hurried, enthusiastic speech the effects which the new mission movement has produced in people at home. When we ourselves arrived we had little more than the vaguest ideas about the problems of the missions. But, since then, student groups have been organized and missionary congresses are being held in every country. We feel the effect in the immense increase in numbers of new-comers. Every year nations are throwing men into the fray who a few years ago had no men in the China missions.

These new men are full of health and vigour and enthusiasm. They are the more remarkable for the fact that they arrive in the autumn when the men on the spot are almost at their lowest in energy and vitality—just at the end of a tropical summer.

No End of Ideas.



They are full of ideas about the missions and their problems. The men on the spot seem more anxious to let them talk than to take a hand in the discussion themselves. The solution of the class-room and the missionary conference are put forward with a logic and an enthusiasm which makes disagreement impossible. Besides, the older men would not damp that enthusiasm for worlds. It will be an invaluable aid in carrying them over the initial difficulties of mission life.

On to the Firing Line.

In a short time they are gone from us to continue their journey to the North. In our hearts we marvel at God's wonderful generosity. He is certainly helping the China missions as never before. The youth and enthusiasm of every nation seem to be flowing out into the mission fields. Surely He is preparing something big for China. "What shall this one be, think you, for the Hand of the Lord is with him?"

Sad Tales of Returning Soldiers.

Another day others were "passing through" and called. They had given of their best in the provinces that centre on Hankow, to the north of it and to the south. Some had spent twenty, some thirty and forty years in China. They had seen flourishing Christianities grow up where, when they first came, there was just one vast, unbroken mass of paganism. All was going well until the Southerners, under Borodin's instructions, began their conquest of the Centre and the North. In a few years all was changed. Friendliness was turned to sullen tolerance, if not to open hostility. Then the Reds came, and the bandits thrived in a nation of divided counsels. Missions suffered heavily, some being completely destroyed. These old missionaries held on grimly in the hope of better times returning. Finally, they themselves became, on more than one occasion, the objects of hatred to excited mobs. Some of them had been in the hands of the Reds; some in those of the pirates. It mattered little by what name their captors called themselves. The treatment was much the same in all cases. Months of captivity with poor food, long marches in the heat of summer, insufficient clothing and no shelter in the winter months, petty persecutions with daily threats of death if the ransom money did not come (which they knew would never come, and which they did not want to come, lest pity for them should endanger the lives of every other missionary). Finally, release came when nerves were shattered and health impaired, and the bishop ordered them to go back for a few months rest.

On Saturday afternoon, October 3rd, some of the Crusaders attending the National Convention in Toronto, visited our Seminary, where they were welcomed by Rev. Dr. McRae, and heard Father Fraser speak of the need of Catholic missions in China. They all read "China."

No Word of Their Own Trials.

We knew all this part of their story before they came. The moment their names were announced we were able to piece together the little bits of information that had trickled through about them during those months of their captivity. If we had not thus known, we should never have known—for they themselves seemed never to give a thought to Reds or Bandits. They laughed and smoked and chatted as though their lives had been the most humdrum matter-of-fact ones in the world. Even when we tried to get them on to the topic of their captivity, they seemed to be more interested in the comic than in the tragic side of it. They kept us laughing with little incidents about the armour and the "discipline," and the ways and words of Reds and Bandits, so that we did not dare to speak of the more sombre side of things. We spoke of the missions and their problems, of China, of the civil war, of the prospects for the future. They had no solutions to offer; no prophecies to make. To the careless eye it would almost appear as though they had no interest in the hard realities of life.

The Tell-Tale Signs.

But we have seen too many men "passing through' to be put off by these tactics. One's eye gets accustomed to reading and interpreting involuntary signs. The twitching eyebrows, the restless hands, the passing shadow of thoughtfulness and sadness that comes on the countenance for a moment, is replaced by laugh and smile—we have seen these things too often to miss the meaning of them. They tell us more of the months of agony that these men endured than either they want us to know or we want to tell them. The stranger might just think that they were "jolly souls," these missionaries who had been with Reds and Bandits. He might even be disposed to think that they were right when, on rising to leave us, they remark that "it is ridiculous of the Bishop" to be sending them back to Europe for a rest. But when they have passed down the walk, and, with a last wave of the hand and a promise to call on their way back again in a few months, have disappeared from sight, we know that the Bishop has merely picked those who are in most urgent need of rest, though all of them are in sad need of it.

Heroes All.

Heroes! We meet many such "passing through," and we feel ashamed. We, too, dare to hope that we can claim the name of missionary. But we live in peace while the men on the firing lines are fighting this desperate battle for the cause of Christ the King. We feel just a little anxious that we are not the real thing. We are only in the commisariat or the dressing-stations. These men man the trenches in the most glorious struggle that the history of the China missions has witnessed. In our admiration there is just a little envy.

But when we look over these last few years—dreadful but glorious years—in China, and try to analyse the effect produced on us by these men "passing through," we know that we have got much from those who descend on us from the West—the newcomers—but we have got far more from those going back from the missions for rest and recuperation.

Redemption Through Suffering.

These men with shattered nerves and broken health; these jolly souls who smoke and laugh and chat about everything except the serious aspect of the China missions to-day; these men who, unlike the newcomer, have no solution for the missions' problems and no idea of what the future will bring, say to us—yet use no words in saying it—"Why trouble about mission problems? They are insoluble in the China of to-day. Therefore they will be solved. Why discuss the future of the missions? The future seems hopeless. Therefore it is full of hope. Christ the Sleeper is in the boat. It only needs for the storm to become worse and He will awake and there will come a great calm. The God Who sent Gideon forth to battle will teach us, as He taught him, not to trust for victory to mere human forces." They have gone through what they have suffered and come out of it with smiling faces. They have seen the labors of a lifetime shattered to pieces at the hands of Reds and bandits —and they have not lost their peace of soul, for they know that the Captain, Christ, is our Leader in the battle, and in His cause there is no defeat. Sooner or later, they know, every night of terror, every suffering of body and mind, every drop of blood that has flowed from the veins of Christian or missionary will count in bringing nearer the day of China's spiritual deliverance. Christ's mystical body in China, as elsewhere, must, like Christ Himself, climb the Hill of Calvary and lay itself out on the Cross. The sun will be darkened, the earth will quake—but so far from silencing the Voice of the Man of Sorrows, the time will come when He will cry out in a loud voice: "It is consummated." And China shall have been redeemed. (Fides.)

Impressive Farewell Given Missionaries

The great congregation that crowded Toronto's Cathedral Church of St. Michael on Sunday night, October 4th, will have something to remember as long as they live. The scene that took place within that sacred edifice marked another red-letter event in the history of St. Francis Xavier's China Mission Seminary, and from every angle the spectacle was most inspiring. The quiet dignity of the rich old Gothic interior of St. Michael's lent itself to the occasion as His Excellency Archbishop McNeil officiated at the impressive Ceremony of Departure that marked the official sending forth of Reverend Fathers McGrath, Venadam, King, and MacDonald as missionaries to China.

Every available bit of space in the great Cathedral was occupied when sharply at seven o'clock, Father Ronan's chancel choir boys led the procession from the sacristy. While the chancel choir sang a motet the long procession of Seminarians and priests moved down a side aisle and up the centre to the Sanctuary, where, at the foot of the brilliantly lighted main altar, Archbishop McNeil intoned the "Veni Creator," which was continued by more than two hundred Seminarians from St. Augustine's and St. Francis Xavier's Seminary, who filled the sanctuary. The entire congregation then joined in the singing of the hymn, "Come Holy Ghost," at the conclusion of which Rev. Dr. J. J. O'Gorman ascended the pulpit and delivered his departure sermon on the priesthood (which is published in full in this issue); through the kindness of Father Kennedy, Crusade Director, the sermon was broadcasted over Station CKGW.

Perhaps the most emotional part of the whole ceremony was the stirring rendition of the Departure Hymn by the Seminarians, as they sang Gounod's famous composition bidding "Farewell, Brothers! Farewell!" At the altar, Archbishop McNeil blessed the Crosses of the missionaries, and each knelt in turn before His Excellency and was invested with the Mission Cross; then all four repeated aloud their oath of fidelity to the missions, and as they lay prostrate before the altar His Excellency said the prayer which begins with the words, "Ite, fratres, . . . Go, brethren, to the sheep who are perishing . . .", and then He blessed the four missionaries. The Ceremony proper concluded with the singing of the "Itinerarium" (the official prayer of the Church for those about to undertake a journey) by the Seminarians under the direction of Father Ronan.

The picture on the cover of "CHINA" was taken during the Solemn Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament which was given by His Excellency Archbishop McNeil, assisted by Rev. James McGillivray and Rev. Wm. McNabb of our Seminary as Deacon and Subdeacon respectively. The four missionaries are seen in the picture kneeling at their prie-dieux, without surplices, and left to right they are Fathers King, McGrath, MacDonald, and Venadam. During the Benediction the Cathedral Gallery Choir rendered some special music.

After the Benediction the missionaries advanced to the altar railing and blessed the kneeling congregation with their Crucifixes. The processional return to the sacristy brought to a close the 1931 Departure Ceremony. Our thanks are due to the Rector of St. Michael's Cathedral and to all who helped to make it such a grand event.

PRIESTS, OFF FOR CHINA, GLADDENED BY REMEMBRANCES FROM OTHER SEMINARIES.

It was a source of much joy and gratification to Fathers McGrath, Venadam, King and MacDonald, to receive from the students at Holy Heart Seminary, Halifax, and the students at St. Augustine's Seminary, Toronto, magnificent Spiritual Bouquets for the success of their journey to, and labours in, the Mission Field. With the Gifts came letters telling of the interest of those future fellow-priests in the Canadian Mission to China. Through "China" the priests wish to publicly thank those Seminarians for their kind and thoughtful acts.

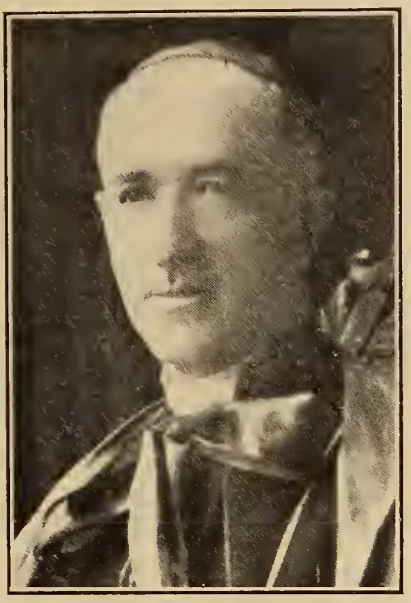
FATHER McGRATH IS APPOINTED SUPERIOR IN CHINA.

At a recent meeting of the Seminary Board of Control, Rev. Wm. C. McGrath was chosen as Superior of our Mission in Chuchow. A leading figure in the work of the Foreign Missions in Canada almost from the very beginning of our efforts, Father McGrath is well qualified for his new duties as Mission Superior. China has been the object of his labours for years, and that zeal and enthusiasm which caused him to do such mighty things for the cause of the Missions in Canada have now a fuller field for expansion

PRIEST TAKEN CAPTIVE.

A despatch from Shanghai, dated August 28th, reports that Father Hugh Sands of St. Columbans Chinese Mission Society has been taken captive and his residence sacked. Father Sands is a missionary in the Prefecture of Hanyang, Hupeh Province, China.

Only six months ago Father Tierney, also a St. Columban Father in the same prefecture, died from ill-treatment in the hands of bandits. December 2nd of last year, Fathers Laffan and Linehan of the same society, after seven months in the hands of the Reds, escaped from captivity which they voluntarily took upon themselves in order to release five sisters who had been taken in the communist raid on the city of Sientaochen.—(Fides).



MISSIONARIES ON THEIR WAY.

Immediately following the Departure Ceremony on October 4th, Fathers Venadam and King left for Vancouver, and sailed on the "Empress of Japan" on October 10th, in company with the two Sisters whose picture appears elsewhere in this issue.

Fathers MacDonald and McGrath postponed their sailing date for a few weeks, and left the Seminary on October 18th. They are taking to Vancouver the Mission Motor Van recently blessed by His Excellency Archbishop McNeil for the Sisters of Service. They will deliver this "Church on Wheels" to the Sisters in Vancouver after having "broken it in" by the drive from Toronto to the Coast, and on November 7th they sail on the "Empress of Canada".

Our students made a Triduum to the Little Flower, Patroness of Missionaries, for this year's Mission Band, and the Triduum was brought to a close on the Feast of the Saint by Solemn Benediction given in our Chapel by three of the priests now en route to Chuchow.

It is a touching event when priests leave the Seminary for China. To them the Seminary is a second home, and saying "Farewell" is not easy. Not the least impressive moment of the actual departure is that when, having given the final handclasp to each of the Seminarians, the departing missionaries give their blessing to the boys as they kneel around them.

BISHOP KIDD NEW MEMBER OF SEMINARY BOARD OF CONTROL.

The Bishops of Ontario have chosen His Excellency The Most Reverend John T. Kidd, Bishop of London, Ont., to be their new representative on the Board of Control of St. Francis Xavier China Mission Seminary to succeed the late Bishop Fallon. Archbishop McNeil is the President of the Board, and together with Archbishop O'Brien, of Kingston, and Bishop Kidd, of London, represents the Catholic Hierarchy of Ontario. Dr. McRae, Rector of the Seminary, and Rev. Wm. C. McGrath are the other members.

Bishop Kidd is no stranger to the work of our Seminary; for years, as President of St. Augustine's Seminary, he was intimately associated with us; later, as Bishop of Calgary, a great Home Mission Diocese, he maintained his interest, and henceforth China Mission will benefit by his official connection, for the new Bishop of London is a man of wide experience and his life has been a singularly useful one in Canadian ecclesiastical affairs.

TWO MORE CHINESE BISHOPS.

Pekin.—The Rt. Rev. Boniface Yeung, Auxiliary Bishop of the Vicariate of Canton, was consecrated at Canton July 26th by the Rt. Rev. Simon Tsu, Vicar Apostolic of Haimen, one of the Chinese bishops consecrated at Rome in 1926 by Pope Pius XI. Eight bishops attended the ceremony and about 80 priests, besides a large congregation of Christians and pagans.

The Rt. Rev. Joseph Chow was consecrated Vicar Apostolic of Paotingfu on August 2nd by his predecessor, the Rt. Rev. Paul Montaigne, who is now Coadjutor of the Vicar Apostolic of Pekin. The elaborate outdoor celebrations usually supplied according to Chinese custom, had to be omitted on account of the civil war in the immediate vicinity.

In connection with Bishop Chow's consecration it is to be noted that this is the first time in China that foreign missionaries have turned over an entire vicariate with all its institutions to the native clergy and withdrawn to other fields. (Fides).

CHINESE STUDENTS CONVERTED

A group of 42 young men, all between the ages of 15 and 25, were baptised at Hongkong after receiving instruction at St. Joseph's College, conducted by the Brothers of the Christian Schools. The same young men were confirmed later at the Cathedral of Hongkong.—(Fides).

world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." The teaching office resides in its highest form in that priest who is the successor of Peter, the infallible teacher of the nations, the Roman Pontiff. It resides essentially also in those priests who are bishops and hence successors of the apostles. As a joint body united to the Pope, the bishops are infallible in teaching God's truth to mankind. Each bishop in his own diocese, though lacking infallibility, is nevertheless God's prophet to his people. In order that the bishops may fulfil their ministry of teaching, God has given them priests as co-operators. Owing to the small number of bishops and the large number of priests, by far the greater part of the preaching in the Church today is done by plain priests. The priest who under his bishop preaches the word of God to the people committed to his care, whether he does this in the pulpit, in the catechism class, in spiritual direction or in the confessional, speaks as the ambassador of Christ. Through him, Christ Himself speaks: "He that heareth you, heareth me; and he that despiseth you, despiseth me." When the priest has preached the gospel, he can say to his congregation, what St. Paul said to one of his: "When your ears received God's message from us, you accepted it, not as the word of men, but as it is indeed, the Word of God."

The preaching of the priest is necessary for the salvation of men. "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on Him, in Whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe Him, of Whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach, unless they be sent? This "sending", or mission to preach, resides in the priesthood and in the priesthood alone. The priest, living as he does in a world which despite nineteen centuries of christianity is largely enslaved by ignorance, hears ringing in his ears those words which at ordination he was told to ponder: "I charge thee, before God and Jesus Christ, who shall judge the living and the dead, by his coming and his kingdom, preach the word, be instant in season and out of season, reprove, entreat and exhort in all patience and teaching. For there shall be a time when they will not endure the sacred doctrine, but having itching ears, they will heap to themselves teachers after their own lusts; and will indeed turn away their ears from the truth and turn aside unto fables. But be thou vigilant, suffer hardship, do the work of an evangelist, fulfil thy ministry."

This ministry of preaching the Gospel is fulfilled by two types of priests, the missionary priest and the resident pastor. The missionary precedes. He it is who must go to those who sit in darkness and in the regions of the shadow of death and point out to them the great light which has come into the world. Since he is sent to them by the apostolic See, he is truly an apostle, that is, one sent, a missionary. Since he teaches these pagans the Gospel of Christ, he is truly an evangelist. Once the community becomes Catholic and the parish is formed, the missionary hands over his work to the resident pastoral clergy, who as soon as convenient are of the same race as the parishioners. It is the duty of these resident pastors to give their Catholic people a deeper appreciation and love of the divine mysteries and to help them to transmit the heritage of the faith to their children and their children's children. These two types of teaching priests — the missionary type that are forever on the march and the pastoral type that reside with their flock—these two types are both necessary to the Church. Both were established by Jesus Christ. For, as St. Paul tells us in the Epistle to the Ephesians: "He made some apostles and some prophets and other some evangelists (these are the missionaries) and other some pastors and doctors," (these are the resident bishops and priests).

It is obvious that the priest's teaching office imposes on him a two-fold duty: he must all his life study the sacred sciences and he must practice what he preaches. The world has nothing but contempt for an ignorant or insincere preacher. For the priests who are proceeding on their misionary journey this evening, as for all priests, Mother Church prays: "Pour down, O Lord, on these, thy servants, the grace of Thy blessing that by the gravity of their actions and the example of their lives, they may show themselves to be priests formed by the rule which Paul gave to Titus and Timothy; that meditating on thy law day and night, they may believe what they read, teach what they believe and practise what they preach."

The Priest as Sacrificial Agent.

Wondrously important as is the priest's teaching office, resulting as it does "in the fall and the resurrection of many," far more important is the priest's sacrificial office. When Christ preached the doctrine of the Bread of Life in the synagogue at Capharnaum, and told the Jews that the Bread which He would give was His own flesh which they must eat if they would have everlasting life, many of His disciples, hearing it, said "This saying is hard and who can hear it?" . . . And after this many of his disciples went back and walked no more with him."

Likewise when Christ through His Church teaches that in the Mass, Bread and Wine are changed into His real Body and Blood, are offered up in sacrifice and are given in communion as the food of souls, many Christians, since the sixteenth century, have found this a hard saying and have walked no more with His Church. It is indeed the Mass that matters. For the Mass is the very centre of the Christian religion here on earth; it is the unbloody continuation of the sacrifice of Calvary. In the Mass, at the Last Supper and on the Cross, the priest is the same, the victim is the same and the sacrifice is the same. Christ is the priest offering; Christ is the victim offered; the manner of offering alone is different. In the Mass, Christ, the high-priest according to the order of Melchisedech, using the priestly minister as a necessary mouthpiece, changes bread and wine into His Body and Blood; in the Mass, using the priestly minister as a necessary instrument, Christ the priest offers this Body that was pierced and Blood that was shed on Calvary, to adore, thank, propitiate and petition the Blessed Trinity; in the Mass, Christ the priest, using the priestly minister as a necessary steward, gives His Body and Blood as the food of souls. The Christian priest, in all the acts of his sacred ministry, is a mediator, but never so completely a mediator as in the sacrifice of the Mass. The sacrificial office is so essential to the nature of a priest, that one cannot exist without the other. The very definition of a priest is that he is a man who offers sacrifice to God. "For every high-priest, taken from among men, is ordained for man in the things that appertain to God, that he may offer up gifts and sacrifices for sins." No man may validly exercise such an office unless he was chosen therefor by God. "Neither doth any man take the honour to himself, but he that is called by God, as Aaron was." God, who chose Aaron through Moses, chooses His priests through the bishops of the Church who ordain them. Once a man has received, through the imposition of episcopal hands, the office of the priesthood, his main task in life is to give God infinite honour and men divine benefits by offering up the eucharistic sacrifice of Christ in the Mass. "The chalice of benediction which we bless is it not a communion of the blood of Christ? And the bread which we break is it not a partaking of the Body of the Lord." This blessing and breaking is the sacrificial oblation of Our Lord's Body and Blood on the Christian altar unto the remission of sins and the subsequent distribution of the same as the food of our souls. "We have an altar, whereof they have no power to eat who serve the (Jewish) tabernacle." It is only by being thus eucharistically immolated, offered and administered that the Blood of Christ, shed on Calvary, reaches our conscience to cleanse it from dead works.

The sacrificial office of the priest is therefore necessary for the salvation of men. "Amen, amen, I say unto you, except you eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink His blood, you shall not have life in you." For the Christian who has reached the age of reason, the Body and Blood of Christ is the food his soul needs, if it would live. Without the priests, this divine food would not be available. That Christ's sacrifice should be offered under the new covenant in every place by the priests whom He had sanctified had been foretold by the prophet Malachy: "Presently the Lord

Missionary to China Leaves a Message to the Buds

Dear Buds,

Father Jim came into my room the other day. He found me somewhere under a pile of trunks and suitcases—packing up for China. "Before you go," he said, "you must write a word to the Buds." "You bet I will," I said, "and only that you wouldn't publish it I'd give them a clue as to who you are."

Well, dear Buds, by the time you are reading this we shall all be well on our way. From China we shall try to tell you something of what we are doing and how your prayers are helping the poor little pagan children over there.

And remember, if you ever meet us in China you will be assured of a very enthusiastic welcome, especially if you come as a missionary later on.

Meanwhile let us pray for one another, you that God may bless our efforts for souls and we that God may bless and protect you and yours and help you always to do His Holy Will.

In the Seminary we were always interested in your "Rose Garden", and when we get to China we shall be just as eager as ever to read what you have to say to Father Jim. Keep him busy, and may you always be faithful little missionaries.

Your sincere friend,
FATHER McGRATH.

FATHER JIM GIVES IN!

Believe it or not, Buds, but right here in Toronto is one of your chums who got all the "dope" about me. How did it happen? Well, somehow like this! You see, I was at the C.C.S.M.C. Convention here a little while ago, and I was so tickled with the enthusiastic crowds I saw that I was a bit off my guard. On Saturday afternoon during the Convention, many Crusaders visited China Mission Seminary. Now I could have escaped by staying away from the Seminary that afternoon, but I just couldn't miss meeting and talking with such friends of the Missions. Walking through the corridor I heard somebody looking for Father Jim. I volunteered to locate him for the enquiring one, but I seemed to know so much about this particular enquirer (for she was one of our best "buds" who wrote me often) that she got wise, and I had to own up, but she promised me to keep it a secret. Her first name begins with the letter—no, I won't even tell you that much, for she might have too much trouble keeping her secret then. Anyhow, her picture has appeared in the Garden, so now it's up to you all to get busy.

On behalf of the missionaries who have left for China, Father McGrath has been kind enough to write a message to you, so I will not say any more to you this time. I'm very sorry I can't publish the names of even half those who have become buds since last month, but you are sure of being mentioned if you send along your picture.

In your prayers this month remember the Holy Souls in Purgatory, and specially the relatives of your fellow-buds.

Best of luck to you all.

FATHER JIM.

P.S. I forgot to say that the bud who really knows me wrote me afterwards and said I was a real sport to tell her who I was. Well, I'm not so sure about that, but I hope she is a real sport herself, and doesn't give me away.

"After we finish reading 'China', mother gives it to a friend who always sends it to a priest in the Old Country" writes a bud from Thorold, Ont. That's a good idea! When you've finished reading this little Mission magazine, pass it on to a friend, and in that simple way you are helping to make known the great work and needs of the Foreign Missions.

A Call from Manitoba to Manitoba.

"Enclosed please find one dollar for subscription to 'China'. I would like to know how many buds hail from Manitoba. Come on, you Manitoba buds, let's hear from you, or the buds from other places will think there are no Catholic boys and girls out here interested in the missions. If they think so they are wrong, because there are lots of good Catholic boys and girls out here. I know who you are, Father Jim, but I will not tell." That's the kind of enthusiast that comes from Manitoba. I think there are quite a few like Eileen Parker who wrote the above. Send along your picture as you promised, Eileen. A letter addressed to 227 Kilbride Ave., West Kildoran, Man., will get you acquainted with Eileen, whose pen-name, by the way, is "Peewee".

I hope Margaret Ladouceur was granted her request. I prayed for you, Margaret, and I shall be glad to hear from you again. Margaret's address is 228 Woburn Ave., Toronto, and her pen-name is "Brownie".

Perhaps He Didn't Know Me!

Marjory Brennan writes from 373 Westmoreland Ave., Toronto: "I have been reading with interest the items in your Rose Garden. A young man was here getting subscriptions for 'China' and I tried to find out from him your name, but I could not get much satisfaction." Marjory is 14 years old and attends Loretta Abbey. Pen-name, "Babe".

The Catholic Missionary.

whom you seek, and the angel of the covenant whom you desire, shall come to his temple . . . and he shall purify the sons of Levi and shall refine them as gold and as silver, and they shall offer sacrifices to the Lord in righteousness . . . For from the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same, my name will be great among the Gentiles, and in every place there will be sacrifice and there will be offered to my name a clean oblation." Without priests, there would be now no sacrifice offered to God on this earth. What this world would be without the sacrifice of the Mass, one trembles to contemplate. The millions of sins that daily outrage the justice of God, sins that "crucify again the Son of God, and make him a mockery," involve such an injustice, that this planet would deserve another deluge, were it not for the fact that every hour of the day throughout the world, Christ offers to God through the hands of the priest, that sacrifice whose propitiatory value exceeds the evil of sin. The honour given to God by a single Mass is infinite, greater than that given by all the virtues of all the saints. The benefits given to men by a single Mass are utterly beyond comprehension. The Mass is beyond all comparison the most divine act occurring in the visible universe. Without priests there would be no Mass. Priests, therefore, are as necessary as is the Mass.

Since according to the will of God as stated by the Prophet Malachy, the eucharistic sacrifice must be offered in every place, from the rising of the sun even until the going down of the same, from the far East to the far West, then priests are needed to offer this eucharistic sacrifice in every place, in the far East as in the far West.

The sacrificial office, while conferring on the priest his greatest dignity, likewise confers on him his greatest obligation to sanctity. Christ's words are quite plain. "If any man minister to me, let him follow me." A priest is a minister of Christ; his life must be a following of Christ. The following of Christ results in that intimate union with the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, in which perfection consists. "They who with all their hearts follow Christ," writes St. Thomas Aquinas, "are perfect." St. Paul as usual carefully applies his Master's teaching. He requires of the priest, whether he be a bishop or not, that he be "blameless," that is, irreproachable and consequently perfect. In thus requiring that "the man of God be perfect", St. Paul sets up no impossible standard. He does not demand of the priest that he possess the final perfection of the creature, which is unattainable in this world. St. Paul himself does not count himself to have laid hold of it already, but he adds: "Yet one thing I do; I forget what is behind me and strain forward to what is before and press on towards the goal to gain the reward of God's heavenly call in Christ Jesus. Let such of us as are perfect be thus minded." Perfection in this world, as St. Bernard remarked one thousand years later, consists in the constant striving after perfection. This constant striving after perfection, involving as it does daily and lifelong prayer, work, study and self-denial, is the most difficult of all the priest's tasks.

The Priest as Pastor.

The sacrificial and prophetical office do not exhaust the mediatorship of the priest. It is not enough to give infinite worship to God, provide an inexhaustible reservoir of graces for men and fill their minds with a knowledge and a desire of these graces. The life of grace must be communicated to each individual. No one actually benefits by the sacrifice of Christ till the fruits of that sacrifice have been brought to him personally. The individual must be born supernaturally; he must grow supernaturally; he must be fed supernaturally; if he contract a spiritual disease, he must be purified supernaturally; if he lose his life of grace, he must be supernaturally resurrected. Now, the means provided by God for men's spiritual birth and growth and food and medicine and resurrection are the sacraments; and the ministers of the sacraments are the priests. "Let a man so account of us," writes that model priest, St. Paul, "as ministers of Christ and dispensers of the mysteries of God."

As the minister of the sacraments, as the dispenser of God's graces to men, the priest fulfils the pastoral office. No two titles give such insight into the nature of the pastoral office as the titles of father and pastor. God gave these titles to His priests to remind men of the greatness of the gifts that they receive through them from Him. What parents are to children in the temporal order that, and much more, are priests in the spiritual order. Truly are priests fathers sharing in a more exalted manner than human parents the power of "the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom all paternity in heaven and earth is named." With a fatherly power and love, they give souls the life of the children of God, feed them with divine nourishment, guide their growth by religious education, and direct their self-expression into wholesome activities by wise laws and worthy example. To the souls whom he has formed for God, the priest may say with St. Paul: "In Christ Jesus by the gospel I have begotten you." This title of father, applied to all priests in the very text of the Mass, is on the lips of the faithful a perpetual expression of their faith and gratitude. In its ordinary form, pater, father, it is given to all priests; in its still more familiar form, papa, pope, it is now reserved to that priest who is the father of all the faithful, the Holy Father.

After the title of father, the next highest is that of pastor or shepherd. Christ is the Good Shepherd; yet it pleases Him to share both His office and His name with His priests. He made Peter, and in varying degrees all other apostles and priests, shepherds or pastors of the flock committed to their care. Theirs is to know, guide, feed, love and defend their flock even at the cost of their lives. Not in their own name or by their own power, but as Christ's representatives do they exercise the pastoral office. He, "the great shepherd of the sheep," made priests pastors when He said to Peter, "Feed my lambs . . . be a shepherd to my sheep." This title is applied to all priests by St. Paul in his epistle to the Ephesians, where we read that Christ made "some apostles and some prophets, and other some evangelists, and other some pastors and doctors, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." Those pastors and doctors are the bishops and priests of the Church. Such is the interpretation of the Catechism of the Council of Trent. St. Peter adds that it is the duty of "the priests that are among you . . . to shepherd the flock of God . . . becoming patterns of the flock."

The pastoral office is not shared equally by all priests. It is possessed in its fulness on earth by the Vicar of Christ, the Roman Pontiff. To him Christ has entrusted His whole flock. It is possessed within the limits of their respective dioceses by the bishops whom "the Holy Ghost has placed . . . to shepherd the Church of God." It is possessed in a subordinate and delegated manner by the plain priest. For the priest at ordination receives the power to forgive sins which is one of the greatest of the pastoral powers. It is, however, the subsequent act of his bishop which gives him people over whom he can exercise this pastoral authority. Yet as he is ordained only for the need or utility of the Church, he is ordained to be an auxiliary pastor. As a matter of fact, as priests are more than fifty times as numerous in this world as bishops, the vast majority of the absolutions from sin in the tribunal of Penance are given by simple priests. The greatest of all pastoral works, to consecrate, offer and administer the Body and Blood of Christ for the living and the dead is performed equally by all priests. While all priests are therefore in a certain sense pastors, he who has been given by the bishop charge of that little flock known as a parish is in a very special sense its pastor and is so styled by the Canon Law of the Church. Nor is the missionary less a pastor because his flock is scattered outside the fold.

The necessity of the pastoral office is clearly taught throughout the Bible. Without spiritual shepherds men are helpless sheep. "And seeing the multitudes he had compassion on them because they were distressed and scattered like sheep that have no shepherd." To save them the Son of God became their shepherd; "Thus saith the Lord God: "Behold I myself will seek my sheep and will visit them. I will feed my sheep . . . I will seek that which was lost; and that which was driven away I will bring again; I will bind up that which was broken, and I will strengthen that which was weak, and that which was fat and strong I will preserve; and I will feed them in judgment." Jesus Christ, the Good Shepherd who laid down His life for His sheep, entrusted after His resurrection His visible pastoral office to the priesthood in the person of Peter. "Feed my lambs; be a shepherd to my sheep." "And He gave some to be . . . pastors . . . for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the Body of Christ . . . that henceforth we be no more children tossed to and fro and carried around by every wind of doctrine, through the trickery of men crafty in devising error; but doing the truth in charity we may grow in all things into him who is the head, Christ." It is the duty of pastors to guide and feed and rule the flock and thus lead them to heaven. Eternal salvation depends upon properly availing oneself of the graces offered by Christ through His priests. "Obey your prelates and be subject to them, for they watch as being to render an account of your souls, that they may do this with joy and not with grief." The salvation of souls, that is the object of the pastoral office; the glory of God and the salvation of men, that is the object of the whole priestly office. In fact, combining the office of teacher, father and pastor into one, St. Paul sums up the whole priestly ministry in two acts, to worship God and to save men: "to offer up gifts and sacrifices to God," "to have compassion on them that are ignorant and that err." The multitudes that are ignorant of God's will or that err in trying to do it are found here in this Christian land; but they are found likewise in greater number and in greater need in pagan lands. If the priest must have compassion on his fellow-Catholics who, though within the true fold, are often in spiritual ignorance and sin, surely, like his divine Master, he must likewise have compassion on the multitudes outside the true fold that are "distressed and scattered like sheep that have no shepherd." To lead them to their Divine Shepherd is a truly priestly task.

To attain success in this task of tasks, nothing less than heroic charity is required. For the pastor, and above all, the missionary, must become the slave of those whom he would serve, however disagreeable and unreasonable they may be. It is precisely because this task of leading souls to Christ requires such heroic efforts of the missionary and brings such glory to God and such inestimable benefits to the converts, that the Catholic Church proclaims that the apostolic priestly life is the highest here below. While all priests are intended to be apostles, as the Church reminds us in their funeral service, the foreign missionary is more than most others an apostolic priest. Hence his special title: Missionary Apostolic.

This Departure Justified.

To the Catholic, therefore, who considers the origin, nature and functions of the priesthood, and realizes how necessary and divinely useful is the role it plays in God's plan for the education of mankind, the significance of this evening's ceremony is apparent and its justification evident. If Jesus Christ wishes to sanctify and save all men, if Jesus Christ entrusts the task of sanctifying and saving men to the Catholic priesthood, if the salvation of men requires priests for preaching the gospel, priests for offering the eucharistic sacrifice and priests for administering the sacraments, then obviously there is as much need for priests in China as in Canada. If priests are the living instruments used by Jesus Christ to offer sacrifice for man to God and to bring down to man a share of God's light, life and love, then surely priests will be as divinely beneficial in Chuchow as in Ontario. If the Bible contains God's command that all the nations of the earth be evangelized and brought to everlasting life, then the surprising thing is not that so many priests go to China but rather so few.

It is true that all are not fit for the missionary life. Only men of good health and heroic charity can hope to succeed in the always difficult and often discouraging missionary life, with its never ending labours and its constantly recurring disappointments and dangers. What then is the motive which has induced these four men, instead of prudently attending to their own salvation in this pleasant Canada of ours, daringly to choose a life in a foreign land, with its privations, its discouragements and its dangers. St. Paul, himself the greatest foreign missionary the world has even seen, answers in words which thrill and burn: Caritas Christi urget nos. It is the charity of Christ which urges them on. Prudence is good, but charity is better. The love of God and the love of one's neighbour for Christ's sake, the two highest motives a man can have, are therefore the compelling motives which induced these four priests of the China Mission Seminary of Scarboro Bluffs, to follow humbly but confidently in the footsteps of those thousands of faithful Catholic missionaries who have laboured and suffered and died in China since the thirteenth century. What matter if the task be difficult? It is the Lord who sends forth these labourers into a country white already to the harvest. It is He who will complete and perfect that which He has inspired and begun.

The Envoi.

Depart then, Christian priests, in the name of God the Father, who from all eternity predestined you for this holy ministry; in the name of the Incarnate Son of God, Jesus Christ, who for this very purpose clothed you with His priesthood; in the name of the Holy Spirit of God, the Lifegiver, whose graces with your co-operation will fit you to be vehicles of sanctity; in the name of the Blessed Virgin, Mother of God, whose unfailing intercessions will be as efficacious in Chuchow as it was in Cana; in the name of St. Joseph, patron of the land of your birth, Canada, and also of the land of your adoption, China; in the name of St. Michael the Archangel, invincible ally in the conflict with Satan; in the name of St. Francis of Assisi, whose feast the Church celebrates to-day and whose friars were the first Catholic Chinese missionaries; in the name of St. Francis Xavier, patron of your Seminary and intrepid missionary of the Far East; and in the name of those missionary priests martyred this year in China. Let the peace of Christ come to you this day and dwell in you all the days of your terrestial pilgrimage, till we all, by God's mercy, unite in that true celestial kingdom which is eternal and divine.

A TOUGH RISK.

A negro woman walked into an insurance office and asked whether they dealt in fire insurance.

"We do," a clerk replied. "What do you want insured?"

"Mah husband."

"Then you don't want fire insurance," smiled the clerk as he reached for another application form. "What you want is a life insurance policy."

"No, Ah don't," exclaimed the woman. "A wants fire insurance. Mah husband been fired fo' times in de las' two weeks."

MISINFORMED.

Brown was a very light sleeper, and took a long time getting to sleep.

One night he was obliged to stay at a hotel, and after much tossing about finally succeeded in getting to sleep. Two hours later came a loud knocking on his door.

"What's wanted?" he asked sleepily.

"Package downstairs for you, sir," came the bellboy's voice.

"Well, let it stay there. It can wait until morning, I suppose?"

The boy shuffled down the corridor and after a long time Brown fell asleep again. Then came another knocking at the door.

"Well, what's up now?" Brown queried.

"It ain't for you, that package."

Boarder—Come quick; two rats are fighting in my room.

Landlady—What do you expect for 50 cents, a bull fight?

HIS MASTER'S VOICE.

Lieutenant (roaring at steward)—"Who told you to put those flowers on the table?"

Steward—"The Commander, sir."

Lieutenant—"Pretty, aren't they?"

SALESMAN'S TALK.

Salesman: "These shirts simply laugh at the laundry, sir."

Customer: "I know it. I've had some come back with their sides split."

THIS IS A RICH ONE.

"When I was a boy," began the millionaire, who was telling his fellow club members some of his troubles in early life, "I walked to Los Angeles; I found a job, and after five years' hard work, I managed to save enough to buy a bicycle.

There was a gasp of astonishment.

"Not long after this," continued the historian, "I got a letter from home. Mother was very ill, so I jumped on the bicycle and rode to Chicago, just in time to hear the doctor say that California air was the only thing that would save her life."

His audience gasped. "You didn't take her to California on the . . . .?" they queried.

"No," interrupted the millionaire, "I carried the old machine into the room, let the air out of the tires, and mother's alive today."

NOT INTERESTED.

Teacher: "What's the interest on a thousand dollars for one year at two per cent.? . . . Ikey, pay attention!

Ikey: "For two per cent., I'm not interested."

Caller—"Who is the responsible man here?"

Office Boy—"If you mean the fellow that always gets the blame, it's me."

Teacher—"When was Rome built?"

Percy—"At night."

Teacher—"Who told you that?"

Percy—"You did. You said Rome wasn't built in a day."

"And what is your brother in college, my good young lady?"

"He is a half back, esteemed Sir."

"No, no, I refer to his studies, my child."

"Ah. He is away back, most venerable gent."

A lady was entertaining the small son of her married friend.

"Are you quite sure you can cut your meat?" she asked after watching him for a moment.

"Oh, yessum," he replied without looking up. "We often have it as tough as this at home."

"Don't you think," airily suggested the new partner, "that you ought to brush up a bit on your correspondence? Use big words; they lend dignity to your letters."

"Perhaps you're right," admitted the other calmly studying the end of his cigar, "but, while eschewing mediocrity of expression through platitudinous phraseology, it behooves one to beware of ponderosity, and to be mindful that pedantry, being indicatory of an inherent megalmania, frustrates its own aspirations and generally results merely in obnubilations."

PROFESSIONAL INTEREST.

Judge (in case of an illicit still, after charging jury)—"Is there any question that anyone would like to ask before considering the evidence?"

Juror—"A couple of us would like to know if the defendant boiled the malt one or two hours, and how does he keep the yeast out?"

POOR PA.

Daughter (having received a new mink coat as a Christmas gift from father)—"What I don't see is how this wonderful fur can come from such a low, sneaking beast."

Father—"I don't ask for thanks, dear, but I really insist on respect."

Old gentleman (in street car): "Has anyone here lost a roll of bills with an elastic around them?"

"Yes, I have," cried a dozen riders.

Old gentleman (calmly): "Well, I just found the elastic.

When the census taker was going the rounds he called on the Stupianski family too. One of the questions he said was:

"Your husband's name, please."

"Pete."

"I want his full name."

"Well, sir, when he's full he thinks he's Schmelling, but when I lay hands on him, he's just plain Pete again."

Friend—"What did the audience say when you told them you had never paid a dollar for a vote?"

Politician—"A few cheered, but the majority seemed to lose interest."

Published Monthly, August excepted, by
ST. FRANCIS XAVIER SEMINARY,
SCARBORO BLUFFS, ONT.

There is no feast of the year which can quite rival the feast of Christmas in its universal observance and in the spirit of love and thoughtfulness for others that seems to be in evidence. As Christmas draws near, there appears to be some wonderful influence at work which tends to lighten the burdens of men's hearts and to direct their thoughts to loved ones wheresoever they may be. Many there are who join in the external festivities of the Christmastide without realizing that it is a time when the love of the Babe of Bethlehem warms the world anew—and friend thinks of friend and sends hearty and sincere greeting because the influence of the Divine child softens the hearts of men even if they do not realize it.

* * * *

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace to men of goodwill". As on that first Christmas morn the joyous song of the angels resounded on the hillside of Bethlehem, so this year, as for centuries past, from Christian lands there will go up a mighty sound of praise, worship and adoration, and of thanksgiving for all that God has done for His creatures. And which of us can fully understand the real meaning of that blessed and holy season! Think of what it has meant for the world and for each of us individually. Nigh two thousand years ago in a hillside cave, God came to earth to be as one of ourselves in all things save sin, and, because of that coming of God to man, we enjoy today the privileges and gifts that are ours as children of God and members of His Holy Church. Think of all that Jesus and Mary and Joseph have meant in our lives, and what our lives would be without them, and we understand then why Christmas is the season of happiness and goodwill. We rejoice and are happy in the thought of our Redemption.

* * * *

But in the midst of our joyous celebration let us give a thought to the millions of our fellow-creatures whom Christ also came on earth to save but who have not yet shared in the fruits of His Coming. During this time of peace on earth, peace that springs from the abiding hope of our own salvation, God grant that we be not unmindful of those unhappy souls, those millions who live and die in pagan lands where there is no Christmas. In China the poor idolaters are still waiting for "the tidings of great joy that shall be to all the people". The two and a half million Catholics in China will observe the Feast, but what of the nearly half a billion Chinese who know not what Christmas means? For them no Christmas bells will ring, no midnight mass nor no Crib will serve to raise their hearts in love to their Creator, no knowledge of their Redemption through the Incarnation will bring them happiness and hope. Everyday affairs will go on as usual for them; before many an idol of stone, men women, and little children will bow down and offer incense in pagan shrines and temples — and yet Christmas was meant for them as for us. Some of our young missionaries will spend their first Christmas in China this month. How sad it will be for them as they look on such sights and see the multitudes pass by. But it will not be all sadness; joy will be theirs when they realize that theirs is the trust and privilege of bringing the Christ-Child into His own in Chuchow, and their self-imposed exile in a heathen land will result in many blessings.

Christmas!

Every creature by Thee made
On Thy birthday homage paid;
Angels lent Thee hymns of praise,
Heaven the star with silver rays,
Wise men incense, myrrh, and gold,
Shepherds wonder manifold,
Beasts the manger, earth the cave,
We the Virgin Mother gave.

* * * *

Such thoughts as those prompt us to remind you, dear reader, that you have a part to play because of the blessings you have received. And your part is a most important and most responsible one. Do you realize that you may be the instrument of saving souls for Christ? If you thought you could, would you not be willing at this Holy Season to make some return to your Infant King for the gifts of Faith He has so freely bestowed on you? You owe that much to Almighty God to at least say a fervent prayer for the poor neglected souls of the heathen. As you see the little Babe of Bethlehem stretch out his arms to you from the Crib, will you not understand that He wants the help of your prayers before He sends His grace to some soul in China who needs it? Surely you will not refuse His appeal. Pray, and pray fervently that God's Kingdom may come in China. Pray, too, that peace may come to unhappy China now ravaged with disease and famine as a result of awful flood calamities and war. Pray that God will continue to bless the work of our Seminary in sending out young priests to spread far and wide throughout that dark pagan land the love of Jesus and Mary; pray that many young men will heed the call of Christ to devote their lives to the glorious work of extending to all men the blessings of the Incarnation and Redemption. As you gather round the home circle at Christmas in all the happiness of Christian union, let your thoughts be with our missionaries for at least a moment, and pray for them and for our students here at the Seminary preparing to follow in their footsteps. And let your prayers be supported by your charity, and with your gifts remember us who are striving to bring Christmas and the love of Christ to the derelict millions of unhappy China.

GOD COMES to GREEN-FIELDS

By Rev. Hugh Sharkey

It was early morning of a day in August, nineteen hundred and thirty-one, and the little city of Green-Fields (Tsingtien) had just awakened to another day of unremitting toil, another uneventful twenty-four hours of life. It lay in the uncertain, mystic light of dawn—a city of tiled roofs, terraced hills and cobble-stoned streets, girt round by high walls and cupped between the towering mountains. Soon, the sun came stealing up behind the hills—the peasant's timepiece; and the cock (the village Big Ben) began to crow lustily from a nearby barnyard. Carriers with all manner of loads began trekking back and forth, boats passed up and down the nearby river—work went on as usual. It was just another day. But, no—if they had only known.

Up a little narrow street, in a little house, there was the silvery tinkle of a bell; the flicker of a little, red lamp; a few, tense, whispered words—and only a few knew that it was not just another day, that something wonderful had happened in that little mountain town—that God had come to Green-Fields and that He had come to stay.

Some time ago, a letter came from the Bishop, telling me that I was to go to Tsingtien with Father Wong, a native priest. Tsingtien, at long last, was to have a pastor to look after the spiritual welfare of the Christians in that city and the surrounding district. So, early one morning in August, we left Chuchow and our brother priests, to take over our new duties. For more than a year I had been as it were in training at Chuchow and now I was going up to the front-line trenches. I was to come face to face with the enemy—and I went with all the high purpose and adventurous longing of the new recruit.

Green-Fields is about fifty miles down the river from Chuchow. The city lies in a fertile valley, edged round by mountains that tower into the very clouds, and the nearby river goes swirling under its high walls—not infrequently flooding its gates. The town is indeed a pretty sight. Its terraced hills rise up like the seated inclosure of the Coliseum, from which one can look down, not on gladiatorial combats, but upon the not less interesting and terrific struggle of man, wrestling a livelihood from the soil. The inhabitants of the city are mostly farmers, fishermen, boatmen, etc. —a hardy class; and the city is famous for its soap-stone carvings —truly works of art, exquisitely executed. Although we are only fifty miles from Chuchow, the dialect used here is very different than that which we learnt there.

Our trip down the river was very slow, due not only to adverse winds, but also to our boatman, whom, for obvious reasons, I nicknamed Rip Van Winkle. We failed to reach our destination on the first day, though we rowed on far into the night, and we were obliged to sleep in the gypsy fashion—under the stars. We differed only from the gypsies in that we slept in the bottom of the boat, wrapped up in our blankets.

Next morning we arrived at Tsingtien, and a group of Christians welcomed us to the mission. Many fire-crackers were set off, causing people to come from far and near, anxious to see what was the matter. Being the only foreigner in the city, I was, and still am, quite a curiosity. One young girl, on seeing me come along the street, hastily picked up her baby sister and went through the door into her house in such a hurry that she collided with an old lady who was just coming out. I could not help but smile, and those around laughed heartily. After I got home, I took a peep in the mirror, to see if I really looked so ferocious.

We spent the day of our arrival fixing things up, and especially in preparing our little chapel, for the coming of God. The upper storey of our residence serves as the Master's room. We feel ashamed to have only this Bethlehem to offer Him, but we are the gainers thereby—for what an inestimable privilege it is to live under the same roof with Almighty God; to have Jesus, just upstairs.

We had very little wherewith to decorate our rude altar, but the snow-white altar cloths made it look so beautiful, and then, too, they were so reminiscent of the spotless breast of Our Lady, that altar upon which the "Bread that came down from Heaven" had first lain—She, whose glorious feast of the Assumption we were to celebrate on the morrow.

The feast arrived, and at early mass the "Gloria" of the priest rang out across the hills, the star-like sanctuary lamp flickered above our Bethlehem, and in the manger of the tabernacle lay the little, golden-haired Baby God, wrapped in the white swaddling clothes of the sacred species—He Who had come to Green-Fields, because His delights "are to be with the children of men."

ORDINATIONS SOON.

Before the next issue of "China" reaches you, our Seminary shall have two more priests. On December 20th, Rev. James McGillivray will be ordained in his parish church at Glace Bay, N.S., by His Excellency Bishop Morrison, of Antigonish; about the same time, Rev. Wm. McNabb is to be ordained in his parish church at St. Thomas, Ont., by His Excellency Bishop Kidd, of London. Both of the Ordinandi expect to celebrate their first Solemn High Masses at midnight, Christmas Eve.

CHINESE CONGREGATION A SUCCESS.

The Chinese Congregation known as the "Disciples of the Lord," founded in 1927 at Swanhwafu, China, by His Excellency, Archbishop Celso Costantini, Apostolic Delegate to China, and the late Bishop Philip Chao, one of the six Chinese bishops consecrated by the Holy Father in 1926, has now ordained two to the priesthood and has over 60 members. This new Chinese Congregation has been guided in its initial development by Spanish Redemptorists. Its special aim is to produce Chinese priests of outstanding intellectual ability, masters of the Chinese language, who will be equipped to evangelize the higher as well as the lower classes.

THE "CRUSADER."

Last month the "Crusader," official organ of the Canadian Catholic Students' Mission Crusade, made its first appearance in its enlarged form, and we offer our congratulations to the Editor, Rev. Wm. Kennedy, on the very excellent make-up of the publication, which is now double its original number of pages. The "Crusader" is doing splendid work in fostering interest in the missions among Catholic students, and we hope the day is not far distant when every single classroom in our Catholic schools from coast to coast will welcome the "Crusader" as an indispensable item of their mission literature.

CHINESE GRATEFUL FOR POPE'S AID FOR VICTIMS OF FLOOD.

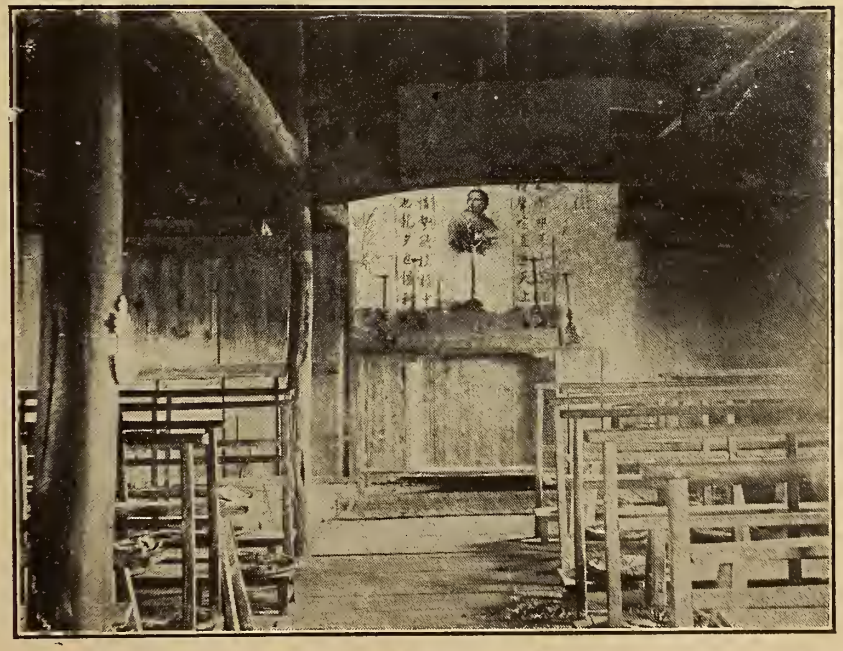
Wuhu, China—The Chinese press recently carried front page articles on the Holy Father's contribution of 250,000 lire for the relief of flood refugees.

Many important persons, pagan mostly, presented themselves at the Catholic missions to express their gratitude on learning of the Pope's benevolent regard for their afflicted countrymen.

The frightful conditions wrought by the floods have given further occasions for the Chinese to witness the practical action of Christian charity as exemplified by the priests, brothers and Sisters working among the flood victims.

CHINESE CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY RECOGNIZED.

The Catholic University of Peking, under the direction of the American Benedictines, has been officially registered with the Chinese Government. This means that all the rights of a university will be accorded it and its degrees will be recognized by the government.



CHANGING CHINA.

From Shantung the Associated Press reports a significant incident. "China's only complete set of Buddhist classics was detroyed here when the local school board took over a temple in which the 30,000 volumes had been stored since the Ming Dynasty days. Finding it difficult to move the books to make room for school desks, they threw two-thirds of them into a bonfire. Buddhist teachings have no value for present-day Chinese, they argued.

380 MISSIONARIES LABOR IN STRIFE-TORN MANCHURIA.

Rome—(N. C. W. C.-Fides)—Manchuria, arena of the present Sino-Japanese dispute, is the field of labor of 380 Catholic priests, Brothers and Sisters, of whom 175 are foreign and 205 are native. The Missionaries of Paris are the pioneers in Manchuria and staff missions in the present focal points of interest, Mukden and Kirin. Catholic bishops reside in these two cities.

If God has blessed you with an abundance of this world's goods you can show your gratitude by aiding His mission work.

Our priests will be glad to offer the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass for your intentions if you send your Mass stipends to the Seminary.

"We feel ashamed to have only this Bethlehem to offer Him," writes Father Sharkey in his article on opposite page.

December 3rd is the Feast of our Patron, St. Francis Xavier.

Saint Francis Xavier's Description of China

"Opposite to Japan lies China, an immense empire, enjoying profound peace, and which, as the Portuguese merchants tells us, is superior to all Christian states in the practice of justice and equity. The Chinese whom I have seen in Japan and elsewhere, and whom I got to know, are white in colour, like the Japanese, are acute, and eager to learn. In intellect they are superior even to the Japanese. Their country abounds in plenty of all things, and very many cities of great extent cover its surface. The cities are very populous; the houses ornamented with stone roofings, and very elegant. All reports say that the empire is rich in every sort of produce, but especially in silk. I find, from the Chinese themselves, that amongst them may be found many people of many different nations and religions, and, as far as I could gather from what they said, I suspect that among them are Jews and Mahometans.

"Nothing leads me to suppose that there are Christians there. I hope to go there during this year, 1552, and penetrate even to the Emperor himself. China is that sort of kingdom, that if the seed of the Gospel is once sown, it may be propagated far and wide. And moreover, if the Chinese accept the Christian faith, the Japanese would give up the doctrines which the Chinese have taught them. Japan is separated from Liampou (which is a principal town in China) by a distance of about three hundred miles of sea. I am beginning to have great hopes that God will soon provide free entrance to China, not only to our Society, but to religious of all Orders, that a large field may be laid open to pious and holy men of all sorts, in which there may be great room for devotion and zeal, in recalling men who are now lost to the way of truth and salvation. I again and again beg all who have a zeal for the spreading of the Christian faith to help by their holy sacrifices and prayers these poor efforts of mine, that I may throw open an ample field to their pious labours.

"I place my confidence in the goodness of God and the infinite merits of our Lord Jesus Christ, that I may bring to its accomplishment, as I have designed it, this most irksome voyage to China. My hair has become quite white, but I am as active and robust as I ever was in my life. The labours which are undergone for the conversion of a people so rational, so desirous to know the truth and be saved, result in very sweet fruit to the soul. Even at Amanguchi, when the King allowed us to preach the faith and a vast concourse of people gathered around us, I had an amount of joy and vigour and delight of heart, such as I never experienced in my life before. I saw how by means of our ministry the spirit of the bonzes was broken down by God, and the most glorious victory over most formidable enemies was gained. I delighted also to see the joy of neophytes at the defeat of the bonzes, and their evident zeal to attack the pagans and draw them to baptism, as well as their exultation when the battle was won, as they talked over their victories amongst themselves, when the superstitions of the heathen were put to flight. These things made me so overflow with joy, that I lost all sense of suffering.

"Would to God that these divine consolations, which God so graciously gives us in the midst of our labours, might not only be related by me, but also some experience of them be brought home to our European Universities, to be tasted as well as heard of! Then many of those young men given up to study would turn all their cares and desires to the conversion of infidels, if they could once taste the delight of the heavenly sweetness which comes from such labours."

The above is a quotation from a letter written by the Saint at Cochin, January 29, 1552.

CHINESE SUCCEED IN TORONTO SCHOOLS.

Three Chinese children who came to this country but two years ago have headed their respective classes in the public schools of Toronto, one securing 100 per cent. on every subject in the entrance examination. Since coming to Canada these children have had to learn the English language, in itself a big undertaking. The Oriental mind may be mystifying to the West, but it knows the perseverance that overcomes obstacles.—(Toronto daily paper.)

CHINESE MARTYR.

A Chinese priest, Father Gabriel Hu, was one of four priests recently killed by bandits at Tohe yen Kow, Hupeh Province, China. Father Hu, a professor in the seminary, is called "the finest figure among the martyrs". When insulted and threatened with death he cried out, "Good! Good!" The bandits took him to the seminary cloister, stripped him, put him on his knees and beheaded him.

WORTH THINKING ABOUT.

We have one object in this life: to save our souls and to help others to save theirs. Nothing else should worry us. If we allow other things to enslave us and to draw us away from the goal of life's Journey we will pay the tremendous price of sacrificing eternity for time, God for mammon.

The world may be kind to us for a time. It may gladden our pathway with attractive pleasure and deceiving glory, but such flowers will soon, ah, too soon, shrivel up and die. What then? The world's true reward to its servants—Death.

God has been good to us. He has given us life, the secret of happiness, every opportunity to gain an eternal crown. Infinitely more precious than all the honors, all the pleasures of the world is the Faith He has bequeathed to us. Cherish it; live according to its dictates; thank God daily for it. And don't forget to share it with others. God has commanded this and if we neglect this commandment only one-half of the task of life has been accomplished.

Prayer comes first for the propagation of the Faith in God's work and without Him all effort is vain "Unless the Lord build the house, they labor in vain who build it." Alms are necessary to maintain the missionaries, to support their apostolic works, to keep catechists, to train young men for the priesthood. If we have much we should give much, if we have a little we must give a little. A wonderful characteristic about such giving is that it always comes back. If you doubt this, just try it.

ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS.

Some time ago the Seminary received one thousand dollars, a bequest from the estate of a benefactor in Western Canada for the support of priests in China. Whilst respecting the wishes of those concerned that no names be published in connection with the gift, we must publicly express our gratitude. In doing so we should like to hope that there will be many readers of "China" who will realize our need of financial assistance and resolve to help us.

TORONTO TO VANCOUVER.

Co-operation of the Home and Foreign Missions was shown in a striking manner recently. The Sisters of Service, a Religious Community doing mission work in Canada, wanted their new mission motor van brought to Vancouver from Toronto. Two of our priests about to leave for China offered to drive the mission car to the coast. They left the Seminary on October 12th, and delivered the van in Vancouver to Rev. Father Daly, founder of the Sisters of Service, on November 5th. The trip was made by easy stages and without mishap, and the two priests, Fathers McGrath and John MacDonald, left by the "Empress of Canada" on November 7th, and are now in China. Rev. A. J. MacDonald, of the Seminary, accompanied them to Vancouver, and on his return he had many interesting things to tell the students. The picture above was taken at the Seminary a few minutes before the priests left "home."

OUR BUILDING FUND.

Readers will remember that, for some time past, we have been endeavouring to gather together sufficient funds to permit us to build an addition to our Seminary in order to take care of the numbers of students who wish to come here and begin their studies for the Priesthood. At present our Seminary is filled, and we have had to convert our lecture room into bedrooms in order to accommodate students. Each year an increasing number of vocations brings home to us the necessity of enlarging our Seminary, but so far the Building Fund has grown but slowly. We are thankful to those who have sent us donations for this purpose. This month, we acknowledge the receipt of twenty dollars raised for our Building Fund through the efforts of Mrs. Reeves and other friends in St. Patrick's Parish, London, Ont.

CITY OF SIGHS.

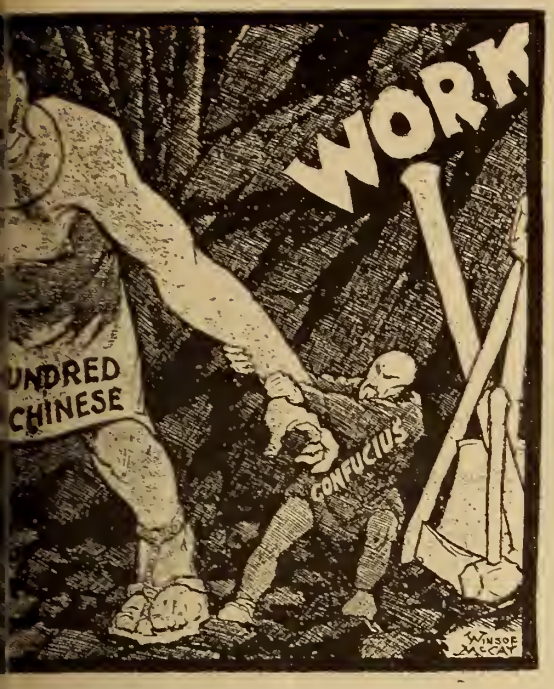
Hankow, China — Food is scarce in this flood-stricken city, where the river waters at times have risen above the roofs of many buildings. And when a pig comes floating in the second-storey window of a seminary that harbors, on that same storey, a large number of children, roast pork is in order. Float in, the squealer did; and the children captured him and prepared him for dinner. Fish swam at large in, out and around the houses in Hankow. Bishop Massi, Vicar Apostolic, describes Hankow, submerged in an immense ocean with islands here and there made by the tops of trees and the roofs of taller buildings, as a "City of Sighs".

The students say farewell to Father McGrath and Father MacDonald

China — BOLSHEVIST or CHRISTIAN?

Christianity is Not Considered i

Most of those listening to me this evening have heard a great deal about China in recent years. Somehow or other China has found a way of crashing the front pages of our newspapers, but for the most part her story is one of sorrow and perpetual disaster. Now my dear friends, we must take with a very liberal grain of salt all that we read concerning China or any other country. The picture of life, anywhere, as portrayed by despatches to the Associated Press could hardly be accepted as an indication of normal life in any part of the world. And the more remote the country the more sensational must the item be before it can take its place among the most commonplace of local events.



"News value", after all, is almost essentially sensationalism. You all know the old gag that if a dog bites a man, that isn't news, but if a man bites a dog, that is: if a man lights his pipe with a match or a piece of paper there is nothing particularly interesting to the public in recounting the fact. But if a man lights his pipe with a twenty-dollar bill, that fact would be of interest in almost any part of the world. We know, however, that men as a rule are not addicted to such a custom. Neither do they bite dogs for pastime. Hence it is at once obvious that the daily press despatches are far more concerned over what is unusual, sensational, rather than with what is ordinary and normal, and for that very reason prosaic and uninteresting.

Take your own case, for example. How many of those listening to me tonight have ever had their names in the papers? And yet it is the easiest thing in the world to have done. You may be the most faithful husband or wife or most devoted father or mother in the world and go down to your grave unwept, unhonored and unsung, as far as the general public is concerned. You may take your lunch pail under your arm and trudge to work in rain and shine for forty years and the newspapers will not devote to your quiet heroism half the space given to the old lady who dies and wills twenty thousand dollars to her pet parrot. But depart, for one fleeting moment, from the straight and narrow path. Rob a bank or hold up the corner grocery store or be caught with a bottle of whiskey bearing a defaced label. Ah, then it is different. At once you are a well known figure. Thousands will suddenly become aware of your existence, and your whole character may be judged by the action of a moment rather than by the hidden heroism of a lifetime.

You will ask me what all this has to do with China. My dear friends, simply this. That the Western world is not, and never has been, the least bit interested in the normal life of a people who were highly civilized when our own ancestors were barbarian. Two hundred million peasants of China may rise at dawn and struggle till dark with the stubborn rice paddles in order to eke out a miserable existence and the Western world knows nothing of them. But twenty men, out of the hundreds of millions in China, may capture a missionary or hold up an express train and the whole world knows all about it next day. And the unfortunate part of it is that the world judges the whole of China by the impressions it garners from just such despatches to the press.

Erroneous Ideas Abroad.

To begin with, we are very prejudiced against the Chinese. Whenever people hear that you are going to China as a missionary they throw up their hands almost in despair. They think that to do so is to court almost certain death; that the chief occupation of the missionary today is that of dodging bandits and Communist soldiers, and that if you are successful in these guerilla tactics, you will only perish when the Yangtse or the Yellow river goes on its annual rampage. Such ideas, of course, are anything but true to life. And I think the easiest way to set your minds at rest on this particular question is to give you a few figures as to the personnel of the Missions in China today. I have at hand only the official figures for the Catholic Missions, and do not know those of the other denominations. But were such figures available, it would only serve the more to strengthen our case, our case being that kidnapping and cruelty and murder of foreigners is still, thank God, a very unusual thing in China. In round numbers, we have in China today: Over 50 bishops, 4,000 priests; 5,000 sisters and 9,000 seminarians, in the preparatory and major seminaries. There you have over 9,000 missionaries, of whom today only one, as far as I know, is in the hands of bandits. One out of 9,000! During the past six years in China about thirty-five priests have been put to death. In our Province of Chekiang, one of the largest in China, not a single missionary priest or Sister has been molested or disturbed during the whole of the civil war period. Hence you can see that the idea of China's being one large cauldron overflowing with war and banditry is very much exaggerated. Why, there are in China today many people who hardly know there was ever a war on. And missionaries are still going over in hundreds, knowing that most of them will continue to do their work in peace.

Obstacles to Conversion.

Do you know what constitutes one of the greatest obstacles to the conversion of China? Simply the contradiction that exists and that always has existed between the principles of Christianty and the principles of Christendom. We know, alas, that Christendom is no longer Christian, that in the solution of the problems which a frantic world has been for years trying to solve Christianity has no place. The Chinese, however, do not always stop to make such a distinction. Missionaries go over to China and preach brotherly love and interest in one's neighbour and forgiveness of injuries and peace. The supposedly Christian world and the Christian world powers trample into the gutter every sacred principle of Christianity when it comes to their dealings with China. And what can the Chinese conclude? I leave it to yourselves to answer.

For example, during the past five years in China 5,000 people have died every day of starvation. 5,000 people every day! Only a few days ago we read of one of the greatest flood disasters in China's history, with millions drowned and millions in danger of death. Here, surely, was a fertile field for the application of some of those principles which missionaries were preaching to China. Yet, during those years when Chinese were dying daily of starvation in their thousands, millions of bushels of precious, life-saving wheat were rotting in the huge elevators of the Western States and of the Canadian wheat pool. Thinking people in China could not but marvel at the callousness displayed by those whose representatives preached to them of charity and love of one's neighbor.

And they preached also of peace, peace on earth to men of good will. And meanwhile to starving war-torn China there came from the Christian world across the great Pacific and across the trans-Siberian railway, not food, not wheat, but rifles and machine guns and artillery. Shipment of arms to China was one of the big business movements which helped certain nations tide over their period of depression, and the more the Chinese fought the better they liked it, even while the world was talking disarmament and the League of Nations was prating about peace. What a magnificent gesture it would have been if America or Canada had shipped to China a few million bushels of wheat! What an opportunity to demonstrate to the Chinese nation that the principles which missionaries are trying to inculcate into them are at least taken seriously by some part of the Christian world.

Will Communism Prevail?

China is at present in the throes of the birth of a new nationalism. Every student of history knows that changes such as mark the transition from an empire of such antiquity to a republic with modern aspirations, be they ever so premature, must necessarily be accompanied by a certain amount of chaos and upheaval. The question that might well concern the Christian world is just what sort of China will emerge from out the welter of the struggle that has been going on for years. Will it be a China imbued with the principles of Communism? Will it be a China to which all things religious are anathema? The answer will profoundly affect the tottering superstructure of our present society and our present civilization.

If China during the past ten years has seemed to lean towards Communism, it is not because the hideous tenets of that system possess any appeal for the Chinese people. Such a state of affairs has been made possible by the blundering stupidity of the Western powers. China turned to Russia only after her appeal for financial and military assistance in the reconstruction of her armies had fallen upon unheeding ears. Russia was quick to respond, seeing an opportunity for prolific propaganda in China. Dr. Sun Yat Sen, the founder of the Chinese Republic, held no brief for Communism. He urged the powers over and over again to help in the reconstruction of China along modern lines. He even pointed out the very dangers of what actually came to pass, that if the powers did not help, Russia would be only too glad to do so. The rest is history. With the help of Russian advisers and Russian

LETTERS FROM OUR MISSIONARIES IN CHINA

FATHER SERRA, writing from Chuchow, says: "Here at Headquarters we are doing our best. Fathers Amyot and Boudreau are now out on a mission tour, which I expect will take them about three weeks to complete. Each of them is taking a section of the Parish, and they will call at each place where there are some Christians and administer the Sacraments and instruct the converts. Our priests are all very well, thank God, and the Sisters have recovered from their recent illness, except that Sister Catherine is yet not feeling as well as usual. All of us are looking forward quite eagerly to the arrival of the new band of priests and Sisters. I am sending you a letter which Father Gignac wrote me from Lungchuan."

FATHER GIGNAC'S letter, written from Lungchuan, where he has been stationed with Father Stringer as assistant to Father Joseph Venini: "Father Joe is fine. He had our rooms fixed up and had glass in the windows, and my room has a new cedar floor. We've got spring locks on our doors, and my own room is right next to the 'bathroom.' We have running water and a bath here, you know. That is, the water runs when you pour it, and you know what I mean by the 'bath.' It is a big wooden tub about six feet long, and we made good use of it while the weather was warm. You will want to know how we got here. Well, here goes! We left Sungyang Wednesday, Sept. 2nd, and reached Nioh Chee, where we put up for the night. Fr. Stringer and I said Mass there the next morning. The next night we stopped at another little village and slept in the boat. I called the boatman at 5.30 to get a move on. Fr. Stringer said I was a 'real revolutionist' for stirring things up like that. The wind was with us, so we made fairly good time, the boatmen (two of them, with a new boat) working until dark. It rained all night as we stayed at some forsaken place on a rocky shore; there was not another boat in sight, and we were still 90 li from Lungchuan. Could we walk? The water was too high, and the boatmen had no intention of moving. As we were having breakfast a chair went by, the carriers stepping right merrily. About 7.30 we started out to walk the longest walk I ever made in my life. When we reached the first little town (about 10 li) we came up to the chair. I was trying to get Fr. Stringer to walk slowly at first, so that we would have strength enough to reach the end. About ten o'clock we got to Da-ta and had some dinner. Just as we were finishing dinner the chair went by. 'There goes that chair —we must keep up with it.' We still had about 50 li to do, and I was getting tired. On we walked. So-Na (the sacristan) did not know the road, so we asked everyone we met if this was the way to Lungchuan. By this time we were resting at every lian-ding we met. ('Lian-ding' means a covered resting place along the road.) Then came the grind, climbing a big mountain. Fr. Stringer was feeling the pace now; we were thirsty, and all we could get was tea. Oh, for a drink of good cold water! If anybody at this time had walked up to us with a good egg-nog, we would have blessed him till our dying day. 'How many more li?' we asked. 25, we were told. Well, that's not far, and we ought to get to Lungchuan at 4.30. We were an hour getting over that mountain, and I was sure I had walked 20 li and that Lungchuan would be just on the other side. When we reached the other side we saw a town. 'Well, there's Lungchuan! Let's hurry and get there, for it looks like rain.' We reached the town about 4.15. 'Is this Lungchuan?' we asked the chair-carriers, who had just caught up to us. 'No, this is Shi-Pa-Weu. Lungchuan is 20 li more.' Oh, dear! and we stiff and sore and dripping with perspiration from the journey. If every drop of sweat would save a Chinese, there would be no more need of missionaries in China. Boy, twenty more li. Well, we'll stop for some tea. Plod, plod— on we went. No more hills, we were told. When we thought we had walked about 20 li, we asked 'How far now?' 'Twenty li,' they said. Good-night! hadn't we moved at all? We kept on walking, and finally we came to a little 'lian-ding,' and we could see the tower that pointed out Lungchuan. A stranger who passed, when he found out we were going to the church, offered to show us the way, as he lived near the church. After walking for half an hour through rice fields and then through the whole length of the city, we reached our mission, weary, worn, and tired.

"Here we are now at the 'River's End'—the scene of our new labours. On the Feast of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin we had a High Mass. I was celebrant, and Fathers Venini and Stringer were the choir. The pastor said it was the largest crowd that had ever come to church there. It was the first High Mass in Lungshuan since Fr. Venini bought his organ last May. We are getting along great under Fr. Venini's care, and he makes things as pleasant as possible for us. I hope the Sisters are as well as ever. Give my regards to all at headquarters. What's the latest news from Scarboro Bluffs?"

FATHER AMYOT'S letter is dated from Yun-Hwo, and says: "By the above heading you can see that I am out on the road. I intended to leave for Chingning, 60 li over the mountains south of here, but it rained so hard I felt another day's waiting here would not do any harm. The whole countryside is in good shape, for this fall has been fairly wet. The rice crops were good in all parts of our district as far as I have heard, and the fall bean crop is in perfect form. There is little else doing now except the

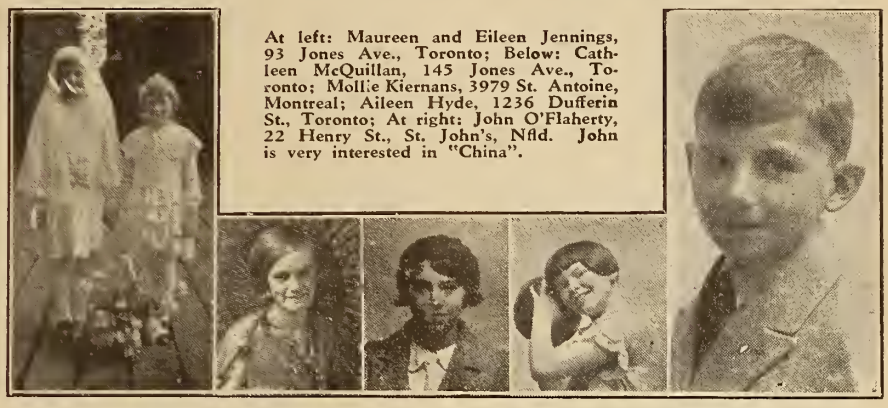
Edited by FATHER JIM

The only conditions of membership in the Rose Garden are: (1) To say every day the Prayer for the Conversion of China; (2) To go to Holy Communion once a month for the Intention of Missionary Vocations. Certificates and pins will be sent to all members.

Our Buds Help a Lot.



"It is very sad that there are so many children and even grown-ups in China who do not know nor believe in the One True God" writes Margaret Cameron, of Greenfield, Ont. Yes, Margaret, it is indeed a very sorrowful thing that hundreds of millions of people are adoring the devil instead of the good God Who died for them, but it is the work of the missionaries to try to teach those poor pagan Chinese how to love God, and in their glorious work you and all the buds are helping a great deal by your prayers and Holy Communions. Keep up the good work!

"Father Jim, when you are looking through your 'fan' mail and find my letter there, please send me my badge and certificate, and if you have time please slip in a little note from yourself. Many buds have written to me." Mary Grant, away out in Victoria, B.C., got the little note she asked for because I had failed to attend to her first letter asking to join our Garden. If any buds should not receive their certificates after a reasonable time has elapsed after joining our Club, they should write to me again and let me know, because I try to send the badge and certificates as soon as I can, and everybody seems to like them immensely.

Ohio School, Digby Co., N.S.

"I am herewith sending you some more stamps, along with the names of some children who want to join the Little Flower's Rose Garden: Anita Gaudet, Rose M. Amirault, Evelyn Dugas, Eunice Deveau, Pauline Dugas, Rosie Dugas, Emile Gaudet, Elsie Comeau and Carl Comeau."

M. C. B., Teacher.

At left: Maureen and Eileen Jennings, 93 Jones Ave., Toronto; Below: Cathleen McQuillan, 145 Jones Ave., Toronto; Mollie Kiernans, 3979 St. Antoine, Montreal; Aileen Hyde, 1236 Dufferin St., Toronto; At right: John O'Flaherty, 22 Henry St., St. John's, Nfld. John is very interested in "China".

Best of Luck!

"My big sister says she knows who Fr. Jim is, but she won't tell me; she says I'll have to find out for myself!" Maude Lane, 25 Prince's St., St. John's. Even older sisters often make bad guesses, Maude, but if you find out, you'll let me know, won't you?

Buds from way our West and way down East are asked to write to Anita Martin, 329 Isabella Street, Pembroke, Ont. And don't forget her pen-name is "Jolly".

Josephine Babineau takes an interest in all the other buds at Fairville, N.B. In a recent letter she wanted to know how many of our members had ever read Father Sharkey's book of poems, "Loom of the Fairies". Many of the buds she knew had a copy, and two of them won the book as a prize in school. Father Sharkey is now on the Missions in China, and those who read his poems (I have read everyone he wrote before he went to China) should remember to say a prayer for the success of his missionary labours.

A Little Sacrifice.

A bud from Corner Brook, Nfld., writes: "I am sending you twenty-five cents. I know it is not much, but I saved it from my candy money. You know we all like candy, but I will willingly do without a little to help the Chinese Missions." Such little sacrifices as this are often worth more before God than big donations, and we thank the little missionary who has been so good.

"In reading 'China' I noticed all the new members you were getting for your Rose Garden, so I decided I wanted to be one of them myself," writes Mary Helen Rogers, 128 Elgin St. E., Oshawa.

Lillian McGill (Marie-Francais) likes "China" very much, especially the buds' page. She lives at 92 Oak St., Toronto.

Read Fr. Sharkey's article and what he says about our "Rose Garden." Sorry I had not more space for the buds this month. A real happy Xmas to you all.

CHINA — BOLSHEVIST OR CHRISTIAN?

military commanders, General Chang Kai Shek and his Nationalist armies swept almost unopposed throughout every province in China. But then the real nature of Russia's interest in China manifested itself. The result was almost a massacre without parallel in the annals of history. The extreme left wing of the Communist party had prepared and set a day on which every foreigner in China, man, woman and child, and every Chinese over the age of 65 were to be massacred in one wild orgy of blood. And General Chang Kai Shek's heroic and patriotic decision to drive every Communist out of China, taken in time to avert this terrible disaster, was something for which the world might well be grateful. Will Communism, you ask me, prevail in China? The answer is emphatically No. Communism will not prevail in China any more than it will prevail in other parts of the world. Communism, as Chesterton well points out, is a Utopian system, and Utopias are notoriously failures. Maurice Hindus, whose book, "Humanity Uprooted," is considered one of the best things written on Russia today, states that Communism has failed even in Russia, that human nature, Communism's greatest enemy, has prevailed, and that the awarding of wages on a basis of merit marks the definite departure from Communism's most vital principle. Be that as it may, we may state for China and America and the rest of the world that it was only the abuses of the capitalistic system which made possible even the amount of success which has already attended the efforts of agitators and soap box orators who howl for the destruction of society. Men have not suddenly gone mad and been transformed from peaceful, law-abiding citizens into creatures of hate ready to tear down all that is sacred in our civilization. If the Communist orator can obtain a hearing, it is not because people love Communism, but because they are

GOD COMES TO GREEN-FIELDS.

I said the community mass, and Father Wong preached on respect due to the house of God. In the afternoon, I gave Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament. We had no organ, but Father Wong sang the "O Salutaris," "Tantum Ergo," and "Laudate Dominum," very well.

At noon-time, we had been given a real Chinese banquet—all the way from water-melon seeds to the inevitable and final bowl of rice. There must have been about thirty different courses. My chop-sticks were kept busy, but I succeeded in eating a little bit of everything and not much of anything—which you will find to be an excellent piece of advice, if you ever have the interesting misfortune of attending one of these affairs.

When evening came, I was genuinely tired, and although my bed was just a few rough boards, I slept as soundly as though I had been in a feather bed at home. And then, too, how could I complain of the hard boards on which I lay, when just upstairs One was keeping His all-night vigil for souls. Like the apostles in the Garden of Olives, I slept—while not far away, He prayed and sobbed.

So was our coming to Green-Fields. What does the future hold in store? Will the years to come see us with a nice little church and a school of our own? We have high hopes and great ambitions; but we know there will be trials, crosses—perhaps failures.

As I close this little article on the feast of St. Theresa of the Child Jesus, the glorious patroness of the missions, my thoughts are especially with the Buds of her Rose Garden. To me, there is something like the fulfilment of a prophecy, in that garden—it is part of that final, unfinished and eternal chapter of the "Autobiography of a Soul." My dear, priestly friend, who first planted the seeds in that little plot, did so in a moment of sweet inspiration. Theresa, as she promised, is recruiting her army of little ones; and she has not given us a shower of roses, but a garden of roses. "I wish to be a missioner, not only for a few years, but to the end of the world." Those are her immortal words, and how gloriously she is fulfiling them. Dear Buds of her Rose Garden—through you the Little Flower would make good her wondrous wish. Pray then for us, with all the power of your souls.

Green-Fields—indeed. It is a corner of God's great, green pasture of souls, with its white-fleeced sheep to be tended and its black sheep to be reclaimed. Pray for us and our little flock to the Good Shepherd. At last God has come to Green-Fields—pray that Green-Fields may come to God.

"In Shih-dong I baptized three catechumens, two from a town across the river some 10 or 15 li away, and the first to be baptised in that section. I hope the seeds will bring forth the hoped-for harvest.

"At Uen-dah there was a baby to have the baptismal ceremonies supplied, and at Uen-jian one to be baptised. Here yesterday, counting all heads, Christians and catechumens, there were 24 in for prayers and Mass.

"All is peaceful up in these parts, and all are well at Lung-chuang and getting along fine. The latest news seems to be rumours that the Japs are at war with China in the North. Here just at noon a crier went through the streets with a yellow flag, beating a brass gong and accompanied by two soldiers announcing that nobody was to buy Japanese goods. Other than that there is nothing of an exciting nature.

"I'm feeling great now, and can polish off my two bowls of rice, using chopsticks with the best of them, and really enjoy it. Have no desire even for foreign food.

"Best regards to everybody. May God bless you all."

CHINA—BOLSHEVIST OR CHRISTIAN?

suffering intolerably from the abuses of the present system and feel that as far as they are concerned, no change can be for the worse. All the wealth of the world has been concentrated into the hands of an unworthy few. Millions of honest workers find themselves today deprived of the means of keeping body and soul together. While the banks are bursting with money, there is more poverty abroad than at any time in our generation. While wheat is rotting in our elevators, little children the world over are crying for bread, and there are none to break it unto them. Mergers, monopolies, chain stores, these are gradually driving the small business men out of existence, while modern machinery is supplanting labor at the rate of hundreds and even thousands of men per machine. It is of little use merely to proclaim that it is wrong to steal, even from industrialists. You can hardly expect the masses of idle men today to enthuse over the idea of keeping concrete highways safe for the Rolls Royces of sons and daughters of affluence while their own children are deprived almost of the necessities of life. Apart altogether from the ethics of any system which advocates a change, we must face the fact that abuse from within, shameful abuse has made a change of some kind desirable, and that is why Communism has even obtained a hearing. The world seems to have recognized its own inability to cope with the situation. Having rejected Christianity, it can hardly be expected to adopt a Christian solution of its trouble or to agree with us when we state that only by the path of world disaster will humanity once more be led back to the feet of a Crucified Christ. How that disaster may come, or when, God only knows. But meanwhile, Communism is not the solution, and even in Russia today that conclusion seems to be sinking home.

And so with China. Ground down and starved by the merciless taxation of war lords, with crops destroyed by perpetually invading armies, millions of those people have been driven to lend a sympathetic ear to the exponents of a system which promised to seize all the wealth of the rich and distribute it among the poor. Many, too, have become "Communists" in China out of sheer terror, due to the Red Army's policy of burying alive all who refused to subscribe to their system. But gradually the real Communists of Hunan and Kiangsi are being hunted down by the Nationalist armies, and it is not too much to hope that with the passing of time the forces of law and order will gain complete control even in the few remaining disaffected areas.

In conclusion, my dear friends, let me say that we have been hearing a great deal about China and her perpetual wars. Not a word appears about the greatest war of all, the war against Satan and the powers of evil. There the issue at stake is not republic or monarchy, but the eternal salvation or the eternal loss of souls redeemed by the Sacrifice of Calvary. There soldiers of Christ, hopelessly outnumbered, are fighting His battles for immortal souls.

Many have made the sacrifice supreme for the grandest cause on earth. Many, worn out with the burdens of years of unremitting labour, will soon lay down their arms, forever. It is for us, with youth and vigor on our side, to grasp the cross from those failing hands and carry on for Him who died for souls.

A FEW CHRISTMAS SMILES

"I think," said the choir-master, "that we can do better than that—just a little better than that. Let us take that verse again, and let us make it quite plain that the first line is: 'Weak and sinful though we be,' and not 'We can sing full though we be'."

Little Mary Jane was saying her prayers.

"And please," she begged, "make Rome the capital of Turkey."

"Oh, Mary Jane," exclaimed her mother, "why did you say that?"

"Because I put that on my examination paper today."—Montreal Beacon.

Grocer's Delivery Boy (accompanied by his kid brother): "I want a tooth out, an' I don't want gas, 'cause I'm in a hurry."

Dentist: "That's a brave boy! Which tooth is it?"

Boy: "Show the man your tooth, Jimmie."

"Has any one seen Pete?"

"Pete who?"

"Petroleum."

"Kerosene him yesterday and he ain't benzene since."—Montreal Beacon.

CONVENTIONALLY MINDED

"Do you wish to go by Buffalo?" asked the ticket agent.

"Certainly not," she replied. "By train, if you please."

Husband—"That's all right. Those aren't genuine pearls."

SIGNALS

"I'm a woman of few words," announced the haughty mistress to her new maid. "When I beckon with my finger, that means 'Come!'"

"Suits me," replied the maid cheerfully. "And if I shake my head, that means 'Not coming'."

"Been seeing a good deal in print lately about a balanced ration."

"Well?"

"What's your idea of a balanced ration?"

"Peas on a knife."

AND THEN THERE WAS SILENCE

A lady visitor to an institute for the deaf had plied the official who was showing her round with so many questions that he was thoroughly weary when she inquired:

"How do you summon the poor mutes to church?"

"By ringing the dumb-bells, madam," he replied, sagely.

There had been several earthquake shocks in a certain district, so a married couple sent their little boy to an uncle who lived out of the danger zone. A day or two later they received a telegram: "Am returning your boy—send earthquake."

Angus—If you've spotted the man who stole your car, why don't you get it back?

Sandy—I'm waiting for him to put on a new set of tires.

"Here's a letter for you with a black border!"

"Alas! My poor brother is dead!"

"How do you know? You haven't read it?"

"No, but I recognize his handwriting."

THE OLD YEAR AND THE NEW

"Ring out the old, ring in the new,
Ring, happy bells, across the snow;
The year is going, let him go;
Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring in the valiant and the free,
The larger heart the kindlier hand,
Ring out the darkness of the land,
RING IN THE CHRIST THAT IS TO BE."

Another year has rolled by and again we hear the old familiar greeting, "HAPPY NEW YEAR", being exchanged between individuals, families, and even nations. The dawn of another year breaks upon the world and finds millions in want and suffering in the midst of plenty, and people are very sincere in hoping and wishing that 1932 may be in truth a happy year.

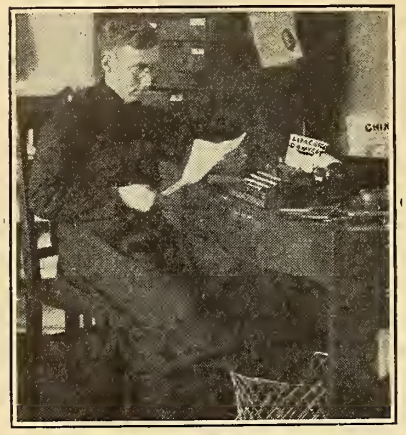
* * * *

The world has been passing through a period of "depression". Even in reputedly wealthy countries, where there is an abundance of natural resources, the great evil of unemployment has taken its toll in demoralizing the multitudes. Millions of willing workers are denied the right to earn an honest livelihood in the ordinary channels of employment, and they and their dependents have tasted real hardships and suffered unfamiliar privations, but always buoyed up with the hope that "better times are coming". Our mail alone is sufficient to tell us that many good friends of ours, many readers of "China", have experienced this "depression" at first hand. In common with the rest of the world, Catholic Missionary enterprises have felt the pinch of "hard times", and we take our place with those who are hoping and praying for a speedy return to normality. Because we have faith in the future we will not dwell on the difficulties of the past, but rather will we speak of the benefits and blessings that have come our way during the past twelve months.

* * * *

We have a lot to be grateful for to Almighty God. Our Seminary has a record number of students who tax our accommodations to the limit; fine, earnest young men who are enjoying happy, healthful days of preparation for missionary work in China. Amongst them exists that comradeship and family spirit which means so much for the success of our work. Three students have been ordained in the past year: Rev. Father Doyle in September, and Rev. Fathers McGillivray and McNabb in December. Four priests have gone to Chuchow to augment the forces in the Field Afar, and two Sisters have also reached Chuchow. During the summer our District was raised to a Prefecture Apostolic, and we have been greatly encouraged by this official recognition of the labours of our Mission Institute. Father Wm. McGrath, former Editor of "China", is now in charge of our mission in China, and the number of missionaries on "active service" has reached the respectable number of fifteen.

* * * *



Looking back over the activities of 1931 we cannot help but be very thankful for the generous support and assistance that has been given us by the good Catholic people all over Canada and Newfoundland. Whilst it is true that the past year has not been a good one for us from a financial point of view, we appreciate the fact that this was due to unusual business conditions rather than to a diminution of interest in our efforts on the part of our friends. Our Catholic schools have been wonderfully good to us, and many priests have assisted us in generous fashion. Father Fraser has been campaigning week after week, and his appeals have been taken to heart by pastors and people alike, and to all who have helped us to keep moving ahead we owe a deep debt of gratitude. The various Catholic newspapers and periodicals have featured our work at various times. In this connection we wish to express our deepest appreciation to the "Catholic Record". Years ago the "Record" interested its readers in the Chinese Missions, and it has continued unabated its efforts to raise funds to educate students at our Seminary.

* * * *

And now, what of 1932? We are confident that the New Year will see our work go forward even more vigorously than heretofore. We are conscious of the fact that our needs this year will be increased because of the increased burdens we must bear, but with the chimes pealing out their glad tidings and with the atmosphere resonant with joyful greetings we endeavour to face the year 1932 with a spirit of optimism. We want all of Catholic Canada and Newfoundland to support our missionary efforts for the salvation of souls, and we have no misgivings that the charity which has enabled us to do what has already been accomplished will fail us in the future. We appeal to every reader of "China" to secure many more friends for our common cause, that by our united effort we may the more successfully carry on the great work to which we have set our hand. Amongst our resolutions for the New Year let us not forget to number one connected with the dearest interest of our best and truest Friend—the souls for whom Christ died. Let us give a vital, personal meaning to Tennyson's words:

"Ring out the false, ring in the true,
Ring in the Christ that is to be."

FORMER EDITOR SENDS FIRST "COPY"

Father McGrath during his first year as "China's" editor.

S.S. Empress of Canada,
Nov 9, 1931.

A nice boat is the Empress of Canada. When I saw her at the pier I said to myself, "Thank Heaven! At last a boat! They don't make waves big enough to upset her equilibrium." That was Saturday morning at Vancouver. And up to the time we left Victoria we had not changed our mind. Father Sandy was with us when we got the "big thrill so far" of the trip. It was when the November CHINA arrived. I hope, Father Editor, that the time will come in your life when the arrival of our little paper will give you just such a thrill. That will not be for a long time, of course. You are just now in the stage of the housewife who never has an appetite because she is tired of her own cooking. By the time you gaze upon your finished product each month it is only a composite of matter you have sent in as copy, looked over as galley sheets, and pasted together to make a dummy. It is "old stuff" to you long before it makes its appearance at all. But with me it was so different. After eight years of just such spade work on the little paper, you can hardly imagine what it means to have a nice fresh copy presented to you, one which is absolutely new as far as you are concerned. I can imagine now just what "China's" arrival in Chuchow is going to mean each month. Send it as fast as you can, please.

At Victoria we said goodbye to Father Bursar, our congenial companion of the covered wagon trip across Canada. We had been through many "ups and downs" together, literally. During the 3,180 miles from Toronto to Vancouver our leaping Lena had carried us across endless miles of prairie and through the splendor of the Rockies. It was a wonderful trip, and we shall leave it to Fr. Sandy to give you the details. Suffice it to say here that Father "Chook" MacDonald was the only man who succeeded in sleeping while the van was in motion, and there were times when we felt that we could almost qualify for the champion kangaroo hop from Scarboro Bluffs to the Pacific Coast. However, the trip was a decided success, and we reached Vancouver with two days to spare. And it was with mingled feelings (mutually, I am sure) that we watched the darkness close about the form of our congenial companion of the voyage, as the Empress backed away from the Victoria wharf and we passed on into the night.

What was I saying? Oh, yes. That our opinion had not changed up to the time we left Victoria. Little did we know what was in store. By the time we went to bed that night there was just a perceptible swell. Nothing much to bother about. But it made me recall many unpleasant days spent in steamer berths, among them the most miserable days of my existence spent in the "Argyle" on her way across Placentia Bay. We went to sleep alright. But next morning! Oh, boy!

Heroically we rose and prepared to say Mass! Grimly we went through the process of dressing and shaving while the anything-but-Pacific-ocean was throwing the old Empress for body-slams and flying mares and what have you! But all in vain. By the time I had been knocked almost senseless against the bunk, and had said goodbye to last night's supper, we both just fell back in the berth, where we remained, breakfastless, dinnerless and supperless for that day.

To-day is Tuesday. The sea has calmed down considerably, and from now on we hope to be able to say Mass daily. We are due in Honolulu Thursday a.m.

Please give our regards to the boys. You have all been in our thoughts and our prayers very much since we left. What a reception there will be in store for the members of the old guard as they come to us in China year by year!

Sincerely yours in Christ,
WM. C. McGRATH.

This letter from Father McGrath came just too late for our last issue. Both he and Fr. MacDonald have reported from Honolulu and Japan, and we hope to have news from them from Chuchow for the February "China."

ANOTHER PRIEST VICTIM OF BANDITS' CRUELTY.

Rome. — Father Checcacci, O.F.M., of the Vicariate of Laohokow, Hupeh Province, has died, according to a telegram from Shanghai, after six months a captive of Chinese bandits. Father Checcacci was taken last May when bandits invaded the mission of Chayuenkow, pillaged the seminary, killed three Chinese religionists and took captive Bishop Hermenegild Ricci, former Vicar Apostolic, and Fathers Lazzeri, Santini, Checcacci and Maggini, all attached to the Seminary, and all Italian Franciscans.

One of the number, Father Maggini, succeeded in gaining his freedom during the parleys for liberation. Father Santini died of maltreatment. Bishop Ricci was freed in September in a dying condition. He has received the last sacraments. And now comes the news that Father Checcacci has died, succumbing to the sufferings of his long imprisonment.

Of this group Father Lazzeri is the only one still held captive. He and Father Hugh Sands of the St. Columban Fathers, the Irish foreign mission society for China, are held by the same bandits in the same place. Father Sands was taken captive August 15 while substituting at a neighbouring mission for a fellow priest who was sick. (Fides).

BUBONIC PLAGUE HITS CHINA.

Sanshengkung, China. — The bubonic plague has been reported spreading through north Shensi Province. Forty deaths are reported at Changfangliang, a small Christian community of 200 souls, and nearly every community has cases to report. (Fides).

FATHER BEAL AT NAN DONG

He Meets "Mrs. Grundy", and is Paid a Compliment.

What changes Father Time brings in his trail. Two years ago I was the veriest tyro in mission experience. This year I had the courage to inspect and decipher the names written in the baptismal register. By chance or design two pages were glued together; when I separated them I came across a long list of names representing Christians and catechumens of Nan Dong, a place about fifty li north of Suichang. When I announced my intention of visiting this community I was met with objections about the difficulties of the journey. I was told that the roads were practically impassable, and that I could get nothing to eat along the way, as there were no restaurants. I settled this last difficulty by producing a tin of bully beef and a loaf of bread.

The objectors certainly made no mistake about the condition of the road. Three large rugged mountains had to be crossed. The guide proved to be a cheerful fellow; after climbing the first mountain he told us the next one was not so high, but after reaching the top of number two I was convinced that he was only "kidding." My carrier had a friend who lived in a large temple beyond the second mountain. It was well past lunch time when we reached there, but they very kindly prepared dinner for us, and showed us every hospitality.

Towards evening we reached Nan Dong. The guide had waited at a cross-roads to direct the carrier, who was outdistanced over the last lap, so the boy and myself carried on. It was like the blind leading the blind, because we were both strangers. Fortunately we soon met a man who was a Christian. He saluted me as "Shêng Vu," and invited us to his home for tea. He had not seen a priest for ten years. The news of my arrival was soon made known all over town. In a short while the house was filled with men, women, and children, all of them making polite bows to me. These folks speak one dialect among themselves and use the official language (mandarin) when speaking to the priest. Mandarin somewhat resembles the Chuchow dialect, so I could understand most of what they said.

The following morning a letter was despatched to another village five li distant, "Si San Dou" (West Mountain Head), where there are six Christians and a large number of catechumens. In the afternoon a delegation came to the residence headed by a Christian lady. Let us call her Mrs. Grundy. She has a unique distinction in these parts, being able to read and write; she is a veteran gossiper and the recognized information bureau of the place. I was put through a sort of third degree. She finished up by saying I would be successful here because I looked like a Chinese. I had to thank her for this last complimentary remark and like it. She promises to be of use to the mission as a lady catechist. Woe betide the one who doesn't know his prayers and catechism when she comes round for class recitation. "Mrs. Grundy" is not to be trifled with. I enjoyed her conversation immensely.

The mission has no property at this centre, but the Christians are willing to help put up a chapel and school. By next year there should be quite a few Chinese ready for baptism. I was very much pleased with the fine spirit which exists among those simple people; they are very desirous to learn about the Catholic religion. I hope you will pray for them that many will receive the great gift of Faith. They are poor, but they will willingly make sacrifices to erect a house in which the Divine Mysteries can be worthily celebrated; but to this end we need the assistance of our friends at home.

At Sungyang, where I am stationed with Father Morrison, we erected a single hand-ball court for the boys. I wish it was larger, but we made the best of the space available. The young lads are keenly interested in the game and are learning to "shoot butts" in fine style, but as yet they haven't mastered the "Irish swing." Best wishes to all friends from

J. L. BEAL.

ST. FRANCIS' COFFIN OPENED IN SPLENDOR

Body Reported in Good Condition After 400 Years—1,000,000 to See It.

Goa, Portugese, India, Dec. 5—The coffin of St. Francis Xavier was unsealed to-day for the thirteenth time in nearly 400 years as booming guns, pealing bells, fireworks and the crash of military music combined to make a scene of Oriental splendor celebrating the Catholic festival in this old Portugese city, which has been called the "Rome of the East."

The body of the saint was officially reported to be in good condition in spite of the fact that it has been 400 years in the tomb.

The ceremonies began with a brilliant procession in which the colorful vestments of the clergy blended with the picturesque Indian surroundings. The procession was led by a special emissary sent by Pope Pius XI., and it included three archbishops, fifteen bishops and hundreds of members of the clergy.

The Church of Bon Jesus, where the body of St. Francis was exposed, was thronged by 10,000 people who heard the papal mass of benediction.

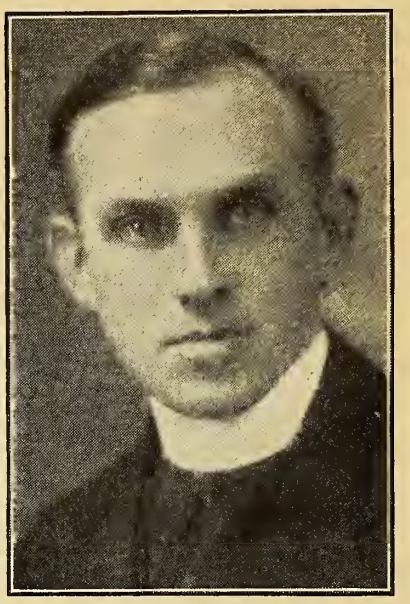
Led by the archbishops, the congregation passed before the coffin and kissed the dead saint's feet.

The body will continue to lie in state for a month and it is anticipated a million pilgrims from many countries will come during that time to see it.

St. Francis Xavier, Apostle of the Indies, and Patron of all missionaries who died on the Island of Sancian, Dec. 3, 1552.

WITHOUT BLARE OF TRUMPETS.

Heroic Sisters Steal Away to the Life of Sacrifice in China.



Without blare of trumpets, rattling of drums, and cheering from the by-standers they leave for the front—those heroic Sisters who go forth to the Foreign Mission Field. For them no glorious departure ceremony with its focussing of attention on the departing missioners. But with a quiet farewell, silently, almost unnoticed, these humble, modest, self-effacing angels of mercy steal away to their noble work in lands afar.

In China thousands of Religious Sisters are doing their share in bringing the Chinese nation into the fold. Those heroic Sisters, most of whom come from homes of culture, are enduring all the trials and difficulties inherent in missionary work among China's poor.

Readers will be glad to know that our own Canadian Sisters are found amongst this noble army of workers. The priests from St. Frances Xavier's China Mission Seminary, Scarboro Bluffs, Ont., are assisted in their mission labours in Chuchow by members of the Congregation of the Grey Sisters of the Immaculate Conception, whose Motherhouse is in Pembroke, Ont. Two years ago those Sisters began missionary work in China when three Sisters went over. For a year they stayed in Wenchow with the Sisters of Charity, learning the Chinese language and becoming acquainted with Chinese living conditions. While they stayed at Wenchow a new convent was being built for them at Chuchow by Father Fraser, and this new Convent of the Immaculate Conception was opened on December 8th, 1930. Sister St. Oswald (MacDonald), Sr. M. Antony (McHugh), and Sr. M. Catherine (Doyle) were the pioneers.

In October, 1931, they were joined by Sister Daniel and Sister Genevieve (whose pictures appeared in last issue).

The new convent at Chuchow is a substantial building, and it is used by the Sisters as the centre from which they carry on their works of charity among the Chinese in Chuchow. (The "Crusader").

Rev. James D. McGillivray, whose ordination was the first ever to take place in Glace Bay, N.S. He was raised to the Holy Priesthood by Bishop Morrison of Antigonish, on Dec. 20th. Father McGillivray said his first Solemn High Mass midnight Christmas Eve.

WHAT OTHERS HAVE DONE FOR US.

Down in the Diocese of Antigonish, N.S., ten members of the clergy have formed a Priests' Club to help the cause of the Foreign Missions, and it is their objective to contribute $250.00 to our Seminary each year to pay for the tuition of some student. We commend the priestly zeal which has prompted such an undertaking, and we assure our friends "down East" that we are very thankful for their interest in our work.

A lady in Toronto has donated a splendid piano to us, and if she could visit our recreation room these days, she would be more than happy to see how much extra enjoyment it has added to the recreation periods of our students. We support their opinion that this benefactor is "a jolly good fellow" indeed, and we are grateful for such a welcome gift. Even some of the boys who are not serious rivals of John McCormack cannot help but join in when Charlie "gives the note."

Within the past few months we have been pleased to receive large lists of names of subscribers to "CHINA" sent in by priests from various parts of Canada and Newfoundland, and we take this opportunity of thanking those Reverend Pastors and their people for their generous co-operation for such a good purpose. It is worthy of note that in those parishes where priest and people see farther than their own parochial boundaries the Faith is not restricted either.

A TYPICAL CRUSADE LETTER.

Loretto College School,
387 Brunswick Avenue,
Toronto, Ont.

"China" Editor,
St. Francis Xavier Seminary,
Scarboro Bluffs, Ontario.

Dear Father:

At the last meeting of the Canadian Catholic Students Mission Crusade Unit at Loretto Abbey College School, a resolution was passed to the effect that each crusader pray daily for a particular missionary as well as for all in general. She would also endeavour to help him materially (although she might not of course do very much).

We feel that the above system will arouse more missionary zeal in the hearts of our Crusaders.

If you approve of our plan you can help us greatly in our work by sending us the names and addresses of the Missionary priests of your community.

Respectfully yours,
CLARE COLGAN,
Secretary of the C.C.S.M.C.

VICARIATE OF YENCHOW HOLDS SYNOD.

Yenchowfu, China. — Thirty-eight priests of whom 11 are Chinese took part in the Synod of the Vicariate of Yenchowfu, held September 19-29 under the direction of the Vicar Apostolic, His Excellency Bishop Augustine Henninghaus. The purpose of the council was to prepare a new manual for the missionaries, since the one in use became impractical with the publication of the New Code of Canon Law and the Acts of the Council of Shanghai.

The Synod closes the first fifty years of the mision. The golden jubilee will be celebrated in January, 1932. (Fides).

We acknowledge with thanks a splendid Spiritual Bouquet from Miss Claire McDaniel on behalf of her pupils at Brook Village School, N.S.

WHERE THERE IS A WILL THERE IS A WAY

but when a person dies without a Will no better way can be found for trouble. This explains many of the lawsuits that are constantly taking place regarding estates.

Why not make your Will while you are in good health? Why wait until you are too sick to even think of business? Why be bothered with temporal matters at a time when all your attention is required for your spiritual interests?

Your Will is not going to hasten death, nor is it going to tie up your business; it may be changed at any time you desire; it does not become operative until the moment of your death, so why delay giving attention to this important matter.

The person making the Will must sign his or her name in the presence of two witnesses. All three, namely the two witnesses and the testator, must be present at the same time and all three must sign their names in the presence of each other. No one who is to benefit by the Will may be a witness. It is not necessary that the witnesses know the contents of the Will, but only that they are witnesses to the signature and that they know they are witnessing the signing of the document as the Last Will and Testament of the testator. The Will must bear the date on which it is signed.

It is also very important that one or two trustworthy friends or a reliable Trust Company be named in the Will as executors, who will see to carrying out the intention of the testator.

No Will can be considered complete that does not provide something for God and religion. Our property has been given to us by Almighty God to be administered, not as our absolute possession, but as a trust for His honour and glory and once we have made provision for the needs of those depending on us we should remember the works dear to Him. In doing so we act as God's stewards and our stewardship will surely be rewarded in eternity.

"China" naturally recommends its work to those who are thinking of making a Will. Our work is certainly God's work. It means the actual salvation of souls who otherwise are exposed to the greatest danger of being lost.

Rev. Wm. H. McNabb of St. Thomas, Ont., who was ordained priest in his parish church on Dec. 19th, and celebrated his first Solemn High Mass on the following day. Bishop Kidd of London, performed the ordination. Father McNabb is the third priest from London Diocese to be ordained from our Seminary.

What more meritorious work can be imagined?

Dear reader, if you think favorably of this, here is the way to designate your bequest. "I will, devise and bequeath the sum of $..... to Saint Francis Xavier China Mission Seminary, Scarboro Bluffs, Ontario, for the education of priests for mission work in China."

A LESSON IN CHARITY.

Written in pencil on a small piece of wrapping paper, the following note was found by Father Fraser among the collection taken up for the missions at a church in Toronto a few weeks ago: "From a poor widow and no work just a 25c for to help poor China. Wish it was more. Mrs. ———." It needs no comment, but it surely deserves recognition.

JUST TO REMIND YOU.

We read some time ago of a bequest of $100.00 made to a Catholic paper in Chicago "to pay for any possible delinquent subscriptions." So far, no one has thought of doing such a kindness to "CHINA," but in default of such favours we would be very happy if every reader of our little magazine made sure to look after the matter of his own subscription. Does the expiry date on your "CHINA" need "touching up"? Do it now, please!

THE MacPHERSON BURSE.

To the energy and enthusiam of Rev. Donald MacPherson, P.P., of Port Hood, N.S., we are indebted for the founding of the "MacPherson Burse" for the education of missionary priests for China. Father MacPherson is anxious to have the burse completed as soon as possible, and we appeal to the readers of "CHINA" to help along this most worthy cause. We gratefully acknowledge receipt of the following donations to it: Angus Campbell, $5.00; Flora Jane MacDonald, $1.00; M. Catherine Gillies, $1.00; Mary MacDonald, $2.00; Mrs. R. MacDonald, $1.00; Rev. Bro. Ananias, $1.00; Mrs. Annie Huot, $1.00; Minnie McKinnon, $4.00; Mrs. A. McDougald, $5.00; for late A. McDougald, $5.00; Ed. McQuarrie, $5.00; Mrs. Angus A. MacDonald, $1.00; Jas. McNeil, in honour of Bro. David, deceased, $10.00; Friend, Port Hood, $50.00; Friend, Port Hood, $1.00; Mrs. John Gillies, in memory of late John Gillies, $1.00; Baby Theresa Claire Campbell, $1.00; Mary Beaton, $10.00; Mrs. Ann MacPherson, $5.00; Archie Campbell, $2.00; Angus MacDonald, $1.00; Mrs. Alex. Campbell, $1.00; Angus A. MacDonald, $5.00.

ENTIRE VILLAGE IN CHINA COMES INTO CHURCH IN A BODY.

Hongkong, China—Fifty-three catechumens, an entire village of fisherfolk, were baptized and confirmed recently at St. Patrick's Church in a little town on the Kwangtung coast.

The little Church has been standing for more than 10 years, having been built by Irish benefactors for the Chinese fishermen and their families who embraced the Faith.

CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS.

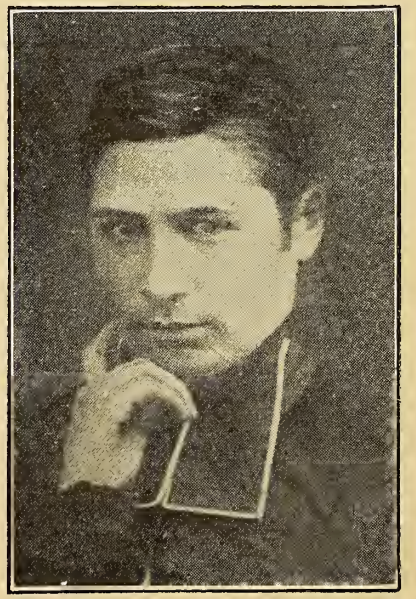
On December 22nd the first term of the scholastic year came to a close, and the seminarians are now enjoying vacation. We hope the holidays will not be made unpleasant by thoughts of mid-year examinations, which are due late in January. Unusual weather conditions made it impossible to play even one game of hockey on our rink before vacation came. But there is bound to be a use for some of those new hockey sticks as soon as Jack Frost finds out where our rink is.

EN ROUTE to ROME

Father Gerald Doyle, who is taking a post-graduate course at the Canadian College in the Eternal City, tells of some interesting visits made on the way.

The voyage from Montreal to Havre, France, was very enjoyable, and on one day only was it considered unwise to celebrate Mass. Another priest, Father Clement, four Sisters of St. Joan of Arc on their way to their new house in France (near Paris), and two Brothers of Charity from Ghent, Belgium, were also on board and each morning came together in the drawing-room, where the two Masses were celebrated.

We reached Havre on Oct. 16th, and the boat train took us directly to Paris, arriving there late at night. A thing that one notices about Paris is the continuous sounding of automobile horns, for apparently no reason at all. My first experience of a Continental hotel brought home the fact that travellers are expected to supply their own soap, but a squeeze of my shaving cream saved the situation, and I went to sleep without any worry about soap. To my way of thinking, or sleeping, the bolster in the bed was very unnecessary. It was only after enduring bolsters for three nights that I had the idea of taking it out and standing it against the wall.



I said Mass on Oct. 17th in Notre-Dame Cathedral, Paris, and I was thrilled as I stepped into this historic Church. After I had said Mass on one of the side altars, I walked around the church, but I realized that it could not be appreciated in such a short visit; to me it was just a very large church.

A Famous Seminary.

In the afternoon I visited the Paris Foreign Mission Seminary at 128 Rue du Bac. The entrance was anything but imposing; it reminded me of the entrance to a warehouse. After some enquiries, M. l'abbé Jean Harmandon, a subdeacon, was kind enough to guide me through the seminary. We went into the old chapel and saw the altar where Blessed Theophane Vénard had stood before his departure for Tonkin and martyrdom. A reliquary containing the bones of Blessed Theophane is placed under the Blessed Virgin's altar, and we knelt there and prayed to him and to the Queen of Martyrs.

Next we visited the two Halls of Martyrs, where are kept many of the actual instruments which were used in the torture or martyrdom of missionaries; here also are breviaries, chalices, or clothing used by the martyrs, and everything is carefully labelled. Among the treasures are cords, knives, pincers, hair, blood-soaked garments, and everything that had a connection with the life and death of those heroic missionaries who lived and died for Christ. The viewing of these articles is in no way repulsive; rather is it inspiring, because it gives one a new appreciation of the missionary vocation.

A walk through the lovely shaded garden, past the shrine of the Blessed Virgin, the hand-ball alley, and the old Chinese bell, was very interesting. When I asked to see the room of Blessed Theophane Venard I got an interesting reply: "Ah, but it is occupied. We have so many martyrs that we cannot afford to keep their rooms as relics." I saw also the refectory with its bare wooden tables and worn benches (not chairs). I was greatly pleased with that visit to the Seminary, the wonderful institution which has trained thousands of priests for the mission fields.

Blessed Theophane Venard, martyred in Tonkin in 1861.

I visited the chapel of the Sisters of Charity, just down the street at No. 140. The entrance did not look like that of a church; but inside, after traversing a narrow courtyard, I came into a lovely chapel where the sunlight was pouring in on the white and gold decorations. This chapel is really beautiful. Interspersed with lay visitors were perhaps fifteen or twenty Sisters making private visits to the Blessed Sacrament; they made a quaint picture in their blue habits and large white cornets.

Lisieux.

At four o'clock I took the train for Lisieux. Lisieux! Where Saint Therese of the Child Jesus, the "Little Flower," spent most of her life, and where she died, and where three of her sisters are yet living as nuns in the same Carmelite Monastery that was made famous by their sainted sister's life and death, and by thousands of miracles. When I arrived at 7 p.m. it was dark, but there was plenty of bustle around the old station. I made my way to a hotel. The drive through the narrow cobble-paved streets was interesting. It was Saturday night, and the streets were too crowded to permit all the people to keep to the sidewalks, so the hotel bus driver was continually sounding the horn. With me in the bus was a middle-aged couple, the man small and polite, the woman large and cheerful. They were speaking French very rapidly, but I noticed their conversation was punctuated by "Sainte Therese."

On the way to the Carmel, the quaint street cafes were filled with comfortable looking crowds, varying according to the type of the cafe. I stopped and bought some postcards of the Little Flower. Except for these cards in front of occasional stores, and statuettes, etc., on sale, there is nothing to impress on the visitor that a great Saint lived and died in this city. Perhaps in the daylight it will be different. But while the people go about their ordinary workaday way they undoubtedly have a fine appreciation of the manner in which their city has been blessed.

After passing over the gurgling Orbiquet River and turning up the Rue Vasseur, a short turn to the right revealed to me the Chapel of Carmel and the Convent. I walked up and down before the Convent, meditating on the wonder of it all. The former home of the Patroness of the Missions is a very practical building with the lights gleaming through the windows, while in the yard in front of the chapel stood a statue of St. Therese. To think that this was the place where God raised up a great saint!

Lisieux is an ordinary town, with old-fashioned streets and very substantial matter-of-fact buildings. I got back to my hotel, and as I write this at midnight a noisy, happy crowd is passing in the street below. Coming down the Rue Pont-Mortain, my eye caught a flickering electric sign: "CINEMA," and a poster nearby announced "La Nuit de Sang," while in the passage-way a number of young people were crowding around getting tickets for the show.

It is now quite cold in my room; it helps me to understand how St. Therese suffered greatly from the cold at nights, especially as the rivers La Toques and L'Orbiquet, with their tributaries, wind their way through the city.

Although the real pilgrimage season was over, the public chapel of Carmel was filled as I entered shortly after seven o'clock on Sunday, Oct. 18th. Soon I could hear the Sisters chanting the Divine Office. I went to the sacristy, and the sacristan bowed to a man of middle age, who came forward to serve my Mass.

A Dream Realized.

I celebrated at the altar of St. Joseph, which is a gift-altar from the Province of Quebec, and I was nervous as I began the prayers at the foot of the altar. For years I had been looking forward to the day when I might say Mass in the Carmel at Lisieux. At the Memento I remembered many intentions, including all friends and benefactors of our Seminary, with a special remembrance for the members of the Little Flower's Rose Garden, as I had promised "Father Jim."

After my own Mass I served another. Pierre, the sacristan of whom I had read so much, has been retired for the past three years, and Roger Degouet, a very kind and alert man of perhaps thirty-seven years, is now in charge. He became very interested when he learned that I was from Canada and hoped to go to China within a few years. He told me he helped the Missions with his stamps, and that his own collection now numbered about forty thousand. He took me to his rooms across the street and showed me his fine collection of old coins and sea-shells. From him I learned much as to the places to visit in Lisieux, and the proper time for each. I regretted that he could not speak English, and that I could not talk French properly, as I am sure he could have told me many things of interest.

Saint Thérèse's Home.

My next visit was to Les Buissonnets, the name given to the Martin home in Lisieux. It is a good walk from the Carmel, and on my way I discovered that there are some fine, well-paved streets in Lisieux, as well as plenty of dogs and horses. An alley about nine feet wide leads to the entrance of this house. One enters through an ordinary gate, but inside it is very fine, and it is easy to imagine that the Martin family could live in a little world of their own. In front of the house is a well-kept lawn, and at the rear is a large statuary group depicting the Saint asking permission of her father to enter the Carmelite Order at the age of fifteen. It is an easy matter to have complete seclusion a very short distance from the house. I saw the place where St. Thérèse used to build her little altar, and where she must have spent many happy hours.

The "Little Flower" as a First Communist.

The house itself is built on the square plan, and while it is not large, it is a very comfortable size. The rooms are well furnished, the dining room being as it was in the time of the Little Flower. Upstairs is the room that she occupied. In one section, behind large plate-glass, can be seen her bed, toys, books, etc., and on the other side is an altar. Judging by the toys and other things which she used to own, St. Thérèse must have indulged in many of the innocent pleasures and amusements common to children of her age and in similar circumstances.

The walk to the site of the new Basilica of St. Thérèse required about half an hour. Here on the side of a hill above the town proper is being built a wonderful church, and in front of it is a very excellent colonnade, almost completed. I understand that the opening celebration will take place next June 27th-July 3rd. In front of the main entrance, above the steps, is a magnificent altar of black marble, surmounted by a fine statue of the Little Flower. The finished Basilica will be very wonderful.

In Carmel Cemetery.

It required another walk of 15 minutes up a winding road to reach the cemetery where the Saint's body lay buried for some years. The cemetery surprised me; I had always imagined it was small, and that St. Thérèse's statue, built over her former grave, would be the most prominent object in sight. Well, the cemetery is large, with very many tombstones, vaults, etc., and I searched for ten minutes before I found where the statue was. The plot, in which about six other Sisters have been buried, is not large, and is just one of many like plots in the cemetery. After saying a few prayers I passed on down the winding road to Lisieux, intending to visit the Carmel once more and also the churches for which Lisieux is famed.

What Price Paganism!

China's "Religion" Makes Conversion Difficult.

By REV. DESMOND STRINGER,
Lungchuan, China.

Nineteen hundred and thirty-one years have come and gone since the first band of missionaries left home to kindle the fires of Faith and Hope and Love throughout the world. To-day there are more pagans in China alone than there are Catholics in the world. The contemplation of so startling a fact rather stuns the mind, leaving it incapable of realizing just what it means. I imagine that missionaries in China see very much the same state of affairs that opposed the Great Apostles of the Gentiles.

The Fealty of Fear.

Not long ago I happened by a Chinese temple. A number of little school girls were there having a picnic. The place was cool and shady, just the spot to escape the heat. Inside this temple were all the various idols, many of which were newly painted. The faces of not a few were rather hideous and terrifying; others were of a more jovial appearance. The children were making the rounds, going down on their knees to the idols of their choice. It all seemed more a pantomine than anything else. But it was not! It was paganism—idolatry; and these little children were giving the fealty of fear if not the love of their hearts to cold, painted wood and stone. How much of the idols' histories they knew I could not say. How greatly the Nirvana of Buddha appealed to them would be difficult to know; very little, I would imagine, inasmuch as they were so young, so full of childhood's hopes and dreams. Yet here they were sunk in the depths of spiritual darkness, never having heard the beautiful story of Bethlehem—the story that is the children's own.

So Many Barriers.

From his earliest days a Chinese is surrounded and circumvented by religious observances. His social life is so entwined with his worship that a formidable barrier hinders him in quite a measure when once he begins to learn the Catholic Faith. While a pagan he may take part in all the important feasts as they occur; sometimes it will be a marriage ceremony; sometimes a funeral; still again it may be a birthday celebration, all of which have their attendant religious and highly superstitious rites. Ancestor worship is universally practised, and this in itself causes much concern to the filial son who wishes to embrace the Catholic Faith. The pagans have their day when all repair to the cemetery to worship the dead. New earth is heaped on the mounds; paper money and articles of food are burned,—in this manner being transported to the other world. To the prospective Christian it seems a hard trial to absent himself, especially should he have a father, mother or wife buried there. The Catholic doctrine of Purgatory finds ready acceptance and fills the void with consolation.

The "Hard Rules"

This may give an idea of the wrench that the step into the True Fold will occasion to the Chinese, and of the constant care he must exercise to prevent himself falling into the old customs that he may have observed for half a century. Many of the pagans with whom I have come in contact tell me through the Catechist that "the rules of the Catholic Church are very hard." While the helpful strength and clarity of these rules—alike for rich or poor, learned or unlearned—excite their admiration, yet they feel disinclined to shoulder them, especially if one happens to have an extra wife, or is engaged in business that nets one a neat little profit through the medium of short-weight transactions. It sometimes happens that a Christian is made to feel in no uncertain manner that the observance of "the rules" is indeed no light task. There was a case in S———. An old man and his wife lived in a squalid little hovel; inside 'twas dark as night, and damp. He was long past his working days; so the field that he owned he gave to some pagan neighbours to work; he himself was to receive part of the rice crop. When the harvest was over he found he could not obtain his due until he placed on the walls of his home certain superstitious placards. Such a dilemma can only be understood by those who wonder where the next meal is coming from. When the priest called to see him the old man explained his case, adding that he did not believe in the power of these placards, but only put them up to please the blackguards. The missioner explained in a kindly way that such a course was wrong. Down came the placards, and the "holy Father" left sufficient alms for the old couple to buy food and firewood.

Many Are in Good Faith.

Although the "hard rules" argument may keep some pagans from embracing the Faith even when they have doubts of their own, yet it can happen that some are honest pagans and believe themselves to be right. At the school in C———— there was a

OUR LITTLE MISSIONARIES

LITTLE FLOWER'S ROSE GARDEN

Edited by FATHER JIM

The only conditions of membership in the Rose Garden are: (1) To say every day the Prayer for the Conversion of China; (2) To go to Holy Communion once a month for the Intention of Missionary Vocations. Certificates and pins will be sent to all members.

Well, Buds,

Here I am aagin! And it seems such a long time since I wrote to you last. Believe me, I was good and mad with the Editor for crowding me out of the Christmas number like he did, but now that's all over and I want to say just a few words to you for the New Year. I suppose you're all tired of hearing me say that I'm sorry I can't publish all your names; you'll understand why when I tell you that on one day recently I sent out 130 certificates, and on another day I sent more than 100; just think all the space I would need to mention something from each of the letters that came when those buds joined our Garden. Beginning 1932 we have more than two thousand members in our Club. Isn't that great? Our Garden is more popular than ever, and I know great things are being done for the salvation of souls through all your prayers and Holy Communions.

Do you remember any of the resolution you made last New Year? Isn't it true that we make many resolutions but keep only a few of them? Now is the time to check up on ourselves and to see to it that in the coming year we are going to be better than in the past; we must try this year to put into practise some of the little things which we know made such a great saint of our Patroness, the Little Flower; we can imitate her and please Almighty God by trying to do our everyday actions as well as we possibly can, in school, at home, and at play. Before the end of 1932 many millions of pagan Chinese will have died. I am sure that many of them will get to Heaven because of your interest in the Missions. Isn't it nice to think that we can help so much in saving those immortal souls for whom our Divine Lord died? Our "Rose Garden" is nothing else but a means of enlisting young boys and girls in such a glorious work, and I am very proud that so many of the young readers of "China" show such interest in the Missions. A hearty welcome to our buds who joined in 1931. Our motto is: "full steam ahead for 1932". Don't forget to read about Father Doyle's visit to the scenes of the Little Flower's life and death.

God bless our little missionaries of the Rose Garden.

FATHER JIM.

Rita Wall, of Windsor, Ont., who sent us five dollars some time ago, says her little brother Paul is saving his pennies for the Chinese Missions, too. I hope the good habit spreads, Rita.

"Tell some Toronto girls to write to me," says 11 year old Beatrice McDonald, 82 King Ed. St., Glace Bay, N.S.

OUR PATRONESS.

The nomination of the Little Flower as Patroness of all missionaries and of the missions by His Holiness, Pius XI, called forth great joy and jubilation throughout the mission fields. When Heaven had blessed her pious parents with four daughters they prayed most earnestly for a son who would become a missionary. Their prayer was partially answered. A son was born to them. But five months later an all-wise Providence took the child to Himself. The parents again prayed for a missionary son. Again it seemed as though their prayer had been granted for another boy was born to them. A few months passed and this child was also summoned to join the angelic hosts of heaven. The parents, submissive to God's Holy Will, ceased to pray for such a blessing. Another girl was later born. And how wonderful are the ways of the Lord! This child, now venerated as St. Teresa, has been chosen by the Sovereign Pontiff to be a heavenly protectress for all missionaries. And in the calendars of the Church she is honored as the Patroness of the Missions. Today, from the nurseries of heaven she calls upon us to follow her little way of sanctity. Those who neglect the missions miss the way.

Convent of Mary Immaculate, Pembroke, Ont.

Dear Father Jim:

Just a few lines to say I have not forgotten the Rose Garden. Sincerely hope this finds the "Gardener" enjoying life. I see in "China" that at last somebody has really found you out. Wouldn't it be great if that somebody would only find some way of telling the rest of us. I enjoyed Father McGrath's letter. I suppose he is working in China by now. Quite a few of my pals are real interested in our Garden. I haven't heard anything of the "Withered Rose" this long while; how is she?

In reply to this letter from Anna Culligan, I say that the "Gardener" surely is enjoying life, and that he gets a big "kick" each morning when the letters from the buds arrive. It will interest all our members to know that I get letters frequently from the "Withered Rose" in which she speaks of our Garden and its members very nicely. She has not fully recovered her health yet, but is very cheerful. Many buds write to her regularly.

1568 3rd Ave. E., Owen Sound, Ont.

"I have been reading the 'China' for two years and have taken a special interest in the Rose Garden. I want lots of pen-pals. I don't care how big or small they are so long as they write. I hope Ningie, Lil, Rio Rita, Meadow-Dew, Blondie, and many others will take notice."

Blanche Morneau, age 13.

Ursuline Convent, Quebec.

Dear Father Jim:

Thank you very much for our certificates and pins which we all admire so much. Some of us are going to frame our certificates. We say the prayer for the conversion of China each morning before catechism. We shall try to send some pictures soon. We wish we knew that lucky bud who met you at the Crusade Convention. Thanking you for the trouble you took in sending us certificates, etc., and asking your blessing, we are,

Your Ursuline Buds.

I was very happy to receive application for membership in our Club from a large number of pupils at the Ursuline Convent, Quebec. I know they are going to be very faithful to their obligations, and I welcome them most heartily among our buds.

Here's a cheerful little letter from St. Mary's Academy, Windsor, Ont.

Dear Father Jim:

We received your letter and also the mite-boxes we asked for; you sent only six and we are nine buds, so please send three more mite-boxes. Our names: Ore Andrews, Jean Lane, Mary Ryan, Kathleen Shepherd, Betty Bubb, Hope Merritt, Helen Herships and June Merritt. We are anxiously waiting for the next "China". Our teacher is not cross at all, we all like her very much. We are sending you a picture of your little friends here.

The picture appears in this issue, but not all of them have become buds yet. I had asked them if their teacher was cross, but evidently she is like all nuns and does not know how to get cross. But then, how could she be cross with such good little pupils?

From Stella Moran, Dornock, Ont.:

I am 14 years old; I have written to some of the buds; please tell them to answer. I like reading your page The teacher reads "China" every time it comes. Wednesday is our Mission Day in school, and I think it is quite a fine idea, do you? Yes, Stella, I certainly do, and I'm sure the many buds in Dornock do their part to help out on Mission Day.

Lorraine Arsenault and Bertha Richards, Summerside, P.E.I., ask Norma Mills and Marjorie Brennan to write to them.

Rose Garden

From Dornock also writes Francis Keiffer, an old friend. He goes to school every day, although it means a walk of three miles. Glad to get Austin Sweeney's letter, too.

"We have been getting the 'China' for a long time, and I enjoy reading it, especially the Rose Garden part. All the buds are surely doing great work, but at first I was rather bashful about joining in with them. However, I want to do my share now, so please send my certificate and badge." Anne Cameron, New Victoria, C.B.

Long Hr., P. B., Nfld. "I have been reading 'China' often and the most interesting thing in it is the Little Flower's Rose Garden." Which just goes to show that Josephine Murray knows an interesting thing when she sees it.

"I do not forget to say a prayer every day for the Missions and for you, Father Jim," says Margaret Dunne, Harvey St., Hr. Grace, Nfld. That's fine, Margaret.

"I would be very glad if you would let me join your Club", writes Mary C. McDonald, Constantine School, Sydney. Come right in, Mary!

Rita and Mary Stapleton add two more to the number of our buds from Hr. Grace, Nfld. Their Bishop celebrated his Episcopal Silver Jubilee in November, and many of our buds joined in the celebrations.

Lucy Doiron, Cymbria, P.E.I., is 13 years old, likes sports, can play the organ, speaks and writes French, and is in the market for pen-pals from Quebec and B.C.

I want to thank all the buds who have been sending in used stamps to help the Missions. However, "Beaver" is no longer on the job, and we can hardly make use of any more stamps that may come to us.

"Thanks, Father Jim, for writing to me. Do you know of any boys about 15 years old (out of Toronto) who want a pen-pal?" Jos. Chrysdale, 210 Richmond St., Toronto. I certainly do, Joe, and I hope some of the boys who read this will write to you. Joe's sister, Maude, is also a bud.

Ethel Doris Byrne of Great Paradise, P.B., Nfld., asks the prayers of the buds for her brother who died recently.

young lad whose father was still a pagan. One day a hurried summons brought the boy to the father's death-bed. Seeing his danger the little lad besought him to receive Baptism. He coaxed and pleaded through the day and night his father lingered; he painted the beauties of Heaven to which Baptism is the key. But he pleaded in vain! The man died and left a broken-hearted little son. What price paganism! He was to all appearances a good man; yet the ways of man are not God's ways.

On the Other Hand—

There was a young Christian in C———— who fell into temptation. One night he broke into the Compound, and entering the Church, robbed the Tabernacle of the Lunette, consuming the Sacred Host as he afterwards admitted. He was handed over to the police, who freed him with a warning. That night he was back again, but this time only to sleep on the property. When discovered in the morning nothing could drive him away. He made himself a bed in the basement of the Sisters' Convent, then in process of erection. That day he became seriously ill, and nightfall found him dying. In this state he was discovered by the watchman, who called the priest. The little fellow regained consciousness just long enough to make a fervent Confession, receive the Sacrament of Extreme Unction and Holy Viaticum. He died early in the morning and was buried by the charity of the mission. The case made a deep impression on the pagans to see this example of Christian charity—the wronged so solicitous for the welfare of the wrong-doer. It was a precious grace to receive, and the little lad

CHINESE NATURALLY JOLLY.

There is no doubt but that one secret of the extraordinary power that the Chinese undoubtedly have is the very large amount of genuine human nature with which as a race they are endowed. The Chinaman is a person that is full of fun. It would seem as though a sense of humour lay at the basis of his character and tinged everything with its subtle influence. A joke with the Chinaman is a solvent that disperses anger and drives away passion from the heart, and makes the broad, uncouth faces shine with a light, like sunbeams playing on the rugged sides of a hill. If the Chinese had been a nation of sombre, gloomy people, without a gleam of humour in their natures, they would have been a positive peril to the world. As it is, the genial strain that is the woof and warp of the Celestial's being makes him a person that can win his way into the hearts of strangers, and slowly dissipate the prejudice that they at first have, because of his homely and unattractive features, and the yellow hue that tinges his skin with a most inartistic colour.

He can be very cruel when the passion is upon him, but under ordinary circumstances he is full of kindness and sympathy, and he will exercise these qualities in such a genial way that one's heart feels drawn out towards him. When one gets beyond the outside formalities and into the inner life of the people, and beyond the crust of selfishness that heathenism has caused to gather round their hearts, one discovers a fund of possible human virtues that under the influence of Christianity will expand and develop so that the nation that the world has been accustomed to look upon with a smile, and as simply an ingenious puzzle that the West has never been able to put together, will turn out to be amongst the most fascinating and most attractive of the peoples of the earth.—Sidelights on Chinese Life.

A GREAT MAN'S LETTER.

Read this extract from a letter written by a great man:

"It often comes into my mind to go around all the universities of Europe, crying out like a madman, and saying to all the learned men there, whose learning is so much greater than their charity: 'Ah! What a multitude of souls is through your fault shut out of Heaven and fallen into Hell!' Would to God that these men who labor so much in gaining knowledge would give as much thought to the account they must one day give to God for the use they have made of their learning and of the talents entrusted to them. I am sure that many of them would be moved by such thoughts, would exercise themselves in fitting meditations on divine truths, so as to hear what God might say to them; and them, renouncing their ambitions and desires and all worldly things, they would form themselves wholly according to God's will and choice. They would cry out from the bottom of their hearts; 'Lord, here I am. Send me wherever it may please You, even to India.' How much happier and safer they would be!"

That letter was written by an unsophisticated theorist. It was written from the missions by one who knew the missions and who knew the world, too. He was of distinguished ancestry, had lived in the great cities of his time, had studied as a layman in a famous university. When he spoke of renouncing all worldly things in order to serve on the missions, he knew exactly what that meant. and he had done it himself.

Who was he? He was a nobleman of Navarre named Francis Xavier.

He is in Heaven now, for several centuries. Were he to write from Heaven to the youth of 1932, his letter would be little different in substance from the one, just quoted, written from the Far East on December 31, 1542.

REMEMBERED US IN WILL.

Our readers will rejoice with us to learn that since our last issue we have received the welcome news from a Trust Corporation that a recently deceased friend of our Institution has bequeathed to us the sum of $5,000 as a Perpetual Burse for the education of young men for the priesthood. No more meritorious gift could be imagined. Surely God in consideration of this great act of charity will grant this dear deceased friend eternal happiness. A long chain of priests, until time is no more, will, through his benefaction, preach the Gospel in China, and offer up the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass for his soul. We ask our readers to join with us in offering fervent prayers for the repose of his soul. It would mean much for the cause of the missions and the salvation of souls if his example were imitated by many readers of "China" whom God has blessed with an abundance of this world's goods.

made the best of it, proving once again that "He wills not the death of a sinner."

Grace—Through Your Prayers.

Thus it is not very difficult to understand the magnitude of the task of becoming and of remaining a good Christian in China. With paganism on every side visible to the eye and the redoubled assaults of Satan, the more dangerous because hidden, it means a constant struggle. Neither may the missionary relax his vigilance in the least. Grace—abundance of Grace—will be the only means of victory in the future as in the past. This is why all missionaries are most happy when they know that those at home are constantly storming Heaven for Grace. There can never be any "business depression" for the True Church—he can draw on the infinite funds of the Church—invest it over here—and be assured of storing up treasures for the life to come, when they will be really useful.

A NEW YEAR RESOLUTION: "HELP THE MISSIONS!"

In wishing all the readers of "CHINA" the Compliments of the Season, we pray that God may grant them every needed blessing throughout 1932.

Willie—"He isn't. When I bit his finger he yelled like mad."

LOCKED UP

The heated orator was driving home his final point. "What we want in this country," he said, "are men with convictions. And now I ask you, my staunch supporters, where shall we find them?"

"In jail," shouted a voice from the balcony.

TIME AND OVERTIME

The customer had complained to the barber of the high charge of shaving.

"Yes, but you must consider the extra labor and time involved, sir," explained the barber.

"What extra labor are you talking about?" snapped the irritated customer.

"Well, you see, sir," replied the barber, "with trade depression, the fall in the stock markets and bad times generally, men's faces are considerably longer than they used to be."

CHILD PSYCHOLOGY

An old gentleman, who always held that the boys of today were not as they used to be when he was young, stopped a smartly dressed child on the sidewalk.

"Well, child," said the old man, "how are you today?"

"Very well, sir," was the prompt reply.

"And now tell me, do you ever think about the profession you are going to follow when you grow up to be a great big man?"

"No, sir," the child said shyly.

"There! I told you so," hummed the old gentleman, "never a thought about the future." Then turning to the child he asked: "Why is it you don't give a little thought to your future career as a man?"

"'Cause I'm a little girl, sir."

MONSIGNOR FRASER

We feel sure that all our readers, and all friends of the missions, will rejoice and join with us in offering sincere and hearty congratulations to Father John M. Fraser on the dignity that has come to him from Rome. A Papal Brief has arrived conferring on Father Fraser the rank of Protonotary Apostolic ad Instar Participantium.

A Protonotary Apostolic is a member of the highest college of the prelates in the Roman Curia. Outside of the Pope's immediate entourage, the honor is rarely conferred, and is considered one of the highest honorary prelacies of the Church, and one that conveys very special privileges. This honor has been granted to Monsignor Fraser in recognition of his work as a missionary priest who has accomplished great things for the Church. When the story of Canada's Foreign Mission endeavours is written, the name of Father John Fraser will stand out as the intrepid pioneer who blazed the trail for the extension of North American mission work in China. For years he was the only English-speaking missionary in China from the whole of North America. His name is known all over Canada and Newfoundland in connection with St. Francis Xavier Seminary, which he founded for the education of priests for the Chinese missions.

His Early Life.

Monsignor Fraser was born in Toronto on June 28th, 1877, and received his early education in that city. Even as a youth he showed signs of that zeal for the Church which has characterized his whole life. At the age of nineteen he went to Genoa, Italy, to begin his theological studies. After his ordination he returned to Toronto and worked in several parishes. The Vicar-Apostolic of Ningpo, China, asked his release for mission work and Father Fraser left for China in November, 1902, and first saw the land of his adoption on December 18th of that year. His first mission work was as a curate at Ningpo Cathedral.

Visits To America.

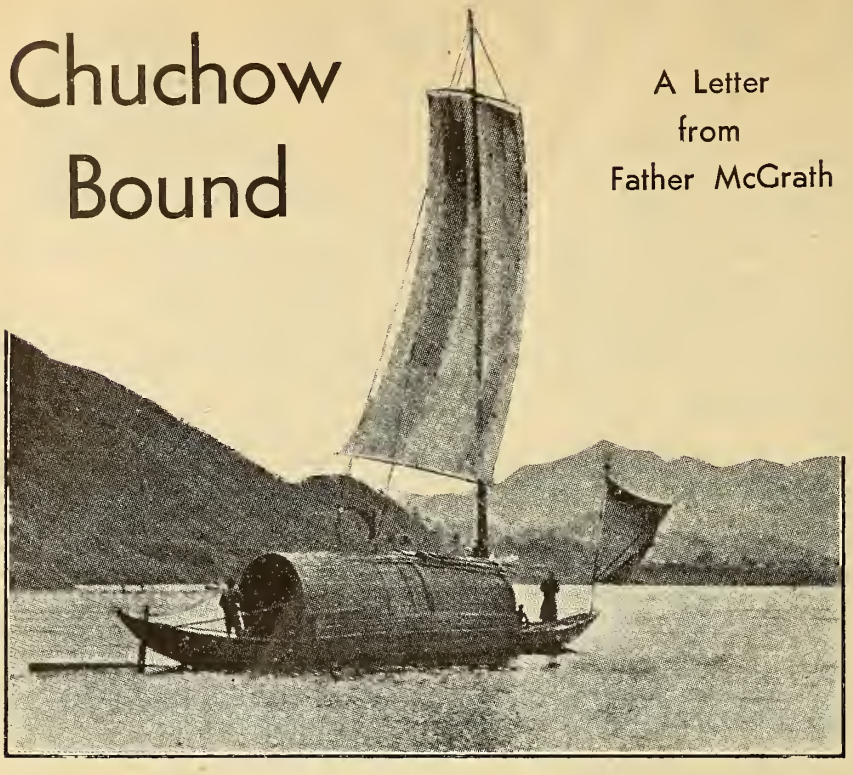
In 1910 he made a flying but very fruitful visit to America and Europe. On his return to China he brought with him a young Irish priest, who is now the Bishop in charge of the District of Hanyang. Father Fraser's visit to Ireland in 1910 prepared the way for later work by Bishop Galvin in founding the Irish Mission to China. As parish priest in Tai-chow-fu, Father Fraser had to minister to three cities and hundreds of towns and villages whose people were all sunk in idolatry. It is not to be wondered at that the hopelessness of his task, unaided, weighed on his mind, and he resolved to make an effort to bring more workers to China. In August, 1918, he landed back in Vancouver.

Founder of Seminary.

The task ahead of Father Fraser would daunt any man who had less trust in God than he. But the spirit that animated the Apostles filled the heart of this modern apostle, and he was not dismayed by the difficulties that awaited him. He had spent sixteen years among the pagans in China, and he knew only too well the tremendous need for more workers. He travelled the length and breadth of Canada enlisting support for his project, and since it was a work of God it met with success. Through the difficulties of those first years in Almonte, Father Fraser kept up his energy and his enthusiasm.

First Editor of "China."

For many years the "Catholic Record" had given generously of its space to make known Father Fraser's work in China, and now the public learned of the missions and their needs through the pages of "China," of which Father Fraser was the founder and first editor. In those early days of "China's" existence, the addressing was all done by hand—no mean task, even though the circulation was not then very great.



In 1922, through the kindness of His Excellency Archbishop McNeil, a new home was obtained for the students at Scarboro', Ont., and two years later our present Seminary was built and occupied. In 1925, Father Fraser went to China again, this time with priests from the Seminary he had founded, and since then others have followed to continue the great work in Chu-chow. In the summer of 1930, he returned to Canada, and has since been engaged in campaign work for the cause he loves so well and to which his whole life has been unselfishly devoted.

Congratulations.

In offering our felicitations to Monsignor Fraser we add a fervent prayer that God may spare him many years to enjoy his well-merited honor, and may his work continue to redound to the glory of God and the salvation of souls.

Chuchow Bound

A Letter from Father McGrath

Dear Father Editor:

Knowing your disappointment at not having being included in this year's mission band may I be permitted to extend a word of sympathy and encougagement? In August, 1922 I came to Scarboro "to go to China;" yesterday we landed in Shanghai. Believe me I am speaking from experience when I say that the first nine years are the hardest. And I can hear you say, "what a Job's comforter he turned out to be!"

Thoughts of Home.

However, when I say "hardest" it is only in terms of the disappointment one naturally feels at being kept away from China for so long. There is really —there never was—anything hard about remaining at our seminary. Even now we think of it more than we think of home. Only a little while ago—just after breakfast—Fr. Venadam did his "darndest" to spoil our perfectly good day by declaring, "Well, boys, over in the seminary now they are just going down to the recreation room after supper!" He would think of that! If he had come about supper time here with the announcement that the half-past five bell (I mean a.m.) had gone at home then indeed we might have felt that life in China did have its compensations. But to select that hour after supper, and just after we had finished our coffee and Russian rolls over here —sacrilege, I call it.

There was always something about that hour. The quiet smoke, while Jess Crawford rendered, "When the Organ Played at Twilight," the relaxation after the day; the arrival of some of the boys from St. Augustine's to tell us why we won—or lost—the hockey game that afternoon. But why go on? You know what I mean. But if you read some day—"Youthful missionary meets untimely end in China," do not conclude at once that bandits had anything to do with it. It may be just Fr. Venadam after trying another of his tricks. No, there was nothing hard about life in the seminary, Fr. Editor, and we can only wish that your two or three, or ten years on the paper will be as happy as those we spent with the old gang over there.

Mosquitoes "As Is."

Our impressions of China? Yes, we have some—already. The first thing that caught my eye on entering my room here was the framework over the bed. It is to hold a mosquito net. Boy, we know what mosquitoes are, even before meeting the Chinese variety. Anybody who ever fished in Cape Roger or the Salmonier River, Nfld., can tell you all about their playful little ways. However, one thing they don't do there or in Canada, they don't dip their stingers in concentrated essence of malaria before deciding to breakfast off your jugular vein. That's what some of them do over here. It is late for them now but they tell me that with the coming of Spring we shall intimately live with them, morning, noon and night. Hence the net over the bed.

Early Experiences.

Fr. Venadam and Fr. "Chook" had their first 100 per cent. Chinese meal yesterday. What they said about it—save in your presence—would make interesting reading, but it will never appear in "China," at least I hope not.

We took our first ride on a street car yesterday. It takes about three handfuls (more or less) of coppers to pay your fare. The conductor carries a satchel on his shoulder to hold his change. Doing our shopping I have tried in vain to keep from receiving them by way of change. My handicap in an all morning walk along Nanking Road is not over twenty pounds but if you receive much change in coppers you feel as if you were weighted down with sandbags. When I learn more about the money system of Shanghai I shall try to describe it to you. All I know yet is that a twenty-cent note ("big" money so called) is more—some pounds of coppers more—that a twenty-cent piece (small money) and if you don't know any better you'll receive "small money" for change. Fr. Fraser will tell you all about it.

That Wonderful Trip.

Did we tell you enough about the ride of the "Covered Wagon" from Toronto to Vancouver? We'll never forget the send off the boys gave us that day. Our biggest run on any day was 417 miles, Detroit to Waukegan, Ill. The Empress of Canada averages around 500, and it takes her 17 days from Vancouver to Shanghai. We took 12 driving days for the 3,180 miles. A word of thanks to Dr. O'Reilly of Guelph, the priests of St. Mary's Cathedral, Winnipeg, Fr. Colin Ross, MacLeod, Alta.; Fr. John O'Dea, Cowley, Alta.; and Fr. Alf. Harrington, Blairmore, for their wonderful hospitality.

We were so fond of Blairmore that we almost stayed long enough to miss the boat. At Vancouver Cathedral we experienced the kindness that has always been accorded our missionaries who pass through.

The evening at Guelph afforded us the pleasure of meeting many of our priest friends of Hamilton who had foregathered to bid us "bon voyage." It was the happy sequel to a pleasant evening at St. Mary's Pro-Cathedral, Hamilton, shortly before, when Dr. Ryan provided a magnificent banquet. There were Chinese costumes, Chinese decorations, and an Oriental atmosphere that would have done justice to Chuchow itself. If Dr. Ryan is "Listening in" let me thank him for the many occasions on which we have felt "so much at home" at good old St. Mary's.

Brother Missionaries.

Last evening we met six of the Fathers of St. Columban's mission, Hanyang, Frs. Murray, Vallely, Murtag, Ellis, Gately and Coveney. Four of them are now on their way to their mission, where at the present moment nearly all the priests are "on the run," hardly daring to sleep two nights in the same place. In the outside missions around Hankow the Communists are in complete control. All honor to those valiant young soldiers of Christ! In spite of the daily perils which have driven missionaries of other denominations to the shelter of the larger cities, those heroic young sons of Ireland remain at their posts, roaming about in disguise from station to station, hearing confessions and celebrating mass secretly in the friendly shelter of some Christian home, and then—on again, not knowing what the morrow may bring. We spoke of the dangers they were to encounter. It was with real pride and eager expectancy that one of them compared it to the penal days in Ireland. St. Columban's, like so many other societies in the Communist centres of China, has taken up the challenge of Moscow, and in the name of Christ is hurling ever more and more young men into the front line trenches of the Church's far-flung Foreign Legion. "You know, Father," this young priest continued, "many of us are seeking a short cut to Heaven these days!" A short cut to Heaven! Father Leonard and Father Tierney have found it and from Heaven today are praying for their brave comrades in arms. We were thrilled to meet those young men, thrilled as perhaps never before, at the thought that we, too, were engaged in work such as theirs, even though in the peaceful regions of Chuchow. And we could not but feel that:

"Bliss was it in that dawn to be alive,
But to be young were very Heaven."

ANCESTOR WORSHIP.

The dead to-day all over China hold the living within their grip. They are believed in some mysterious way to have the ability to change the destinies of a family. They can raise it from poverty and meanness to wealth and to the most exalted position, but if they are neglected, and offerings are not made to them at the regular seasons, they will take away houses and lands from that family, and turn the members of it into beggars.

Countless instances could be given illustrating the profound faith that the Chinese have in the power of the dead to influence the fortunes of the living, either for well or for woe. From this has arisen the most powerful cult, ancestor worship, that at present exists in China. — Sidelights on Chinese Life.

Looks as if they have struck the "joke page," but the little fellow on the right takes it seriously.

8,000 SICK OFFER SUFFERINGS FOR MISSIONS.

A singular and touching evidence of missionary interest came to light recently when an artistic album, containing the signatures of 8,000 sick or infirm persons living in Rome was presented to the Holy Father. The signatures were those of inmates of hospitals, sanitoria, private clinics and other institutions for the sick. All had offered an entire day of suffering and prayer for the Holy Father in favor of the missions. The beautiful initiative was the result of an appeal sent out to the sick by the Missionary Union of the Clergy. The presentation was made by Archbishop Salotti, President of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith and Secretary of Propaganda. Superiors of a large number of homes for the sick were also present.

BISHOP'S RECORD OF FIFTY YEARS IN CHINA.

Jethol, China.—Fifty years in China without interruption is the record of Bishop Conrad Abels, Vicar Apostolic of Jehol.

He was born in Woert, Holland, in 1856. He left the Scheut Mission House for China, March 1, 1881. He was made Vicar Apostolic of Eastern Mongolia in 1897. Twenty-five years ago the Mission of Jehol had but a few thousand Christians. Today, there are over 45,000, in spite of the fact that every year there are hundreds of Catholics in the large bands of emigrants.

With 30 Chinese priests and 21 Chinese seminarians under his jurisdiction, the Bishop is planning the erection of a new independent mission to be given to the Chinese priests.

Two Chinese beggar-children who look cold-proof if winter comes.

BISHOP DIES FROM THE EFFECTS OF ABDUCTION.

Makes a Total of Six Victims of Bandits From One Mission Alone.

Rome, Dec. 21—Succumbing to the ill effects of his four months' imprisonment by Chinese bandits, Bishop Hermenegild Ricci, former Vicar of Laohokow, Hupeh Province, China, has died in the hospital at Loahokow, making a total of six victims for one mission alone.

Bishop Ricci was taken captive last May when bandits invaded the mission of Chayuenkow, pillaged the seminary, killed three Chinese Franciscans and took captive the bishop and four priests, all attached to the seminary and all Italian Franciscans.

Of those taken captive one priest succeeded in gaining his freedom during the parlies for liberation. Two priests died of maltreatment. Bishop Ricci was freed in September in a dying condition.

The last of the group, Father Lazzeri has been given his freedom.

TONKINESE FAMILY HAS THREE SONS PRIESTS.

The Vicariate of Phat Diem, Tonwin, Indo-China, has a trio of native priests, all brothers, members of the San family, the third of whom was ordained recently by its Vicar Apostolic.

One of the three brothers, Father Luke San, was ordained in Rome after a brilliant course of studies, securing doctorates in philosophy, theology and canon law.

ANOTHER JESUIT MISSIONARY TAKEN BY CHINESE BANDITS — FATHER TURK FREED.

Rome. — A despatch from Shanghai announces that Father Stephen Esteban, S.J., a missionary in the Vicariate of Wuhu, Anhwei Province, has been taken prisoner by bandits. The same telegram brings the news of Father Turk's liberation from among the bandits. Father Turk, an Italian Franciscan of the Vicariate of Hankow, Hupeh Province, was taken captive about the middle of last October. Negotiations for his freedom, carried on for two months, have at length ended in his favor. (Fides).

A ROOKIE IN A RICKSHAW

I shouldn't have done it, I suppose, after two days in Shanghai. But it seemed easy enough, foolproof almost. Father Sena left me at the Bund, with instructions as to how to get home by street car. But as there was still some shopping to be done, I decided to hit for Nanking Road by rickshaw and buy my stuff on the way along.

"Sapay saloo," "Sapay saloo," I told him, and he nodded intelligently. "How much?" A few minutes' bargaining and 40 cts. Mex. was agreed upon (probably too much at that), and off we started. (40 cents Mex. is about 12 cents Canadian money). Our difficulties began when we turned down the first street. I made signs that I wanted to go farther up Nanking Road but although I don't know Chinese I wouldn't like to be called the things the other Rickshaw men yelled at my trusty, when he tried to swing against the stream of traffic in the narrow winding street. Finally we were straightened out and I got him to stop at a Kodak store.

While I was inside another appeared and they decided to change engines. They scrutinized me closely through the window and I afterwards thought, perhaps foolishly, that they had seen me pull out a ten dollar bill. When I got outside it was raining and another man, all oiled up, was ready to go. I told my first man that I wanted to stop at the Post Office but No. 2 certainly did not know what it was all about. Finally a postal station hove in sight and

I cried, "Whoa!" That must be Chinese for "catch a train," because the way that bird sprinted at that moment was nobody's business. The oftener I cried "whoa" the faster he went so I had to desist and wait for him to tire. Meanwhile it was raining and the rickshaw wasn't covered and he seemed to be getting into the Chinese section of the city; and it had appeared in the papers a few days before where "fares" had been led to suspicious haunts and relieved of their loose change; so I managed—how, it is hard to say—to stop him and dismounted.

After walking a mile or so I took another "shaw," covered, and he brought me to "Sapay Saloo" by an entirely different route, at least it seemed so to me.

My next Chinese lesson is going to be to find out the word for "stop."

Our missionaries called at Kobe, Japan.

Colorful Honolulu

Everybody liked Honolulu. It was the one stopping place in the voyage of the Empress of Canada, where we regretted the stay was so short.

At the boat friends bedeck friends with garlands of beautiful flowers. The native band plays typical music of welcome. And all around the boat as she approaches the pier the native "boys" frolic in the water and dive for nickels and dimes thrown from the ship. They never miss. Not one eludes their vigilent eye. For a quarter they dive from the side of the top lifeboat, about 80 feet above water.

It seemed a dangerous business to me. At the harbour mouth black fins were cutting the water, swiftly and silently. Where the Empress of Canada can go surely sharks can follow. I asked the boys: "Aren't you afraid of the sharks?"

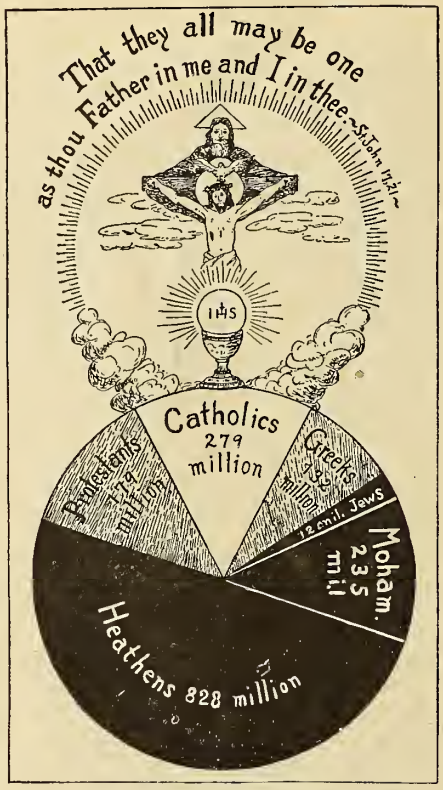
"Oh no. They must turn over 'fore they can bite and you turn over too. Keep away from their mouth." Just like that. And sometime before a white lady swimmer had dived outside the protecting wire net which surrounds the swimming enclosure for white people. She had been warned. It is strictly forbidden. But she took a sporting chance —and emerged with one leg bitten off above the knee. Brave boys, these; but if some day they meet a man-eater who likes his dark meat, I hope I'm there to see the battle.

The departure scene beggars description. Colorful—that isn't half. The usual streamers are thrown from ship to shore, to be held to the last minute and broken as the ship gathers way. The band plays and to its gentle accompaniment a gentleman and lady sing. Beautiful duets they are, with flowing haunting melody. Typical Hawaiian music at its best. The lady's voice is a rich, mellow contralto of which Schumann-Heink might well be proud. As we pull away the strains of "Aloha Oe" fade into the distance. Honolulu and its kindly people have won the hearts of all on board. Just what they were supposed to do to make sure you will call again. No matter, we did enjoy it.

THOU SHALT LOVE THY NEIGHBOUR

A MISSIONARY MEDITATION

Rev. P. Charles, S.J., in "Catholic Missions"



If it were to happen that one of my fellow-men, living under the same roof with me, should be dying of hunger, how the thought of it would revolt me! How could I leave to starve one whom I had seen, had touched, and who had served me, when but a frail partition separated me from his slow and bitter agony? The nearer men are to me, the more am I moved by their misfortunes. I know some, who will freely read the description of a battle, and give a spirited account of a massacre, while they grow pale at the sight of blood oozing from an open wound, or splashed upon a consumptive's pillow.

Is this, O my God, but one of those illogical habits of thought of which life is full? Must we scorn to pity our neighbours, because there are men at a distance who deserve pity no less than they? The emotion which grips our hearts at the sight of present misery seems to me a providential warning. It was no mere chance which made man a dweller on the earth and a slave to the soil. It was Thy hand which set him, like a plant, here and there about the continents. More exact, more pressing, are our duties towards our neighbours. They are more immediately interested in our action or omission, for they are the first to pay the price of our neglect.

The World Grows Small.

And now, my God, behold what has come to pass; see what civilization has unconsciously done for us. During the last fifty years the world has become small; our modern perfection of transport has eliminated distance. This very evening I could speak in Calcutta, send my orders to China, give commands in Africa. In six weeks I can travel to the Antipodes; and before the sun set below the horizon, I am informed on everything which he has viewed in his course, important, calamitous, or even commonplace. Our news agencies are faster than the sun. All men are now brought near to me. My neighbour is no longer the man who lives next door. All walls are now become mere partitions. Behind the screen I hear the breathing of China; the din of the crowds in the streets of Bombay is as close to me as the hum of my own city. My food comes from the ends of the earth. They were Asiatic hands which plucked the cotton that forms my dress. Every day distant continents are sending us rare spices, strange and exotic products for our enjoyment. Nowadays, all these peoples are employed in bringing us the means of existence, and their services are as necessary to us as our daily bread.

Then, O my God, I think with anguish, and with a heart full of —Courtesy "The Field At Home"

THE WORLD TO-DAY.

tears, that the hands which thus clothed me are the hands of pagans; that the rice in my food was prepared by men unbaptized; that the very rubber in my overcoat was gathered by savages who know not Thee; that all these kindly and industrious fellow-creatures are dying of spiritual hunger, and have scarcely been approached with the bread of life; and I say that our duty, now more than ever—the duty of Europe, grown old and hallowed in the Faith, the duty of America, young and vigorous heir of our Christian civilization—is not to exploit, but to save them; yellow men and black, our brethren.

Who Is My Neighbour?

Inanimate things have their voices. Thou hast said that the very stones would cry out, if the witnesses to Thy Truth refused to speak it. I seem to hear my dress and my food, the papers I read, the shop windows as I pass, bearing witness in their dumb fashion to the distress of the peoples of heathendom. A textbook of geography teems with missionary propaganda; railway guides and handbooks of travel, showing me at the road's end so many sheep without a shepherd: ought they not to rouse me from my careless ease?

My God, make us love our distant "neighbours". Make us see with heart-felt rejoicing, not the influence of our particular nation gaining territory at the expense of its rivals (for that is only a move in the political game,) but the spread of Thy Kingdom, and the progress made in clearing the way for the coming of the Son of Man. Many guests are still wanting to that heavenly banquet, to which, in the supper-room, on the evening of Holy Thursday, Thou didst invite us, at "Thy Father's table." Can we not understand? Is it impossible for us to love our neighbour, whom we have never seen, but whose voice we know?

On the day when China joins in chorus with Thy Catholics in a great "Sursum Corda"; when all India sings the Preface; when Africans hold the white Host in their dark fingers; when in one mighty offering, Thy people single and undivided, place upon the golden paten the whole soul of Thy visible creation—on that day shall the Redemption be true and complete; like a new-born infant, moulded in the pains of childbirth, and now brought to light. . . .

RUTH GRAVES A BUD OF THE "LITTLE FLOWER"

Died February 15, 1931, aged 18 years and 7 months

Read this short account of another "little soul"—and marvel at its beauty. How wonderful are the ways of God! Or, as St. Paul wrote to the Romans of his day: "O the depth of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How incomprehensible are His judgments and how unsearchable His ways."

Again, in Ruth he has been pleased to manifest the depths of his wisdom. Here we have a "little one" patterned on the model of the Little Flower, walking in her way and communing with the spouse of her soul with all the sweetness and carefree abandon of a child.

She, too, was a little missionary. She loved the missions, and to prove her love she worked getting new subscribers; she prayed for the missions; and she suffered her bodily infirmities for those distant heathen lands.

God has pointed her out and seems to say to each of us: "Go thou and do likewise." May Ruth in Heaven be mindful of us all. May she awaken in the readers of "China" many youthful souls to follow her lead, to imitate her humble and simple ways, and to become other "Buds of the Little Flower", the special patroness of our "Rose Garden".

A Bud of the "Little Flower" —one can find unusual beauty in that expression if one considers it thoughtfully. In nature a flower is almost a prayer; its bud is almost an object of wonder because it is so clean and sweet and holds such a promise of youthful grace. But when one speaks figuratively, and l i n k s that thought with someone belonging to God, one imparts to it a spiritual beauty that makes it infinitely more good. St. Therese is honoured as the Little Flower of Jesus because of her extraordinarily holy life and devotion to our Blessed Saviour—and it was St. Therese whom Ruth Graves chose as her patroness. Ruth truly deserves to be called a bud of Jesus' Little Flower; although she was constantly waging a losing fight against sickness, she never forgot God and His plea to help those who are continuing to do the work He started upon earth. Just last year she secured more subscriptions for the "Little Missionary" than anyone else who participated in that contest.

(The "Little Missionary" is a beautiful mission magazine published by young missionaries at The Mission Press, Techny, Ill., and it is from that magazine that I am reprinting this entire story.—Fr. Jim.)

But Ruth's illness gradually sapped her strength, and she succumbed to it last February. Despite the loss felt by those who loved her, there is great consolation in the fact that, because of her sweet life, we know that our Lord has simply recalled her soul to that heaven for which He had created it only eighteen years before.

Those closest to her had always looked upon her as a privileged soul, destined to be one of God's little flowers, lent to us for a few short years—a little victim of His merciful love. Her life and sufferings constantly remind one of the Little Flower of Jesus, her special patroness, inasmuch as she suffered so long and tried hard to practice the special virtues of the "The Little Way of Spiritual Childhood".

RUTH.

From the age of two she was subject to severe attacks of bronchial asthma, and each attack left her frail little body still more weak. But as the years passed, her love for God and her confidence in Him seemed to increase, and, like little Therese, she even remained simple and childlike. Always, she saw only the good in others and was conscious of the slightest want of virtue in herself. If she had committed a fault, she would punish herself by performing a little penance, then start all over again, never showing discouragement. She was humble, obedient to the slightest wish of those in charge of her, and quickly won the affection of all who came in contact with her. God gave many gifts and not least among them was her desire to have others learn "to know and love the good God".

Shortly before her death, she wrote a letter to "Father Jim". It was just one letter among hundreds, yet so sweetly did it speak of the love of God, of the Little Flower and of the Missions, that it found its way to the pages of "China". In one part she said, "Father, it seems that if we are the Little Flower's rosebuds, we ought to follow her 'Little Way', too. I read of something lovely the other day called 'God's Game'. I want to pass it on to you, Father.

"There are three players: the Little Flower, God, and ourselves (buds). We begin by giving the Little Flower something, a little prayer or an act of sacrifice; she offers our gift to God, and He gives her a grace or favor, some rose petal to send down to earth. to convert a sinner or help a missionary. Don't you think that a lovely game? Oh, how lovely if we could have all the buds who wanted to sign a promise to give even one thing to the Little Flower every day—a good act, a sacrifice, a prayer—I wonder how many of the buds would vote for it. Would two pen pals please write to me?"

In answer to this request several boys and girls wrote to her, and even now her mother receives many touching letters from her "pen pals", as she called them.

She was like the Little Flower in still another way, in that she was always cheerful; she indeed seemed to have learned the secret of winning Jesus with a smile. Her ready smile often, very often, encouraged others. It was quite evident that she did not hope or pray to get well. Shortly after death her mother discovered a piece of paper attached to a little badge she always wore. It was a copy of St. Therese's Act of Oblation, dated February 15, 1930; Ruth died on February 15, 1931.

She was once asked if she had ever had a day free from pain, and her reply was that she had not. Thus one might understand that she was truly a "victim of God's merciful love" for souls, and especially for missionaries. Her courage under suffering came in part, surely, from her devotion to the Passion, upon which she meditated every day. The depth of her knowledge of prayer was astonishing, even to those who knew her best. It does not seem too much to say that our Lord himself was her teacher.

She was very fond of candy, but on one occasion she promised our Lady not to eat any in return for obtaining a certain favor; she kept her promise faithfully. She was equally steadfast in other little acts of mortification.

By nature, Ruth was inclined to be stubborn and self-willed, but God, in His loving providence, saw that her good mother exercised the needed firmness in spite of the child's delicate health, and so helped her to correct the fault. Such typically human traits, and her triumph over them bring to us, perhaps more closely than her essentially good works, the encouragement to persevere without recourse to weak excuses in our battles against the little evils of life.

There is little to tell of her last days on earth; she died as she had lived, patient and sweetly resigned to the very last. For a few days she was deprived of all consolation and her physical sufferings were intense. She was conscious to the end, and shortly before it came, looking heavenward, she said, "Mamma, I am going to heaven, pray always for a happy death!" Her last words were those of her loved Therese, "My Jesus, I love You."

As a last tribute to this child of grace, her pastor celebrated a Mass of the Angels for Ruth's soul. Ordinarily such a Mass is reserved for those children who have not yet reached the age of reason, and therefore have never committed a sin. The pastor's granting of that extraordinary privilege is an indication of the reverence we all should hold for the possessor of the graces which Ruth earned for herself by her holy life.

From Day To Day

An article by Father Hugh Sands in the Irish "Far East." Father Sands was captured by Chinese bandits last August, and is still a captive.

You ask how one spends the day in China. Well, it depends on the day and the work to be done: every new day that comes brings some new work to do. Some days one is out on the missions; some days on the run; some days at home and some days on sick-calls. Let me just tell you briefly how I spent the past twenty-four hours. It is five o'clock in the evening now and I have just had a wash and a cup of tea.

About four o'clock yesterday two strangers arrived here. They said they were from a place called May Gee Tai and had come for the priest to attend a man who was about to die in their village. There was no one at home here but the cook and my teacher. Neither of these knew the strangers or the place they came from—it was some twenty-five li (eight miles) distant, and no priest had been able to go into it for nearly two years. It was a Red-infested district. But, Reds or no Reds, if these men were trustworthy, a Christian who had not seen a priest for two years was dying. I had to go, therefore.

In five minutes we were on the way. I had almost said "the road", but there is no road. I was mounted on a stumbling pony; my teacher and the two strangers plodded along on foot. The tracks and paths we followed were in a terrible state. You see, we had a heavy snow-fall this year, and it is only just gone. About 6:30 night fell and we were still far from our journey's end. But "time and perserverance bring snails to Jerusalem" and finally we reached May Gee Tai.

It was 7:30 when we arrived. It was a genuine sick-call. Indeed there were several sick folk in the place. When I attended the first I had to go round to no less than seven others; two of these were in the same house—an old deaf and blind "popo" and her grandson. When I got back to the house of sick man No. 1, I found that some Christians had come in for Confession. On my arrival I had told them that I would have to go back to the church next day but that I was at their service for the night, and the more use they made of me the better pleased I should be. They took me at my word. Only at 11:30 did they cease to come. Others would wait and come in the morning.

A bowl of rice; a few prayers, and a rather tired man lay down to rest. The bed was not particularly soft. It felt like sheet-iron. There was a buffalo near by; and the good people of the house had sick children. At least, I assumed they were sick because they cried all night. At 4:30 I got up and prepared for Mass. At 5 o'clock Confessions began again. It was slow work enough. The poor people, who had not seen a priest for so long, knew they might not have one again for some time; so they wanted to make all things right. . . Dawn came about 6:30 and Confessions ended about 9 o'clock.

I said Mass and gave Communion to all at 9.30. Immediately after that I went round again to the sick seven and gave them Communion also. When I got back I baptised two children, after which I had another bowl of rice. Then I got on my stumbling pony again and started for home.

We jogged along slowly; we were all tired—especially the old pony. To help him, I got down and walked. It was lucky I did, for at the very next bridge we crossed he stumbled and fell into the river. The owner jumped in after him and I did all I could to help. My teacher went for more help. In a short time we had a crowd—it's not hard to gather a crowd in China—and, after nearly an hour's struggling, twenty wet, muddy men succeeded in putting a wet, muddy pony on his legs again. Four hours later I was home.

MEMORIES

It might have been St. John's Cathedral, or St. Francis or Corpus Christi Church, Toronto. That is, while you were turned towards the altar. A few days is not sufficient to impress on one's mind the fact that one is really in China and it was only natural that on our first Sunday there our thoughts should go back to the many other Sundays and the crowded churches of home sweet home. As I finished the Gospel I think I should have taken it as a matter of course had Father McCann or Father Mike Kennedy walked out to make the announcements. But with the "Dominus Vobiscum" my day dreams were at an end. For there was the Chinese server; there was the little chapel of the Franciscan Procure and the congregation of faithful Chinese.

Make no mistake about it, boys. At that particular moment, I travelled from Newfoundland to Canada, from the throngs at the 10 o'clock Mass in the Cathedral to the crowds of people I knew so well in the churches of Toronto. And back again, by the time the "Oremus" was said, across the Pacific to the sudden realization that here, indeed, was China and here, indeed, was I.

We often envy people who are "hard-boiled". Darn it all, I hope we're not suddenly becoming sentimental in our old age, but if for a fleeting moment you just feel that the things you left behind are a little more worth while than you had ever imagined before, well—there's no use pretending otherwise. Those first impressions are childish, perhaps. They will pass away in due time as China becomes a matter of course. And then, I suppose, there will be nothing to write about, strange as it all seems to us now.—Rev. W. C. McGrath.

CHINESE EX-MINISTER COMPLETES NOVITIATE AT BENEDICTINE ABBEY.

Brussels, Dec. 31—Dom Pierre-Celestin Lou, formerly a Chinese Government minister, has completed his novitiate at the Benedictine abbey of St. Andre at Lophem, Belgium, and has commenced his studies for the priesthood.

Lending to the Lord

(An Editorial in the "Catholic Record")

As the poet tells us, the argument most apt and ample for common use is the example.

Speaking of Catholic wills, the example we wish to place before our tens of thousands of readers is that of John Edward Maloney of the town of Perth in the county of Lanark, Province of Ontario.

Mr. Maloney, God rest his soul, left $12,295 for charitable and pious purposes. He left $5,000 to establish a Burse for the education of young Canadians whom the Holy Spirit inspired to give themselves to the Chinese Missions. Before us is a copy of the will. It was made in 1920 when the Canadian entry into the great spiritual adventure of the Chinese Missions was in its infancy; was almost a tentative gesture of goodwill on the part of Canada. Neither Father Fraser, Canada's pioneer Catholic missionary in China, nor his most ardent supporters, had even a faint hope that the work he inaugurated would attain to the vast, almost incredible, success that is already achieved.

The altar in our Seminary chapel at which Fr. McGrath said his mass every day.

It took faith, ten years ago, to envision the success, or even the possibilities, of the Canadian Chinese Mission. We hope that no one of our readers will fail to breathe a prayer for the repose of the great soul of John Edward Maloney who heeded the inspiration of the Holy Spirit of God back in those dark days of a decade ago when the Canadian Chinese Mission Seminary was a matter of faith and hope and charity—but as yet of little accomplishment.

What has happened since?

A considerable number of clean-souled, God-called young men (and women) have gone from their Canadian homes and environment to give themselves entirely to the work of the conversion of China.

We are proud of John Edward Maloney, and we thank the Capital Trust Company, his executor, for sending us a copy of his will; but we ask our readers to glance at the completed Burses for the Chinese Missions that the Catholic Record carries week by week. Mr. Maloney was able to establish a complete Burse that would forever go on educating a student for the Chinese Missions; and we believe that nothing in all his successful life is so pleasing to him now as he looks down over the span of his earthly existence.

But our six completed Burses were made up by small contributions. The poorest of our readers who gives five dollars, two dollars, one dollar, to the completion of the incomplete Burses will have from the all-generous love of God the same reward as if they gave a million dollars.

You know that our Lord himself said that the widow's mite was greater than the greatest contributions of the rich. Let us make up our minds that we shall do our little best to complete several of the incomplete Burses in this year of 1932.

Dean Swift was asked to preach a charity sermon in Dublin, and he preached a good one. Next year he was asked to preach again: but he was told that his previous year's sermon was too long.

He went up into the pulpit and simply quoted the scriptural assurance:

"He who giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." Now those who like the security, down with the stamps.

There are many Catholics who might learn from this Protestant sermon. For they live and die as though they doubted that security.

SEEN FROM OUR WINDOW

By "Observer"

We spend hours at the window of the residence here. Sometime we may be able to describe in detail some of the scenes witnessed as the panorama of every-day life in China unfolds itself before our eyes. The chief characteristic is noise and plenty of it. I just came from the room upstairs, where our newcomers had a ringside seat for the finest free-for-all we have yet witnessed in Main Street. It was the Police Department versus a gang of what we should call longshoremen, and it happend this way:

Four or five of the boys were coming down the street at a gallop, each rolling a large oversize barrel, almost as big as a molasses puncheon, open at the top and with two handles. Their dexterity in handling this contraption is amazing. They can wiggle in and out of "traffic" without touching a thing, but on this occasion there were so many of them on the narrow street that they were blocking the way. So the officer arrived on the scene and declared in no uncertain terms what sounded to us like "They shall not pass". Then the fun began. Some of the coolies were real tough hombres and the way they talked back to that policeman was nothing short of contempt of "court". The whole crowd joined in, and for a while it looked like the League of Nations trying to settle the Manchurian question. But gradually the officer was being pushed back towards the wharf, which was the objective of the puncheon rollers. He backed away to the corner of the street and blew his whistle, whereupon another policeman came to his rescue.

But the boys were determined to get there. The gang behind continued to push on. One of the leaders who was doing most of the talking connected with a short right to the officer's jaw and the battle was on. When the smoke cleared away it certainly seemed that the coolies had carried the day for five of them rushed the wharf, puncheons and all, and the policemen were nowhere to be seen.

We thought it was all over. But no. A few minutes later they arrived back with a third man and by this time another group had arrived with their freight for the wharf. They were promptly stopped and batons began to fly. Two of the puncheons were hurled into the river by the third man, who seemed to have the situation well in hand, and he soon collared two of the ringleaders, one in each hand. The crowd was now very much quieter. A few minutes before they had cheered the coolies and "booed" the departing policemen until you would think it was the late Stanley Stasiak entering the ring of the Toronto arena. But now that the law had prevailed, nobody seemed to have a suggestion to offer.

Not content with checking the new onslaught, the officers proceeded to the wharf, where two of the first contingent were telling the boys how easy it was. They were promptly collared and as the scene ended they were on their way to the hoose-gow.

HARD TIMES

make it difficult for so many to do much for the missions. But, think! the mission thrives on little gifts. Great gifts are few; it's the many little gifts that do the work in the missions. Can you help?

"SAPAY SALOO"

(REV. W. C. McGRATH)

If you are downtown in Shanghai some day and want to come "home," just hail the nearest rickshaw man and say "Sapay Saloo." Translated, it means "Rue Chapsal," where the Lazarist Procure is located.

We had all heard a great deal in Canada about the Procure. Not one of all our men in China but has enjoyed the hospitality of the good Fathers there. But now we know it better, for we have spent a few days with them. It would be impossible to put into words our gratitude for all they have done for us since the day our first missionaries landed in China and found what we have found, a home on this side of the Pacific.

Happy, cheerful, and ready at all times to extend a word of encouragement to the timorous and rather bewildered young new arrivals from Scarboro Bluffs, the Fathers of the Procure are to us the embodiment of just what we should expect the real missionaries to be. "A saint sad is a sad saint." We are struck more by their cheerfulness than anything else. And our regard for them cannot but be mingled with the admiration of the untried young soldier for the veterans who have distinguished themselves in the Foreign Field.

THOU SHALT LOVE THY NEIGHBOUR.

We are still so far from it, my God! Thy whole Catholic Church does not equal the population of Hindustan . . . and our sloth, our ignorant complacency and our selfish weakness leave the foundations of Thy future temple lying in the sand. But Thou canst stir the multitudes; their numbers are not to Thee the obstacle which they are to us. We are powerless against their heavy masses, and whelmed in the ocean of their faces. Thou hast commanded us to love our neighbour; and today Thou hast made all men physically our neighbours. Well do we know the meaning of this progress, and the new duties that it brings. Grant us to love in Christian fashion, from our hearts and without reserve, men, our brethren.

Son in college was applying pressure for more money from home.

"I cannot understand why you call yourself a kind father," he wrote his dad, "when you haven't sent me a check for three weeks. What kind of kindness do you call that?"

"That's unremitting kindness," wrote the father in his next letter.

Jean: "No, I mean historical. I laughed for ages and ages."

The candidate left the platform, elated with the deafening applause that his speech solicited from his admirers.

"Do you think," said a weary critic, "that he had enough of fire in that speech?"

"Yeah, I think so," admitted a tired farmer. "Trouble is, he didn't give the fire enough of his speech."

A man went into Cohen's bookstore and asked: "Have you a copy of 'Who's Who and What's What,' by Jerome K. Jerome?" The clerk repliel, "No, sir, but we got 'Who's He and Vat's He Got,' by Bradstreet."

Voice: "Because he's an ass."

Doctor—"You don't take it. You give it to the cat, in some milk."

"Say, boy," said the wealthy tourist, "I want some gasoline, and please get a move on! You'll never get anywhere in the world unless you push. Push is essential. When I was young I pushed, and that got me where I am."

"Well, guv'nor," replied the boy, "I reckon you'll have to push again, 'cause we ain't got no gas in this place, and even if we had I'm not so sure you'd get it."

CRUSADERS GIVE EVIDENCE OF GREAT MISSION ENTHUSIASM IN ST. JOSEPH'S PARISH.

"A monster demonstration of the St. Joseph's Unit of the Canadian Catholic Students' Mission Crusade was held on Sunday, January 17th, in St. Joseph's Church, Leslie St. The whole of the seating accommodation was utilized, both in the body of the Church and in the gallery, by members of the Unit, who had rallied for participation in this annual event. Rev. Father Fraser, of China Mission Seminary, delivered the sermon for the occasion, and during the course of it pointed out the absolute necessity of the various units assisting the Missionary Priests by prayer and sacrifice. At the conclusion of the sermon, the President and Secretary of the Unit, Master Gerald Stephenson and Master Joseph Fullerton, presented the reverend speaker with a cheque for one hundred dollars to assist in some small way in carrying on the work in far away China. Solemn Benediction was then given by Father Fraser, assisted by Father McDonagh as Deacon and Father O'Donnell as Sub-Deacon. During the evening, special missionary hymns were sung by a special choir, selected from the members of the Crusade, with Miss G. Howorth presiding at the organ. This makes the thirteenth time that the Crusaders in St. Joseph's Parish have had the pleasure of holding an annual rally, and also the thirteenth time that they have presented a cheque of like proportion to this so deserving cause. We hope in the very near future to have Rev. Father Kennedy of the C.C.S.M.C. attend one of our meetings."

It gives us very much pleasure to publish this account of a mission event in St Joseph's Parish, Toronto. It is an example of what can be done for the misssions by a well-organized C.C.S.M.C. Unit, and in tendering our appreciation to those ardent Crusaders for all they have done for us through the years, we express at the same time our gratitude to the zealous priests at St. Joseph's who have given their hearty support to the mission movement.

THE REAL DEFINITION OF A CATHOLIC.

"To be a Catholic means more than belief, prayer, devotions and frequentation of the sacraments," declared His Excellency, the Most Rev. Fumasoni-Biondi, Apostolic Delegate to the United States, in an address to the National Catholic Council of Women in Washington. Furthermore, "to be a Catholic means more than the financial support of the Church and the defense of it when it is attacked, more than Catholic schools and more even than Catholic family life. It means all of these and more besides. A Catholic thinks as a Catholic in all his thought, he lives his whole life profoundly as a Catholic, he thinks nothing, says nothing and does nothing that does not meet the measure of the shadow of the Cross and the glory of the Risen Lord. The lesson of Catholic living is one every generation has to learn from Christ and the Church. In this age of sweeping changes, while winds of doctrines blow from every side, we must listen the more closely and act the more boldly to make our whole life Catholic and God willing, our whole surroundings Catholic."

LOYALTY.

Sancian, where St. Francis Xavier died, has its confessor of the Faith in Mrs. Kwan, who has clung to the Church through taunts, threats and persecution. Her entire village apostatized, and her husband left the Faith, but Mrs. Kwan remained loyal. In one year two of her daughters died and her neighbours told her it was because she practised the "foreign religion". The next year her son died, a dreadful blow to any Chinese mother, but it did not shake her faith. Soon after, her husband lost his sight and she used her little savings to take him to a doctor in Macao. This Chinese woman's cup of sorrow was filled to overflowing. She could not go outside her home without encountering taunts and jeers. Her neighbour said that she had brought all the misfortunes on her family because she remained a Catholic. Recently when Fr. Burke, M.M., saw her at Mass, her clothes were poor, she had no shoes, but her face was happy and peaceful as she greeted the missionary.—Fides.

LENT – AND THE WAR IN CHINA

Perhaps never before in the history of China has the attention of the whole world been focused on her as it has been within recent weeks. Events in Manchuria and Shanghai have furnished headlines for newspapers throughout the world, and the Sino-Japanese conflict has become the universal subject of conversation. We do not pretend to be able to lay our finger on the cause of the conflict, or to say with any degree of accuracy what it is all about. In a vague way we understand the struggle to be the result of military aggression on the part of Japan with the object of securing some of China's vast territory. The world is interested because the military tactics of Japan have violated international treaties and obligations, and endangered the peace of the world. In the crisis the League of Nations has yet to justify the high hopes of the masses who believed it was an efficient and sufficient World-Peace policeman. It would be beyond our scope to make even a pretence of discussing the serious war situation in the East. We cannot deny that people are anxiously interested—as they always are when material interests of great value are at stake.

* * * *

We may be accused of using a misleading heading if we do not say something about the situation in Shanghai. We do not mislead, for we wish to bring to your attention something about a war in China. But the war of which we write is not one in which the contending forces are Chinese and Japanese soldiers, nor are the munitions of the war to be reckoned in terms of bombs and bullets and bayonets. No, it is something entirely different—something that cannot be claimed as China's exclusively, but certainly it is in China that one sees the appalling effects of this war more vividly, perhaps, than elsewhere. We speak of the struggle between Paganism and Christianity, and we wish to make use of this holy Lenten season to remind our readers that in China is going on today, as for centuries past, the bitter battle between Christ's soldiers and the enemy of souls.

* * * *

Over there in that immense country which is home for one-fourth of the earth's inhabitants, we have the spectacle of a race that gives worship to devils because they have not known the saving Truths of God's Word. In their futile groping for the Light, they give their fealty of fear to revolting images of stone and wood, and they know not the meaning of a loving service of a merciful God. Born into this world they live their lives amid the crushing oppression that is Paganism with never the knowledge of God's Love to cheer their weary existence. The story of Calvary has meant nothing to them, and the legions of Satan are masters over them. It is all so foreign to our notions of life that the mere mention of it, we hope, will cause our readers to ask "Can nothing be done to remedy such a situation?" That is the point we wish to bring home to you. There is a remedy for it. There is being made an effort to rescue those countless pagans from the thraldom of Satan and of sin and idolatry.

* * * *

Day after day, with unrelenting enthusiasm, the heroic missionaries in China are striving to win immortal souls for Christ. Their efforts mean sacrifices that we scarcely realize. Away from home and friends, living in unfamiliar surroundings, enduring hardships of a new kind of life, and doing it all for love of souls, they are worthy of our earnest support. It would serve no purpose to remind you of the remedy, without, at the same time, drawing your attention to the fact that it lies within the power of you who read this to apply that remedy. Perhaps up to the present you have scarcely given a thought to the hideous horror of paganism's dread hold over the souls of millions of men and women and little children in China. Perhaps you have been too inclined all along, in the peaceful serenity of your own life lived amid the myriad blessings of a triumphant Christianity, to ignore that other picture of life as lived in a land where Satan is enthroned. But now China is brought to your attention, and China's missionaries look to you, especially at this season, to supply them with the ammunition to carry on their battle.

* * * *

Letters from our priests and nuns in China tell us of the feeling of helplessness that comes to them when they see so much good that could be done if only they had the means, and they realize that spiritual assistance is the only power that can avail to bring Grace to the hearts of those for whom they labour. They ask our prayers and our sacrifices. What magnificent things might be accomplished for God if Catholics everywhere were to offer their prayers and sacrifices during this blessed season of penance for the extension of God's Kingdom among the heathens. Calvary, with its God-laden Cross, will mean more to you if you try to realize that in the war for souls in China you can, and you ought to, use the means at hand to guarantee success. The smallest sacrifice you make to help the foreign missions is going to bring its reward not alone to yourself but to the souls for whose sake you offer that sacrifice. From your Catholic heart send up a prayer to beg God's blessing on His missionaries. It will have its effect in the renewed courage and strength it will bring to Christ's valiant soldiers "over there." Pray for peace in that unhappy country, not alone for earthly peace—but pray that into the lives of those poor pagans may come that peace which arises from the finding of Christ as He lives in His Church.

The Coming of the Grey Sisters

AUTUMN and the fields ripe with the fruits of another year; autumn and another season of missionary labor garnered for God; autumn 1931, and a white Empress in mid-ocean, under a harvest moon—bearing God's Grey Sisters on to the High Adventure, on to the greater harvest of souls.

Yes, the second little band of Grey Nuns from Pembroke, Ontario, have reached us and are now settled down in their new home in far-off Chuchow. Two brave souls have left home, loved ones, homeland and their little community; have braved the dangers of war-torn, unsettled, bandit-ridden China; the inconveniences of a strange language and strange customs; the difficulties of life in primitive, inland China—for the kingdom of Heaven's sake, for the love of Jesus Christ, for the salvation of souls.

Years gone by, our forefathers in their prairie vehicles crossed the wide and danger-infested expanses of Western Canada—braving all dangers to wrest a home and wealth from the wilderness. And in their wake, seeking the things of God, came the courageous missioners of New France. Despite the effeminacy of a pleasure-mad, wealth-crazed, immoral western civilization—their spirit still lives. It lives in the hearts of the brave missionary priests and sisters, who every year leave behind them all that an ultra-modern world calls necessary and to be sought after, and who penetrate to the uttermost ends of the earth—Christ's pioneers. They labor in a hidden way, ever under difficulties, where danger is imminent—and the glorious annals of their sacrifice and suffering will be read only in eternity.

This year I had the great honor of accompanying the new Sisters up the river to Chuchow. Despite the great inconveniences of the trip and the monotony of the journey they were always in the best of good spirits and made no complaints.

We left Wenchow early one morning, after saying good-bye to all there. Our priests and sisters always receive a warm welcome in Wenchow and our debt of gratitude to the good sisters and priests there is indeed a heavy one. Father Prost and all at the mission; Sister Mary, Sister Helen, and all at the hospital have been extremely kind and generous on all occasions. God bless them.

From the mission to the boats we went by rickshaws, and we must have made quite a procession, for in all we had ten rickshaws. Before leaving I had said mass at the Sisters' convent, offering it up for a safe journey up the river.

The morning was nice and although it was November 25th it was in no way cold. The tide was out and the river boats were all high and dry on the mud. But as soon as we got all our baggage aboard, the boatmen pushed the boats and we went coasting down the mud into the river. Then came the business of tying the numerous boats together, so that all could be towed by a steam launch to within a few miles of Tsingtien. It looked at first as though we were going to be left, but at last all was ready and off we started —the launch twisting and turning in its course and looking like some serpentine monster of the deep.

Some miles below Tsingtien the boats uncoupled, since the launch can proceed no further. Then our boatmen had to get busy with oar, pike-pole and sail, and soon after we reached Tsingtien—about 3.30 p.m. Father Wong and the mission servants met us as we stepped out of the boats, and carriers were secured to transport the baggage to the mission. A pair of stone steps led up to the city gate and from there to the mission was but a short distance. The Sisters were quite a curiosity to the people, especially the girls — but everybody was respectful. At the mission we put things in order for the Sisters, feeling so sorry that we had little of home comfort to offer them.

Next morning after mass in our little chapel, we left for Chuchow. The day was warm and sunny and I succeeded in getting some good snaps. The scenery along the route is very pretty and everywhere are the towering mountains. Now and again, because of the rapids, the boatmen would have to get out and push the boat. The river in very many places is very shallow, and progress is slow.

We spent the night at a place called Hai Keh—sleeping in the river boats. We had two boats — one occupied by the Sisters and their woman-companion, and one used by myself and my servants. The people at the village crowded about us as we stepped out of our boats for a minute and several minutely examined the habits and shoes of the Sisters.

We started off the next morning and again enjoyed wonderful weather. From Wenchow the two boats (under instructions) had kept close together, for the boats on the river all look alike and I had no intention of losing sight of the Sisters' boat, even for a minute.

At about four in the afternoon, we sighted a pagoda on a hilltop, and we knew we were nearly at home. Just about several hundred yards above this pagoda, there was a very swift rapids, and our boatmen, unaided, would not have been able to push the boat up. There was another boat just beside ours and a young fellow in it, pointing to the Sisters' boat, asked who were in it. I told him they were Sisters going to Chuchow. Then he began to tell everybody near him how the good Sisters at Chuchow had cured a terrible sore on his arm. Afterwards he got out and helped to push the Sisters' boat up the rapids. Thus did he show his gratitude.

It was dusk when we reached Chuchow. Father Amyot had walked down to the beach to meet us, so we took him aboard. Father Kam, the school boys and many of the Christians met us on the beach and gave the Sisters a glad welcome. In no time we were at the convent and how glad the Sisters there were to meet the newcomers. Sister Oswald, the superioress, had accompanied the newcomers from Shanghai to home. We left them all to their happy reunion. The Sisters were indeed glad to be home and I thanked God for giving us such a pleasant, safe journey up the river.

Such was the coming of the Grey Sisters to Chuchow —Sister Mary Daniel and Sister Genevieve, with their superioress, Sister Oswald. Canada may indeed be proud of her missionary Sisters in far-off Chuchow. Pioneers of Christ—they have shown forth in all difficulties the Christ-like spirit that in Canada prompted their great sacrifice. Pray for them, do not forget them. Without your spiritual and financial assistance their work cannot be carried on. God forbid that through lack of co-operation from the people of Canada, their heroic unselfishness and unceasing labor be done in vain.

All in our district of Chuchow wish to thank from the bottom of their hearts the Grey Nuns of the Immaculate Conception at Pembroke, for their 1931 Christmas gift to the mission. And may the Infant Jesus comfort and bless those who have given up so much for His dear sake. May our brave little band of Sisters find in their adopted home that peace and gladness that is assuredly theirs who have left all things to follow Him—to follow Him along the way of Sorrows, up Calvary's hill; to follow Him on that last day up the streets of gold in the City of God. O the blinding glory of it all, "No eye hath seen".

FROM LISHUI

"OBSERVER" Chats About Things Big and Little

Light the old cigar and pull the chair close up to the fire. We're just going to have a little chat about things big and little, mostly little. For my part I shall try to give you a faithful picture of the "day in and day out" life in China. An occasional letter, in which you tell me something of what is going on in the homeland, would be more than ample reward for my efforts. I hope the Buds in the Little Flower's Rose Garden will drop me a line once in a while, and I shall answer them, and other friends, through the columns of CHINA.

First of all, why the "Observer"? It is not because of any great desire to conceal my identity. But since we are all observers and nothing more for the first year or so in China, looking wise and learning things, it just seemed a natural nom de plume. I am writing only what any of our missionaries could write, casual pen pictures of Lishui from day to day. (N.B.—The name of Chuchow has been changed to Lishui by the Government.)

As a matter of fact, I shall tell you at once who I am. I am "Mo Kung." Chinese name, of course. The "Kung" is generic. Everybody here is a Kung. There is Bi Kung and Van Kung and Ghi Kung, and so on. But the Mo. There's the rub. Mo means "horse," and in China a horse is no mean animal. On our visiting cards there is always a "little name" which expounds and explains the "big name." In my case, for example, it explains "one who runs well," and also the mystic interpretation, "One who sees all things clearly and judges well."

All Chinese names, of course, are flattering. The Chinese people kissed some kind of Blarney stone thousands of years before Ireland was born.

However, it is somewhat of a coincidence that I should have been elected as an honorary member of the lordly horse family. As a matter of fact, were it not that at this moment Father Murphy and Father Greene and Father Kennedy are just 12,000 miles away from our little home town here, I should certainly suspect collusion.

Take Father Venadam's case. There's a real name for you. He is known as "The Light of the Kingdom." And Father Boudreau is one who "helps the people along the staircase to Heaven." If you ask me, I think I got a poor break at the hands of the naming committee, at that.

Life in China is like a piece of classical music. It grows on one from day to day. First impressions are strange, bewildering. In very few cases is there love at first sight. But as days go by and one comes to know more of this wonderful country and its lovable people, one finds it easier to understand why missionaries, after they have spent a few years in China, simply do not wish to return.

Take our own first impressions, for example. In Shanghai we remarked two things; the difference in temperature and the difference in food. The cold was penetrating, inescapable. There had been no heat in the house up to the time of our arrival, and it was necessary to wear an overcoat—or two—in one's room. The food was different. Foreign style at the Procure, but different. Nobody paid much attention to such trifling little inconveniences, but they could not help but produce impressions.

Came Wenchow. Two days after we landed we struck the coldest day they had felt for over a year. And we were but recently out of tropical Honolulu. And there is no heat in the Wenchow house, any time. Did we feel it? You bet we did. It found the very marrow of one's bones. But it was a good "baptism." And the men responded nobly and laughingly, and everybody was happy, notwithstanding.

But if the houses were frigid, there was nothing cold about the kindly and whole-hearted welcome accorded us by the good French Fathers — everywhere. Their welcome was something the new missionaries can never forget. Their hospitality we hope

Father Beal, assistant at Sungyang, has erected a hand-ball alley for the school boys. He is teaching them to play the game, which was never seen in that part of the world before.

Johnnie Mitebox gets his final instructions before setting out on his annual Lenten tour to all the schools in Canada and Newfoundland.

some day to be able to return if they honor us with a visit to Chuchow.

Our first stop in our own district was at Tsingtien, where Father Wong and Father Sharkey gave us a royal welcome. Here we set foot for the first time on the territory which will be the scene of our future labors for souls. Tsingtien is the outpost, the first place to greet the incoming missionaries. And what do you know? Father Sharkey had a stove in his room. We clustered around it like bees. And we left Tsingtien laden with gifts from both priests there, most exquisite work in soapstone from the little village some twenty li (7 miles) distant, where every man, woman and child has carved soapstone for generations.

Strange, but Tsingtien reminded us of Blairmore, Alta. Father MacDonald at times could hardly keep from calling Father Sharkey Father Harrington, the genial pastor of Blairmore, with whom we spent those delightful days among the Rockies on our drive across Canada.

The scenery at the particular spot is almost identical, towering hills on all sides, and just opposite the house one in particular which reminded us of the innocent-looking little one in Blairmore we essayed to climb. It took three hours to go up. But the hard part was coming down.

We left Tsingtien just after daybreak, after a "foreign style" breakfast which made heavy inroads on the commissariat department. Had there been rocky mountain "rabbit" served fresh from Fr. Harrington's frying pan, it would have been Blairmore all over again; except that he and Father John O'Dea would have been missing. And all way up stream we compared the mountains to those around the Crow's Nest Pass. Had there been snow, and the mountains a little higher, the picture would have been complete.

And Chuchow—at last. Like conquering heroes came this year's band to our real home among the mountains of Chekiang. At the gate we were greeted with a noisy welcome as firecrackers were exploded in our honor. It almost rivalled another famous occasion when Father Bambrick and one of our priests unwittingly stole Bishop O'Sullivan's "thunder" and lightning, too. St. Augustine's Seminarians will tell you all about it. As volley after volley heralded the arrival of the 1931 contingent to Chuchow, I could almost see the look of dismay on 170 firelit faces on that other occasion when hours of painstaking effort "went up in smoke" in honor of two itinerant clerics who quite innocently dropped in for a "look see." But happily things turned out all right.

We are sending a picture of the group of priests in Chuchow during the days following our arrival. Unfortunately we could not get a picture of all our priests, as Fr. Venini and Fr. Stringer were in Lungchuan, Frs. Wong and Sharkey in Tsingtien and Fr. Beal at Sungyang. We now number fifteen. This picture, by the way, was taken by the local photographer. Don't you think he made a good job of it, considering the material he had to work on? (Picture on page 37.)

No doubt you will receive detailed accounts of our trip upstream and of the wonderful Christmas celebrations. Two things struck me about our first Christmas at Chuchow (I find it hard to say Lishui yet): the devotion of the people and the way in which the boys served the Solemn High Mass at midnight. The church was filled (about 400 people, Christians and pagans), and most of the Christians had been there from 7.30 till the end of Midnight Mass. The altar boys have certainly been well trained by Father Gignac, and the six little acolytes, with their white soutanes and red capes looked like little cardinals.

I shall send you another contribution for next month, Fr. Editor. Meanwhile, accept our best wishes. There's real happiness waiting here for you and all our students who are on the road to the realization of their life's ambition. And our greatest joy will be, year by year, to welcome the newcomers, who will be beginning the grandest work there is in life, the work in which there can be no failure because He will be with us, always, in our efforts for the immortal souls for whom He died.

Father Morrison and his first little recruits from paganism. He has gathered them into a newly-opened school under a Catholic teacher. He appeals to his friends for funds "so that we may be able to keep it going, and not be obliged for lack of funds to shut down". This is at Sungyang, Che., China. He has opened another school for boys and girls in a far distant village.

A Trip Up the Wenchow River with Our Missionaries on Their Way to Chuchow

Our four missionaries who left Canada last October are now "settled down" at Headquarters in Chuchow, and are trying hard to get accustomed to things Oriental. By the aid of the camera, we are enabled here to see them as they near "the journey's end". On the page opposite, the journey is described.

OUR NEED IS GREAT.

Looking through our Donation List, one finds the names of those who have answered our appeals for funds for various purposes. Some names appear regularly month after month. Compared with the number who read "China," the number of our benefactors who send us donations is small. We wonder if it would be possible for YOU to send us something to help pay the expenses of educating our students, or help us get together a sufficient amount to go ahead with our proposed new building. Even a small donation from a few thousand of our readers would do much to make times less "depressing" for us. Donations of at least one dollar are acknowledged in "China" unless we are requested not to publish names of donors, and every donation is acknowledged by letter. Lent is a good time to add your name to the list of our benefactors, and not even our genial mailman will complain if the mail bag comes back well filled from the Scarboro Bluffs post office each day. The list of donations to our Building Fund since Dec. 16th will be published next month.

MONSIGNOR FRASER TO BE INVESTED AT SAINT MICHAEL'S CATHEDRAL.

At 10 a.m. on March 16th, the Feast of the Canadian Martyrs, His Excellency Archbishop McNeil will conduct the solemn investiture of Msgr. John M. Fraser as a Protonotary Apostolic. The ceremony will be held in St. Michael's Cathedral, Toronto, and all friends of Monsignor Fraser, as well as everybody interested in the mission work of St. Francis Xavier Seminary, which he founded, are invited to be present.

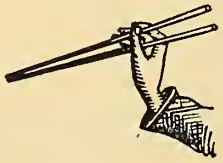
A GENEROUS BEQUEST.

We are delighted to acknowledge the receipt of our share in the estate of the late William Gallagher, $920.25. May this kind benefactor rest in peace, is our fervent prayer; and as long as we have students or missionaries, he will be remembered in their prayers, Communions, and Masses. In looking over the various bequests left in his will by this dear deceased friend, one realizes what a charitable and Catholic heart he had. He has made many grateful friends who will not abandon him in his hour of need.

CATHOLICS OF JAPAN AID CHINA SUFFERERS

Peking, China.—A sum of 771 yen and 74 yen—about $375.00—offered by the Catholics of Japan for the flood sufferers of China was sent by the Most Rev. John A. Chambon, Archbishop of Tokyo, to the Apostolic Delegate of China, Archbishop Celso Costantini, for distribution. The Archdiocese of Tokyo contributed 662 yen. The rest came from the Vicariate of Sapporo and the Prefecture of Shikoku. This generous gift on the part of the Japanese Catholics given when the two countries are at swords' points, is an impressive proof of the super-national character of Catholicism.

KIND BENEFACTORS.



It has been our pleasant task on many previous occasions to say a word of thanks to the Christian Mothers' Confraternity of St. Clair's Parish, Toronto, for their generosity to our Seminary. A short time ago, Father McGoey brought to us their splendid donation of bottled preserves, and again we express our appreciation for their very useful gifts and their kind remembrance of our needs.

Going Upstream to Chuchow

1. Leaving Wenchow, two hours after schedule. Foreground, the launch which tows sometimes as many as 125 boats. The boats are all of the same size and design, and are spotlessly clean inside. Each "lawda" takes a special pride in his boat, which is really his home. They remove their shoes when coming on board.
2. Rounding a bend in the river. This picture gives some idea of the number of boats in tow, a regular forest of masts and poles. There were over 100 the day we came. Fathers Boudreau, Venadam and MacDonald are in the boat immediately in the foreground.
3. Up the rapids. Rapids are numerous between Wenchow and Chuchow, and are worse upstream towards Sungyang, where Fathers Morrison and Beal are located. In this picture the men may be seen pulling with ropes as they walk along the shore. Far in the distance are the sails of the rest of the fleet.
4. Fr. King (left) and Father Serra emerge to have a "look see."
5. On the way up we visited the famous "Sheh Ming Dong" falls. This whole place is a famous scenic resort, and the cave where the water falls many feet is but one of the beauty spots. On this day, after a dry spell, only a thin wisp of water was falling. Left to right, Fathers Venadam, King, MacDonald, and Serra.
6. Wind against current. The boats are all very close together ascending the rapids.
7. The entrance to the "Sheh Ming Dong" cave. Note, left, how boat is moored. The long pole is driven into the mud through the bow. On the left are the three "lawda," or boatmen, who wade the rapids daily all through the winter to push the boats along. Sometimes they develop gangrenous sores on their feet and legs as a result of the cold water. Several such cases have been treated by the Sisters in our dispensary at Chuchow.
8. At Tsingtien, Father McGrath delivers to Father Sharkey a box sent all the way from his home in Saint John, N.B. Centre: Fr. Wong, parish priest of Tsingtien.

IN WHICH I TASTE SHARK'S FINS

"OBSERVER" Tells Us Something of the Trials of Banqueting Chinese-Fashion

Well, boys, that's that's! Fr. "Chook" MacDonald looked at Fr. King, and Fr. Gignac (a veteran by now) smiled across at me, and as we rose to "sit around" for another bowl of tea, we agreed that a Chinese banquet was a whole lot easier to take than we had been led to believe. For it was the end of our first official banquet in China, and our perfect host, Mr. Ghing, was preparing to take us around to see the workers in his match factory, where at the present moment over 1,000 people are employed.

A few days previously we had received an invitation, a large long piece of red paper on which our names were written in Chinese characters. Fr. Kam replied for us, simply writing the name again under its place on the invitation. As the time drew near, it was not without misgiving that we prepared for the feast, for we had been told much about the strange dishes and the rigid etiquette, about which, as yet, we really knew very little. For many a year, in the course of my talks to the school children in Canada and Newfoundland, I had told them that "in China, sooner or later, you will be invited to a banquet," and that there were as many as twenty courses, and that you ate bamboo and water-melon seeds and shark's fins, and so on. Now my "theories" were to be put to the test. We were on our way.

At the gate we were met by a servant, who escorted us to the dining-room, where our host, Mr. Ghing, took the last place, seating himself with the catechist, Mr. Wong. Tea and cigarettes were served, and we accompanied Mr. Ghing to look over the magnificent grounds of his large factory. Here beauty and utility are certainly combined, because the place is laid out like a beautiful park. Homes for his workers are in course of erection everywhere, because four years ago Fr. Kam gave him a copy of the Encyclical "Rerum novarum," and he at once decided to put into operation, as far as possible, the Catholic doctrine on Capital and Labor. Mr. Ghing is a pagan, but what a lesson some of the so-called Christian capitalists could learn from him!

On our return to the dining-room, Mr. Ghing called our names —Ma-Kung, Ching-Kung, Van-Kung, and so on, and as each one took his place, our host himself poured out a glass of hot Chinese wine. Much to our relief, knives and forks and spoons had been provided for those who could not yet juggle the chopsticks. And the signal to start was given when each one was invited to hold his "implement," be it fork or chopstick, over the dish in the centre of the table. The first course was bacon, in small thin strips, and it was quite good. By the side of each plate the waiter had put a quantity of shelled peanuts and water-melon seeds, and this afforded something to chew on when one was waiting and watching for the next move.

After the first course, our host took his wine bowl and made a motion as if he were proposing the health of his guests. He bowed and spoke something in Chinese—"here's looking at you" —and we all took our bowls and sipped the wine. If you don't like Chinese wine, here's where you must watch your step, because this process is repeated after every single course, and the faithful "boy" is ever at your side, ready to fill the bowl as soon as it shows any sign of diminution. Not to take the wine, or only appear to take it, is to insult your host, so you must at least take a sip. "What a tough break!" some of our United States friends will say.

At the beginning we tried to count and remember the courses. After the eleventh or so we couldn't agree as to the number that had gone and what they were, as it was too hard to keep "track" of them. But we saw that Fr. Vénadam had been quietly placing water-melon seeds beside his plate, one after each course, so we had to rely on him for exact information. He says there were "umpteen," but here are as many as I can remember, and in order: Bacon, friend kidney, meat pattie that looked like a leg of chicken and had a fake "bone" for appearance sake, Tiger fish, clam and clam soup, sponge cake, water lily hearts (small, round and very sweet)—don't say "swethearts," anybody, please, no matter how obvious the pun—and chicken soup. At this stage of the game we heard from Father Chook MacDonald, who had been struggling manfully with distasteful concoctions. The chicken soup was real. And the boys all knew it. And I never saw anything work quite as fast as that right hand of his, carrying a spoon. Shark's fins,—yes, there they were, at last, expensive now because they come from Japan, and Japanese stuff is still boycotted,—a sweet sort of sago soup; small crabs, onion meat pattie (horrors!), and finally a large dish of macaroni. A REAL CHINESE PUZZLE

In Which We Learn How Easy it is to Count Our Change in Shanghai—Maybe

If some day you get tired of cross word puzzles and guessing contests and Limericks and the rest, take the "Empress of Canada" at Vancouver, B.C., spend 17 days in crossing the Pacific, and when you land in Shanghai, try your hand at solving the Chinese money system. (If possible, drive across Canada first, and for practice try to find your way from Medicine Hat to Lethbridge.)

This contest is open to all readers of "China," even those employed on the office staff. And here are a few exclusive hints which may throw some light on the subject. Don't be alarmed if we enumerate some of the common units of currency. They are: taels, dollars, cents, and "dong pah," or what we would call "coppers."

Now don't fool yourself. A copper is not a cent. And a Chinese cent is not a cent of our currency. And what is more, the number of such "dong pah" required to make a Chinese dollar varies every day. Add to this the fact that there is big money and little money, both marked the same value, but really very different, and you will see that already it is as clear as mud.

ABOUT FORTY CENTS IN A BACKLOAD OF "CASH"
The "cash" is a small Chinese coin with a square hole in the centre. It takes forty to make a cent, yet 400 "cash" is a good day's pay in parts of China.

The Tael.

There really "ain't no such animal." I never saw a "tael" in Shanghai, but I have been told over and over again that such a thing is valued at so many "taels." The tael is like the equator. It is imaginary. But for practical purposes, since it represents about 75 cents value, one might just as easily say four taels as three dollars. Vice-versa doesn't seem to hold, here. I am open to conviction, but to me the tael is utterly unnecessary, even though the big business accounts are reckoned in terms of that elusive piece of currency.

The Dollar.

Of course, that's easy enough. A dollar equals a hundred cents, that is when there are any cents. But there are no "cents" in China's money system, and there seems to be no sense either. The big cartwheel marked "one dollar" is really worth about 30 cents of our money. If you have ten of such dollars, you might be foolish enough to imagine you had $3.00 our money. But not so fast. You go into a Chinese store, and after Mr. Storekeeper has given each coin a little flip on the table to test the metallic ring it is supposed to have, you may receive three or four of them back. "Sorry—them no good. Them not made by Government. Government always make good silver." So there you are. With the twenty-cent pieces (small money and worth about 18 cents Chinese) such counterfeits are fairly common, so that you never really know just how you stand financially until you have spent or tried to spend all your Chinese money.

The Twenty-Cent Note.

My heart warms to the twenty-cent note. It is twenty honest-to-goodness Chinese cents, that is one-fifth of a Chinese dollar. It never varies, and so far we have never found one forged. Father Venadam had a forged dollar bill, which he offered me for a present. I knew at once that it must have been a fake, but it did not take long to

The Junk that Didn't Beat the Devil

It was our first thrill and our first "close up" of one of the disastrous results of Chinese superstition. We had left Shanghai about half an hour before, and were approaching the junction of the Whangpoo with the Yellow Sea. It was on the good ship, "New Peking," which plies nightly between Shanghai and Ningpo, making the run in about 13 hours. Fathers Serra, MacDonald, and Father Venadam were in my room enjoying a little smoke when suddenly—crash—we knew we had struck something. The jar was not such as to cause any alarm. But when the engines were suddenly thrown into reverse and the old boat began to tremble with the shock, we decided to go out on deck and have a "look see."

About twenty feet away on our starboard bow and barely discernible in the darkness was the sail of a Chinese junk. Dozens of flash lights were pointed down to the muddy surface of the water where the scattered bits of wreckage showed us that the hull must have been damaged considerably. You never saw so much "junk." From its direction came dismal and repeated cries and to us it seemed that half of its occupants had been thrown in the water. A black pig was swimming around beside our boat, playing a losing game with the waters of the Whangpoo and all around us Chinese passengers and crew were running and shouting excitedly. It was dismal, let me tell you. By now the sail had disappeared and the cries were becoming fainter and fainter while from time to time a light appeared as if being waved by somebody on board. And the weird cry continued, like the wail of a lost soul in the darkness.

Our boat was drifting with the current, waiting to see if anything could be done. Suddenly both anchors were let go at once as we had drifted within about forty feet of a breakwater and just then from the other shore a powerful searchlight was flashed on us, showing everything as bright as in the daytime. But by this time the junk had drifted out of sight, the pig had disappeared in the darkness and the "New Peking" was soon on her way once more.

What had happened? Was it just a chance collision? Not at all. The Chinese boatmen have the belief that wherever they go the devil follows their boat a short distance behind. If they can cut across the bow of a larger vessel and leave its huge bulk between them and the evil one the latter will be bewildered and will lose his way. As we turned to go in to supper (possibly the last "foreign" meal we shall enjoy for some time) one of the officers passed me, swearing softly but eloquently at this unexpected delay. "What is the matter?" one of the passengers asked him. "Oh, they're always at it," he replied. "Last time we struck one of the ——— old tubs sixteen pigs were drowned."

We reached Ningpo next morning without further incident.

A REAL CHINESE PUZZLE.

find out. But nobody seems to think it worth while to counterfeit the little shin plaster, which is about the size of a Canadian 25-cent note. The twenty-cent piece, as we have said somewhere, is not twenty cents. Perhaps you can tell me by now what it is. It represents about 44 "dong pah." (Clue: You pay 24 dong pah for a newspaper on the Bund.)

Of course, the Chinese paper money we used in Shanghai is no good in Chuchow. How careless of me not to have mentioned that little detail! And my faithful little twenty-cent note is not to be found there. You must convert it all into Bank of Shanghai notes or silver dollars. The latter are supposed to be good everywhere, that is, "when they are good, they are very, very good" all over China, but life is too short to try to transport them in quantity.

This contest closes as soon as the first reader tells the editor how long it would take to buy a second-hand overcoat on York St., Toronto, and sell it to a Shanghai Scotchman at a profit of twenty taels.

MASS INTENTIONS

We want to thank the many friends who have sent us Mass Intentions. We have twenty-one priests to keep supplied with Intentions, and if you send your stipends to the Seminary the Holy Sacrifice will be offered as soon as possible for any intention you wish, for within a short time of their receipt they are called to our Mission in China, where the number of our priests assures their early acquittal.

The above map shows, approximately, the location in China of some of the principal American and Canadian Missions. Our district is about 500 miles from Shanghai, the scene of the Sino-Japanese conflict. Shanghai, the largest city in China and its chief commercial port, is situated on the coast of China proper near the mouth of the Yangtze-kiang River. It is known as the "New York of China". It has a population of 3,500,000, including 1,400,000 foreigners.

ALLEGED HUMOUR

NOT WHAT YOU THOUGHT.

She laid the still white form beside those which had gone before; no sob, no sigh forced its way from her heart, throbbing as though it would burst. Suddenly a cry broke the stillness of the place—one single heart-breaking shriek; then silence; another cry; more silence; then all silent but for a guttural murmur, which seemed to well up from her very soul. She left the place. She would lay another egg to-morrow.

Amateur Caravanner (to blacksmith): "Please I want you to sole and heel this horse, and when shall I call for it?"—Passing Show.

Mistress (to maid): "Haven't we always treated you like one of the family?" Maid: "Yes, and I'm not going to stand for it any longer."—The Summary.

You never know what a woman is driving at until she hits it.—Montreal Beacon.

"I have known you so long, doctor," sail the patient at the end of his visit, "I do not intend to insult you by paying your bill. But I have arranged a handsome legacy for you in my will."

"That's very kind," the doctor replied. "Now please allow me to look at that prescription again. There is a slight alteration I would like to make in it."

Juryman: "I beg to be excused, your honor. I owe a man $10, and as he is leaving for a long trip abroad, I want to catch him before he gets on the train and pay him the $10. It may be my last chance."

Judge: "You are excused. I don't want anybody on the jury who can lie like that."

Hold-up Man: "Your money or your life!"

Author: "Take my life. Just out. Clothbound. A best seller. Written by myself—all for $1.50."

Judge—Do you know the nature of an oath, madam?

Witness—I ought to, Your Honor; my husband is a golfer.

"Oh, captain," said a lady on a liner, "my husband is peculiarly subject to sea-sickness. Could you tell me what he ought to do in case of an attack?"

"It ain't necessary to tell him, ma'am," said the captain. "He'll do it."

"Mrs. Peck," said the medium, "your husband commands you go home."

"'Commands'? Huh! That isn't my husband."

The Sage—"There are two sides to every question?"

The Fool—"Yes, and there are two sides to a sheet of fly-paper, but it makes a big difference to the fly which side he chooses."

Ethel—"If you don't love Angelina, whatever made you get engaged to her?"

Edwin (sadly)—"Angelina."

The Doctor—"And if loses consciousness again, give him a teaspoonful of that brandy.

The Patient's Wife—While he's unconscious? Oh, doctor, he'd never forgive me?

The Liar—"Yes, that was an awful experience. We lost our way in the desert and for five days and nights couldn't find any signs of civilization."

An Audience—"But what did you live on?"

The Liar—"Soup, old chap, soup morning, noon and night. I never want to see soup again."

The Audience—"Oh, I say, that's coming it a bit strong. Where did you get the soup unless, of course, you mean you had a supply of the tinned stuff with you?"

The Liar—"No, we hadn't a thing. But we had some water and matches, luckily, and you see, the first day the car struck a stone and turned turtle."

Co-ed—"What is your favorite play?"

Soph—"If I have a favorite it's seeing a man steal second."

"What do you think of the moratorium?"

"Haven't seen a picture of her yet. Is she anything like the Mauritania?"

"Our college won!"

"They did? Rah, rah, rah! What did they win?"

"The debate."

"Oh, pshaw!"

Dear Old Lady—"Captain, would you please help me find my stateroom?"

Captain—"Have you forgotten what number it is, madam?"

D. O. L.—"Yes, but I'll know it if I see it again; there was a lighthouse just outside the window."—American Missionary.

We have just nicknamed our dog Pluto, Mars, because from all indications he appears to be inhabited.—American Boy.

"Ma," asked small Elinore, "what does 'transatlantic' mean?"

"It means across the Atlantic, dear," replied the mother. "Trans' always mean 'across.'"

"Then I suppose,' said the little student, "that 'transparent' ought to mean a cross parent."

side were oranges and sticks of sugar cane.

At the end of the banquet, and several times while we were eating, Mr. Ghing assured us that we were being slowly starved to death, that the food was poor and badly cooked, and so on. We did our best to assure him that never before in life had we partaken of anything just quite as exquisite. It was all part of the game, the etiquette, and we were learning, slowly. I had brought a little tip for the caterers, six Chinese dollars wrapped up in red paper, red being the color for everything connected with such an event. At a given signal from Fr. Kam, just before the end of the meal I slipped it under the serviette, making no fuss about it at all. As we were seated in the chairs around the room for another bowl of tea, the waiters came in to clear the table. They removed everything, even the serviettes, but nobody saw the red paper, not by a long shot. There it stood, lonely and forlorn, until nearly all the dishes were removed, and I feared it would soon stick out like a sore thumb, much to everybody's embarrassment. Suddenly an "indignant" waiter chanced to spy it, and with many protests and profuse bowing, came over to assure me that something or other was the case. I looked very wise and threw an appealing glance across the room in Father Kam's direction, just to make sure. Then, making my most sweeping and gracious bow, I assured him as best I could that not one of us was worthy to make even such a wretched offering, and that we should be eternally grateful if he would confer upon us the unspeakable honor of accepting the trash that red paper contained. All that I would have said and should have said, but my Chinese is a little weak as yet, and I left him to infer what he could from my gestures, and "tut, tuts," and "please don't mention it, old fellow." Anyway, the paper disappeared even faster than the chicken soup.

And now, dear friends, all you who ever have worried over your social engagements, let me tell you that we are soon to give a return banquet, and that I am to play the host. I am worried.

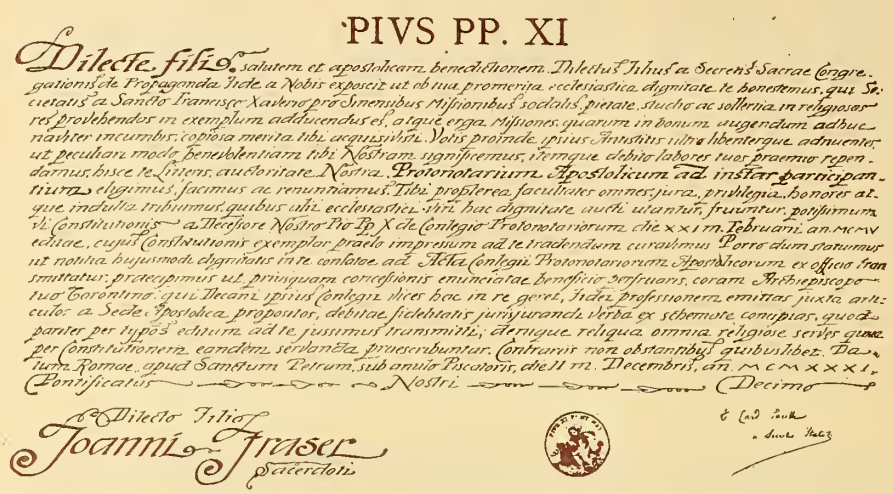
CHINA MISSION LOSES A FRIEND

The Angel of Death, in its visitation of March 5th, claimed the soul of Rev. Doctor James T. Foley, who for twenty years had occupied the editorial chair of the "Catholic Record." Catholic journals throughout Canada hastened to pay their tributes to one who had laboured so long and so faithfully with his brilliant pen in the cause of all that was right. His many-sided scholarship, which enabled him to give his fearless expositions of Catholic viewpoint, brought a nation-wide prestige to the "Record," and his death is an irreparable loss to Catholic journalism in Canada.

"China" has very good reason to mourn the passing of this "best-informed journalist of our day and generation," for we feel we can say that among the friends of Saint Francis Xavier Seminary no one has contributed more to its success than the late lamented Doctor Foley.

For a score of years he opened the columns of the "Catholic Record" as a channel for contributions to Mission Burses. Years before the Seminary came into existence "Father Fraser's China Mission Column" was familiar to all the readers of the "Record." It is true to say that Dr. Foley's work was the beginning of the mission education of Canadian Catholics. Through it the people became informed of a great missionary's work, and began to realize the necessity of taking their place as Catholics in the field of Foreign Missions. Until then, this part of Catholic activity was confined to the few Apostolic members of the various religious orders, but it lacked the pushing force of publicity among the laity. Too long had the field been exploited by the wealth and glamour of Protestantism. Too long had it been left to the heroic religious orders who, single-handed, had braved the sufferings and the labours inseparable from mission life in the days of limited travel facilities, coupled with meagre material means. It remained for Father Fraser to do the pioneering for the secular clergy of North America on the Chinese Mission Field, with its unknown dangers and toil; but it was due to the initiative of Doctor Foley that Father Fraser's work became familiar to the faithful. To the lasting credit of our departed friend of the "Catholic Record," be it said that it was he who was quick to see the vast possibilities for the Faith in the step taken by Father, now Monsignor, Fraser.



Many a boy who is now a priest in China, and many a Catholic mother read "Father Fraser's China Mission Column" in the "Record," and pondered. Why, it occurred to them, should not the Catholics of Canada and Newfoundland be interested in the salvation of those innumerable pagan souls, who, just as they themselves, were bought by the shedding of the Precious Blood on Calvary? Why should they hesitate to shoulder their share of the work so dear to God, and so tremendously full of possibilities for eternity?

Thus the seed was sown, thus it began to take root and to spread, and from it came the crop of societies, colleges and seminaries that today amaze the Catholic imagination of the continent. From this came the missionaries who are today carrying on the work thus begun.

Is it any wonder that this Seminary feels grateful to Doctor Foley and sincerely mourns his passing? By his pen and through his active interest in China Mission its work has found an eager response in the hearts of the faithful, enabling it to carry on its great important work.

We pray for the great soul of Reverend Doctor Foley; we know that his works are ahead of him, and that he now shares in the reward of those who, through his lead, have learned to be apostles. We extend our sympathy to his relatives, to his sister, the mother of one of our priests in China, and to the "Catholic Record" in the loss of an able and esteemed editor.

"China" begs the prayers of its readers for a priest who has been to us always a mighty fine friend.

RIGHT REVEREND MONSIGNOR JOHN M. FRASER

PIUS XI, POPE

To our Beloved Son, John Fraser, Priest; Health and Apostolic Blessing.

In order to fittingly acknowledge your successful labors in the interest of St. Francis Xavier China Mission Seminary, in which you have been an example of piety, zeal and devotion for the advancement of religion and for which you are still actively engaged in furthering its missionary work, our beloved secretary of the Sacred Congregation for the Propagation of the Faith has petitioned us to confer upon you an ecclesiastical honor.

Gladly do we grant His Excellency's request.

In special token therefore of our benevolence and as a fitting reward of your work, we, by this letter and in virtue of our authority, name, create and declare you a PROTONOTARY APOSTOLIC "AD INSTAR PARTICIPANTIUM."

Furthermore, we grant you all faculties, rights, privileges, honors and favors enjoyed by all who are invested with this dignity, especially those mentioned in the Constitution of our Predecessor, Pius X, dealing with the College of Protonotaries, under date of Feb. 21st, 1905, a copy of which we direct to be forwarded to you.

While we have ordered notice of this dignity now conferred upon you to be entered in the records of The College of Protonotaries Apostolic, we adjoin, also, that before exercising any of the prerogatives attaching to it, you make, before His Excellency, the Archbishop of Toronto, who for this shall act as Dean of said College, profession of Faith as prescribed by the Holy See, and take the Oath of Fidelity according to the form which we order also to be sent you.

Finally, you shall religiously observe all other requirements of the said Constitution, everything to the contrary notwithstanding.

Given at St. Peter's, Rome, under the Seal of the Fisherman, this second day of December in the year of Our Lord, One Thousand Nine Hundred and Thirty-one, the Tenth of our Pontificate.

E. CARDINAL PACELLI,
Secretary of State.

LARGE CONGREGATION WITNESSES CEREMONY OF INVESTITURE.

On Wednesday morning, March 16th, the Feast of the Canadian Martyrs, St. Michael's Cathedral, Toronto, was the scene of an impressive ceremony, when Father John M. Fraser was invested with the purple, which marked his elevation to the rank of a Monsignor. At ten o'clock His Excellency Archbishop McNeil celebrated the Mass, assisted by Rev. Fathers McNabb and MacGillivray of our Seminary.

Father Cline Preaches.

Following the Mass, Rev. Father Cline of Holy Name Parish, Toronto, delivered a sermon appropriate to the occasion. Taking as his text, "Render, therefore to all men their dues. Tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honour to whom honour," (Rom. XIII, 7) the reverend preacher remarked that, just as the civil authorities give recognition to the servers of the State, so also does the Church be mindful of those who have rendered her noble service in the advancement of religion and the care of souls. Dwelling on the activities of Father Fraser in the cause of the Chinese missions, Father Cline paid tribute to his great apostolic zeal, which had accomplished so much to make the missions part of the Catholic life of North America.

The sermon was followed by the Ceremony of Investiture, when Archbishop McNeil conferred on Father Fraser the various insignia of his dignity as a Protonotary Apostolic.

Many Priests Present.

An exceptionally large number of clergy were present in the Sanctuary, among them being Archbishop Forbes of Ottawa, Archbishop McGuigan of Regina, Bishop McNally of Hamilton, Bishop Macdonald, Titular Bishop of Hebron, Rt. Rev. Msgr. Whalen, V.G.; Rt. Rev. Msgr. Blair, President of the Catholic Church Extension Society; Rt. Rev. Msgr. Hand, Toronto, and Very Rev. Canon Roch, Superior of the Foreign Mission Seminary at Point Viau, P.Q.

The music was directed by Rev. Father Ronan of St. Augustine's Seminary, and the students from China Mission Seminary took part in the ceremonies.

His Excellency, Bishop Defebvre, with the priests and students of St. Paul's Seminary, Ningpo. At the Bishop's right are Fr. Nugent, C.M., President of the Seminary; Fr. Serra and Fr. Givry, C.M. At his left, Fr. Venadam, Fr. Fong, C.M., and Fr. O'Hare, C.M.

FRENCH GOVERNMENT HONORS BISHOP DEFEBVRE

The February issue of "Le Bulletin Catholique de Pekin" conveys the news of a signal honor conferred by the Government of France on Bishop Defebvre of Ningpo, under whose jurisdiction our Mission of Lishui has grown to its present position. His Excellency has been named a Knight of the Legion of Honor.

Le Bulletin says: "Msgr. Andre Defebvre, Vicar-Apostolic of Ningpo, born at Tourcoing, France, June 24th, 1886, entered the Congregation of the Missions (commonly called 'the Lazarists') on Aug. 5th, 1903. A year later he left Paris for China.

"The attention of Bishop Reynaud was attracted by his unusual talent, his nobility of character, and his gentle and affable disposition. For three years he was a professor in the College of Tchousan, after which he had charge of the Christians at Ningpo, and was then appointed Director of the Grand Seminary. There, for more than fifteen years he worked with great success in the formation of native clergy, ably seconded by his fellow-Lazarist, Msgr. Hou, now Vicar-Apostolic of Taichow.

"Possessing the confidence of Bishop Reynaud, Msgr. Defebvre had a great deal to do with the administration of the diocese, giving special attention to the development of education and works of charity. He was especially interested in the success of the French College of Ningpo, which has prepared many promising students for the Aurora University (Shanghai).

"Named Vicar-Apostolic on Dec. 23rd, 1926, and consecrated by Bishop Hou on the first of May following, his episcopal career was launched in the midst of all kinds of difficulties which followed the coming of the Nationalist Government of Nankin. Possessed, however, of the ability to meet them, he gradually won the sympathy of the pagans themselves and courageously demanded the rights guaranteed by treaty to the Catholic Religion, and, in the face of all difficulties, saw his Vicariate standing its ground and developing strength. Happy we are to congratulate Msgr. Defebvre on his appointment to the Legion of Honor, and we feel certain all citizens of France — our naval officers in particular, who have enjoyed his charming hospitality at Ningpo—will rejoice with us at the honor which the Government of France has conferred upon him."

Happy also is China Mission Seminary to join with all the good Bishop's well-wishers in offering its congratulations. Less than two years ago we had the good fortunate to have him as our guest on the occasion when he ordained three of our priests, and we can assure our readers that we also were charmed with his affable personality and very much enjoyed the cheerful disposition of the missionary bishop. May His Excellency enjoy for many years the honor now conferred upon him, and may he be spared long to carry on his fine work in God's vineyard.

"Way Lee! Way Lee!"

The Banshee in China

By OBSERVER.

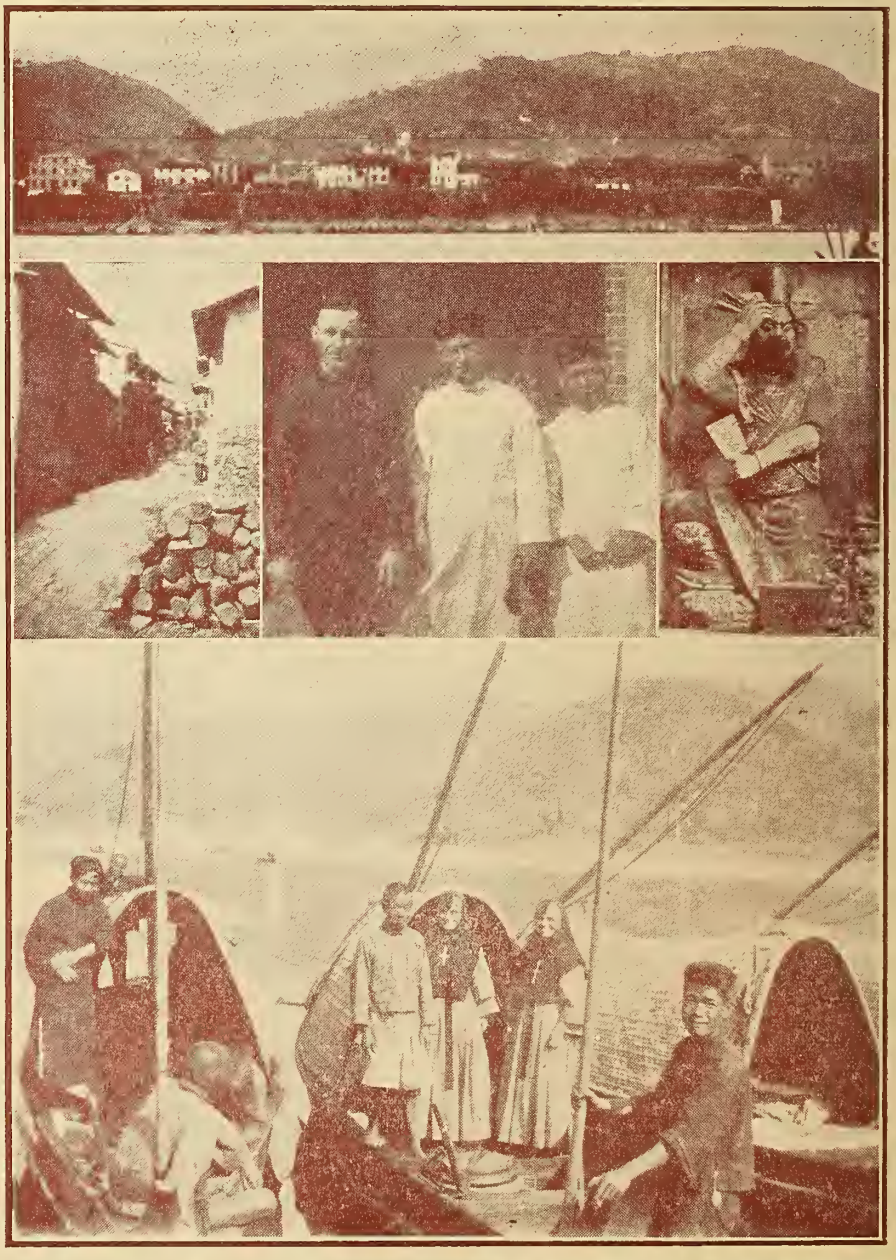
We were all seated around in the "katting," or guest room. It was just after supper and the boys were relaxing to the strains of music from the little portable Victrola. Suddenly Father King entered, a little excited, it seemed; a trifle pale around the "gills," at least so we imagined.

"What was that, that strange weird noise outside? I never heard anything like that before, although in Ningpo I thought I had heard about all the sounds of China."

We listened. There it was sure enough. A wail like the cry of a lost soul, repeated, it seemed, by a chorus of people in answer to some high-pitched incantation coming from another and shriller voice.

"Let's go outside," I said to Father Amyot. "I want to hear this thing at close range, if possible."

It seemed to be just over the backyard fence. It was weird. What a difference between reading about those things in books and then suddenly finding yourself less than 50 yards from where the soul of a dying pagan was being called back to its body by the professional soul-caller.



To Father Amyot and the other older men it was not so strange. And as we listened he unfolded to us the story of what was going on out there in the darkness, where another pagan soul was soon to meet its God.

When a person is dying the pagans believe that his soul has just gone a little way from his body, but is still within hailing distance. But not everybody may presume to attempt to call the soul back. There is a special "medium," sometimes several of them, in the district, and he is hastily summoned before the spirit has gone too far "into the night." The neighbours flock in, just as they would to a wake at home, and when the soul-caller begins his litany of heart-rending appeals to the departing they all join in the chorus: "Way Lee! Way Lee!"—Come back, come back.

For long hours the dreary chorus goes on, accompanied by the wail of the mourners. No consolation other than this indescribable pandemonium is vouchsafed to the poor dying man. No priest is there to speak to Him of the God whom He will soon know for the first time, in judgment. No Viaticum to prepare his soul for that last dread journey into eternity.

As I lay on my pillow that night the sound of the mournful dirge still came clearly to my ears. Gradually it seemed to change, and as I slowly succumbed to "tired Nature's sweet restorer," the rising and falling inflection became like the distant moaning of the sea. It seemed that somewhere—out in the darkness—a person was crying for help, and the only answer was that same ceaseless moan.

Today the cries have ceased. Things go on as usual. But somewhere in eternity another pagan soul begins a life that will never end. How truly unsearchable are the ways of God!

HALIFAX COLLEGE HAS BIG MISSION WEEK.

A lecture on the Canadian missions, an illustrated lecture on China, and a gripping play on missionary life in the Canadian North West were the outstanding features of the annual mission week at St. Mary's College early in March.

The lecture on the first day was delivered by William Pepper, Arts '33. He dealt with the various labors and hardships encountered by our missionaries in the Canadian North. He explained in detail the duties of the missionary and their means of travel. He concluded with a petition for the continued prayers from the students for the welfare and success of these missionaries toiling in our own North West.

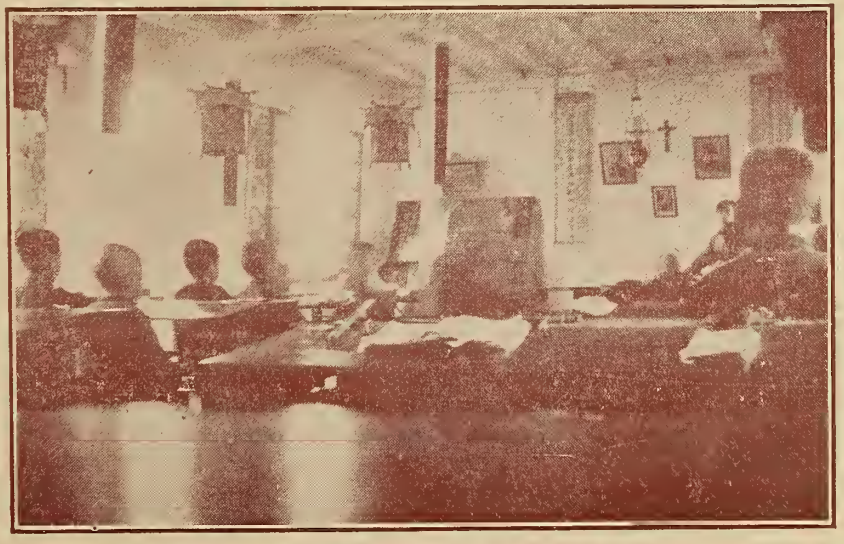
On Wednesday, the President of the College, Rev. Brother Cornelia, delivered a lecture on China, using slides to illustrate his words. The Reverend President spoke of the many customs of these Oriental people, so different from ours and laid stress on the depressing conditions of the average home in China. He reviewed the work of the missionary in China, pointing out the hardships the priest undergoes in the great and noble work of bringing the light of Faith to these poor people. The slides, which were made available through the courtesy of the China Mission Seminary at Scarboro Bluffs, proved most interesting, portraying the various activities of the Missionary and showing the stages of the school life of the children.

The play entitled "Faith," which comprised the program for the third day, portrayed the fate of a lonely prospector, isolated in the Canadian North, and who, through his strong professions of faith, received the last rites of the Church, before being called to his Maker. The players, John Lynch, Chris Grant, Leonard Meehan, J. Donald Murphy, Harry Mitchell, performed their parts most creditably. All the students were unanimous in declaring it the best of many religious plays that have been produced at the College. For its success the Executive of the Mission Crusade are deeply indebted to Rev. Brother Murphy, who has always given cheerfully much of his time and effort to the many activities of the College for the welfare of the Missions.

The Missions Week was very fittingly concluded with the First Friday devotions, when special prayers were offered for the intentions of the Missionaries at home and in the foreign fields.—Halifax Daily Star.

THE HOLY FATHER'S MISSION INTENTION.

Pope Pius XI has recommended this mission intention for special prayer during the month of April: "Religious orders of contemplatives in the missions."



The intention expresses the belief of the Supreme Pontiff that nothing will cause the Faith to flourish in pagan lands more than the establishment of communities of religious within their borders with members consecrated to a life of prayer. Mere activity will not convert souls. Apostolic action must grow out of a spiritual and prayerful life; if the missionaries themselves are so burdened by daily duties that they are no longer able to give much time to prayer and meditation, then others must supply this for them.

This is the first thought back of the April intention. In addition, there is the good example which a community of religious, faithful to a rule of mortification, imparts to the native pagans. This example will draw the pagans not only to respect for the Catholic Church, but may even prompt some with the desire to become contemplative religious. Pope Pius, in fact, emphasized the natural aptitude of some peoples for this kind of life; the Buddists have "monasteries," and the Hindus have their sannyassis, or men of the mortified life.

The intention also includes, indirectly, the thought of added vocations to the contemplative religious life in the Christian countries. A movement is now going on to have communities in Christian lands adopt certain mission territories and to offer prayers regularly for the apostolic laborers in these sections.

In this work all of the faithful can have a part. In the words of Father Pierre Charles, "The humble woman who prays in a church for the conversion of China, the seminarist who communicates and mortifies himself for his adopted missionary, the sick person who offers his sufferings for a native seminary, all those who unite their daily actions with a missionary intention, all respond to the missionary vocation of the Church." The missionary life which The Little Flower led in her convent at Lisieux is a shining example to all Catholics of our times in this respect.

The need for active workers in the world-wide mission fields of the Church is very great indeed; but the need for devoted souls to offer prayers for the success of the apostolic laborers is even greater. We are bidden to remember that, when Our Lord pictured to His Apostles the great fields of souls, white for the harvest, He said to them: "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that He send laborers."—"The Shield."

Interior of Father Morrison's New School in Sungyang.

Variety in Lishui

By OBSERVER.

Today we said good-bye to Father Beal, who is returning to Sungyang after a brief stay at headquarters in Chuchow. This is his only holiday for the year, and he tells us he is returning with renewed energy after a few weeks at the home base. The new men were able to give him very interesting news of doings at the Seminary, and he had much that was of interest for all of us in the accounts of his work and mission trips throughout the "parish" of Sungyang. Father Beal will soon be ranked as one of our "veterans."

One strange thing you will notice if you ever come to China. It is that there are coffins everywhere. And they are not empty, either. You will see them outside the houses, in back yards, in the fields. Sometimes they are kept for years before being buried on the hillside. In China there are no cemeteries as such. The whole country might almost be called one huge graveyard. And one of the most gruesome sights imaginable is that of the packs of lean and hungry dogs who frequent the burying places and tear up the remains of the little children from their very shallow graves. It makes one's blood run cold at the thought. But this is pagan China.

Feeling cold? Invest in a "ho loo" and feel the difference. This Chinese lad is quite comfortable with his "ho loo", or Chinese stove.

One of the priests in a neighbouring mission told me of a strange experience of his in regard to this custom of delayed funerals. He was called one day to prepare an old lady for death. A few days afterwards he was called to perform the funeral rites, but observed that there were two coffins. He asked the daughter who else had died, and she told him that it was her father. Now he had stayed in this house many a time, and never had heard anybody speak of the father, so he expressed his great surprise. "When did your father die?" he asked. "Three years ago," was the reply. "And the coffin, where have you kept it ever since?" "Oh, Seng Fu," she replied, "it was behind that partition in the room where you used to sleep." For two years he had been sleeping beside the coffin without knowing it.

The Grey Sisters of the Immaculate Conception are working hard in the dispensary where sometimes as many as a hundred patients a day are being treated. A pathetic case was brought to their attention the other day. A young boy of about eleven years of age was brought in from a country place about three days' journey distant. He had been terribly burned about the body when he fell upon the ho loo, or portable stove, he was carrying. There was absolutely no hope for him, so they could only do something to ease the pain and let the parents know he could not live. He was an only son, and there is perhaps no greater tragedy in any family in China than the death of an only son. The whole family was prostrate with grief. The father expressed it simply but pathetically. He said that before the accident they needed fourteen bowls of rice a day. Now they only needed four. They were grieving so much that they could not even eat their poor meal of rice.

We didn't tell you about the "ho loos," did we? Well, here in China there are no stoves in the houses. Not only that, but most of the houses are wide open to the elements from the sides, having at best a sort of lattice work that affords scant protection from biting wind. There are two ways the people guard against cold. The first is to put on extra clothes. You should see some of the children. They have layers and layers of outer garments. They are so top heavy at times that they just waddle around like little penguins.

The other way is to carry your stove around with you, as most of the people do. The stove is really a little round charcoal burner and can very easily be carried under your coat. Here (at left) one of the boys is holding one up for your inspection. At times they are nearly red hot, and the heat lasts for quite a long time.

At the present writing Father Stringer is in Shanghai, having some dental work done. How would you like to travel from, say, St. John's, Nfld., to Vancouver, B.C., to have a tooth filled? In point of time it is about the nearest comparison we can find on the North American Continent. That journey would take about twelve days each way. From Lungchuan to Shanghai takes about ten days and the return journey may take seventeen days or more. At the present moment the water is so low in the river that it takes five days to come DOWN stream from Lungchuan to here.

There are several dentists along the way. There is one here and another in Sungyang. They must have another trade on the side, as business is too slack ordinarily to keep them going at the dental profession. Here I do not know whether to say that the dentist also frames pictures or the picture framer also fills teeth. In Sungyang he makes shoes in his spare time. But to fill teeth they use broken-up egg shells and some kind of glue, so we deem it better to make the long and tedious trip to Shanghai.

A correspondent asks me: "Do you have to make your own bread?" For answer, we refer you to the picture of the cook with the "batch" he has just baked. And the bread is very much better than any baker's bread at home. It is just good old home-made bread. No, we cannot get any butter here. We're like the man who called his only daughter Oleomargarine. He didn't have any but her. (I'm safe, because you can't throw things across the Pacific.) Occasionally we buy some, tinned, from Shanghai, but it is too expensive for regular use.

There are some differences in the menu. The good old Canadian breakfast has passed into history, as far as we are concerned. The ordinary breakfast here—and it's amazing the way the priests are taking to it—consists of one good bowl of rice, milk—fairly good—dry bread and coffee. We call the milk "Peninsula" brand, because when a fly falls in he's almost, but not entirely, surrounded by water. But the milk can be improved if one wishes, by the addition of a little of the canned variety. That can be purchased here—at the village blacksmith's.

I'm not joking. That's where we buy it. Father Gignac showed me the place the other day. Believe me, it wasn't under any spreading chestnut tree, either. It was in one of the most crowded spots of Main Street, Lishui. And there, sure enough, stacked on a shelf above the bellows were tins of rolled oats and evaporated milk.

It took Father Fraser a long time to get the cook on to the right method of baking bread, and we can understand and sympathize with our pioneers, whose gastronomic powers must have been taxed to the limit by the first stuff produced.

Last night was the first anniversary of Father "Chook" MacDonald's ordination, so we had a special feast—some butter and jam were added from the emergency rations of "foreign" food.

The learning of the language goes on apace, and we are getting accustomed to things Chinese by degrees. We hope our friends are not forgetting us in their prayers.

View showing Lake Ontario shore in winter garb—but not this past winter. Here, where you now see snow and ice, the students were able to go for hikes and cliff-climbing operations all through the season. Unfortunately, we managed to get in only one hockey game on our rink this winter. Our hockey stars who went to China last fall could not be envious of our "exercise" with the old blades this year.

First Religious Profession at Chuchow

Church of the Sacred Heart, Chuchow, where the Ceremony took place.

We have just received word from our headquarters at Lishui (Chuchow) of the first religious profession to be held in our district. It is history in the making. The Grey Sisters have now been in China over two years, and their dispensary at our headquarter's city has been daily ministering to the needs of the sick and afflicted of every description. Their fame has travelled far and wide throughout the whole territory and it is no uncommon sight to see a sick person who has been brought by chair from as far as eighty or ninety li to receive treatment, and some of the precious Mo Mo medicine, as the Chinese call the prescriptions.

For one of those sisters, who has been the pioneer of this dispensary work, and that in spite of a long period of ill health, this first religious profession has been an occasion of great happiness. In our Church of the Sacred Heart, Chuchow, in the presence of the priests and sisters and a small number of faithful Christians, Sister Catherine yesterday pronounced her final vows. No doubt this beautiful ceremony will be repeated many a time in the future. It brings home to us the fact that our community of sisters is becoming well established in their new home across the ocean, and that others will come as the years go by. But there was something strikingly impressive about this particular ceremony, perhaps the suggestion of loneliness as contrasted with the well-filled convent chapels and the numbers of white-veiled novices we associate, almost as a matter of course, with a religious Reception or Profession at home.

Sister M. Catherine Doyle, the subject of the first Religious Profession in our District in China.

Father McGrath was the celebrant of the Mass, assisted by Father Amyot, who had preached the eight-day retreat of the sisters. Father Gignac was Master of Ceremonies, while Father Venadam, organist, had an able choir in the persons of Fathers Serra, Kam, King and MacDonald.

Before the end of Mass, in a brief discourse befitting the occasion, Father McGrath stressed the contrast between this ceremony and those so often witnessed in our country. "Today," he said, "our minds go back to scenes we have witnessed in lands of faith, to many a little convent chapel at home, filled with relatives and friends, who could appreciate the greatness and the nobility of the sacrifice many a young novice was making. And as we reflect upon the contrast with this happy but lonely scene today, it comes home to us very forcefully that lands of faith are left behind forever. Thousands of miles from home; in the heart of a great pagan city, upon whose people the beauty and the import of this ceremony is lost, this young sister comes to Christ — alone. Neither father nor mother nor friends can be present to share with her the joy of this crowning event of her life of self-sacrifice and renunciation. But what matter since He is present for whose sake the sacrifice is made; what matter since He understands and will be her reward exceeding great!"

Father McGrath then spoke of the joys of mission life, of the abiding peace of soul that was the lot of the missionary priest or the missionary sister, "in spite of the crosses and trials with which God has seen fit to purify our little beginnings for Christ and souls in far-away Chuchow. It was truly a peace that was not of this world and all had found in China a greater happiness than they had ever known at home. It was also a wondrous source of consolation to feel that God had been pleased to accept the even greater sacrifice that parents and loved ones at home had made in our behalf. Some of them had preceded us into eternity; others, like ourselves in China, were awaiting the happy day when we should be

Edited by FATHER JIM

CONDITIONS OF MEMBERSHIP

Dear Boys and Girls:

When the members of our "Rose Garden" receive Holy Communion they are expected to remember to offer it sometimes for the intention that there may be more vocations for the Missions. What does this mean? It means that you are to ask Almighty God to give His Grace to more boys and girls which will help them to make up their minds to spend their lives in working for the salvation of souls in pagan lands. Often boys and girls wish when they are young to become priests or nuns, but they never follow out their early intentions. Vocation means a "calling." God calls some boys to be priests and some girls to be Sisters. His "call" is given in different ways; it may come from hearing a lecture, or a sermon; it may come through reading some spiritual book; it may come through seeing some ceremony in church; whatever way it comes, it brings the desire to help other people save their souls, and save one's own soul through helping others. Just at this time of the year there are many boys and girls looking forward to the end of their last year at school; I want you all to pray hard that many of them may heed God's call to become missionaries.

What has Father Jim been doing, 'tis so long since we heard from him? Well, I certainly owe you an apology, and I hope you won't be too hard on me. I have received heaps of letters; so many, in fact, that I have not yet found time to send certificates to some. I am sorry I cannot acknowledge them all in "China." Many buds wrote to me telling how much they enjoyed reading the story of Ruth Graves. The "Withered Rose" asks the prayers of the buds for her mother, who died some time ago. Things are going along fine with our Club, and now that Spring is here, we are going to expect a big busy season of activity for the Missions. I remember the buds every day in my Mass and ask God always to keep them faithful follows of the "Little Flower."

Your friend,
FATHER JIM.

Going to Help China.

"We have been reading 'China' and seeing how the poor Chinese children, and even grown-ups, do not believe in God. We feel sorry for them. A mission society was formed in our school, and we are sending you our second spiritual bouquet. We are all members of your Garden, and would like very much to get a letter from you. We shall try to do all we can in saving the pagans of China." Pupils of Brook Village School, N.S., Gertrude MacDonald, Secretary. I am always pleased to get letters like that, Gertrude, and I hope you got my letter all right.

Don't Read This!

I'm sure you've all read with much interest the articles in "CHINA" written by "Observer" from Lishui, China. Well, I had a letter from him a short while ago, and it ended like this: "A word to the members of your 'Rose Garden.' I know who Father Jim is. I have his picture here. Wouldn't it be the meanest thing in the world if I sent it along to somebody? Of course, that would not be playing fair; the next thing I know the editor of "China" would side with Father Jim and refuse to print any more of my articles." Well, I feel safe so long as that picture is away over in China, and if "Observer" gets the editor on my side I may be given an extra page or so for our "Rose Garden."

An "Island" Bud.

"I have received many letters from pen-pals, but I want Norma Mills to write me," says Elizabeth Gallant, Summerside, P.E.I. And I know Norma will read this, so be ready for her letter.

"I would like to help the missions by sending you a dollar from my mite box. I want to join the 'Rose Garden,' too." Thank you, Francis!

Winnipeg Nurses Go to China

Early in March three nurses from this city left for the Chinese missions, where their work will be to help the ailing bodies of the pagan natives, as well as to bring spiritual consolation into their lives.

Possibly the first foreign missionaries to be sent from Catholic circles of the West, the departure of the three young ladies is an event of the utmost importance. The development of a native western clergy, and the entrance of western aspirants to the various Sisterhoods, has reached a stage where soon the needs of the prairie provinces will be taken care of by natives of the West. That the far-off mission fields would attract our own young men and women, is a thought which a few years ago would have seemed almost preposterous.

The young ladies have given themselves to a difficult and arduous life. Strangers in a strange land, they will be received possibly with suspicion and hostility. They will face the task of learning an ancient and difficult tongue, they must accommodate themselves to the established customs of a people fiercely proud of their heritage of culture and learning, which, vastly different from ours, is yet to be respected and honored. They will meet with conditions of climate and food which will completely change their habits of life; and they must deprive themselves of many little comforts to which western civilization has accustomed them. Not the least is the separation from loved ones at home, with the breaking up of ties which have bound members of a family so closely one to another. Yet, fully understanding all this, the nurses have volunteered their services, for which, by the way, there is no remuneration, and have undertaken a task before which many a man would quail. They wish no recognition of their sacrifice in giving up all, yet it would not be amiss to assure them that Winnipeg feels honored in having been the scene of their training, and in being the point of their departure for the Orient.

Much credit must be laid at the door of the Sisters of St. Joseph, from whose Training School for Nurses at St. Joseph's Hospital the young ladies graduated last year. There is no doubt that, under Divine Providence, the example of the good Sisters and the Catholic atmosphere in which the nurses received their training, had much to do with their decision to offer their services to God in the missions.

The Third Order of St. Francis, to the local Fraternity of which the nurses belong, and whose representatives they will be in China, is most justifiably proud of them. Father Vincent, who erected the Fraternity of St. Anthony here, will conduct the party across the Pacific, and will lead them to their future field of labor. They will be under the direction of the Franciscan Fathers in China, and the nurse who is already in the field there, Miss Bertha Buehler, is also a Tertiary.

May St. Francis Xavier and the Little Flower, the Patron and Patroness of the Missions, guide and protect the nurses in their work of love! — Editorial in "Northwest Review."

TOASTS WITHIN THE MONTH

For some time past the "Sign," a national Catholic magazine published in the United States by the Passionists, has been carrying a commendable feature in the nature of tributes to persons who have done something worthwhile in the world. The current issue gives its first "toast" to His Holiness the Pope on the completion of ten years of a fruitful Pontificate, and the second is for Right Rev. Monsignor John Fraser, the first missionary in China from North America, on the dignity conferred on him by the Holy See.

STILL A PRISONER.

(Shanghai)—Father Avito, the Spanish Jesuit, who was taken prisoner by bandits over a year and a half ago, and who is still in their hands, has succeeded in getting a letter to his confréres in the Vicariate of Anking, Anhwei Province.

"For two months I have been on my back with fever," he writes, "and without a bit of strength. My head is swollen; so are my feet. I have tried several remedies, but nothing helps. Now I have some quinine. Let us hope that it will do some good. The bandits pay no attention to my needs. No one will even lend me a little money to buy something to eat. Our Lord, however, and Our Lady are taking pity on me. Here in my prison I enjoy a profound joy, and I am at peace in the hands of God, whose designs are carried out by men without their knowing it. Lately they have given me some letters which you wrote to me between March and October; may God grant to each one of you the joy they have given me and the good they have done me. I have also received my breviary, some reviews and ten coins. Many thanks for all. The medicines and provisions have been left at Mapou. The bandits are examining them before giving them to me. Whether I must die or not here in captivity, I bid you adieu. I thank you from the bottom of my heart for all the charity you have shown me, who on my part have done so little. Pray for me—I pray for you without ceasing. I assure you that I die happy; we shall meet in heaven. You may write to my family."

MATT TALBOT AND THE MISSIONS

Informed Catholics know about Matt Talbot, the poor Dublin workingman whose Cause of Beatification is to be introduced at Rome. His penances and mortifications, with fasts, heavy chains and wooden pillows, have been written about, but little has been heard of his mission work.

Before the Great War Matt Talbot did not earn more than $4 or $5 a week, yet he gave as much as $150 a year to the Chinese Mission Society for the education of priests—in addition to supporting his mother for a long time and contributing to other charities. His comparatively huge donations were revealed by himself one day in a dispute with a foreman in the yard where he was employed. Talbot said the foreman should subscribe more largely as he himself, a poor laborer, had given $150 a year. This was said in no boastful spirit, but as a stimulus to others. Talbot's sister relates that he told her he had "finished three priests and was at the fourth"—meaning that he had paid for the education of three and was then paying for the fourth.—Catholic Mission.

CHINESE PRIEST FREED BY BANDIT FRIEND.

Tatungfu (China) — Father Paul Fu, ordained last year at the seminary of Tatungfu, Shansi Province, China, was taken captive recently. Father Fu was making a trip through his mission when he heard horsemen coming quickly behind him. He immediately turned towards home, but as he fled he fell from his horse. He was captured, robbed of all he had on him in the way of clothes and equipment, and was to be held for a large ransom. There was in the robber band, however, one who knew the priest and had assisted at his First Mass. He made such a strong protest in the priest's favour that the rest of the band agreed to let him go without demanding ransom. He was released the next day and returned to his mission.—(Fides).

RELIGIOUS PROFESSION.

reunited for ever in our only true home above."

Concluding, the speaker referred touchingly to the last great triumphal Religious Profession. "Today, dear sister, you have come to Christ alone; your gift to your Heavenly Spouse is the gift of total renunciation of self for His sake. But there will be for you and for all who, like you, have renounced the world for Christ, another and final Profession when you will not come alone; when, in the presence of the whole Court of Heaven, Christ the Eternal Bridegroom, will accept you and the multitude of saintly virgins of all ages who once came to Him on earth as you come today. And your gift on that great day—the gift we all hope to lay at the feet of Christ—will be the gift He prizes most, the gift of precious, immortal, now pagan souls, for whom He laid down His life. What a source of joy throughout eternity to realize that, through your efforts, under God, pagan souls, who otherwise may never have seen salvation, will rejoice with you before the throne of God."

CHINESE SHOP NOTICES.

A missionary in Shanghai writes: The common language here outside of Chinese, is "pidgin English." Some of the shop signs are very amusing.

On a milliner's shop in Szechwan Road is a sign, "Orders promptly excused," while over a furrier's is the sign, "Fur coats made to order, your skin or ours."

At another milliner's shop is the notice, "Ladies can have fits upstairs," and in a candy shop we read, "Try our candy, each piece made with tender care."

Over a transportation agency office: "Leave your luggage with us; we will send it in every direction." Over a dressmaker's shop: "Clothing of woman tailor; ladies furnished in the upper storey."

ENGLISH AS WRITTEN.

English as she is spoken in the Orient is not much funnier than English as she is written in America. A New York factory recently displayed the sign:

"Wanted—Woman to sew buttons on the fourth floor."

A near-by tailor advertised: "Fits guaranteed."

Mabel was on a visit to her aunt and grandmother.

"Grannie," she said, after her aunt had left, "how old is Aunt Dora?"

"I couldn't tell you, dear, without looking up the family Bible."

"Goodness!" gasped the child. "Is she old enough to be mentioned in the Bible?"

Two explorers of the Far North were relating their experiences to each other, and, naturally, drifted around to the subject of temperature.

"Would you believe it?" narrated the first. "In 1911 it was so cold around Baffin's Bay that if a man wanted to go downstairs in a hurry all he would have to do would be to throw a bucket of water out of the window and slide down on the icicle."

"Call that cold?" ridiculed the other. "Why, up in Greenland in the hottest days of summer we had to build a fire under the cow to keep her from giving ice cream."

"It's surprising how impracticable some learned men are!"

"Yes: there's Prof. Lingwist, for example. He spent over half his life in acquiring fluency in nine or ten different languages, and then he went and married a woman who never gives him a chance to get a word in edgewise."

YOUTH PLUS

"Modern China is a young man's country, and the ancient conception that great age connotes wisdom is a thing of the past," declared Gen. P. H. Whang. General Whang exemplifies the new order of things. He is 6 years old, but looks 10 years younger.—Vancouver Daily Sun.

Editor: "Well, what happened to McTavish?"

Reporter: "Someone told him he could get his pants pressed free by letting a steam roller run over them."

Editor: "Why did that kill him?"

Reporter: "They forgot to tell him to take them off."

"Willie," said his mother, "I wish you would run across the street and see how old Mrs. Brown is this morning."

A few minutes later Willie returned and reported:

"Mrs. Brown says it's none of your business how old she is."

Comic Artist, (R.R.): "This joke ought to be good, I've had it in my head for ten years."

Heartless Editor: "Sort of aged in the wood, as it were."—Hummel.

Asked to pray for warm weather, so that her grandma's rheumatism might pass away, a little girl knelt and said: "Oh, Lord, please make it hot for grandma."

An old Scot was smoking in the waiting hoom of a railway station. A porter said to him:

"Don't you see that notice on the wall—No Smoking Allowed?"

"Yes, I do," said the Scot. "But how can I keep all your rules? There's another one on the wall—Wear Spirella Corsets."

It was the duty of Janet, the maid, to tie up Jeff, the house dog, every night before she retired. One night she failed in her duty, and next morning found Jeff loose.

He had played havoc with the contents of the larder. When the mistress heard the news, she inquired:

"Has he eaten much, Janet?"

"Every blessed thing," replied the maid, "except the dog biscuits!"—Tit-Bits.

He: "My doctor told me he would put me on my feet within three weeks."

She: "Did he?"

He: "Yes, I had to sell my car to pay his bill.

A man stood up in a tramcar and offered a woman his seat. She fainted. When she recovered consciousness she thanked him. Then he fainted.

"So that new girl of yours is lazy?"

"Lazy! Why, the other morning I caught her putting popcorn into the pancakes to make them turn over themselves."—Jester.

A woman who did not understand the language of business went into the Bank of England and asked to consult someone about her war loan holding. The clerk to whom she talked happened to be rather a grave person. He inquired:

"Is it a case of conversion or redemption, madam?"

"Conversion? Redemption?" faltered the woman. "Er—pardon me, is this the Bank of England or the Church of England?

"Did you say the professor was absent-minded?"

"Absent-minded! Why he read an erroneous account of his death in a newspaper and sent himself a wreath!"—Passing Show (London).

"Don't talk to me about lawyers, my dear. I've had so much trouble over the property that I sometimes wish my husband hadn't died!"—Sydney Bulletin.

"Well, sonny," said the old boatman, "and what are you staring at?"

"Dad says you're an old seadog, and I want to hear you bark," was the reply.

"Do you know the difference between a woman and a telephone?"

"No."

"Well, both repeat what they hear, but the telephone repeats it exactly as it hears it."

IF we had sufficient donations to our BURSE FUND our Seminary would become SELF-SUPPORTING

BURSES—What are they?

A BURSE is the sum of $5,000 given to the Seminary, at one time or in installments, which, being securely invested, produces sufficient revenue to support a student. The capital is not touched, but remains intact. Year after year the revenue from a single Burse would be used to educate a student. When he is ordained and goes to China as a missionary, another student would be educated, and then another, and so on indefinitely.

Those blessed with an abundance of this world's goods could spend to no better advantage than by becoming the Founder of a Burse for China Mission Seminary.

Even small donations will be gratefully received to help complete any of our present incomplete Burses.

A Burse is absolutely the most worthwhile monument to leave behind to your memory. What greater good can you do with your money than guarantee a succession of missionary priests perpetually?

Help us by sending donations to our BURSES, either to the Seminary or in care of the "CATHOLIC RECORD", London, Ont.

Remember China in making or re-making your WILL.

PREFECT-APOSTOLIC OF CHUCHOW

The last issue of CHINA had just gone to press when the Seminary received word from Rome that Father Wm. C. McGrath had been appointed the first Prefect-Apostolic of Chuchow, our mission district in China. Through the medium of the Catholic newspapers of Canada the good news was made known to our friends everywhere, but only now does CHINA have an opportunity of offering its felicitations to the new Prefect-Apostolic. Right heartily do we congratulate him, for CHINA and Monsignor McGrath are intimate old friends—they were "brought up" together, we may say, and CHINA has profited much from their years of happy association. His frequent remembrances from Lishui are much appreciated, and in common with our readers we hope they will continue as during the past months.

* * * * *

Monsignor McGrath has always loved the missions. His priestly life has been finely dedicated to their service. In 1922 he voluntarily sacrificed his lot as a popular priest among his own people in Newfoundland and gave himself unreservedly to the more difficult work of a missionary institution then in its infancy. To that work he brought rare gifts of intellect and executive ability, and his record as editor, teacher, organizer and vice-president of China Mission Seminary is well known to our readers. Now, after a few brief months of actual mission experience in China, he has been given a high ecclesiastical honor. As the spiritual head and ruler of a large mission district he will have full scope for that energy and enthusiasm and love for souls which are so characteristic of him. His task is a difficult one; he has the assistance of only fifteen priests in caring for the spiritual needs of nearly two million Chinese people, and we bespeak for him and his priests the generous spiritual and material support of Catholics in Canada and Newfoundland. We add our own fervent prayer that the Holy Spirit will guide him in the reaping of the mission field of Chuchow—ripe already unto harvesting.

WORTH WHILE

On the first Pentecost the members of Christ's Church were few in numbers, but the Holy Ghost so strengthened and inspired them that their new-born zeal in a short time brought thousands unto the knowledge of God's will. After thirty years, Saint Paul could write to the Romans that Christianity was "spoken of in the entire world." From the earliest days it has been so—the Church rests not content with those she has, but she seeks to gain more and more souls, and she will be Catholic only so long as she continues to spread herself to new and wider pastures. The history of the Church is the history of her Missions.

In our own experience we have often heard the question asked: "Why bother with the Chinese? There's work enough to be done at home without going to China. Are not the missionaries wasting their lives and getting no returns for their efforts?" In the final analysis the question means "Are the Chinese worth working for?" It is to be regretted that many Catholics have the mentality which prompts such questions.

* * * * *

"Why bother with the Chinese?" Figures recently released by the Apostolic Delegation at Pekin answer the question and reveal the steady development of the missions in China during the year 1930-31. The statistics prove that the work for souls in China is decidedly worth while. In almost every feature of mission activity, notable advances have been made. The number of ecclesiastical divisions rose from 97 to 107. At the end of the 1930-31 period, there were fourteen territories already erected and under the jurisdiction of native Chinese Bishops. With the increase in the missions there was also an augmenting in the number of mission workers, and foreign missionaries now number 2,176. The number of Chinese priests has risen from 1,446 to 1,504. The number of Brothers, Sisters, Catechists, Teachers, Nurses and others, has increased in the same proportion. Aspirants for the priesthood show an increase of 790. The most significant increase is found in the number of Catholics. At the end of 1931, close to fifty thousand conversions had been reported of adults who received baptism after due preparation. Catholics now number 2,530,843. To realize the further spiritual returns that have blessed the work of the missionaries we must take into account the tens of thousands of baptisms administered at the point of death, and also the millions of Holy Communions received by the faithful with such admirable frequency.

* * * * *

Those who say that it is no use to work for the Chinese may imagine that the number of pagans in China is too great to hope for big results. Let those not forget that where it is a question of souls and eternal salvation, little results are very much worth while; yet who will say, after all, that results in China are not great? Would you not regard as distinctly encouraging the fact that in a pagan country there are more than two and a half million Catholics attended by an ever-increasing number of priests and religious, both foreign and native? There is no room for doubt that the Church is making marked progress in China. It is not our place to inquire into God's plan for China's ultimate conversion, but it is our duty to be up and doing, confident in the hope that God will give the increase, and we are sure that in the end a triumphant Catholicism will replace the age-old paganism of China and the Orient will reflect the wonderful mercy of a God who "will have all men to be saved."

The UNWISE SERPENT

OR The Conversion of Kong Oh

by REV. WM. C. McGRATH

Illustrated by Arthur Keelor

THE STORY.

HIS name is Kong Oh. He is a bright little lad, with ability far above the average, and is athletically inclined. Yesterday, in our football game with some of the pagan High School students he scored two goals, much to his own delight. On the whole, outside the schoolroom he is much like the other schoolboys. For they are all enthusiastic footballers, all cheery little companions whose chief delight is to try to help you with your Chinese words, and who tell you more in one day than you could remember in a month. When you see them at the altar rail in the morning for Holy Communion you feel glad you came to China. Kong Oh's home is in Lungchuan, about five days' journey from here, but he doesn't want to go home any more. He is afraid. On the few occasions on which he did visit home he returned sick and pale and generally broken up. So we are keeping him here, and next term he will attend the High School.

STRANGE things happen in China. In their daily work for souls missionaries are often brought literally face to face with the evil one. They feel his presence. They hear a voice. They see the hideous effects of possession or obsession on some unfortunate creature writhing beneath his fiendish power. Recently, in Northern China, things have happened "which cannot be told"; not on any wholesale scale, but as a sort of sequel to the story of obsession which appeared in CHINA, February, 1931, in the same locality, with the same priests concerned. It is not for us to pass judgment as to the explanation of all the strange things happening there. But they remind us, very forcibly, that missionaries in China are fighting no imaginary enemy. For the most part he is satisfied to remain invisible. But when too great a success bids fair to attend God's works for souls he cannot refrain from giving vent to a snarl of hellish hate or of venting his fury on some of the unfortunates who have so long been held beneath his sway.

It was Father Heier, S.V.D., who was concerned with the story already referred to. "While at home," he writes, "I often wondered if I should ever come in contact with a person in such a deplorable state as 'possession'. It did not take me long, once I got to China, to find that in this pagan land . . . there are fairly frequent cases of such possession, ranging from the mild to the very violent. I had secretly longed to meet one.

"Well, I have been blessed with such a case, so terrible and disheartening that I now pray, 'Lord, deliver me in the future from all cases of possession, obsession and queer doings of the spirit world'."

From the mild to the very violent! We do not know in what category you will place this little story, or whether you will regard it as preternatural at all. The facts I can vouch for. The explanation—well—judge for yourself.

Compared with Father Heier's experience this case is a very mild one. I thought so to-day, even while I regarded the earnest and at times almost frightened face of the boy who was telling his story. To him it was a very serious business, something which will haunt him till his dying day. For although it happened two years ago, his habitually happy expression vanishes and he becomes serious and fearful again, when you ask him how it was that he became a Christian. Perhaps the devil outwitted himself on this occasion. Certainly, humanly speaking, the boy's strange experience accounts for the fact that he is a Christian to-day.

One night about two years ago he startled the household with his screams. He had been sick with malaria, and at first they were disposed to attribute his fright to delirium. But in his case the malaria had almost run its course. He had been sick for two months, and at no time had he given vent to such a cry of terror as now escaped his lips.

"Father, father get a big knife and come quick. Kill him, oh, kill him!" The boy was almost hysterical with fright. When his father rushed to the room he saw him standing on the floor and struggling violently to free himself from some invisible embrace. "Oh, father, why don't you kill him, that awful big snake. He will kill me if you don't." But the father could see nothing. One thing was sure.

The boy was certainly awake. That night his father slept with him, to reassure him, but in vain. All through the night he sobbed and cried and implored his almost distracted parent to save him. The snake never left him, he told us afterwards, and his father couldn't do anything for him.

The next day the boy was in a terrible condition. Weakened after his months of sickness and loss of sleep, and still wild-eyed with terror after his experience the night before, he seemed on the verge of nervous collapse. His elder brother decided that something must be done, so he sought out the village oracle, a pagan fortune-teller, whose powers of prophecy the people regarded with great respect.

"There is only one thing to do," that worthy advised. "Only one thing can save his life. You must perform Dong-Wong at once or the boy will surely die—tonight." Dong - Wong is supposed to be an especially effective form of "devil-chasing" or pagan exorcism, not uncommonly employed by those whose days are spent in a sort of abiding compact with the evil one. If they are only allowed to live in peace, the latter can do as he wishes after death. Their hope does not extend beyond the grave. Dong-Wong, incidentally, can be put on for the little consideration of from $10.00 to $100.00, depending upon the social standing of the prospective customer or the magnitude of the issue at stake. This may have had something to do with the father's flat refusal to have any such ceremony carried on in his house. But he had heard that the priests condemned the practice, and may have been somewhat influenced by that knowledge.

"If you dare go through with it," he told the son, "I will abandon all the pagan rites and renounce the pagan religion." There was no ceremony; and the boy did not die.

During the day the snake did not return. But at night the boy was as bad as ever. In great numbers they came again, and although he screamed and told them of the physical pain their bites were causing him, nobody could see anything. "Look, father, look," he cried, "There!" The father looked, and there on the boy's arm, before his very eyes, was a well-defined black mark, a sort of bruise, as if the arm had been tightly squeezed with pincers. Another and another black mark was soon discerned on various parts of the body, and by this time the father himself was thoroughly frightened. Possibly this was the revenge for his refusal to have the Dong-Wong performed.

Next day he sought the help of his neighbours, and wondered if the "Seng fu" who had denounced Dong - Wong could do anything for him. A Christian came running to the mission, out of breath, and told Fr. Kam that the devil was in Kong Oh's house. Father Kam was skeptical. Malaria suggested fever; fever bespoke delirium. The boy was just "seeing things." Who wouldn't, with a temperature that goes as high as 104? "But, Father," the Christian insisted, "there is a big snake that nobody can see, and it leaves marks on the boy's body." Oh! That was different. Father Kam went and saw the marks, and to this day he is convinced that nothing natural could account for their presence. He interviewed the father. "Yes," he said, "we will help you. Don't have any superstitious practices, because they can do nothing to help your boy. On the contrary, promise me that you will throw all superstitious articles out of your house, and that you will be willing to study something about religion. If so, we can help."

RICE PLANTING IN CHINA
Notice how the plant is set under the water.

The man promised, and kept his word. He threw out the joss stick burner and tore from their places on the walls the image of the god of the kitchen and god of the household. And, meanwhile, Christians were sent to sprinkle holy water and say the prescribed prayers, according to the custom in China. The neighbours had gathered, and were horrified to witness the insults offered the gods. Terrible things, they said, were going to befall that household. The anger of the outraged deities would wreak a terrible vengeance.

After the blessing with the holy water, the boy felt quieter, more composed. But the end was not yet. That night his screams once more aroused the household. The snakes had returned. The following day one of the Christians asked him to leave home and come and sleep in his house. He did so, and slept peacefully, undisturbed. A few days later he was taken to the mission school, and from that day the snake bothered him no more. The story soon spread, as stories do in China, that the devil was afraid to go into a Christian home, and as the gods had failed to avenge the outrages heaped upon them, many of the people announced their intention of becoming Catholics. I do not know how many kept their word. Meanwhile, Kong Oh has been very happy since his conversion. His mother is also a Catholic now, and his father and brothers are catechumens.

Kong Oh would like to be a priest. But there are many difficulties. Those who have been victims of any kind of diabolical obsession are not permitted to enter the Seminary. His fear of being taken home never altogether leaves him. Sometimes in his dreams he cries aloud to his mother that she must not take him home because the boat is waiting to take him to the Seminary at Ningpo, and if he goes home, he cannot be a priest. Truly, strange things—consoling at times—happen in far-away China.

The Holy Ghost and the Missions

A TIMELY THOUGHT FOR PENTECOST

By Bernard Wuellner, S.J.

THE Holy Spirit is sometimes called the most forgotten Person in the world. Yet He should be particularly near and dear to all interested in the cause of the missions. His work in the world is not only to preserve the Church and to sanctify the Church, but also to guarantee her progress; and in this last office He is the great Missionary of the Catholic Church without whom no mission enterprise wins success.

"Holy, holy, holy, the Lord God of hosts: All the earth is full of his glory." (Is. vi, 3.)

A missionary is one who is sent, a person who goes forth with the blessing of God to win souls to the knowledge and love of Jesus Christ. Now, our Lord, after ascending into Heaven, sent the Holy Ghost to protect and guide the fortunes of His Church, to pour energy and holiness into it, to develop it until it should compass the world. Once the Master had advised the disciples to pray the Lord of the harvest that He send laborers to reap the whitening fields. He fulfilled His own advice, when He came home to the Father, by sending the Holy Spirit as that great Laborer in the world-wide field of souls.

EAGERLY the Apostles awaited the coming of the Holy Ghost, for our Lord had founded their confidence of success in the abiding presence of the Third Person in God. Then, in the roaring of the wind on Pentecost morning, He came and rested on the expectant group in the shape of fiery tongues. This symbol of tongues and of fire is most significant. The tongue indicates the teaching role of the Holy Spirit, for His tongue is the tongue that speaks in the wisdom and doctrine of the Church; and it is the fire of a Divine energy that quickens all the Church's activities for men.

He came, the true Tongue of God, to teach the infant Church and through her, to teach the world until the end of time. That has ever remained the single objective of the Church's efforts, namely, to spread the surpassing knowledge of Jesus Christ, crucified and risen, true God and true Man. Into the corners of the earth the Church pushes her way, not out of any mere philanthropic motive, not because she believes white or western civilization superior, but because she is bent on her divine duty of dispensing the good news of God's goodness to all human kind.

Because the Fire of God, the Holy Spirit, urges her on, she never forgets and seldom lags in her missionary striving. The Church's missionary character shall endure till the end of time because the Holy Ghost shall be with her till the great finale. He is that uncreated Fire which will enkindle the world. He is that transforming Fire which fuses even the hard ore of human nature into its own likeness. He is that eager Fire which lights up the flames of Catholic enthusiasm for the interests of God.

A SHORT glance at the history of the Catholic Church evidences how well the Holy Spirit has done His missionary work. In apostolic times He leaps the barriers of lands and inland seas; His flame is heard crackling in the very strongholds of

A VISIT to SUICHANG

Rev. J. L. Beal

It was last May! I was called to the local yamen to discover that Suichang was calling Beh Kong (my Chinese name). It was bad news. "Mrs. Wong has taken a turn for the worse and is calling for the priest." "Fine! Will leave to-morrow on shank's mare." Now to find a carrier! The market-place was deserted because all available help was in the rice-fields. Finally an abbreviated fellow put in an appearance, and he was hired. For more reasons than following the gospel precepts, only the bare necessities for the journey were taken.

Singing in the Rain.

Five "li" from the city heavy black clouds drifted over, opened the throttle and shot the works. There were no open air taxis to call, so it was simply forward splash for another 65 li (22 miles). "Singing in the rain" may sound romantic, but it does not feel that way when trudging along with half a rice-field glued to your feet. The carrier lost his nerve or his footing, descending one of the inclines. When he pulled himself together he was asking himself, "Why did I ever grow up?" It was amusing to see him gathering his scattered load together and again tieing them into a bundle. But this incident was short-lived.

Rice Wine for Supper.

There were only 5 "li" of the journey left when I turned that million-dollar ankle of mine and a spill ensued. I must have been a spectacle walking up the main street, bespattered with mud and soaked to the skin. An extra suit of clothing was prohibitive to the miniature who was doing the carrying, and thus I sat in my dampness and dirt while hot tea was being prepared at the mission chapel. For supper I ordered hot rice wine, which staved off a cold. After supper the chapel personnel betook themselves to Mrs. Wong's to assist at the Sacrament of Extreme Unction and to recite their prayers. In the meantime the rain had eased off to just an occasional cloud-burst.

Streets Turn to River.

After celebrating Mass and administering Holy Viaticum to our devout patient, a boatman was hired for the return journey, but just then the unexpected happened. The rain came down in torrents, and in less than no time the street was turned into a small river, rapidly gaining momentum. News came back that no boat dared to leave its mooring that day. But I had promised to be back in Sun Yang for Saturday evening, and so it looked like a return journey on foot, but before we could reach the one bridge that still spanned the river, the iron chains had snapped and it had gone hurtling down the mad torrent. There was now nothing to do but sit down and wait until the river adopted a more peaceful attitude.

Tension at Sung Yang

The Christians at Sung Yang knew that I had intended to return for Saturday evening. Several of them were on the outlook. A raft swiftly rounded the bend in the river, and just as it came into view it capsized with its three passengers. All thought that it was the priest who had gone down to Davy Jones' locker. But it was not so. Early Sunday morning I persuaded a raftsman to break away from his moorings and start for home. The tension at Sung Yang was broken when at 2.30 p.m. I put in my appearance at the mission, safe and sound, but badly in need of repair and a change of clothing. Thus closed one of the wettest weekends I have experienced since Prohibition.—Alumni Bulletin.

THE HOLY GHOST AND THE MISSIONS.

paganism; the red onrush of Divine Love levels the resistance of superstition, selfishness, ignorance, vice; and sparks caught up from the great Spark are so bright that Christians are glad to be tapers burning in Nero's gardens. Persecution tries to trample out the Fire. But ten years after Diocletian's frenzy the Church is so strong that Constantine recognizes it as the state religion. Schism and heresy try to divide the Fire so as to weaken it, but it preserves its unity under the successors of Peter. Barbarians and vandals vent their hate upon it; but the Fire appears triumphant in a universal Christian culture in medieval times. Political interference, hot-headed heretics, sluggish powers in the Church itself try to stay the Fire; but in vain. The miracle of the resurrection is renewed in the new glow of Catholic life in Europe after the Reformation, and in the far-reaching triumphs in the missions of the New World and in the Far East. The records of missionary activity in our own day attest how vigorously the Divine Fire is burning in the Catholic Church at present.

Come, then, Holy Spirit, the missions need Thee! Radiant Heart of God, fill the earth with Thy light and love! Flood the hearts of Thy faithful, that out of the overflowing of their charity and merits the non-Catholic world may profit! Come great Missionary, come, for Christ the Lord sends Thee!

Lishui from Day to Day

by observer

"An earthquake a day for those far away", might well be adopted as a motto for the interest—or lack of interest—of home folk in the affairs of China. We are so accustomed to think and speak of China in terms of millions and to hear of her appalling disasters almost as a matter of course, that it is hard to expect people even to read about "small time" stuff in our small city in Chekiang.

That, of course, is the trouble with this "column". It is concerned for the most part with the story of very ordinary events. It is humdrum. Obliging as the Chinese people are, we find it difficult to persuade them to stage an earthquake every time we are short of copy. And yet "the play must go on", so here's trusting to your kindliness and tolerance, dear readers.

And so this month's instalment starts late in February on its way down the Wenchow River, five days from here to Shanghai, sixteen days across the Pacific, a week, roughly, from Vancouver to Toronto. Then Smitty, our trusty mailman, will one day bring home a long envelope with a Chinese stamp (25 cents postage now), and in due course a little Chev. car will take this and other copy down to the Garden City Press to my good friend, Mr. Bell. Then the editor works on his galley sheets and page proofs, etc., followed by phone calls to Adelaide 2112. "Give me Mr. Smith, please". Finally thirty thousand copies of CHINA will emerge from the bindery, with or without this biography of the monthly sheet from Chekiang. In China we shall know, about three months from to-day, if it has found its way into the pages of the greatest of mission journals.

Rumors are flying thick and fast these days. Bandit attacks on the city, attack by the Japanese on Wenchow—all such things are being noised abroad. But somebody is always crying "wolf, wolf", over here about something or other. Only a few days ago we received a message that paper money of the Bank of China would be worthless next day, but that there was still time to change it to silver. A store in the city was said to have received $40,000 for this purpose. A regular stampede ensued. The news spread like a prairie fire. From country and city people poured to that store, fought each other and struggled till it looked like a riot. It looked bad for a while. But the Mayor has just issued an edict that paper money is as good as ever, and all is quiet once more.

Father Boudreau has just arrived from Pi Wu Ka for a brief visit. He was appointed to that parish about two months ago, and has already worked wonders in transforming the old dilapidated house into a half respectable residence. As yet he has no furniture and takes meals on his makeshift desk. He has to fill up a huge water hole near the house and repair the crumbling wall around the property, and hopes in due time to be able to provide a church and school for the Christians. He is most enthusiastic over his prospects. The amount of work to be done there is simply tremendous. Apart from the necessary buildings his task is literally to hew a clearing place in that forest of paganism and establish firmly his little Christian community.

Father Stringer has been partly marooned in Shanghai, where he went to have some dental work done. The boats have been besieged by crowds of refugees trying to get away from the fighting zone. But he telegraphed that he was able to return by Ningpo. (Father Stringer tells you about it on page 74.—Ed.)

Under Father Gignac's capable guidance the new missionaries are making satisfactory progress in Chinese. We now know what this means: "Want day day up half day speak Middle Kingdom Woe, write Middle Kingdom character", in other words, "You must speak and write Chinese every forenoon". A few days ago class was interrupted for a few moments by the arrival of a gentleman with a live rooster under his arm. We did our best to look impressed as he extolled the merits of the bird, and then we went on with our lesson.

Everything we do here is a matter of great curiosity for the Chinese. There are times when one feels that a little less publicity would be desirable. At least that was the way one of our priests felt a few days ago when he went down town to buy a soutane. The scare about paper money was still in the air, and he entered a cloth store armed with 32 silver dollars, 16 in each pocket. The amount of material required for the soutane was 18 feet, according to the tailor. We should say six yards, but they don't use yards here. The usual crowd began to congregate. The foreigner was buying cloth. As the silver dollars were unloaded one by one the racket could be heard half way up the street, because the shop has an open front. Clinkety clank — clinkety clank—thirty—thirty-one —thirty-two. The clerk tested each one as he received it by striking it on another as one would strike a tuning fork. Yes, they were all good. The thirty-two represent about eight dollars Canadian money at present rate of exchange.

Such publicity is unavoidable but undesirable, because the Chinese believe that the average missionary is a millionaire. They wouldn't think so if they knew of his worries to make ends meet and pay the cook and catechist and teacher and find the money to build the chapels and support the schools in the various missions where pupils pay nothing, or perhaps only a few Chinese dollars a year. But it is easy to understand their attitude.

To many of them that sum of eight Canadian dollars paid for a soutane is a very veritable fortune. And they think that those who can spend so much must be very rich. There are some people in this city who would have to work for 2,000 days—over five years—at the wages they receive to earn that much money. That is possibly the most extreme of all the cases of poverty and toil ever brought to our attention. But it is true. Here is the story.

There are two old ladies who are unable to do much active work, and to support themselves they make matchboxes for the local match factory. The rate paid by the factory for boxes is $1.20 Chinese, or 30 cents Canadian, for ten thousand boxes, which works out to be at the rate of one Canadian cent for 333 boxes. The factory supplies the wood cut to size and the thin blue paper. The workers must supply the paste.

The wife of one of our teachers who does some of this work herself in her spare time tells me that the fastest matchbox maker in the city has been known to turn out 800 boxes a day, and thus earn about ten cents Chinese, or 2½ cents Canadian, per day. I am putting the Canadian at 4 to 1, as it was last quoted. But the two old ladies in question, being slow to work, could only make about 130 boxes per day, and received for their work four "Dong Pah" each. A dong pah is about one-tenth of a Canadian cent, so they received two-fifths cent Canadian per day. At this rate it would take them 2,000 days, or nearly six years, to earn the $8.00 paid for that soutane.

A funeral procession in China where white is the color of mourning. Notice some of the women with hair loosed down their back. The umbrellas are used to conceal their weeping and sorrow.

This, we say is the most extreme case we have ever known. "Paste, paste, paste, in poverty, hunger and dirt". Add "cold" to the parody on the "Song of the the Shirt", and you have the Song of the Matchbox-maker. For even in mid-winter the sides of their houses are only bamboo lattice work, through which the damp, penetrating wind sings a chilling and dismal dirge.

The average wage at the match box factory for those old ladies and children who do other kinds of work is about twenty "dong pah" a day, 2 cents Canadian. Yesterday, when visiting the Christians, we met one of them. She entered the house while we were talking to her son. She was just back after her day's work. The first thing she did was to "put the kettle on." "Seng Fu Chih Tso"—the priests will take tea. I noticed that the stove was made from a five-gallon oil tin. The chickens roamed about the place at will. She told us that she had made twenty dong pah that day and seemed very happy about it. Her sons, she said, supported her, and this extra money enabled her to buy some clothes and a few little "luxuries". Luxuries! You don't know what poverty is at home.

It was about six o'clock as we left the house and the match factory was just closing. Workers were coming toward us, among them one little girl who looked about seven years of age, but she told us she was eleven. She was a perfect little picture, neatly and more colorfully dressed than the average Chinese child, who presents a very drab appearance. In one hand she carried her little lunch pail, and in the other the "hoo lu" or portable charcoal stove. A long braid of black hair hung down her back. Although Chinese she reminded me of one of the "Three Little Maids from School". She answered our questions cheerfuly and intelligently, told us that her work was to put the matches in the box, and that she had made 24 dong pah that day, but was paid only every ten days.

Some time I shall send you a detailed account of this match factory. The matches are sixteen times as cheap as in Canada. For five Canadian cents, the price of two boxes at home, you receive 32 boxes here, if you buy wholesale. And they are just as good.

News comes from Father Venini that he has completed a beautiful altar in his church at Lungchuan, gift also of the generous Toronto benefactor who supplied the funds to build the church several years ago. Soon after writing, Father Venini intended to go farther into the interior to oversee the building of a little chapel in one of his numerous villages.

IN TROUBLED SHANGHAI

Rev. D. Stringer

"If there is a Goddess of Excitement in China," writes Father Desmond Stringer, "It is she who has been dogging my footsteps every time I take a trip. I had occasion to go down to Shanghai in January to have some dental work done; when I set out, all was peaceful and quiet, but in Shanghai I found things were in a turmoil, and I was forced to stay there longer than I intended, owing to the difficulty of getting away.

"You have heard long ago, no doubt, about this new "thingimabob" over here. Most men at one time called it war—most do yet for that matter, but since no war was "declared," we'll have to find another name. On January 28th, the civic rulers of Shanghai declared a "state of emergency." Late that night the "war" was started. It might have ended quickly were it not that the defenders were on the job. Since the scrap was between the Chinese and Japanese, the authorities of the International and French Concessions went about their business in an efficient manner to protect the lives and property under their care. And how they did it! I wish you could have seen it for yourself. Barbed wire entanglements, sandbags, etc., on all sides and betwixt and between. As the trouble grew more serious, the implements of war increased. Bayonets, tanks, and armored cars; pill-boxes, machine guns, and what-nots; soldiers, marines, volunteers—and flags galore!

"And refugees! Thousands of them began to pour in from the "war zones." As in every war, the innocent are generally the greatest sufferers, so, too, here. Most of those people were poor before, but what they lost in the pell-mell rush from shrapnel and bullets left them poorer still. Downtown, especially, the streets, were swarming with refugees. Nearly everything on wheels was pressed into service. Rickshaws sped to and fro, loaded down with household utensils, bedding, and bits of furniture. Motor cars honked and rehonked their noisy way through the traffic. Wheelbarrows, slowest of all, were slower than ever, owing to the heavy burdens they balanced. I saw one luckless fellow tip his, and he had an awful time trying to recover his possessions amid the shouting and gesticulating of the others temporarily halted. On the sidewalks was the same confusion as old men and old women, boys and girls, jostled each other, carrying something hastily snatched up in the moment of danger. Mothers ran along with babies fastened to their backs, and fathers led their tots by the hand. The noises are better imagined than described.

"To me the strangest sight of all was that of a Chinese monk. He had several josh sticks (incense) implanted in his skull, and two or three little streams of blood were trickling down his face. On his back he carried some sort of shield with more josh sticks fastened to it. In his hands he carried a small round piece of wood, which he struck in rhythmic fashion. Altogether, he was a weird spectacle.

"Along the wharves of the Bund and the Quai de France the crowds were densest. Everybody seemed to be trying to leave the city at once. The congestion on the Chinese steamers was such as to be really dangerous. The crushing, pushing, elbowing, and squeezing was enough to provoke some new theory on space. When I finally managed to leave Shanghai the crowds were thinning out somewhat, but in going aboard my steamer someone managed to rip a few stitches out of my coat, knock the heel off one of my shoes, and ride into the boat on my feet; the last I would not have minded so much if they had not kept jumping on and off them. I was glad I was not wearing a tie, or I might have been strangled.

"One distressing incident I know of was that of a young foreign couple who had their home in the affected area. They, too, had to get out in a hurry. Their child—an only one—was sick with measles. In the disorder the child died, and it was a very distracted young wife who saw the newly-blessed grave filled up."

Bishop Defebvre, of Ningpo, loves the children and always finds time to speak a cheerful word to them. He is seen here (hands behind his back) watching some of the youngsters playing marbles in the school yard. Father King was on the job with the camera.

A DAUGHTER OF CATHAY

Woo Maria was a pretty girl. The moment you saw Maria you were struck by the sweet harmony of her features, her carriage in walking, and the peculiar, lovely, bronze-like bloom of her complexion, unsullied by art.

She was just a simple country girl, an only child of pagan parents. When a priest went to her district she was one of the first to enter the Church. She was then just fourteen, though she looked much older. If you only knew her before her Baptism, and then met her again, say a week after it, you could scarce believe it was the same girl. Great indeed is the transformation that the Sacrament of Baptism makes. For the body—in the case of adults—as well as for the soul, it is a re-birth.

Maria was but a year a Christian when Paulo came her way. As I said, she was a pretty girl, and she was a good girl, too. No wonder then that young Paulo was bewitched by the sweet enchantment of her smile—that the bark of his peace was wrecked on Beauty's shore. I should mention, of course, that while both were still babies-in-arms the thoughful parents had prearranged the future wedding. And well for both that it was so. Had it been otherwise—well you never could tell, for those great dark eyes of Maria set hearts a throbbing wherever they gazed.

Poor Maria! Well I remember the time I first saw her. It was April—a lovely day, just two years ago. In the country here everyone was busy with the silkworms. Everywhere you went you saw the gathering-in of the mulberry leaves. Already the trees were stripped almost bare of their first crop. As I neared the church on my way back from a sick-call, a glimmer of red in a wayside tree caught my eye. A closer glance revealed a little lady with checkered bodice and red trousers. She was gathering the mulberry leaves to feed the silk worms at home. I soon learned her name was Woo, and six months later, on the day we baptized her, we called her Maria.

I think I see her now, just as I saw her last. It was on her wedding day. The ceremonies were over, and the red trappings were carefully laid aside, and she was "at home" to her friends. And a goodly crowd she had that day. She was neatly dressed a la mode Chinoise. The upper portion of her dress was of a purple shade with high neck and long sleeves. Her Chinese trousers were also of a purple colour trimmed with green and silver, while her fairy slippers were red and trimmed with gold embroidery. For crown she wore her own black hair, bound up woman-wise and tied with a fillet of red ribbon. In every way she looked a queen—and a queen she was that day.

And now her reign is over. We buried her today at noon. God rest her gentle soul and comfort poor Paulo—left behind with an infant son, a living memento of her who lived and reigned with him, queen of his heart and home for one short year.—Rev. H. Sands, in the Irish "Far East."

LITTLE FLOWER'S ROSE GARDEN

Edited by FATHER JIM

CONDITIONS OF MEMBERSHIP

The only conditions of membership in the Rose Garden are: (1) To say every day the Prayer for the Conversion of China; (2) To go to Holy Communion once a month for the Intention of Missionary Vocations. Certificates and pins will be sent to all members.

Hello, Buds!

It surely is nice to see the fine summer weather coming along again, and I do hope you are all ready to enjoy the sunshine and the happiness it is meant to bring. How fast the time slips by—here we are in the month of May, the beautiful Month of our Mother, Mary.

To the members of the Rose Garden this month should be a very profitable one, spiritually, for I feel sure you have a very tender devotion to Our Lady, Queen of May. How much we should love the Blessed Virgin! She it was who gave us our dear Saviour, and she cared for him as an Infant and on through the years until the time came for Him to begin His Public Life, and then she, more than anybody else, shared all his joys and sorrows. In Heaven now she is pleased with us, her children, when we show an interest in the work which her Divine Son began on earth, the work of saving souls. If we would please our dear Mother, Mary, we have only to be good and be faithful to our prayers. Whenever you want God to give you something, it is well to ask the favour through God's mother; she can get favours from her Divine Son much easier than we might get them ourselves, and if you try during May to do something every day as a tribute to Mary, you can be sure that she will obtain many blessings for you. Ask her especially to bless the priests and nuns who are working in the Home and Foreign Missions, for one of Mary's sweetest titles is "Queen of the Missions".

On the 23rd of this month it will be seven years since the "Little Flower" was canonized. During the Holy Year of 1925, Our Holy Father, Pope Pius XI, solemnly declared that Teresa Martin, the holy Carmelite Nun of Lisieux, France, was worthy of the honors given to Saints. In her short lifetime Teresa Martin worked no miracles or wrought no wonders; she was a "little" saint all unknown to the world, but she has been made known by God and given to the world to teach us all the "little way" of her life. She did ordinary things, but she always did them extraordinarily well, and that is the secret of her holy life. She wants all of us to be like her in her love of God and to save our souls by paying attention to small things in our lives in order to please Him. If we ask her, she will obtain many favours—"roses" she called them—for us, and on the anniversary of her canonization it would be nice if all the Buds of her "Rose Garden" would go to Holy Communion and offer It for the intention of obtaining a "rose" for the Missions. She delights in her title of "Patroness of the Missions." On May 27th I shall give all the members of our Club a very special remembrance at Holy Mass.

Yours for a very pleasant and holy Month of Mary,

FATHER JIM.

91 New Gower St., St. John's, is the address of a new Nfld. bud, Patrick Hogan, who sent us nearly 3,000 stamps. Thanks for all the trouble you must have gone to in preparing those stamps, Patrick.

Mollie Kierans, 3979 St. Antoine, Montreal, would like very much to hear from Eileen Parker. Both Mollie and Eileen write nice letters to me.

"I am living at an Orphanage called after the Little Flower. I wish some of the buds would write to me. My address is Bertha Bonnar, Little Flower Institute, Little Bras d'Or, N.S."

HEARD THESE?

Q. What is the best thing to make in a hurry?

A. Haste.

Q. Define a sure-footed animal.

A. When it kicks it does not miss.

Q. Why did the rose-bowl?

A. Because it saw the cricket-bat.

Q. Can a man steal his own property?

A. Yes, he can steel his heart.

Q. Which has more legs, a cow or no cow.

A. No cow has five legs.

Sherlock Holmes!

That's the name I've given a correspondent from St. Lawrence, Nfld., who has tried so very hard to find out who Father Jim is. Best of luck, and I hope you can follow up the "clues" I've given you. But you must submit all "discoveries" to me first.

From Ottawa.

"I am writing this for a little girl, Laurie Latimer, 12 years old, who is sick just now and cannot write herself. In closing, I might say that I myself very much enjoy reading the letters, etc., in the Little Flower's Rose Garden, though rather past the age to qualify as a bud." Sometimes I get so many letters from "grown-ups" that I begin to think they are more interested in our Club than the boys and girls themselves. I rather like the compliments they hand out, too. You see, I'm a vain old fellow!

From Ireland.

A dozen new members have come to us from Loretto Convent, Coleraine, Co. Derry, Ireland. They would all like to hear from some Canadian pals. Maureen Bogues, Irene Bogues, Shelia McCann, Irene McCann, Melba McLaughlin, Irene McCann, Melba McKenna, Sarah McAlister, Nancy McAlister, Dodo Collins, Mary Wadden, and Bridget Wadden. It goes without saying that we are happy to welcome those young friends into our Garden.

Still Waiting!

The pupils from Greenfield must have given up hope of ever getting their certificates. Sorry to have kept you waiting—but accidents will happen. I've heard a lot about your interest in the missions, and I knew you would have lots of patience. I'm not forgetting you.

Write Again!

"I hope you are not going to be cross with me for not writing to you since I joined your Club," writes Mary Molloy, 11 Water St., Glace Bay. I will get cross, Mary, if you don't write me soon again.

SAY A PRAYER EVERY DAY FOR THE MISSIONS

"We receive the 'China' every month, and as soon as it comes I turn to the 'Rose Garden' page. Every day I am going to say a special prayer for the Chinese Missions. I am thirteen years old." This from Colleen LaFontaine, Tweed, Ont.

THEY'RE ALL PALS.
Left to Right: Jennie Rite, 226 Hatt St., Dundas, Ont.; Angela Haley, 587—15th Street East, Owen Sound, Ont.; Peggy and Agnes Kennedy and Marie O'Keefe, Water Street, Hr. Grace, Nfld.

"Sunset Rose" is the nice pen-name chosen by Margaret Rinneard, 26 Brock St. W., Oshawa, Ont. Margaret goes to St. Gregory's School, where there are very many buds. I see a lot of Oshawa mail before me now, and in a few days I hope to have certificates sent to those new members.

"We are ten little girls in our club and we would like to join your 'Rose Garden.' There are more among our 'minims' and they will join when they make their First Holy Communion. We are sending one dollar for 'China,' and would like you to send us some mite-boxes, too." Quite a while ago those little missionaries wrote me from St. Mary's Academy, Windsor, and only now am I able to print their letter as I promised them I would when I wrote them.

Louise Norman, Long Hr., Nfld., certainly knows how to get a letter from Father Jim. She writes such beautiful long letters that I haven't the heart not to answer her. She has interested many of her school-companions in the Rose Garden, and they are very proud of their certificates and pins. On the way home from the post-office, Louise lost one of the badges, and nothing would do but organize the other buds in a search party till the missing badge was found. I have sent your letter to Father McGrath in China, Louise, and I am sure he will be happy to get it.

I have often been cheered by the letters from adult readers of "China" who commend the work of our Rose Garden. A lady in East Windsor wrote the letter from which I quote the following: "I want to thank you, Father Jim, for having given us the little sketch of the life of that saintly 'bud,' Ruth Graves. I have read it many times, and I think it is an inspiration for both young and old readers of your column. To my mind she is a real answer to the beautiful prayer with which the 'Little Flower' closes her autobiography: 'I would entreat Thee to choose in this world a legion of little victims of Thy love.' Generous little St. Therese, she would have legions enjoy the same Divine favour she received, and as God gives her her way I think we can well suppose this prayer is not unanswered."

Is Your Name Here?

Marguerite Walsh, 118 Bay Street, Sydney, N.S.; Margaret Jewell, Louisburg, C.B.; Marie Ann Murray, Sarcee Reserve, Calgary; Gertrude McCormack, 152 Main St., Glace Bay, N.S.; Margaret Campbell, 25 Union St., Glace Bay, N.S.; Helen Ouellette, 339 King Street, Dundas, Ont.; Margaret Merkley, Westport, Ont.; Beatrice MacDonald, 82 King Edward St., Glace Bay; Marie Maloney, Bay Bulls, Nfld.; Helen Malone, 47 Alberta Ave., Toronto; Mary Power, 255 Water St. W., St. John's, Nfld.; Clara and Irene Hollohan, Black Head, Nfld.; Muriel B. MacDonald, Pomquet, N.S. All of the above, and very many more—new and old members—are anxious to hear from other buds.

Sometimes I am asked whether boys are as acceptable as girls in our Club. Sure they are! Hundreds of boys are enrolled. Well, then, why doesn't Father Jim mention them more than he does? Here's one reason, and I hope it doesn't make the girls mad at me. I do my best to write personally to the boys (you see, I understand them better), and hence I feel they are satisfied if I do not mention their names in the Column. Now, with the girls I think it is different; they want me to publish their names since I do not write them personally as a rule. Here are a few of the many boys who have received their certificates lately: Billy Summers, 41 Pennywell Rd., St. John's, Nfld.; Robert Watson, 614 Curry Avenue, Windsor, Ont.; John Page, 998 Jessie Avenue, Winnipeg; Douglas St. Denis, 100 Wellington, Windsor, Ont.; Ronald Chabot, Coniston, Ont.; Charles McDonald, 40 Baillie St., Hamilton, Ont.; Richard O'Brien 26 MacKay St., St. John's, Nfld.; George and Fred White, Little Flower Institute, Bras D'or, C.B.; Graham Chabot, Coniston, Ont.; John Nicholas, Box 395, Beiseker, Alta.; Samuel Murphy, 124 Bay St., Sydney, N.S.

From Fulford Hr., B.C., comes Caroline D. Gyves, who lives on a farm and is 13 years old—asking for pen-pals is Inez Linkletter, Box 492, Summerside, P.E.I.—from 173 Pleasant St., St. John's, Nfld., Patricia Rose writes and takes "Daisy" for a pen-name.

Marguerite Turano, 1272 Bloor W., Toronto, will have her two sisters join our Club when they are a little older.

Born in Saint John, N.B., Mary Tremlet would like to have some pen-pals from there write her at her new home, 380 Duckworth St., St. John's, Nfld. Thanks for those stamps, Mary!

Helen M. Dawson of Hr. Grace, Nfld., doesn't think her sister should have all the penpals, so she asks for Catherine McKee and other Ontario buds to write to her.

Mary A. MacIntyre comes to our Club with "Buttercup" as a pen-name, and wants to hear from some girls. Mary is 11, and lives in Georgeville, N.S.

"Dot" Grady, 255 Lake Street, Peterboro, should soon get a chance to have her baseball team in action; thanks for that nice letter, Dorothy!

A namesake of yours has also become a bud recently: Helen Grady, 86 London St., Toronto.

Mary C. Boudreau would like to hear again from Jean Taylor.

A bud in Corner Brook and another in Bridgeport, C.B., wrote to say that they got "caught" in school reading letters I had sent them, but when the teacher found Father Jim had a hand in it no further trouble developed. 'Tis best to be careful though, buds.

Monica M. Jackson, Box 8, St. Peter's, N.S., is delighted with all her pen pals; she has quite a number.

Jack Richards would like Vincent Bassi, of Toronto, to give him his new address.

Loretta Walsh, St. Lawrence, Nfld., would like to hear from Grace Podger, Francis Walsh and Gertrude Noonan.

Beauty Specialist: "Yes, madam, I remember lifting your face."

Client: "That's right. And now I wish you could lift my husband's. As soon as you sent your bill, it dropped badly."

"Do you want the shoulders padded, my little man?" inquired the tailor.

"Naw," said Willie, "pad the pants."

Patient—"What does it cost to have a tooth extracted?"

Dentist—"One dollar."

Patient (searching all his pockets) —"Would you mind pulling it half way for fifty cents, and I'll see if I can't finish the job myself."

Beggar—"Can you help a poor gent, mister?"

Passerby—"H'm—what kind of a gent are you?"

Beggar—"A indigent, sir."

Teacher—"Johnny, use the word 'miniature' in a sentence."

Johnny—"Is Minnie a chewer of gum?"—Boston Transcript.

He—"I dreamed last that—er—I proposed to you. What's that the sign of?"

She—"It's a sign that you have more sense when you are asleep than when you are awake."

Doctor's Wife—"You are always talking about women having no ability to manage things. Do you happen to remember that I started the first cooking school in the town?"

The Doctor—"I do, distinctly. It was just after that happened that I began to have good practice."

"Rufus, did you go to your lodge meeting last night."

"Nah, suh. We dun have to pos'pone it."

"How is that?"

"De Grand All-Powerful Invincible Most Supreme Unconquerable Potentate dun got beat up by his wife!"

"I'm very tired," said the lady at the head of the supper table, one Sunday evening.

"You should not be," said her minister, who had been asked to the evening meal, "you haven't preached two sermons to-day."

"No," said the lady, absent-mindedly, "but I listened to them."—Toronto Globe.

Beryl—"I do. Every time he lights my cigaret I blow smoke-rings toward him."—Boston Transcript.

Small Boy: "Bill, sir."

Clergyman: "And how did you get that name?"

Small Boy: "My father says I came on the first of the month with the rest of the Bills, sir."

HOW TO SPEAK

In promulgating your esoteric cogitations, or articulating your superficial sentimentalities and amicable, philosophical or psychological observations, beware of platitudinous ponderosity.

Let your conversational communications possess a clarified conciseness, a compact comprehensiveness, coalescent consistency, and a concatenated cogency.

Eschew all conglomerations of flatulent garrulity, jejune babblement and asinine affectations.

Let your extemporaneous descantings and unpremeditated expatiations have intelligibility and veracious vivacity, without rhodomontade or thrasonical bombast.

Sedulously avoid all polysyllabic profundity, pompous prolixity, psittaceous vacuity, ventriloquial verbosity and vaniloquent vapidity.

Shun double ententes, prurient jocosity, and pestiferous profanity, ambiguous or apparent.

In other words, talk plainly, briefly, naturally, sensibly, truthfully, purely. Keep from "slang"; don't put on airs, say what you mean; mean what you say. And don't use big words!

St. Peter—"How did you get up here?"

Latest Arrival — "Flue."—Jack-o'-Lantern.

Farmer: "Not on your life: Let him walk, the same as I did."

"I don't know from here, 'cause I can't see its license."—Stray Stories.

"It is eminently essential," shouted the political speaker, "that our party should hang together."

"Hang together is right," yelled a harassed taxpayer.

"I mean," spluttered the speaker, "that we should hang together in accord."

"That's what I mean," replied the heckler, "and in a mighty strong one, too."

"I can't marry him, mother. He's an atheist, and doesn't believe there's a hell."

"Marry him, dear, and between us we'll convice him that he's wrong."

"Are you going to take this lying down?" boomed the candidate.

"Of course not," said a voice from the rear of the hall, "the shorthand reporters are doing that."—Christian Evangelist.

THE COST OF CONQUEST

Last month we gave some idea of the progress of the missions in China, noting with satisfaction that the spiritual returns from the labours of the missionary army were decidedly worth while. We did not then speak of the inevitable sacrifices and hardships which produced such splendid results. Anyone at all conversant with conditions on the missions must realize that the labour is prodigious and that the life of a missionary is one of continual striving against odds. This is the glory of the missionary, and the Divine Redeemer would not have it otherwise; for where there is generous self-sacrifice there God's blessings most abound.

The past decade of years has seen much disturbance in China—civil wars without end, famine, plague, and great floods. It has been a time of trial for the messengers of the Gospel, and they have paid their tribute even unto blood. It may come as a shock to many of our readers to learn that the number of priestly lives sacrificed for the conversion of China within the past ten years is more than forty. Half that number have met death within the past three years. Missionary annals sadly record them as having been "killed by bandits", "killed by Communists", or "died in captivity". What a tremendous offering for the missions of China!

Is it worth the cost? Many there are who will substitute the word "wasted" where we have written "sacrificed". Christ Himself and those Modern Martyrs for the great Cause would rebuke such persons, for in the Divine Economy "the blood of martyrs is the seed of Christians". From the very beginning the Church has honoured and glorified her martyrs, and she will never cease to do so. Far from considering the sacrifice of her missionaries as an appalling waste, she rejoices that there are found some worthy to follow in the footsteps of her Divine Founder Who "Himself gave His life a ransom for many". Even as the sacrifice of God's Son redeemed the world, and continues to effect the redemption of souls, so will the blood of China's modern martyrs continue till the end of time to be the means of saving countless souls in that vast land of paganism. During this month of the Sacred Heart pray earnestly for the missionaries of the Church that they may have the grace and strength to serve the cause of Christ zealously despite all opposition. Divine Providence has spared our district of Chuchow from any violence whatsoever, but our missionaries need your prayers that God may bless their efforts for the salvation of souls.

WILLS

It may be that the mission-education of adult Catholics has not yet reached a point where it can awaken the spirits of the wealthy members of our church, and make their enthusiasm such that they will realize there is no apostolate more beautiful or beneficient than that which is exercised in favor of missionary work.

A Toronto paper recently mentioned bequests by two Protestant gentlemen to the foreign mission activities of their churches. One left $8,000 and the other $25,000. Whilst there may not be many readers of "China" able to set aside such large sums to help Catholic foreign missions, yet we know there are some who will want to make the fullest use of the worldly goods they must leave behind. To such we recommend our mission work.

JUST TO REMIND YOU

From a financial viewpoint the publishing of a magazine is no sinecure. At the present time we know that even the very low subscription price of "CHINA" is not an insignificant item for many of our readers. Fifty cents is such a small amount that perhaps those who are in better circumstances may look upon it as too trifling to be of any importance to anybody. Half a dollar one way or another does not make a big lot of difference to the publishers. Granted. But what if that attitude were general among all our subscribers? Taken altogether our subscriptions make a substantial amount, but we need every cent of it, and more besides, to keep going. When your subscription is due, or already overdue, we would appreciate a renewal. "Our Patron" prints a little story which may bring home the point.

"A preacher at the close of one of his sermons said: 'Let all in the house who are paying their debts stand up.'

"Presently every man, woman and child, with one exception, rose to their feet.

"The preacher seated them and said 'Now let every man not paying his debts stand up.'

"The exception, a careworn individual, clothed in last summer's suit, slowly assumed a perpendicular position.

" 'How is it, my friend,' asked the minister, 'that you are the only one not able to meet his obligations?'

" 'I run a newspaper,' he answered meekly, 'and the brethren here who stood up are my subscribers, and—'

" 'Let us pray,' exclaimed the minister."

The Eleventh Hour

By OBSERVER

The Story of a Soul and a Remarkable Answer to Prayer

AS we write these lines a terrific thunderstorm is raging, the first real one since this year's band reached China. We have often heard heavier thunder at home, but never did a house shake as this one is shaking now. Each successive thunderclap threatens to bring it tumbling down about our heads like a house of cards.

Rain, in driving sheets, is lashing furiously against the window pane. The elements seem suddenly to have discovered a hostile presence in our little house that is built of stones and mud. They are straining every nerve to encompass its downfall. This is an atmosphere I always loved, ever since childhood days, when just such storms served to accentuate the cosiness and safety of a certain little home twelve thousand miles away. But to-day there is an added fascination, for it does not require a great stretch of imagination to see the fury of the demons in the fury of the storm. We have rescued a soul from their clutches, snatched a victim from their cruel grasp on the very brink of eternal ruin. To-day, in our little city of Lishui, to-day while the thunder roars and the lightning stabs and the angry rain lashes on the window pane, a life is slowly ebbing away. A man is dying at peace with God after a lifetime of paganism; dying a Christian, his soul resplendent in its white baptismal robe, because the charity of the Grey Sisters won his heart and prepared his soul for God's saving grace; because God's angels of mercy came to him in his darkest hour. His conversion is one of the most consoling answers to prayer that God had vouchsafed to bestow upon us since we came to China.

The story really begins with the advent two years ago of the Grey Sisters of the Immaculate Conception to Lishui and the cure of a very sick girl three days after their arrival. Hardly were they settled down in their new home when news came to them that a girl was dying in a house not far away. Three Chinese doctors had pronounced her case hopeless; had left her to the mercy of the gods and the well nigh fatal devices of well-meaning relatives and friends. The sisters found her nearing the crisis of typhoid fever, with a temperature of 104. She was in mortal terror of them, and shrank away when they tried to place the thermometer under her tongue. When they arrived, well-meaning friends were forcing the poor girl to eat a meal of meat, sweet potatoes and rice—at the crisis of typhoid fever. For three days the sisters nursed her tenderly through the critical stage of the disease. As they left the house Saturday evening they told the mother to let her rest, and said they would return Monday morning. Next morning after Mass, as they were leaving the Church, they espied the girl before the door, seated in a rickshaw, almost delirious with fever and excitement and surrounded by a curious throng of people. The mother explained to them that they thought it better that the sisters should see her, so they brought her along. Just what the sisters feared came to pass. After her ride back home over the rough cobblestones she had a hemorrhage, and it seemed that all their efforts would be unavailing to save her now. But God was with them in their efforts on this first case of theirs in this pagan land. And the girl recovered. The news spread throughout the length and breadth of the district, and ever since that day people have been brought to the dispensary in sedan chairs from as far as 100 li away (about 35 miles).

After her recovery, the girl came to Mass nearly every Sunday. A few weeks ago she stopped coming, so Father Kam and I went down to see the family to find out, quietly, what had happened. Her father had insisted that she stay home oftener on Sundays to help him with his work, and the girl was very much disappointed. He received us very politely, served tea and cigarettes, and chatted with Fr. Kam even about religion. At the time we remarked that the man looked very delicate, tubercular. It is that same man, the girl's father, who is dying today.

Critical Condition.

A few days ago he was taken with several violent hemorrhages. In spite of the girl's insistence on calling the sisters, it was the Chinese doctors who were called. Only after three hemorrhages, which they had vainly tried to stop, did she prevail on him to have the sisters come to the house. They diagnosed the case as the last stage of tuberculosis, with hemorrhage from the lungs.

Rice and Flour Mill near Piwuka.

His condition was critical owing to the loss of so much blood. For several days they visited the house, each time checking the hemorrhage. They felt they could only prolong his life for a few more days, as he was beyond medical aid. As they left Friday evening they asked him to report first thing Saturday morning. They warned him that the Chinese remedies he had been taking could do him no possible good.

Chinese Doctors Intervene.

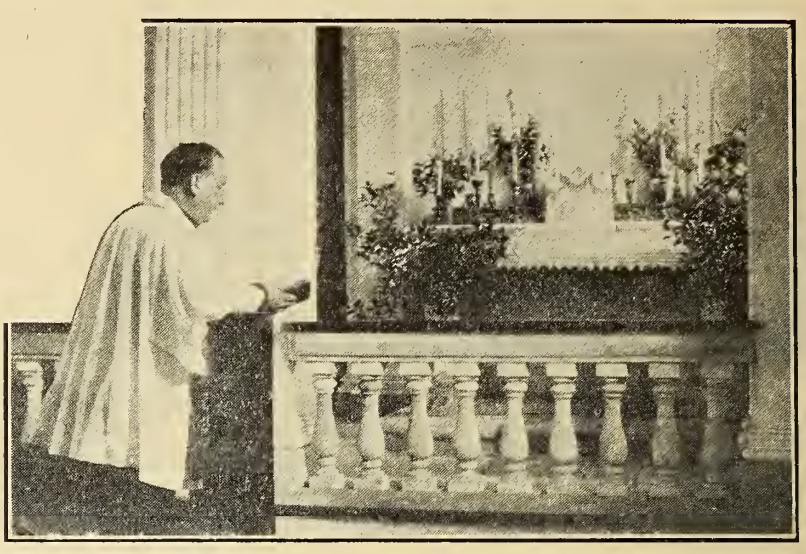
Saturday morning no word came. The Chinese doctors had returned to the scene, jealous of the success of the sisters, and had warned the poor man that their medicine was doing him harm. He had once been an opium smoker, but had overcome that dread habit, and now the doctors told him that the sisters were giving him injections of morphine, and that if he continued their treatment and recovered, he would only be a drug addict for the rest of his days. In vain did the wife and daughter insist that it was only the sisters who could do him any good. The man listened to the doctors' warning and allowed them to apply their remedies once more. This "saved their face" before the people. Late Saturday afternoon, however, there was another violent hemorrhage, which seemed to foretell the end. Once more they failed him, and once more the daughter wanted to get the sisters. The man was terrified. But he felt that it was too late to appeal to the sisters now. He had played them false, had ignored all their warnings and gone back to the native medicine.

Another Crisis.

"It's too late now," he said. "They won't come. Father Kam is angry, and the sisters are angry." The poor man did not know what charity meant, did not know that there was no such thing as human resentment on the part of those gentle followers of the Master he was so soon to know. Quietly word was sent from the house, and great was the surprise and joy of the sick man a short time later when the sisters entered the room. He had expected they would have acted like any pagan doctor under such circumstances. Instead, he found himself once more face to face with the most gentle and considerate kindness, and a strange something stirred in the very depths of that poor pagan soul. Who were those strange women from a far-off country, who did not believe in the power of the gods, who went about doing good everywhere, and who treated him as if he were one of their very own! He did not know it, but at that blessed moment a greater crisis was at hand. The evil spirits that clustered around that bed of death saw and were troubled.

A Wonderful Change.

When Father Kam visited the sick man he was amazed at the change that had come over him. He found him disposed as never before to listen to a quiet exposition of the love of God and the value of his immortal soul. He wondered at the eager intensity with which he asked for baptism. God's grace had only been awaiting a propitious moment, and as the saving waters were poured on the head of that dying man, from beneath the ugly palimpsest of paganism the image of God once more stood revealed. The man was trembling, but it was not the weakness of death. A new life was his, a life that was to endure throughout eternity. Another victory had been won for Christ, another soul reclaimed for Him who died for our salvation.



* * * *

Dear readers, it is at such moments that we thank God for China. If in the annals of eternity no deed should stand recorded but the eternal salvation of that immortal soul, then indeed could we feel that our work in China had not been in vain. From the first that case had been placed in God's hands. At Mass each morning, in the rosary each evening, we had asked God to grant that this sickness might not be unto the death of the soul. And God had heard our prayer. Compared with the miracle which took place in the darkness of that poor pagan home, how trifling and insignificant are the grandest works of man on earth! Compared with the sublime privilege of thus cooperating with Christ in the grandest work in life, how small are the sacrifices and privations of the missionary in foreign lands! Pray that there may be many such pagan souls led back to the loving Heart of our Divine Saviour. Pray for His missionaries, both priests and sisters, that He may sustain them in their efforts for the souls for whom He died.

In the VINEYARD of SUNGYANG

The repository in Sungyang Church on Holy Thursday.

Catholic Mission,
Sung Yang, Che.
April 6, 1932.

Our new school opened for its second term on February 27, and we now have 26 boys studying catechism and prayers. The schoolboys here were glad to see their picture in the March "China."

Today is Ching Ming Festival. The pupils have their Spring vacation, and those who live away from Sung Yang have returned home for the festival. On this occasion the Chinese visit the graves of their dead, place paper money and joss sticks upon the mounds, and afterwards have a big feast. It is Middle Spring now according to the Chinese calendar, but until recently the weather was anything but springlike. Yesterday the thermometer registered 70 outside the door, following an early morning rain and thunderstorm which lasted until nine o'clock.

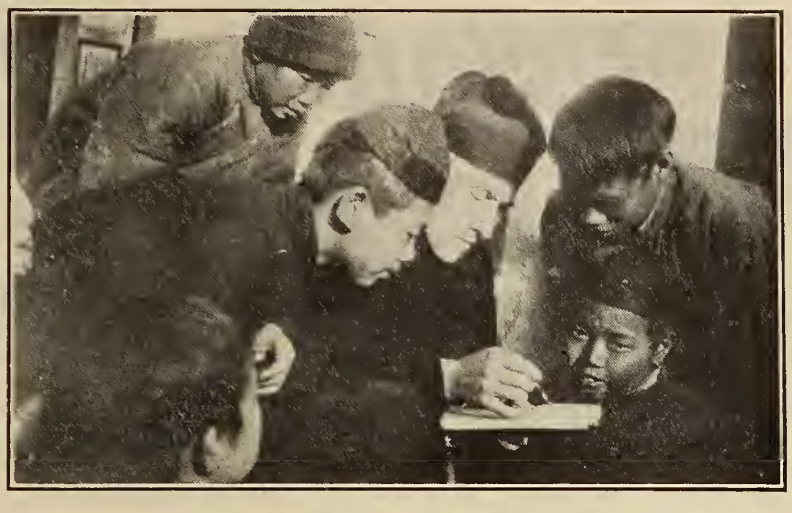
I am alone just now, as Father Beal has left for the distant mission of Yuo Shi Kan. He will be absent about one month, visiting all the Christians in that remote part of the parish. I am kept pretty busy every day; I teach in the school every morning, and I take the youngsters for catechism classes in the afternoon. I enjoy that work, and not the least advantage of it is the opportunity it gives me to keep up my study of Chinese.

Visits Na Tang.

About the beginning of March I left on a mission trip to Na Tang, about 210 Chinese miles from here. I have been over roads and mountains in China, but these were the limit. When I reached my destination I was so tired and footsore that I could eat nothing, but I took some aspirin tablets and turned in for the night. For the five days I stayed in Na Tang I did all the preaching and teaching as there is no catechist in this place. The Christians and catechumens would gather together every evening, and around the table under the light of a smoky torch we would recite the catechism and the prayers. On Sunday afternoon I baptized two families, and gave them rosaries and medals and pictures to put in their parlours. After the baptismal ceremony all together knelt and recited the Chaplet of Our Lady. The following morning they all received Holy Communion and said many prayers in the customary Chinese chant-fashion. I knew they were very happy by their wonderful smiles and their hearty expressions of thanks to the priest. I had the consolation of reclaiming an old sinner who had been away from his duty for ten years, and he promised to walk the straight and narrow path for the future. The Christians asked me to get them a catechist who would come to them twice a month to help them along with their prayers and catechism, and I told them I would do my best for them. I hope to obtain a catechist for them during the summer. We have no chapel in this place but the services are held in the home of one of the Christians.

Holy Week in Sung Yang.

We had a wonderful Holy Week in Sung Yang, and a great crowd was present on Easter Sunday. Father Beal preached and I sang the high mass. We had to bring in benches from the school to accommodate the crowd. Sung Yang is coming along slowly, and it means untiring efforts and continual endeavours on the part of the priest to bring those people to a knowledge and realization of what the doctrines of the Catholic Church really mean. With the opening of the school in the old church building a great revival of interest in things religious was manifested. The school is a very effective method of propagating religion, and when well conducted and supervised the results are quickly evident. It costs us quite a bit extra to conduct this school but we know it is money well spent and we hope our friends at home will not forget us.



Sport Not Neglected.

The handball alley is well patronized every day and the boys are learning to play quite well under the supervision of Father Beal. I take a few swipes at the ball, but my arms get so tired I have to quit. Since I got the infection in my foot last summer my pedal extremities have not been very strong, and this, together with the results of a bump I gave my knee some time ago, makes handball as a sport out of the question for me. For the future I fear I will have to leave handball and the climbing of mountains to those who are younger and better able to stand it.

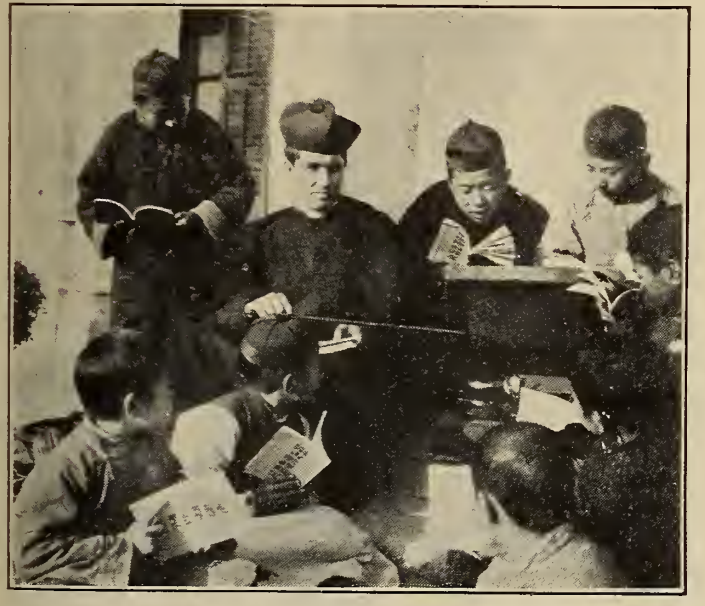
Up the WHITE CLOUD MOUNTAIN

By Rev. J. King

Father Joe gets some help with his Chinese lesson.

Although the sky was cloudy early Easter Monday morning, it did not deter Father Gignac, Father MacDonald and myself from going for a hike. Our objective was a visit to a Buddist temple on Ba Yuing San (White Cloud Mountain), about five miles from the mission compound. Three of our schoolboys were all excited over the prospect of accompanying us, and when we had prepared a little lunch, we set out through the north-western gate of Lishui. We took along our cameras and our umbrellas.



After passing through a little village, we had an excellent view of the fertile and well-watered valley. Fields of all sizes and shapes gave a crazy-quilt appearance to the scene. Most of them were flooded rice-fields. The sun had come out by this time, and from the fields came the croaking of many frogs.

One way to get up the Ba Yuing San Mountain is by a cobblestone path, and before beginning the climb we rested in the small open building which spanned this at the foot of the mountain. As we made our way slowly up the path we remarked on the wisdom of the Chinese monks in choosing such a quiet and cool spot to build their monastery, for, although the sun was risen high now, the air became cooler as we got further up. We marvelled at the centuries-old footpath which certainly must have cost its builders much sweat and hard labour. Tiny mountain streams trickled down the rocks to the valley below, and the sound of running water was as soothing music. I thought of Father Carroll's scripture classes when I saw places that reminded me of the Palestinian "wadis". We were glad when we reached another of the "resting places" along the mountain path. Not long afterwards we met a farmer driving an ox before him; apparently he had been working somewhere in the mountains, for many of those people till the land on the mountain sides and summits when they are unable to purchase or even rent a plot of ground in the valley.

Father "Chook" was the first to see the wall which surrounds the temple which we had set out to visit. What an ideal site for a community of Christian contemplatives! Here they could live in peace and contentment while labouring and praying for the conversion of this country's hundreds of millions of pagan souls.

The first temple gate we tried was locked, but entering through another, we came upon a monk and some caretakers, who per-

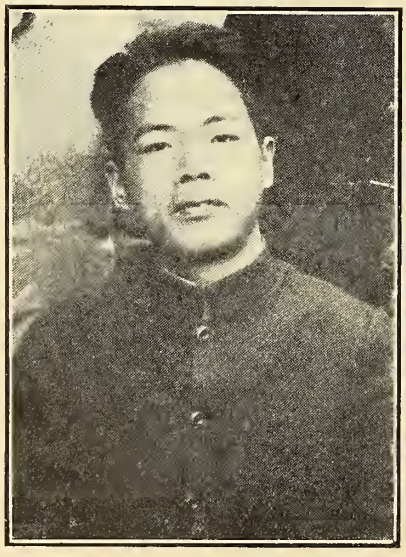
In China, Father Venadam finds use for his Victrola and his Gregorian music records. Here he is preparing his "Schola"—and they like it, too.

We were not surprised to hear that Father Venadam had been putting into practice in Lishui his knowledge and love of Gregorian Chant. A letter from Father Gignac tells praisefully of the efforts of the boys' choir during Easter. He writes: "The Easter musical programme was a revelation to us all, and to the Chinese as well. A choir of boys, ranging in age from 6 to 12 years, had studied diligently under Father Venadam's direction. When Benediction time came the boys marched out of their seats and arranged themselves about the organ. They were all nicely dressed in their Sunday best, with their hair combed and their shoes brushed—not shined—for they all wear cloth shoes here when the weather is fine. The singing would have delighted even the monks of Solemnes, the rendition of 'O Filii et Filiae' being especially well done in real Gregorian style. After the services the fathers and mothers of the ten choir boys were indeed proud of them, and lost no time in reminding their friends that they 'had a son in the choir'. The parents had 'big face' that day, and indeed the singing was the talk of the mission for days afterwards. Last year Father Stringer formed a good choir, and Father Venadam is continuing the work with his well-known enthusiasm for music."



Lishui from Day to Day

by observer

At present (March 15) Fr. Boudreau of Piwuka, and Fr. Morrison of Sung Yang are making their missions. Fr. Serra leaves from here in a few days to visit the Yunhwo district. Fr. Stringer left yesterday on his way back to Lungchuan and upon his arrival Fr. Venini will leave to superintend the erection of a chapel at Kan Kou.

The "chapels" in most of our missions are just plain houses, some rented, some owned by the mission. And I do not mean houses such as even the poorest people might have at home. So far, thanks to the kindness of anonymous friends, two churches have been erected in the district and we hope soon to be able to start on another, made possible by a single donation from a friend down East who also wishes to remain unknown. But there are still many places where chapels are needed to replace the unsightly rooms where at present our priests say Mass during their mission tours.

THE MAYOR OF LISHUI
A graduate of Aurora University (Jesuits), Shanghai.

A serious epidemic of meningitis, which has long been reported from various outlying settlements, has at last reached Lishui. From what we hear it seems a very virulent type, many children succumbing within two hours after the first symptoms. The people are quite excited about it and we expect a big rush on the dispensary when the serum arrives from Wenchow.

We are sorry now we did not get more particulars from Dr. McNevin in Toronto when visiting some of his cases with him a few years ago. At that time the epidemic was bad enough there. However, we are blessed in having two nurses in the Grey Sisters Community here and they will do their best to cope with the emergency. The Mayor just sent us a copy of his proclamation issued for the occasion and told us he had wired Nanking to send the necessary serum. We told him, in reply, that we were expecting a supply ourselves very shortly and should it arrive before his own to consider ourselves and our equipment in the dispensary at the service of the city. He has been very friendly with us at all times. Father Stringer brought him from Shanghai a battery for his radio which he had ordered some time previously, and we have a standing invitation to visit the Yamen and hear the news broadcast from Manila which comes in daily about 6.30 p.m.

Father Kam told me today that the people were boiling carrots and using the "carrot soup" to cure meningitis. So great is the demand for them that it is almost impossible to buy a carrot in the market place. God help the poor people! For the past year or more in various parts of the province that dread scourge has simply been mowing them down. Last year it was serious in Tsingtien district and Fr. Sharkey tells us that every one of the children he anointed recovered. That fact made a profound impression on the people. And it profoundly impresses us with the realization that on the mission field God's protecting arm is more powerful than serums or antitoxins when real danger has to be faced for the sake of His helpless little ones.

Just now I am reminded of a few remarks made by our good friend Dr. Kehoe, of St. Augustine's, on the occasion of a farewell dinner to our departing missionaries. In a most impressive discourse, which we shall long remember, he injected a vein of humor from time to time in order not to play unduly on already overwrought emotions. He reminded us that after some time in China we should begin to look like the Chinese. And everybody laughed, of course.

MR. GHING
Manager of the Electric Light Plant and the Match Factory in Lishui.

But I should like to tell Dr. Kehoe that the beginning of that evolution is already upon us. Last night, in the reading room, four of the senior boys came to talk to us about the meningitis epidemic. Fr. MacDonald looked up from his Literary Digest (yes, we get it here) long enough to remark to me that those boys didn't look like Chinese at all. If those same four boys had been ushered into our Seminary some six months ago I feel safe in saying that not only would they have looked like Chinese to Father MacDonald, but that they would probably all have looked alike. Anyway, they certainly do look like Chinese, at least like the Chinese individuals they themselves happen to be, but last night I agreed with him because to me also they looked "different."

How explain it? Possibly at home the Chinese seem to incorporate into their facial expression some of the characteristics with which Western mentality and Western prejudice have seen fit to endow them. If we feel here that they do not look like Chinese, we mean the Chinese as we saw them then. We have come to know them as human beings like ourselves and have made the joyful discovery that they can mean as much to us as people in the homeland. It is only after you have spent some time in China that you fully realize the terrific and utterly unfounded prejudice against the Chinese people which exists at home.

A little experience of our own here will help illustrate what I mean. A few days ago Father Gignac, Father King, Father Wong and I went down to visit one of the pagan temples. Incidentally there is an old lady there who has spent over 60 years in the moss-grown, dilapidated old building. And a certain good mother who saw us from afar must have felt towards us as many of your friends and mine once felt towards the Chinese. We were coming up the hill towards the temple and her little boy, about six years old, was playing by the roadside. When she saw us approach she gave a scream and yelled to the little fellow to run for his life. Perhaps we looked like murderers. Perhaps she had seen a movie once in which "foreigners" were lurking in dark shadows or opening mysterious trap doors or wrapping long, clutching hands around the throat of some sleeping Chinese beauty.

For long years we have become accustomed to associating something sinister with the Chinese character. Even now there are those who feel that tunnels and trap doors are standard equipment in the average Chinese home. Movie thrillers from Hollywood have not yet been debunked to the extent of portraying the Chinese people with a little more consideration for the truth.

I just had to lay aside my typewriter for a little while, in the middle of the last paragraph. There was a timid knock on the door and four little chaps entered, pagan boys who are studying in the school. After Benediction to-day the Christian boys were asked to receive Holy Communion in a body Friday morning to ask God's protection during during this epidemic for themselves and for all the people. These little lads heard the request and knew they could not go. And they have just asked me: "Father, we would like to be baptised". They would like to be able to go, too. If you saw the earnest look on their little faces and heard them make that request I think you would find no room in your heart for any prejudice against them or their people.

I think most of our readers will agree that the Chinese do not figure to any great extent in serious crime in Canada. For the most part they are more law-abiding than many of the native sons in many a city you and I know. Once in a while, when too many hold-up men have got "clean away" the police feel the urge to do something to justify their existence or repair their reputation. They swoop down in force upon a perfectly harmless game of fan tan and load up old Black Maria with bewildered and unre-

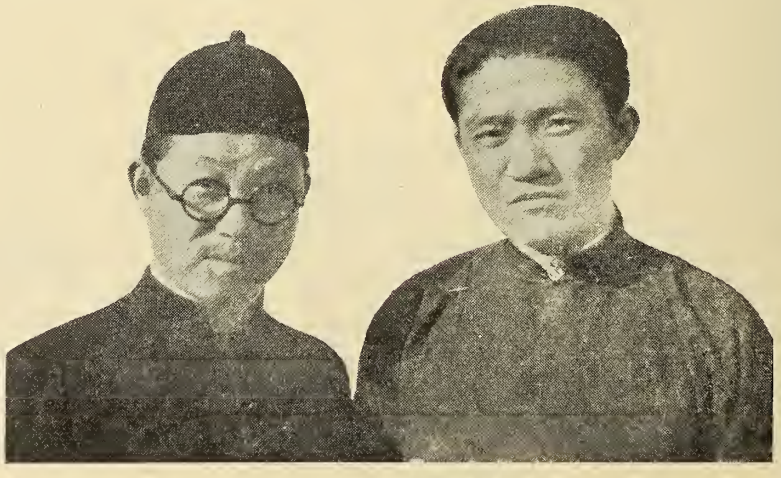
WHEN A FELLER NEEDS A FRIEND

But better days are ahead for "Bobby".



Monsignor McGrath and "Bobby" are real pals.

We now have a better understanding of what "Foreign dog" means in this part of China. Fr. Gignac and I decided to take pity on Bobby, the one-year-old setter belonging to the sisters and condemned by cruel fate to be a watch dog in their mission compound. "Watching" is not Bobby's long suit. He would far prefer a run on the barrens—if we had any barrens. The best we could offer him this day was a stroll along the river bank and he was quite enthused. Now Bobby hasn't seen many dogs in his time. Most of his life is spent behind high walls. And when we had to pass through the village and its canine population turned out "en masse" with bared fangs and bristling hair, Bobby was just plain scared, that's all. Just once, out of sheer terror, he made a pass at three of them who had come too close. The whole tribe fled as if the earth were about to swallow them up because Bobby is as big as any three of those mongrel curs, and could carry some of them in his vest pocket. We tried to induce him to follow up his advantage but in vain.

The kids were wild with delight and we enjoyed it ourselves. They gave all they had in the way of battle yells and words of encouragement to induce their doughty champions to force the issue. They were "spoilin" for a fight. But Bobby's one convulsive shudder, or whatever it was, had thrown terror into the ranks of the enemy. They had seen his bared teeth — just once. There was no fight, although half the population of Lishui followed us to the Mission. They were in good spirits and seemed to appreciate the way we encouraged Bobby to take up the challenge. I was sorry I couldn't speak more Chinese. A dog fight may not be a "touch of nature," but there was something about the prospect of this one which made "the whole world kin."

Thousands of miles away from home and friends, restless, unhappy. It never leaves him, that vague, unsatisfied longing for something far away, something he has really never known but which calls to him night and day. There is a void in his life which China can never fill, and day after day within the four walls of the mission compound he calls "home," he dreams of life, freedom, thrills. I know what it is. It is the tang of the crisp November air on the barrens thousands of miles away; it is the thrill which comes with that first faint scent, telling him that a covey is near, the nerve tingling anticipation of a "stand" with tail straightened and eyes and ears alert. For Bobby is a setter dog, one that would bring joy to the heart of many hunters I know. And he is fated—such is life—to pine within the cramped and narrow enclosure of a mission compound in China.

It does seem a pity to have him cooped up in the convent yard, just across the street from our mission. But cheer up, Bobby, good times are around the corner, and there are pheasants in the hills, and some day you and I are going to take a hike. Occasionally one runs across those wild pheasants while walking alone; they do not stir until you are almost upon them and then with a sudden whir-r-r-r and rapid, elusive flight they are away. Were Bobby there one might "run across" many more. Too bad it is so difficult to get permission to carry a shotgun. Could we but do so, Bobby would have a happier time; life wouldn't be so bad after all, even in far-away China.

OUR NATIVE PRIESTS

FATHER GIGNAC'S MOTHER DIES.

The prayers of "China's" readers are requested for the repose of the soul of Mrs. Gignac, who died at Ridgetown, Ont., on April 29th. Father Gignac, now at Lishui, is the second of our priests there to lose his mother since going to China; Father Amyot's mother died at Ottawa last year. On both occasions Solemn Requiem Masses were celebrated at the Seminary for the deceased.

ST. BRIGID'S CRUSADERS FEATURE CHUCHOW MISSION.

St. Brigid's School, Toronto.

In accordance with our usual custom, Mission Day was held on Monday, May 2nd, to correspond with our monthly meeting of the C.C.S.M.C. Unit in our school. Two priests from China Mission Seminary were present, one of them being the guest-speaker for our final meeting before vacation. At seven o'clock we all attended Mass at St. Brigid's Church and received Holy Communion. Our Crusade meeting took place at 3 p.m. After the Crusade hymn had been sung and the Crusade pledge repeated, the President of our unit explained the intention for the month, which was "The Chuchow Mission."

Our programme was as follows: "Why We Should Be Interested in the Chinese Missions," a paper read by Joseph Dillion; "When Pa's Away," a recitation by Downey Kelly; "Our Baby," a humourous recitation by Laura Barry; "The Mission of Chuchow," an instructive paper by Neil Taylor; a vocal duet by Anita Gildthorp and Luella Hamra, followed by a violin solo by Margaret Kennedy; Marie Kelly read a paper on "China in General," and then we heard the Reverend speaker from China Mission Seminary tell us of the work our Canadian priests are doing in Chuchow. After hearing the report of the critic, the President of the Unit expressed the thanks of the members to the teachers and priests who had supported the Crusade work in St. Brigid's during the year, especially Father McGinn, who had organized the Unit.

HELP FOR THE MISSIONS.

Realizing the need for prayers in our work for souls here and in China, there is nothing which gives us greater encouragement than the co-operation of the schoolchildren all over Canada in offering spiritual works for our intentions. God is surely pleased with their work, and souls in China will reap the benefit. Below are tabulated a few of the spiritual bouquets that have come to us recently from the schools at Glencoe Mills, N.S.; Indian River, Ont.; Brook Village, N.S.; Mt. St. Vincent Academy, Halifax, and St. Brigid's School, Toronto.

NOVENA AND FORTY HOURS' DEVOTION AT THE SEMINARY.

The annual Novena of Benedictions of the Blessed Sacrament was offered for our benefactors before the Feast of Pentecost, and on Pentecost Sunday the beautiful devotion of the Forty Hours was concluded. We take this opportunity of reminding our benefactors (including subscribers to "China") that our students pray daily for their welfare and intentions; a High Mass is celebrated for them on the First Friday of each month; two Novenas of Benedictions are offered for them each year, and they receive a remembrance in more than eight thousand Masses annually.

mitted us to visit the whole establishment, which consists of a group of ten or a dozen mud-walled and tile-roofed buildings of various sizes. We took some pictures standing before the very gods themselves, and those idols surely do look ferocious. 'Tis hard to understand how people adore such horrid-looking things.

We had left our belongings in the ka ting (parlor), and now returned there to eat our lunch. A monk dressed in a long white garment came in and offered us some real good Chinese tea. One of the caretakers insisted on keeping up a conversation, but we had to leave him to the tender mercies of Father Aaron, as he was the only one who could understand him and answer him intelligently.

As we prepared to leave we gave the bonze a few cents, thanked him for his kindness and bowed ourselves on our way. From one of the loftiest peaks we had a great view below us—the mountainside with its pine trees and its myriad beautiful flowers, down in the valley a few small villages and our "home town," Lishui, while in the distance we watched the meandering Wenchow River.

We descended by another footpath, and found our way home through many farms. The farms here are separated, not by fences, but by low mud and stone walls. The walk had been somewhat tiresome, but we had enjoyed our visit to one of China's many temples of false worship.

HAPPY DAYS ARE HERE AGAIN!

Sure, the students welcome the fine weather because it gives them a chance to get at the manual labour on Thursday mornings. The smiles? Oh, well, somebody just remarked that the rest of the boys were working so hard that they couldn't spare time to help out the photographer.

sisting Orientals. Rarely have I ever heard of any other "major" crimes on the part of the Chinese in Canada.

* * *

There is such a thing as overstating one's case, of course. It is not my purpose to prove that the Chinese are angels sent from Heaven. Rather is it to show that as far as the vast majority of the Chinese people are concerned there is really no reason for the opinion expressed by a good lady friend who heard I was going to China and who entreated me to take an automatic revolver and be sure I beat John Chinaman to the draw. Here in Lishui we are outnumbered to the tune of 8 to about 40,000. And we have no reason for concern.

And while we are on the subject, I might say "Give me the honest-to-goodness paganism of China in preference to the neo-paganism of America." Paganism, at best, is a dismal thing, a dark night of the soul in which fiends roam and wreck at will. But were it not for the danger of being misunderstood, we might say that the Chinese have at least come by their paganism "honestly". It is the gloomy heritage of the centuries. It is the unbroken spiritual night of a country which has never seen the Christian dawn. If the pagans of China are floundering, morally and spiritually, it is because they have never been lifted out of the mire. Not so the neo-pagans of the "cultured" West, who wallow proudly and from free choice.

It is now over 1,900 years since the Light from Heaven shone amid their darkness, and still they sin against the Light.

Chesterton in "The Everlasting Man" says they are not "at rest in a real paganism", but "restless in a rather irrational reaction from Christianity". He regards it as one of the strange marks of the strength of Christianity that since it came "no pagan in our civilization has been able to be really human".

* * *

We might perhaps add that many Christians in our civilization — those who have wandered from the sane mentality of the Church—also find it increasingly difficult to remain human. The much belaboured citizen of America to-day suffers—though perhaps not as greatly—from the "unhumanity" of rampant sects just as China has long suffered from the inhumanity of the un-Christian Western powers. The poor factory worker who is unable to buy his glass of beer is the victim of fanatics who have forgotten how to be human. The child in a crowded city who dare not play a game on Sunday afternoon is only too often driven to haunts of vice because bearded city fathers share the same religious lunacy. The "strange Chinese mentality" which surrounds us over here has never discovered the necessity of either prohibition or the uplifter, and yet a drunken Chinese is as rare as a white swan on the Wenchow River. And finally—since the Pacific rolls between us and the city fathers of Toronto —we all play tennis and football on Sunday afternoon.

CONGRATULATIONS FROM ST. COLUMBAN'S.

"No more sincere or better deserved congratulations have ever been extended by THE FAR EAST than those we now offer to the Right Rev. Monsignor Fraser, whom the Holy Father has raised to the rank of Protonotary Apostolic. This honor has been conferred on him in recognition of his valiant and fruitful missionary services.

"Those services would fill a long record. Monsignor Fraser went to China in 1902, the first secular priest from North America to enter that mission-field. He is a pioneer of pioneers. Not only has he labored long on the missions, but he has founded an organization — the thriving St. Francis Xavier Seminary of Scarboro Bluffs, Ont. He had much to do with the founding of St. Columbans, too. Under God, he is responsible for Bishop Galvin's entering the Chinese mission field in 1912. Twenty-two years ago he gave the inspiration that later led Bishop Galvin's first colleagues to join in establishing the Society of St. Columban. St. Columbans honor in Monsignor Fraser one of its very builders. May God bless him and all his work!"

LITTLE FLOWER'S ROSE GARDEN

Edited by
FATHER JIM

The only conditions of membership in the Rose Garden are: (1) To say every day the Prayer for the Conversion of China; (2) To go to Holy Communion once a month for the Intention of Missionary Vocations. Certificates and pins will be sent to all members.

Dear Buds:

I'm in a fix right now! There's a whole lot I would like to say to you this month before you begin your vacation, but the Editor (the one who treats us so meanly sometimes!) told me he could give us only one page, and I had better leave most of that for the buds, for I see letters to the right of me, to the left of me, and in front of me piled high. (I hope there are none behind me.) As I reach for them now, I must leave things to luck, but I hope yours is among those that get mentioned.

On May 27th I offered Holy Mass for all the members of the Rose Garden that they may have success in their examinations, and to beg God's blessing on the Buds during vacation time. During the holidays, remember: "a prayer every day for the missions!"

Yours in the Sacred Heart,
FATHER JIM.

Doris Gignac, a bud from Ridgetown, Ont., has the sympathy of the members of our "Rose Garden" on the death of her mother. Doris has a brother, a missionary in China.

Elizabeth Gallant, Summerside, P.E.I., was "away off" in her description of Father Jim. She says Norma Mills is "the kind of a pen-pal to have," because she answered her letter so promptly. The holidays should be a time when many buds will get prompt answers to their letters.

Among the first buds from Conception Hr., Nfld., were Mary Baker, and Lillian and Agnes Keating. Rarely does a Newfoundland mail reach the Seminary without bringing several letters to Father Jim. I want to thank especially the buds in Long Hr., P.B., for their very interesting letters; newcomers from there are: Josephine Murray, Irene and Alice Bruce, Mary Hammond, Elizabeth and Mary King.

Ask Me Another!

"Father, who do so many priests in China wear whiskers?" Perhaps some of the priests concerned will read Clare Fraser's question and answer it. I would like to know the answer myself, because I hope to get to China some time, and I would want very good reasons before adopting the beard idea. Maude Lane's letters are appreciated by Clare, whose sister Sally would like to hear again from Agnes Botell. Address: Main St., Antigonish.

HOW NICE IT WOULD BE.

How nice 'twould be if knowledge grew
On bushes as the berries do,
Then we would plant our spelling seed,
And gather all the words we need;
And sums from off our slates we'd wipe
And wait for figures to get ripe.
And go into the fields and pick
Whole bushels of arithmetic.
Or if I wished to learn Chinese,
We'd just go out and shake the trees.
And grammar then in all the towns
Would grow with proper verbs and nouns,
And in the garden there would be Great bunches of geography,
And all the passers-by would stop
And marvel at the knowledge crop.

Welland Scores at Last!

A long time ago came letters from an enthusiastic teacher in Welland, followed by a big list of fifty-three new members for the "Rose Garden." Father Jim apologizes for having kept them waiting so long for their certificates and badges.

Every month Father Jim receives a bundle of lovely Catholic magazines from Margaret Campbell, Glace Bay, and they are read with interest, Margaret. Thank you!

Rossella Heffernan, Box 176, Arthur, Ont., asks for pen-pals from Nova Scotia. The address you asked for, Rosella, is: Laurie Latimer, 328 Osgoode St., Ottawa.

Accidents Will Happen!

"Dear Father Jim:

"Please ask some buds to write to me, and I will answer promptly. I found out who you are from one of my school-mates, also a bud. She did not mean to tell me, but it slipped out accidently." Such is the luck of Agnes Rolls, 18 Field St., St. John's.

* * *

"Our Sister often speaks of your 'Rose Garden' in School; we pray for China every day in St. Ann's School; I want to become a bud and have some others write to me." Glace Bay is one of our strongholds, and the above is from Elizabeth Gouthro, 89 Lower King Edward Street. Isabell McLean, 702 Sterling St., Glace Bay, has also "heard a lot about the 'Rose Garden'," and comes to us with the pen-name "Daisy".

HAVE YOU SENT YOUR PICTURE TO FATHER JIM?

At left: Johnny Nicholas, Box 395, Beiseker, Alta. Johnny has two brothers and a sister in our Club.

Below, we have some buds from Dundas, Ont. Left to right: Helen Ouellette; Eva Cree, 325 Park St.; Marie McManamy, 72 Sydenham St.; Ita Denver; Rita Grightmire.

At right: John Timlin, 26 Auburn Ave., Toronto. John came from England two years ago; he writes me nice letters.

CONVINCING EVIDENCE.

Two hot-headed neighbors involved in a dispute went to court to have it settled.

Judge: "Mr. Brown, what are your charges?"

Mr. Brown: "Your Honor, I loaned Pat McGinnis a large kettle, and when he returned it, there was a big hole in it."

Judge: "Mr. McGinnis, what have you to say for yourself?"

Mr. McGinnis: "Yer honor, in the first place, I niver borried thet kettle; in the second place, when I returned it, the kettle was in good condition; and in the third place, the kittle had a hole in it when I borried it."—M. E. K., Ind.

Landlady—"So Mr. Newboard has found something fresh to complain about this morning."

Maid—"No, mum, it's the eggs."—Boston Transcript.

Old Lady—"Why is it you are always begging?"

Tramp—"Well, ma'am, 'twas this way. I was given a bum start. When I was a baby, a girl shoved me around in a carriage for a dollar a week, and I have been pushed for money ever since."

She was so dumb she thought noodle soup was a kind of shampoo.—Iowa Frivol.

A boxer went into the tailor's to order an overcoat. While he was being measured, the tailor enquired: "Do you want a belt on the back?"

The boxer turned around suddenly, his fists sparred, and said: "Look here, you, get on with the measurement or I'll give you a 'belt' on the jaw!"

Hotel Clerk: "I beg your pardon, but what is your name?"

Hughie: "Name? Don't you see my signature there on the register?"

Clerk: "Yes—that's what aroused my curiosity."

Axelrod—"Why don't you tell the proprietor if the steak is like leather?"

Gearnut—"He might want to charge us shoe prices then."

FORCE OF HABIT.

"Fill her up," said the absent-minded motorist to the waiter, as he parked himself in the restaurant with his sweetie.—Lamplighter.

THE TALE OF A DOG.

A young couple were in China. One day they were served with a very tasty dinner, of the composition of which they knew nothing. When the Chinese cook came to clear the table, the young wife asked him in fun:

"I hope you did not kill a stray dog from the road to make our dinner, Chang?"

"Me no killee dawg," answered Chang. "Him already dead when me pickee him up."

Jock entered the shop where he had recently purchased a bicycle.

"It's about the bike, mon," he said.

"Hasn't it arrived yet," said the shopkeeper.

"It has," said Jock, "but where's that free wheel you spoke about?"

Wanted—Farm mule. Must be reasonable.—Ad. in the Birmingham Age-Herald.

"But you're asking for a rather high wage, seeing that you know nothing about the work."

"But you see, not knowing the work makes it so much harder for me."

Crab—"I say, old fellow, why on earth are you washing your spoon in your finger-bowl?"

Grad—"Do you think I want to get egg all over my pocket?"

Customer: "I've brought back the bacon. It's bad."

Shopman: "Impossible, madam. It was only cured last week."

Customer: "Well, then, it must have had a relapse."

Mrs. Murphy and Mrs. Casey, who occupied adjacent rooms in a city tenement, were having one of their usual squabbles. Suddenly Mrs. Murphy snatched Mrs. Casey's clock and threw it out through the window, saying: "It's wonderful how time flies."

Whereupon Mrs. Casey seized Mrs. Murphy's young son and threw him across the room, saying: "Aye, bedad, an' youth must have its fling!"

THE ROOSTER'S LAMENT.

The rooster leaned his head disconsolately against a barn door.

"What's the use of it all?" he said sadly. "Eggs yesterday, chickens to-day, feather-dusters to-morrow."

SOME PARENTS ARE SO CARELESS.

"Speaking of signs," writes W. P., "I remember once standing in front of a grocery store and noticing the sign, 'A Swindler,' on the window. Entering, I asked the proprietor if it wouldn't look better if, instead of 'A,' he printed his full Christian name.

"'No,' he said, 'it would look worse. My first name is Adam.'"—Boston Transcript.

"Above all," the doctor urged, "you must eat more fruit, and particularly the skin of fruit. The skin contains all the virtues and the vitamins. What, by the way, is your favorite fruit?"

The patient looked gloomy. "Cocoanuts," he said.

Abie: "Fader, dere is a customer in de shop vants to know if dose all wool unshrinkable shirts vill shrink?"

Father: "Does it fit him?"

Abie: "No, it's too large."

Father: "Vell, den, dey vill shrink."

Plumber: "I've come to fix that old tub in the kitchen."

Youngster: "Mamma, here's the doctor to see the cook."

Mistress: "This pie is burnt to a cinder, Jane. Didn't you make it according to the instructions in the cookery book?"

Jane: "No, mum, it's me own cremation."

Horse Buyer: "How much do you want for that horse?" (Pointing at sleeping animal.)

Farmer: "£8."

Horse Buyer: "I will give you £2."

Farmer: "I would not wake him up for that."

Wife: "How do you like the potato salad?"

Hubby: "It's delicious. Did you buy it yourself?"

A boot-black, having a little education, did not wish to simply write "Boot Black" over his door.

Instead, he wrote: "Pedal teguments artistically illuminated and lubricated at the infinitesimal remuneration of 1d. per operation.

SEZ HE!

Father: "Now, don't let hear any more American slang from you."

Son: "O.K., Chief!"

IF we had sufficient donations to our BURSE FUND our Seminary would become SELF-SUPPORTING

BURSES—What are they?

A BURSE is the sum of $5,000 given to the Seminary, at one time or in installments, which, being securely invested, produces sufficient revenue to support a student. The capital is not touched, but remains intact. Year after year the revenue from a single Burse would be used to educate a student. When he is ordained and goes to China as a missionary, another student would be educated, and then another, and so on indefinitely.

Those blessed with an abundance of this world's goods could spend to no better advantage than by becoming the Founder of a Burse for China Mission Seminary.

Even small donations will be gratefully received to help complete any of our present incomplete Burses.

A Burse is absolutely the most worthwhile monument to leave behind to your memory. What greater good can you do with your money than guarantee a succession of missionary priests perpetually?

Help us by sending donations to our BURSES, either to the Seminary or in care of the "CATHOLIC RECORD", London, Ont.

Remember China in making or re-making your WILL.

FOR FUTURE APOSTLES

Many of our readers have told us of the pleasure and interest with which they have read the many articles appearing in "China" during recent months from the pen of Monsignor McGrath. During his years as editor, Monsignor McGrath did much to interest our Catholic people in the missions of China and now he presents to them in his own brilliant fashion many interesting facts of actual personal experience on the missions. We are pleased to publish in this issue a letter written by him to the students in our seminary (see page 104). We feel that its interest is not confined to missionary students alone, giving as it does an insight into aspects of mission life familiar to all who devote their efforts to the propagation of the Faith in pagan lands, and revealing conditions which we would wish to make known to all those who are interested in the work of our priests in Chuchow, so that, knowing the trials and difficulties which have to be met and overcome, friends of the Missions will be more apt to realize their serious responsibilities and Catholic duty towards the missionaries who have willingly given up all in order to share their Faith with less fortunate brethren in far-off pagan China.

To help the Missions is our happy privilege; to pray for vocations to the missionary life is a real way to help. Hundreds of Catholic students this summer will have to make the all-important, momentous decision which will determine the sphere of their life's activity; various channels of human endeavour will appeal to them—pray that many of our splendid Catholic boys will heed the Divine Vocation to the highest form of service in this world—the Service for Souls. It is consoling to know that God allows, even requests, His creatures to be the instruments of procuring His glory, and that through their own free co-operation with His grace. If Catholic young men but faintly understood God's desire that "all men should be saved", and if they realized what wonderful possibilities lay with them to further that desire, how ready they should be to hearken to His voice calling them to be "fishers of men". "Along the Mission Highway" is timely reading for those especially who are just now trying to decide their vocation.

The work of Catholic Foreign Missions is not for timid, ungenerous souls; it is a work that requires courage of a high order and an understanding of things at their real value. Thank God that among our Catholic boys are found not a few who are prepared to take Him at His word and devote themselves to the missionary priesthood. Difficulties there are, to be sure, but there are correspondingly great rewards, and a vision of the countless multitudes that "are now lying like sheep that have no shepherd" will inspire generous young men to spurn the wealth and honors and pleasures of this world and dedicate their lives to the service of God and be His messengers of grace and truth to the souls of their fellow-men.

TELL ME, LADDIE

Tell me, laddie, if at twilight, as you kneel in loving prayer,
Kneel within the college chapel, kneel before God's altar fair,
Does there ever come a message from the Silent Presence there?
Does the God of armies call you, as of old was called the maid?
Do you feel upon your shoulder quick the touch of mystic blade,
Do you join the ranks of knighthood in a secret accolade?

Lo, His foreign Legion musters, clank of armor, wave of plume,
Christ unconquered leaps triumphant from the darkness of the tomb,
While the fools who stood on Calv'ry thought the cross had sealed His doom.
Knew they as they crucified Him what a flag they had unfurled,
And the challenge that our Captain, dying bravely, bravely hurled—
"With this cross your only weapon, go and bring me back the world".
Knew they what a beacon light was lit, what cross-piece dipped in gore
Down the arches of the ages quick the mighty message bore,
That His Sacred Heart's last beatings were the muffled drums of war?
Did they see a mighty vision of an army clad in white,
Millions that no eye could number, clad in armor dazzling bright?
Was it that which made the mountains and the hilltops shake with fright?
As the dying eyes of Jesus sought the faithful loving few
And he heard the taunts and curses of the Romans and the Jew,
Did He see His Foreign Legion pass before Him in review?
Tell me, laddie, 'mong His heroes, did His glad eye rest on you?

—FATHER SHARKEY, Tsingtien, China.

THE GOOD THIEF OF CHUSAN

By
RT. REV. W. C. McGRATH

The Archipelago of Chusan may well be called the Thousand Islands of China. The water is not as clear as that of our lordly St. Lawrence, and typhoons have swept the islands bare of trees, but there is a striking resemblance in many ways. Father Amyot and I have just had occasion to pay a visit to Chusan.

Forty-two years ago a lady of the nobility in England gave up wealth and family and a life of social prestige and came to God's abandoned ones in China. Lady Berkeley she was then; Lady Berkeley she is still, but living in the obscurity of the little fishing village of Tinghai, and garbed in the simple robe of a Sister of Charity. With her is Sister Anne, of a wealthy English family, who was disowned by her people when she became a convert about twenty years ago. She has spent sixteen years in China. Her brother is also in China, working as a Protestant missionary. Occasionally brother and sister meet.

Pirates infest the countless islands of Chusan. I asked Sister Berkeley if she wasn't a bit anxious at times. "Oh, no," she replied, "the pirates don't bother us. They know that we often nurse their sick and wounded back to health, and they are grateful." It seems that word has gone round through the whole pirate domain that the Sisters are not to be molested. It is the same in Wenchow, near our own district of Lishui (Chuchow). You recall the story of how one of the boatmen approached the bandit chief last year when three of the Grey Sisters from Pembroke were on their way up the river and offered to sell three Foreign Sisters. The chief refused his offer with scorn and told him that the Sisters were to be left in peace. But to return to our story.

A year ago, during a terrible epidemic, the chief of the pirates in the Chusan district was brought to the hospital of the Sisters of Charity at Tinghai. He was a giant of a man, over six feet tall, broad and muscular. It was soon discovered that he could not live, and Sister Anne broke the news to him. He accepted it stoically, but with a tinge of regret that he would be obliged to give up his life as a bold buccaneer. "You know, Mo, Mo" (their name for the Sisters) "it is a great life. You always have enough to eat, even meat and vegetables as well as rice, and you don't have to work all day long in the rice paddies."

"But don't you know it is wrong to steal from people?" Sister Anne asked him. "You have been a very bad man all your life."

"Mo, Mo," he replied, "I never knew it was wrong. All my people were pirates for generations. My father often took me with him on his expeditions and taught me how to be successful. I never knew any other trade, and nobody before ever told me I was doing wrong." A glance at his muscular frame would convince you why none but the Sisters might even now take such a liberty. "And you know," he added, "I never allowed my men to harm the Sisters. You have been good to us. You always treated us kindly, and when my men were let out of prison you gave them a meal and three Ko each to buy rice and cigarettes. You are strange people from a far-off country who come to help the people of China, and if we harmed you, we would be bad indeed."

Daily he grew weaker, and daily Sister Anne spoke to him of the love of God and of Christ who died on the Cross to save all men. The crucifix impressed him tremendously. At the sight of it this hardened old pirate was moved almost to tears. "I want to be baptised," he repeated many a time, "because you tell me that this God wants me. Mo, Mo, the people who killed Him were worse than us, weren't they?"

One could not but think of another Clovis. This pirate of Chusan might have rallied his men in defence of that gentle Saviour on the Cross. "You know," he continued, "the pagan gods are terrible. But this is beautiful. A God who died for me, a God who wants me. Nobody ever wanted me before."

As he grew weaker the Sisters decided that baptism should be no longer deferred. Truly God's ways are wonderful. As the end drew near, this man, who was once the terror of the islands, became as gentle as a child. "Mo, Mo," he kept on repeating, "this is beautiful! this is beautiful. He died between two just such as I have always been; and He wants me. He wants me. . ." He kept the crucifix with him to the end, and as the soul of the good thief of Chusan went to meet its Maker words were spoken once more as they were two thousand years ago, this time unheard by earthly ears: "This day thou shalt be with Me in Paradise."

HOW TO PUT CHINA IN YOUR WILL

IDOL WORSHIP IN CHINA.

The Chinese are an extremely superstitious people, but they are capable of being intelligently religious when they become acquainted with the truths of the Gospel. Until then all their offerings and ceremonies and ritual are performed, either to avert the sorrows that the supernatural beings might bring upon them, or for the purpose of putting the minds of their gods into such a pleasing state of satisfaction that they will be ready to send sons into the family and prosperity into the business, and riches and honour and a continued stream of blessings upon the home.

This popular and universal form of worship meets one everywhere and is practised by every class and condition of people throughout the country. The rich and the poor, the learned and the unlearned, the common coolie who earns his living in the streets and the most learned scholar who has risen to the highest rank in his profession, men and women of all grades, good, bad and indifferent, all more or less believe in the idols and worship them.

That this is so, is evident from the almost universal presence of the idols. Every house has at least one, which is the household god of the family, whilst the more religious and devout will have several others as well. The cities abound with temples dedicated to certain well-known gods that have been built, some of them at great expense, and are kept in constant repair by the free-will offerings of the people. The villages, too, not to be outdone by the towns, have each of them at least one public temple where the people can make their offerings to their patron god, and where on the birthday of the idol the whole population gathers to witness the play which is performed in honour of it.—Sidelights on Chinese Life.

INFLUENTIAL CHRISTIAN.

Chengchow, China. — A Chinese gentleman, Mr. Tien, who made his language studies at the school of Father Pelerzi in the Vicariate of Chengchow, and later was sent to finish his studies at Louvain, has returned to China and has been made Inspector of Public Instruction for the Province of Honan. Mr. Tien spent four years at the missionaries' language school. He became a Catholic after the first year. At Louvain he studied philosophy and received the doctorate in Thomistic metaphysics. Besides being Inspector of Public Instruction for the Province of Honan, he has been made director of the Normal School of Kaifong. At this school there are 400 students.

One of our High School boys in Lishui—a splendid little lad. The "yews" he is holding grow in the mission yard; they are half lemon, half grapefruit, and Fr. Amyot makes excellent marmalade from them.

BROTHERS MARTYRED.

A glorious record from a missionary viewpoint has been set up by the Adons family, Hasselt, Holland. There were four boys in the family, all of whom became Franciscans, and all of whom were in due time appointed to the Vicariate of Ichang, China. In 1922, Julian, one of the four, was murdered, and in April of 1931, Marin, the second of the four, also won the martyr's crown. Until 1928 he had laboured at Yeh-sankwan, and from there Father Marin went to the city of Patong, which, during a recent civil war, he saved from bombardment and destruction. It was there, on Good Friday, April 3, he was captured, and a fortnight later yielded up his life—another victim for the conversion of China.—Fides.

LIFE IN LISHUI.

The following are a few excerpts from a letter from Lishui:

The Mailman Comes.

"This was a big day. There was mail for nearly everybody; it is amazing how a letter from home helps to get the day well started. Here, the mail comes late at night and is received by our gatekeeper. As a rule it is given out next morning at the breakfast table. The mail which brings "China" is particularly welcome, and we got ours today.

Changing China!

"Last week Father Kam and I went down to the Middle School to witness a football game. I got the surprise of my life. The School is like a small modern University. The two teams, dressed in "foreign" football togs, gave as neat an exhibition as one would wish to see. At this School they have tennis courts, basketball, and the most modern athletic equipment, with competent instructors for the pupils. China is indeed changing!

Pictures.

"Most of the priests have cameras, and we do our own developing here, but when we want extra good results, we send the negatives to Shanghai. Here is a letter from the accountant at the Photo Studio in Shanghai, which, in spite of its broken English, will give one an interesting, if pathetic, insight into the aftermath of the Sino-Janapese war.

The Letter.

"'I am informing you my unfortunate,' she writes. 'When the fierce and cruel Japanese army came over the North Szechuen Road into the Chapei for fighting, and throwing the bombs in everywhere by the aeroplane, my home is seated at there, all the furnitures are burned down by the fire, only my mother, sister and brother fled. I never dream I got this grief. I think my life is very poor, and how long I can get these furnitures again? Perhaps I shall be die in the sorrowful.'

"This poor family escaped well, judging by the accounts of wholesale slaughter. Fortunately, we were in ignorance of the conflict for a long while, and we were spared from any of its horrors."

JOSEPH LOPAHONG

the Lay Apostle of Shanghai

YEARS ago a deserted cemetery of twenty thousand graves lay less than two miles away from the Chinese quarter of Shanghai. The wide, neglected plain served for the depositing of rubbish. Behind a ruined wall beggars found shelter. There also children were left to be torn by wandering dogs until a good-natured pagan who had retained some vestiges of pity in his heart erected a little temple where a cistern-like depth was concealed by two trapdoors, and where the poor little creatures could at least die quietly and escape the ravaging dogs. It was a gruesome desert such as one finds only in China.

Today an extended group of houses occupies that very place: twelve two-storey and a number of one-storey buildings of most recent European style, with airy rooms, surrounded by verandas, and equipped with electric light and all modern conveniences. It is a symmetrically placed, pretty village within which an Angel of Mercy seems to have gathered all the misery of the neighboring city: the sick and the aged, widows and orphans, the blind and crippled, the insane and the victims of opium, sick prisoners, and other unfortunates. Every kind of poverty and human wretchedness is represented, and nearly two thousand persons are receiving shelter. Perfect order and cleanliness are everywhere in evidence. A little convent stands in the center of the group of buildings; it is occupied by sixteen Sisters of Charity of Saint Vincent de Paul, who, with a staff of ninety persons, carry on the work of this village of mercy. A church accommodating fifteen hundred people rises on the place of honor in front of the convent.

This village is the Saint Joseph's Home, one of the largest charitable institutions in the Celestial Empire. It was opened on March 19, 1913. Its founder and leader, the soul of the whole undertaking, is that magnificent man, Joseph Lopahong, the lay apostle of Shanghai.

Courtesy, THE CHRISTIAN FAMILY.

Cultured and well educated, speaking both English and French, Lopahong is one of the prominent men of the city. He is president of the Chamber of Commerce, director of the Street Car Company, of two great industrial enterprises and a steamship company, a member of the city administration and that of the French Concession. His charity has merited for him the title of the Chinese Saint Vincent de Paul, and his elevation to the dignity of a Knight of Saint Gregory. His is an important rôle in the great world of Shanghai, which may well be proud of this rich and efficient business man whose good deeds are the subject of comment throughout the city, and whom both European and Chinese hold in high esteem.

Joseph Lopahong descends from a family that for three hundred years has been Christian. He is a model Catholic gentleman whose charity is boundless. The institutions which he founded have grown into a little city. He devotes his personal services to the sick, and is active daily among needy families, in prisons, and at sickbeds, in the cause of charity and the spreading of the Kingdom of God. He knows also how to enthuse and organize others for this service. The Society for Catholic Action in Shanghai was founded by him, and he remains the soul of the movement. His daily work begins with Mass and Holy Communion, whence he derives the strength and inspiration for his labor of love.

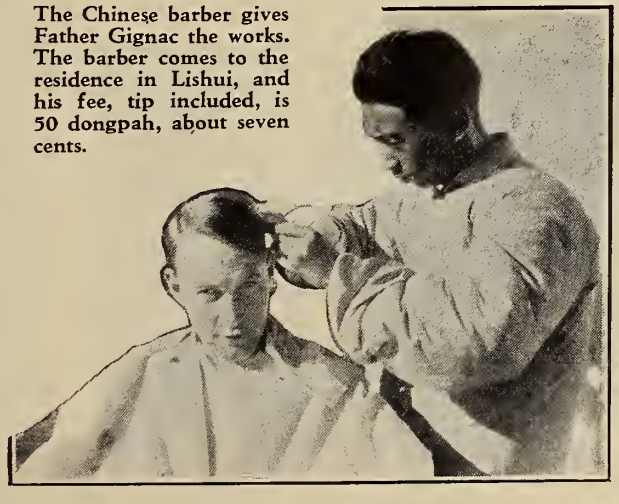
When, about twenty-five years ago, the authorities at Shanghai contemplated the building of a hospital and poorhouse, it was regarded as a matter of course that the undertaking be entrusted to Mr. Lopahong. His position and business ability, together with his administrative talent and influence, enabled him to accomplish a perfect work.

To insure its success, he has placed it under the protection of Saint Joseph, in whom he has unlimited confidence. He contributed a part of his own fortune, and voluntary donations came in abundance, for no one could refuse this man who was so greatly respected and beloved. The old cemetery was acquired, and in its place arose the Saint Joseph's Home above described. Mr. Lopahong took the precaution of endowing the institution, since everything, including medical service and instruction of different kinds, was to be provided free of charge. The expenses, which amount daily to more than three hundred dollars, are paid from public money, private collections, and the proceeds from leased properties. Mr. Lopahong is at the head of the institution. Both he and the two doctors work without remuneration.

A few details may indicate the good that is accomplished at Saint Joseph's Home. From July 1st, 1919, to July 1st, 1920, three thousand four hundred and forty-one sick or otherwise helpless men, and eight hundred and four women, not counting poor children and the orphans, were admitted; and eighty-two thousand six hundred and ninety-four outside patients received free treatment. Children are instructed and given training for the trades in the workshops of the Home. A number of drug-stores for the poor of Shanghai are associated with and receive supplies from Saint Joseph's. In recent years a new hospital and eight drug-stores have been added to the number. In these different places five to six hundred thousand persons a year receive attention.

Despite the fact that the institution is supported mostly by the money of pagans, it has a pronounced Catholic character, which to Mr. Lopahong is the chief concern. In the above-mentioned period of a year, sixty-two adults, four hundred and forty-three children and one thousand three hundred and nineteen dying were baptized.

As catechist and a member of the Saint Vincent de Paul Society Mr. Lopahong is very active, and a favorite occupation of his is to explain the catechism to the sick and to children. His two oldest sons are enthusiastic assistants in his charitable works, and, like him, they visit the sick and the orphans. In addition he has won as co-workers two of Shanghai's prominent Catholic men, Mr. Tsu, the owner of an iron foundry and a dockyard, and Mr. Liu, a wholesale merchant and owner of a coal mine.



The management of Saint Joseph's Home does not nearly satisfy the burning zeal that is in the soul of Mr. Lopahong. His love embraces the entire city. He is the chief promoter of the Catholic welfare organizations, and has an agreement with the police and military authorities whereby he is immediately informed should anyone have been condemned to death. In that event he hastens to the prison to convert the prisoner, if possible. Sick prisoners are sheltered in his own home. He visits also heathen and Protestant hospitals to attend the dying. Doors are open to him everywhere. Heathen attendants in some of these institutions summon him of their own accord, and he is prepared to answer the call at any hour of the day. In associating with officials, learned men, or business friends, he speaks without human respect in behalf of his Faith. His words and example have converted many a heathen.

This man of many activities finds time to promote Catholic interests and to satisfy his urge to do good even outside of Shanghai. On Sunday his auto takes him to a city's poor district, or to some lonely section of surrounding country where there is no priest, and where he therefore delivers the message of the Gospel to the people. While on a business trip to Hangtschou, the capital of Tschekiang, on a side-street of the city, he accidentally came to a pagan orphanage. He presented his card and was permitted to go through the institution. Among the four hundred children many were seriously ill, and Mr. Lopahong requested the attendants to bring them to him, as he knew of an excellent cure. The result was that he baptized almost a hundred children. There are few priests in China who administer Baptism to so many as does Joseph Lopahong. He is planning to build a Church of the Sacred Heart in the same city of Hangtschou, where in 1720 Father Hinderer, S.J., had erected the first church dedicated to the Sacred Heart in China, if not in the whole world. It is due, furthermore, to Lopahong's influence that the Sisters of Charity of Saint Vincent de Paul were placed in charge of the municipal hospital of Peking and the municipal children's home of Wentschou. When in 1921 the famine began to rage in northern China, Lopahong travelled through the stricken regions and organized the gathering of funds for relief, then went to America to appeal to his countrymen for aid.

One marvels at the tremendous work that this one man accomplishes in behalf of suffering humanity and the propagation of the Faith in his native city and his native land.

In his family circle, a wife and nine children, Lopahong is an exemplary father and a most amiable host. It is a pleasure for him to invite bishops and priests to his home and to meals. Upon entering the reception-room a life-size picture of the Sacred Heart meets the visitor's glance. The drawing-room is consecrated to the Blessed Mother, and the dining-room to Saint Joseph. There is a chapel in the home, and each room is

ALONG the MISSION HIGHWAY

Some difficulties and consolations of life in China as told to our Seminarians.

By RT. REV. WM. C. McGRATH, P.A.

Ningpo, China,
April 27, 1932.

Dear Boys:

For a little while back things have been happening so fast around here that the Seminary and the students were crowded out of the picture for the time being. Only for the time being, I assure you. I have been more than busy, and have not written to you quite so often as I would have liked.

Now I know you would like to have my real impressions and reactions in terms of the mentality of the Seminary, a mentality which was but so short a time ago the common heritage of us all. I think it is advantageous for you all to know just how China affects a person and just what it is that you are to face for life when you have seriously decided to take up the work of the Foreign Missions. I know you will be interested in the facts, and here they are.

First Impressions.

You know them very well because I have already described them to you in my earlier letters. There is a mixture of glamour and loneliness and happiness and disgust all thrown together. Let us lay the supernatural motives aside for the time being and return to them later on. When one enters China first one is appalled by the squalor and the dirt in which so many of the people live. Fresh from home and the sanitary and hygienic "standard of life," it is a bit of a shock. For those who have always lived in the cities I daresay it appears even worse. I grew up in Newfoundland, and spent many of my earlier days in a fishing village, and possibly was prepared to take some of it for granted, although I must confess that there is no fishing village in Newfoundland or Nova Scotia which could quite prepare one for the sights and smells of China. The cods' heads and caplin fertilizing the fields were as the aroma of lavender and rose compared to the odours in some of the streets of Lishui and Ningpo. Then there is the food, which is so different, and added to that the occasional tinge of loneliness. On the whole, first impressions are most unfavourable.

Becoming Acclimatised.

It is strange how we can come to take things for granted. When I saw Ningpo first I said to myself, "What a mess!" That was meant for the whole city. I had not yet seen Lishui. When I came back to Ningpo a few days ago and we went down the main drag I said to myself, "Gee, this is quite a burg." There were large stores with a great deal of foreign goods, and everything was bigger and wider and cleaner than in Lishui. Actually I was impressed. The residence here is palatial compared to our own. We felt that we were in touch with civilization again. And yet, back in Lishui, we did not mind the conditions after a little while. As a matter of fact, it was so pleasant to meet our own priests and to feel that where we were was really the only "home sweet home" we shall ever know again, that we felt quite an affection for the old house that shakes like a man with the palsy when Father "Chook" crosses the floor upstairs, and that has more rats in its walls than ever followed the Pied Piper. After all, boys, you can reduce the essentials of life to very few things. Enough to eat, and a place to sleep where you are safe from the wind and the rain, and, above all, the comradeship that is engendered by a fellow-feeling among those who have all given up so much for the same common and glorious purpose. Let that never be taken away from us. Let it but remain and very little else matters. And, thank God, here in China that precious spirit of charity which has ever been the distinguishing mark of our little Seminary has come to mean more to us than it could ever mean at home. Boys, let me tell you that there are times, in spite of all the conditions I have described, when one experiences a feeling of happiness that one could never feel at home. That, of course, pertains to the supernatural side of our life, of which we shall speak in due course.

The Difficulties.

One of the difficulties is the language. At first it is discouraging—"like a cleric's first peep into the Breviary". But as one goes along, things begin to shape and there is a real thrill in realizing, after a little while, that one can carry on even a feeble little conversation with the schoolboys. "Unless you be converted. . . ." Really, as far as the language is concerned, we must become as little children again and start to stammer and stumble along.

Another and greater difficulty is the mentality of the people. Even if we do say so ourselves, most of us are of the kind who prefer to call a spade a spade, to say exactly what we mean and to take it for granted that the person to whom we are speaking will understand us in that way. In China, however, that simply isn't done. This "cachee" business, or the perpetual "my dear Alphonse" sort of stuff, would drive one crazy if one let it. It seems that one can never speak one's real mind again; that one must perpetually have recourse to roundabout methods and implied suggestions and all the rest of the bunk that will give you many a pain in the neck. You say to yourself: "Must I become a hypocrite for the rest of my days?" It is very discouraging. It makes one turn one's own mentality inside out. I think it is the hardest part of the whole business as far as the merely natural obstacles are concerned.

The writer on board a junk at Ningpo.

Another phase of this mentality is the utter failure on the part of most of the people to understand or appreciate the motives which have induced one to come to China. Let me give you an example. Since their advent to Lishui, the Sisters have done marvellous work among the sick and afflicted, and they have effected the cure of many a person who had been abandoned by the Chinese doctors. One would naturally expect not merely the formal sort of gratitude which we call mere show and affectation, but a sort of appreciation such as that kind of charity might elicit at home. But such is not the case. A few days ago one of the Chinese said to Father Kam that he understood the Sisters did not want any money for their services. This he found hard to understand. But he was ready with the explanation. "All the people realize," he went on, "that the Sisters want to have a big reputation. Fame, that is what they want." He could not rise to an appreciation of higher motives. It is the same towards the priests very often. Even the Christians have not that same feeling towards the priest as would be found at home in countries where the Faith has been strong for centuries. The people are easily offended, and when offended they sometimes show their resentment by deciding to stay away from Mass and the Sacraments altogether.

The Remedy.

As for this chief difficulty of the strange mentality, and its often unfortunate consequences, we must remember that we are dealing with a people with a tradition of centuries of paganism. The really marvellous thing is that they are not very much worse. Compared with the paganism of Rome, there is much that is admirable even in natural China. Compared with the paganism of Carthage and Moloch and the infant sacrifices, the paganism of China is almost a blessed thing. But in itself paganism—of whatever sort—is awful. However, the chief remedy as far as we are concerned is not to persuade ourselves of anything objective in paganism so much as to ask ourselves why we really came to China. And here we must touch upon the supernatural, or the answer to the whole question. My dear boys, if you are looking for appreciation, looking for sympathy, looking for comfort from human things—stay away from China. If you are not at least striving to reach the stage where you will derive your strength and your consolation from Christ in the Blessed Sacrament and learning to dispense with the consolations of creatures, then think twice before you ever take the Oath to our Mission Institute. I say if you are not striving to reach that stage of detachment from crea-

FILIAL PIETY IN CHINA

The Chinese family is supposed to be bound together by a virtue that is unique in China, and which has never been looked upon with the same reverence by any other country in the world as in China. I refer to filial piety. There is no question but that this, as an ideal virtue, has been held up before the nation during the whole length of its existence. Confucius immortalized the subject by writing a book on it, and though it is wanting in the nerve and vigor of his other classical works, because it is from his pen it has, through successive generations, exercised a marvellous influence in keeping up the national belief in this virtue amongst all classes of society.

The utterance of the word "Hsiao" (filial piety), has an electrical effect upon any Chinaman in whose hearing it is mentioned. The ordinary citizen will discourse with you by the hour upon its beauties, and he will enlarge upon the excellence and nobility of the children that carry it out in ordinary life, especially when great obstacles exist in the performance of it. The man upon whose face profligate is plainly written with the pen of whisky and opium hears the word "Hsiao", and a softened look passes over it, and his eyes lose their hardness, and any goodness that lay in his heart is for the moment supreme. In fact, I have never yet met any one, scoundrel or honest man, who has not been moved more or less by the mention of this universally reverenced virtue.

The Twenty-four Examples of Filial Piety.

Next in importance to the brochure of Confucius on filial piety is a book quite as widely known, which is entitled The Twenty-four Examples of Filial Piety. A brief account of twenty-four famous instances of devotion to parents under various trying circumstances are given, and these are printed age after age, and read eagerly by the people. They are certainly most amusing reading, and they give the impression that whatever other qualities the Chinaman may possess, he is endowed with a strain of romance and poetry that explains how popular he can be when he lets himself go.

One of these stories is of a young lad, who acts in such a way as to excite the admiration of all who read his story. His mother had died and his father had married a second wife, who was exceedingly unkind to him. She had a son of her own by a previous marriage, upon whom she lavished all the love of her heart. After years of illtreatment, his father one day quite unexpectedly discovers the true state of the case, when he is so enraged that he drives his wife and her beloved son from his home, and he declares that he will never have anything more to do with them.

It is at this juncture that the filial piety that has immortalized the young fellow's name is conspicuously manifested. He so pleads with his father to forgive his stepmother that he is permitted to go and bring her home again, though he is quite conscious that her return means sorrow to himself.

He has successfully performed his mission, when lingering on the road he is seized by a band of robbers, who decide, for reasons not stated, to murder him. The stepmother hears of this, and filled with remorse and with gratitude too, she takes her own son to the robbers' camp and offers them him in exchange for the other, to be killed in his stead. The thieves are so impressed with the noble self-denial of both stepmother and stepson that they all agree to abandon their evil lives and to become honest citizens of the Empire, which they proceed to do at once and the band is broken up. — Sidelights on Chinese Life.

ALONG THE MISSION HIGHWAY.

tures. Need I say that we shall ever fall short of our ideals? Need I say that there is no reason to be discouraged if we find at times that human indifference and human ingratitude dishearten us. We should not be human were it otherwise. But as long as we have the abiding conviction that our dear Lord in the Tabernacle is our one source of strength, and that we are coming here, not to receive anything from those poor benighted creatures, but rather to bring into their lives something of the love of our Heavenly Father, then our reaction to their indifference will not be that morbid self-pity which could easily make of ourselves spoiled little children, but a real commiseration for those who are ten thousand times more unfortunate than ourselves.

Strength from Above.

Is this too much to ask of us? What do you answer? Do you imagine for a moment that it depends upon ourselves? Do you think that if our success in China were to depend upon our own powers that any one of us should stay here five minutes? Do we not rather realize that when God calls us to this work He will give us grace more than ample to enable us to succeed, and if we go forward with confidence in Him, there cannot possibly be any failure, because it is His grace alone that will sustain us, and that grace will never fail.

I am speaking very plainly, boys, because I know what awaits you over here. Only God could ask of you the sacrifice you are about to make, and only God could bestow upon you, as He bestows upon all of us at times, the happiness which makes us feel that not even in our wildest flights of imagination could we think it was possible to be so happy in China. Thank God for China. Those are the sentiments of our missionary priests, to a man.

In spite of the obstacles and the discouragements which I have outlined just as they are, there is the grand realization that we are doing the Will of God and making an effort to do something that costs a great deal of effort and sacrifice for poor human nature. There are intimate feelings which one would hesitate to desecrate by transcribing them on paper, but you yourselves will know one day how very true it is that for those who have left father or mother or lands for His Name's sake the reward is a hundredfold, even in this life.

Why do I tell you all this? Because I want you to have, while yet in the Seminary, a concept of China which approaches the reality. Because I want you to feel, and thank God for it, that no matter what cynics may say, or no matter how well-meaning friends at home try to discourage you, there is no place in the wide world where God sustains us in His loving arms and lifts us bodily up towards a realization of our priestly ideals more than He does on the Foreign Mission field. Yes, boys, the day will come for all of you, let us hope, when you, too, will say with those who have reached the goal before you, and say it from the bottom of your heart: Thank God for China.

under the protection of a saint. Joseph Lopahong is indeed an ornament to the Church in China. With a few more men such as he, there would be no fear for the future of the Chinese Mission. Naturally the enthusiasm of the missionaries for this extraordinary man is boundless. It is they who speak of him as the Chinese Saint Vincent de Paul. One of the French missionaries says: "Would to God we had such a Christian in France!" His praises are sung in the missionary magazines of all countries.

At the request of Bishop Reynaud of East Tschekiang, on January 8, 1920, the Holy Father made Joseph Lopahong a Knight of Saint Gregory. He is the first Chinese to receive this distinction. Well-deserved recognition was accorded him everywhere when in 1925 he journeyed through America on his way to Rome and the Holy Land. The Holy Father also gave him special honor. He has, furthermore, been made a member of the standing committee of the International Eucharistic Congresses. — The Christian Family.

Dear Buds:

I am sure you all know well the beautiful story in the Gospels which shows how our Blessed Lord loved to have little children around Him. One day, after Our Lord had been very busy preaching to the people and was feeling rather tired, a number of mothers brought their children to Him to receive His blessing. The Apostles, wishing to give the Saviour a chance to rest after his day's labour, tried to turn away those mothers with their children, but Our Lord did not like that and said, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me, for of such is the Kingdom of God."

Always, Our Lord acts like that with children; He wants them to be close to Him; He wishes to bless them, and He is always very pleased when young boys and girls show their love for Him. During your time in school you were good to say your prayers every day and go to Confession and Holy Communion frequently; now you are away from school and your time is your own as you enjoy the long summer vacation. Are you going to keep just as close to our Blessed Lord during the holidays as you did during school-time? God certainly wants you to be just as good during the holidays as at any other time, but perhaps you are not going to find it so easy. But surely you are all going to try. Do your best, and that is all God expects of you. Nothing gives so much joy to our Lord as to have pure young souls pray to Him and ask His blessing not only for themselves but for those who as yet know nothing of God and His Blessed Mother. In school time you were all doing a great deal to help the Missions by your prayers and Holy Communions. Your help is needed just as much now. Don't forget, then, to say a prayer every day during vacation for the Missionaries and for the pagan souls they are labouring to convert. God will grant many graces to pagan souls if He is asked by His little missionaries of the "Rose Garden".

Things are going along just great with our "Garden", and I am delighted to have so many new members. I want to hear from everybody during the summer. Tell me how you are enjoying yourselves. Now that all the students have gone home, think how lonely poor Father Jim will be here and how much he will enjoy getting a big bundle of letters from the "buds" every mail.

Have lots of fun during the holidays—and remember what I have told you about being very good little missionaries during the summer. God bless you all.

Yours for a happy time,

FATHER JIM.

Lift up your eyes, ye toilers!
Lift up your eyes and see
The fields that are white with harvest
Waiting for you and me,
Waiting for you to reap them,
Waiting from day to day,
You to go forth and seek them
Me to lift hands and pray.

Harvests of souls! so beauteous
They won from Heaven our God!
Ravished Him from the Father
To dwell on this sin-stained sod.
And He calls us to help Him seek them,
To gather them to the Fold,
Sheep that He loves with His Sacred Heart
Heirs to glory untold.

Youth and Age! They are straying,
Ah how He yearns for them,
The precious fruits of His Passion
Beautiful souls of men.
They thirst for the Truth that will save them,
They cry out to us each day,
You to go forth to spread the word
Me to lift hands and pray.

Shall we turn from this "whitening harvest,"
Are we laggards that cry: "Not yet?"
Shall we see them die by the wayside,
Dying in vain regret?
Let us go forth and win them,
For the work of the Master is there
You with the cry of the Gospel,
Me with the yearning of prayer.

Take courage, dear brother, press onward!
Heed not the trials on the way,
Thousands of souls so precious
Wait you from day to day.
Sometimes the road may be weary
And clouds may obscure the sun,
But remember the Master is waiting
To give you the prize you'll have won.

Ruth Summers, Pennywell Rd., St. John's, Nfld., has saved a lot of stamps for the missions. She writes: "We always look forward to the arrival of 'China'; the articles by Father McGrath are very interesting, and I think the story of Ruth Graves, which was published some time ago, was just beautiful. Would you please ask some Buds of my own age (14) to write to me."

Donald Whelan, writing for 38 members of his class at St. Michael's Academy, Belleville, Ont., says some nice things about our Club, and says the Buds at St. Michael's are second to none in their interest in the Chinese Missions.

Good Detective Work!

Greenfield, Ont.

We have a priest-guest in our Parish from your Seminary. I was talking to him this morning, and I told him I thought he was Father Jim. He said I guessed wrong, so I am writing to you now while he is here, and you must answer immediately, so that I can find out. I thought I told you not to show my letters to anyone, and you did, because Father ——— told me everything that was in them; he knows every time I write you, and what not. I am Scotch, as you can guess by the name. I don't want to use too much paper and ink, so good-bye—and write immediately.

I remain,

An anxious Bud,

Margaret Cameron.

Well, Margaret's answer was in the mail less than an hour after I got the above letter. I hardly think it satisfied her, and perhaps she still says, "I hae ma doots".

From St. Aloysius School, Sudbury, came nice letters from Patrick McGarry, Oliver Plexman, and Dan Laberge. Hope to hear from you soon again, boys!

We are enclosing one dollar, which we have saved for the missions. We are delighted with our Little Flower Rose Garden badges, and we wear them to school. Please pray for us all.

Your little friends,

Many of the parents of the Buds to whom I gave your certificates and badges felt proud to have their children considered as little missionaries of the Rose Garden, and they told me they are going to have the certificates framed. We in Newfoundland have read about the honor conferred on Monsignor McGrath by His Holiness the Pope, and we are proud of our Newfoundland missionary to China. . . . . And now for some questions: Wasn't Father Doyle the famous "Beaver" of the Stamp Corner, and am I not correct in saying that Norma Mills, of Toronto, was the Bud who found out who you were? Please tell me if I am correct.

The above is part of a letter from Philomena Dobbin. Thanks for the letter, Philomena. I'm afraid to put in "China" the answers to your questions, but I hope you got the letter I wrote you. If Norma knows any secrets, you could try your persuasions on her. Her address is 628 Parliament Street, Toronto.

I am sending you some more names of those who want to become Buds. They want to get some pen-pals from foreign countries. We love to hear of the brave missionaries in China, and we pray for them. Kathleen Leonard.

We certainly are glad to add to our list of Buds from Ireland. How privileged they were to have the great Eucharistic Congress in their country a few weeks ago!

I want to ask the Boys of our Garden to write to John Timlin. 26 Auburn Avenue, Toronto, Ont. John is the young lad from England whose picture was published in our column last month. Since March he was confined to bed because of heart trouble, but now he is able to be up for a while each day. He has written me some beautiful letters; in one of them he begs me to ask some buds to write him, and it will be a pleasure for him to answer any letters he receives. How about it, boys?

Mount Carmel School,
New Waterford, N.S.

We certainly were all delighted when Sister gave us our beautiful certificates and pins from the Rose Garden. We thank you very much, and we are all going to pray every day for the missionaries in China.

I only wish you could have seen the excitement and joy of all the Buds when they received their badges, etc. They thank you for your letter. I can assure you that all of them are going to be very faithful to their promises. I hope to have a lot of new members for you when school opens in September. The Buds will be having their picnic in a few weeks, and they have asked me to invite Father Jim to come to Welland for the occasion.

Thanks, Buds, I am sure I would enjoy being at your picnic. I hope you have a real good outing, but I fear I would only spoil your fun if I were to show up.

Father Jim thanks sincerely the lady in Dominion, N.S., who sent him the package of religious pictures and articles for the missions.

There are some girls at St. Peter's High School who would like to join the Rose Garden, but they are awfully shy about writing to you, and they picked on me to write for them.

Well, Dot, I hope they are over that fit of shyness since you showed them my letter. Let me welcome those shy young ladies to our Garden in advance!

There is no vacation from prayer and spiritual good works. Always remember the missionaries.

Valeria and Bill Romkanyi, 20 Albert St., Oshawa.

11 Water Street,
Glace Bay, N.S.

I was indeed very happy to receive your letter, Father Jim. As soon as the girls heard I had a letter from you, they all looked to see if your real name was signed to it. . . . The young man who visited our school and told us about you did not say anything bad about you, but he said that every time anyone went to take your picture you always hid your face. . . . I hope to get some information from Father MacGillivray about you before the summer is over.

I always feel nervous during the summer with so many Buds down East being acquainted with students from the Seminary, but Father Jim is always careful to issue "instructions" that no "secrets" are to be given away. If Mary Molloy saw me once, she would not blame me for "hiding my face" when a camera is near. Mary Molloy, Bay Bulls, Nfld., is requested to write to her namesake in Glace Bay.

SMILES

Little Gertie had been told by her parents that whenever visitors called at the house it was her duty to pay them some attention.

Some few days later, when a Mrs. Daniel arrived for tea, Gertie was cautioned to behave herself.

Tea was just ready when the small girl sauntered into the room and remarked in her best drawing-room manner: "How do you do, Mrs. Daniel? So pleased you've come. I've just been reading about your husband's amazing experience in the lions' den!"

A widow who intended to succeed her husband as the manager of a country hotel advertised the fact in the local papers after this manner: "This hotel will be kept by the widow of the former landlord, Mr. Smith, who died last summer on a new and improved plan."

The editor of a paper received a long poem from a gentleman last week, and wrote to the lank-haired specimen a mild remonstrance.

"You must really send short verses," was the wind up of the editor's exordium.

The reply was:

"I enclose you a little thing, it is short and to the point.

"The Ballad of the Tradesman.

" 'Trust, Bust!' "

Teacher (much exasperated by one pupil): "Look, here, are you the teacher in this class?"

Pupil: "No Sir, I'm not."

Teacher: "Then why do you keep talking like a numbskull?"

Doctor—You have nervous dyspepsia, same as Brown had. His was caused by worrying over his butcher's bill. I directed him to stop worrying.

Stranger—Yes, and now he's cured and I'm the butcher.

Roadside notice posted in New Hampshire:

"By order of the selectmen, cows grazing by the roadside or riding bicycles on the sidewalk is hereby forbidden."

"Daddy, is to-day to-morrow?" asked the boy.

"Certainly, it isn't," answered his father.

"But you said it was."

"Whenever did I say that to-day was to-morrow?"

"Yesterday."

"Well, it was. To-day was to-morrow yesterday, but to-day is to-day, just as yesterday was to-day yesterday, but is yesterday to-day, and to-morrow will be to-day to-morrow, which makes to-day yesterday and to-morrow all at once. Now run along and play!"

Mrs. Golde: "My husband adores smoking in his den. Has your husband a den, my dear?"

Mrs. Nyce: "No, my husband growls all over the house."

Salesman—"Did you like that cigar I gave you? For 500 coupons of that brand you get a banjo."

Clerk—"If I smoked 500 of those cigars, I'd need a harp."

Teacher: "Bessie, name one bird that is now extinct."

Little Bessie: "Dick."

"Who's Dick?" inquired the teacher.

"Our canary," little Bessie sobbed out. "That ol' cat went and 'extincted' him."

Teacher (teaching class alphabet): "Now, Mabel, what comes after 'g'?"

Mabel (after a pause): "Whiz, miss."

First Lady: "Been in the 'ospital, eh? Was yer surgical or medical?"

Second Lady: "W'atcher mean?"

First Lady: "Well, was yer ill when yer went in and they made yer well, or was yer well when yer went in and they made yer ill?"

An old conscientious lady who had wandered away from her party, came on a golfer who had lost his ball a half-hour before.

"Sir," she said as she spied the white pill in a gopher hole, "would it be cheating if I told you where the ball is?"

Two fellows who had been to a Burns dinner met the morning after.

"Well, John," asked one, "did you get home all right last night?"

"Oh, aye," replied John. "I was getting along splendidly until I approached the corner of the street near our house; then a great, big, lumbering policeman turned the corner first and tramped on ma knuckles."

"Why did you break off your engagement?"

"Well, we were looking over our new house when my prospective mother-in-law said it would be small for three persons, so I gracefully retired."

A professor was in the habit of letting his dog sit by his side at meals. One evening, when at a public dinner, a woman, wishing to attract the professor's attention, touched his sleeve. The professor, without looking up, mechanically took a bone from his plate, and said:

"Oh, get away with you. Take this out to the mat and eat it!"

Then, on the other hand, a bachelor's life is just one undarned thing after another.—Boston Transcript.

Daughter — "Papa, I want to tell you some of the funny things Jack told me. He's such a joker."

Dad—"I know it. Last night he asked me to be his father-in-law."

"Speaking of animals remembering," said the tall, elderly man, "when I was a boy I once gave a circus elephant a stick of striped candy."

"Well?"

"After that, whenever that circus was to parade in the town, the barbers had to take in their striped poles."—Boston Transcript.

On the notice board of a wayside chapel it was announced: "On Saturday at 8 p.m. the annual mince-pie supper will be held. The subject of the sermon on Sunday morning will be 'A Night of Horror'."

Customer (from the country): "I'd like a dollar dinner, please."

Hotel Restaurant Waiter: "Yes, sir. On white or rye bread, sir?"

Wife (to returning husband at seaside resort): "Oh, darling, I'm so glad you've come! We heard that some idiot had fallen over the cliff and I felt sure it was you."

Keeper: "Hey, get away from that thar elephant, sonny!"

Sonny: "Aw, I ain't hurting him."

Wife of Lion Tamer: "As my husband is ill, I will take his place."

Circus Manager: "But you have had nothing to do with lions and tigers."

Wife: "No, but I know that my husband manages them quite well."

Manager: "Yes, he does."

Wife: "Then it will be child's play for me. You ought to see how I can manage him."

IF we had sufficient donations to our BURSE FUND our Seminary would become SELF-SUPPORTING

BURSES—What are they?

A BURSE is the sum of $5,000 given to the Seminary, at one time or in installments, which, being securely invested, produces sufficient revenue to support a student. The capital is not touched, but remains intact. Year after year the revenue from a single Burse would be used to educate a student. When he is ordained and goes to China as a missionary, another student would be educated, and then another, and so on indefinitely.

Those blessed with an abundance of this world's goods could spend to no better advantage than by becoming the Founder of a Burse for China Mission Seminary.

A Burse is absolutely the most worthwhile monument to leave behind to your memory. What greater good can you do with your money than guarantee a succession of missionary priests perpetually?

Even small donations will be gratefully received to help complete any of our present incomplete Burses.

Help us by sending donations to our BURSES, either to the Seminary or in care of the "CATHOLIC RECORD", London, Ont.

Remember China in making or re-making your WILL.

OUR WORK

In order to provide missionaries for China the Seminary provides for the education of students in colleges and in our Seminary.

It supports parishes, churches and schools in the district allotted to it by the Holy See.

It establishes schools, employs native teachers and promotes Catholic education among both Christians and Pagans.

It trains and maintains catechists for instructing the Pagans in Catholic doctrine in districts in which there is not a resident Priest and to assist the missionaries in the larger mission centres.

When circumstances permit, it establishes dispensaries, medical missions and other charitable institutions for the poor and suffering. Through these and other practical works of charity the influence of the Church is extended and many are brought into the true fold.

To carry on this work the Seminary depends solely on contributions from the Faithful. We need your assistance, dear reader, if we are to help Our Lord bring to a fruitful issue the work which He came on earth to inaugurate.

His Holiness Pius XI says of our work:

"Since Jesus Christ proclaimed that the special mark of His disciples would be that they loved one another (John, 13:35; 15:12) can we vouchsafe to our neighbors a greater or more signal charity than that of having them withdraw from the darkness of superstitions, and instructed in the true faith of Christ? Nay, this surpasses any other works or testimonials of charity, as the mind surpasses the body, heaven, earth, eternity, time; and everyone that exercises this work of charity to the best of his ability, shows that he esteems the gift of faith as much as it is meet and just that he should esteem it, and moreover, he manifests his gratitude towards the Goodness of God by sharing with the poor Pagans this gift, the most precious of all."

PRIVILEGES OF BENEFACTORS:

1. They share in all the masses and devotions offered by our priests.

2. A Solemn Requiem Mass is offered each year for our deceased benefactors on the feast of All Souls.

3. They share in the prayers of our priests and students.

4. Two novenas of Benedictions of the Blessed Sacrament are offered yearly for the intentions of our benefactors.

5. Benefactors may apply all these privileges to their deceased friends.

Donations to the Seminary should be addressed to

CO-OPERATION

Twelve years ago St. Francis Xavier China Mission Seminary existed only as an idea in the mind of a zealous missionary priest. Today it is a flourishing Institute whose members are responsible for the Christianizing of a large territory in pagan China. For the past several years we have been able to send out graduates to the Field Afar that they might continue to carry out the great Command of Christ and "preach the Gospel to every creature". Once again the time approaches for the departure of young priests for the Missions, and the fortunate ones this Fall are Reverend Fathers McGillivray and McNabb. They will be welcome reinforcements to the fifteen priests already in Chuchow District.

* * *

We feel there is something of really great importance in this annual sending-forth of young Apostles—something so fine and so noble that we are loathe to allow the occasion to pass without drawing the attention of our many readers to its significance. At a time when everything seems to be wrong with the world, and when we hear of scarcely anything but "depression" and "conferences for material uplift", it is refreshing to realize that the work so dear to God—the work of Foreign Missions—still goes on apace. It is worthwhile to remind ourselves that this advancement has been made possible by the generous co-operation of our Catholic people, and each new departure for the Missions is a tribute to their whole-souled interest in the propagation of their precious heritage of Catholic Faith.

We like to think that the success of our Seminary has wider implications than a merely individual Institutional progress; rightly, we have come to regard Canada's Foreign Mission Seminary as an index and a reflection of the Spirit of Faith which animates our people at large; to them we look for the wherewithal to carry on our work, and our success is the measure of their generosity. In the past they have not failed us—and we have not disappointed them.

* * *

The Catholic people of Canada and Newfoundland have reason to feel proud of their contribution to the Foreign Mission work of the Church. Our priests and sisters already on the missions are doing God's work heroically. The difficulties they have met and successfully overcome are not unknown to our readers who have been kept in touch with their doings through the pages of "China". The letters from those "over there" speak of trials and hardships, but they show also that spirit of determination and cheerfulness which is characteristic of all who labour for the salvation of souls.

We can have nothing but the highest admiration for those who have sacrificed so much in order to become "all things to all men". Were they seeking their own ease or comfort or personal advantage they would not have exchanged the luxuries and conveniences of Canada for the poverty and hardships incidental to mission life in China. Actuated by supernatural motives and holy ambitions they are content to "spend and be spent" to promote the welfare and spread of God's Kingdom on earth, and we are thrilled to know that they are your representatives, sent to China because of your co-operation and maintained through your generosity to the missions.

This feeling of "partnership" which exists between the readers of "CHINA" and our missionaries in Chuchow is something on which we set great value; not alone we in the Seminary, but our friends everywhere speak of them as "our" missionaries, and the reference is a very happy one. It is expressive of the co-operation which has meant so much to our Seminary and to our missionaries during the past dozen years of effort—a co-operation which tends to intensify and solidify our kinship in the Faith.

As the time draws near for two more of our priests to leave the Seminary and go into "active service" on the Missions it gives us an opportunity to reiterate our desire that all Catholics become imbued with that mission-consciousness which is best expressed in terms of personal sacrifice. In an article in this issue of "CHINA", Father Stringer declares that the work of propagating the Gospel is the concern of each individual Catholic as much as it is the Divinely appointed duty of the Church as a whole. The point is well made, and it is to this purpose that our words are directed —that YOU who read may think seriously of your obligations to your representatives, the missionaries. It is all very praiseworthy to feel proud of your Faith, to feel elated at the work done by others to propagate it, but when all is said and done the real test of sincerity is personal action, personal interest according to your capabilities. The tribute of a fervent daily prayer is possible to all our readers; if gladly given it will do wonders for our mission work, and secure all other needed help. We humbly ask if we may count on your co-operation?

Lishui from Day to Day

by observer

We are now in Tsingtien, have been for nearly two weeks, with an interval of a few days I was obliged to spend in Wenchow hospital. Picked up some faint touch of one of China's many diseases. This one has been disarmed by the injections received before leaving Chuchow.

* * *

We are here two weeks, not from choice but because of the caprices of Old Man Wenchow River. He has been on the rampage for nearly a month and none of the little Chinese boats with pole and oar can make any headway against his ten-mile current. We've seen him rise fifteen feet in two days, during one of which Fr. Amyot and I were parked about 15 miles upstream, near the bank of the river, "somewhere in China." The rain started again and as it looked like an indefinite stay we decided to hit back for Tsingtien. In about two hours we came down the distance it had taken us a day's hard work to make against the stream.

"I ain't breakin' your heart,
Don't start breakin' my heart,
River, stay 'way from my door."

We played that record last night, on Father Sharkey's little portable gramophone. The setting was perfect. A very indifferent baritone was beseeching the river to stay 'way from his door and for the time being he was voicing the feelings of us all. As he sang, the fawning, treacherous waters were lapping, oh so gently, at the city gate.

* * *

Some years ago, on just such a night, the waters of the same river were lapping against the same city gate. It was Monsignor Fraser who told me the story, years ago in Canada, when we were trying to "get things going" in those old pioneer days. He told me of a night in Tsingtien—which to me was then but a meaningless name—when the people went to bed a bit anxious because the water had risen to the gates and it was still raining.

* * *

This morning the catechist here told me the story again. On that night the whole village was swept away. Remnants of houses were carried downstream and before the screaming, affrighted villagers realized what was happening the roaring waters had cut off their retreat to the nearby mountain. The catechist was one of the few survivors. He had been working at rice in an abandoned temple and was asleep in an upper "room" when the flood gates of Heaven were loosed and Tsingtien vanished in the darkness.

* * *

But last night the rain stopped and today the people are breathing easier. For only a slight drizzle is falling and the river is just holding its own. Were the rain to continue heavily for one more day and night it would be holding many things that are not its own, some of which might be our precious belongings if not our precious selves.

* * *

For a few days there were five of us here, Fathers Venini, Amyot, Sharkey, Gignac and myself. We have succeeded in eating Fr. Sharkey out of house and home. During my few days stay in Wenchow Frs. Amyot and Venini got a break, two days sunshine, which lowered the river sufficiently to enable them to make the grade to Chuchow.

* * *

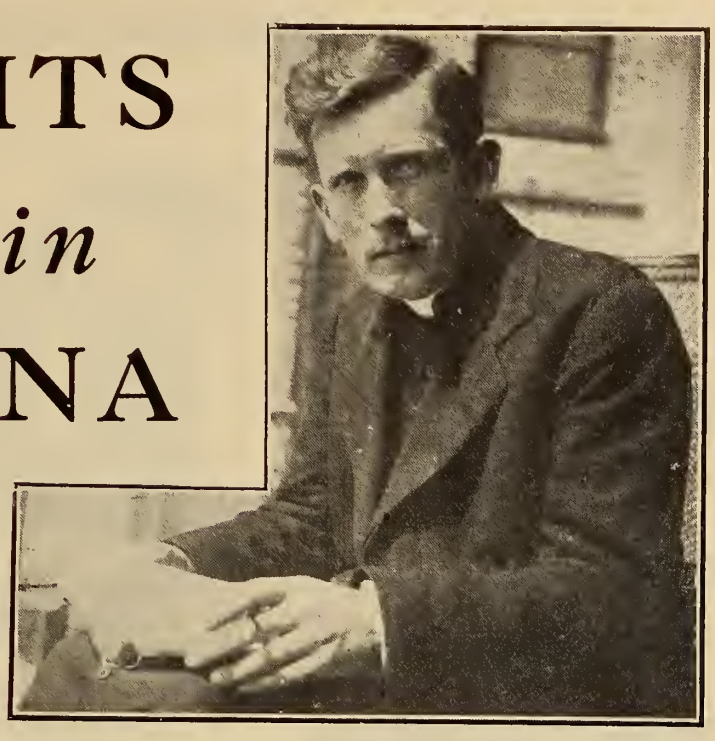
But since we returned it has rained steadily and we do not know when we shall get away. The roads along the way are impassable and sedan-chair carriers (here they have the open air variety only) will not move as the narrow mountain paths are too dangerous they say.

* * *

Only today we learned that Smoky Bill, the champion flagpole sitter is going to put on an exhibition in Shanghai. Perhaps we shall sit him out, here in Tsingtien. There is nothing for it but to possess one's soul in patience. Such is one part of missionary life in China.

* * *

Yesterday we sent an S.O.S. call to Chuchow, by long-distance telephone, telling them that rations were low and that we had bought the last tin of condensed milk in Tsingtien city. They went to work fast and the sisters came nobly to the rescue. Today the "boy" arrived from Chuchow; he made the trip—60 miles—in six hours and he brought a very cheerful looking hamper. So we can "hold that line" for another while. It is easy coming downstream, hence the speedy trip.



* * *

Our "friend" the bandit chief is dead. He met his death two weeks ago at ————, before a firing squad. I say our "friend," because he it was who refused to capture our three Canadian Sisters when a treacherous boatman offered to sell them, to be held for ransom. He was a "gentleman of the old school" of banditry, not the Red variety. He never allowed one of his 2,000 men to damage a mission chapel anywhere in the district.

* * *

As he was being led to execution he shouted, "I am not a Communist. I am not a Communist. And when you put me to death I will return as a mandarin." Like so many other around here he believes in the Transmigration of souls.

SIDELIGHTS on LIFE in CHINA

By

REV. DESMOND STRINGER

It is extremely difficult to comprehend the Chinese mind, especially on matters religious. The spiritual and material elements are so mixed as to make one wonder how they exercise any influence at all. When the people start to put a new "dress" on a god, they first cover his eyes with bits of paper in order that he won't "lose face", in other words, that he may not be embarrassed! Then they have a celebration, a sort of "coming-out party", for the deity in his gaudy regalia. I was told of a case in which the Dragon figured. It seems that some priest was building a church and dug the foundation on a day which commemorated one of the numerous Dragon feasts. Simultaneously an inmate of a house across the road took sick, and the priest was blamed. He had either injured or broken the back of an innocent dragon that was reposing in mother earth. There was quite a hullabaloo about it all, and digging was suspended until the said dragon's back was on the mend. How did they know when it was better? Why, when the man got better! Another case was the excavation of a roadway through a mountain. After thousands of dollars were spent in the work, it had to be all undone because the spirit of the mountain was disturbed. What a mentality!

Often I have heard the East described as the "mysterious", the "enchanting", the "dreamy", etc. Possibly it is so to the favoured few whose greatest worry in life is how to spend money. Oftentimes something we rave about in poetic language loses all its charm when it falls under our notice day after day. Some of us can see romance in being nearly frozen to death—that is, when we are thinking it over beside a cosy heater. Or else we may laugh to death thinking how close we were to being run down. Life in China is full of hard work, sweat and toil, and it is not considered menial here to have to do manual labour. Blue skies, grey skies, laughs and sighs, cries of babies, barking of dogs, angry gesticulating, roaring merriment, idle lounging, shrieking fifes and rattling boilers, banging of drums, perfume of flowers, stenches from hovels, choking dust, soaking rain, blistering heat, shivering cold, contempt for the gods, respect for their powers, and so on in aeternum—such is life!

But the souls that move through it all, ah! and each soul is for the missionary a Midas which changes everything into gold, and for such treasure as is to be found here who wouldn't stoop to gather it even though hands were stained. It isn't "mysterious" nor "enchanting" nor "dreamy", but it's chuck full of romance, thrills, fights with none other than the Archenemy of Michael! Satan is too cunning and crafty to try the same old gags once he finds their effectiveness is beginning to be lost—it doesn't matter to him whether he is worshipped in wooden gods or in the spirit of a cat or a dog, as long as he is worshipped. They say that if you give a man enough rope he will hang himself. To me it appears this is just what has happened to the devil, because in keeping his Satanic self before the minds of these poor souls he has kept also in their sight the existence of a future life, however distorted it appears. So, all in all, it isn't a great wonder that the religious and domestic life of the country is such as we find it. To imagine for a moment that the powers of evil will relinquish their stranglehold without a most venomous and determined resistance would be folly. But every life given, every drop of blood shed for Him is for Satan a mortal thrust. It seems a pity that all Catholics do not use to the full the "arms" at their disposal. If they only knew! We all know that it is the mission of the Church to preach the Gospel. It is the business of each individual Catholic! It is human nature to wish to see results for energy expended—tangible results, I mean. And possibly this explains the weak current of much of our endeavour in matters spiritual. Let every Catholic go to Mass and Holy Communion twice a week throughout the year for the intention of spreading the Faith and one can easily visualize the result.

CHINESE CATHOLIC SOCIAL ACTION

The Mission Intention for September is "Catholic Action in Mission Lands."

JAS. F. KEARNEY, S.J.
in "America"

The little "bun boys" frequent the mission compound at Lishui and offer their wares at two dong-pah per. They find an occasional customer among the school boys, and on special occasions the treat is "on the house", all around.

IT need surprise no one to learn that the social question in China is not precisely the same as in Europe or America. The problem of the workingman, that is, of the factory worker, has only of recent years begun to assume anything like cardinal importance in this part of the Orient, for the simple reason that even today, of the approximately 485,000,000 Chinese, 350,000,000, according to some—about fifty-three per cent. according to others—are still peasants. It is difficult to obtain precise figures, but there are probably some thirty millions of people other than farmers who might be counted among the working classes. Of this number scarcely more than two millions toil in the factory. And yet this comparatively insignificant group, as Father Bernard, S.J., of the "Hautes Etudes" at Tientsin points out, may be capable of exercising an influence out of all proportion to its number; for the Bolshevist theory has always been that the proletariat, the city workingman, must take the lead, and then the peasantry will fall in behind.

As a matter of fact, the Red menace at present comes from the interior of China and has already conquered the loyalty of whole districts of peasants; but whether China is ultimately to become Communistic or not, may depend on the two million factory workers largely concentrated in the great cities, such as Shanghai, Canton, Wusih.

We shall try to give a brief sketch of this group, and then speak of the Catholic solution as it may be applied to China.

China is sometimes called the "employers' paradise," for the labor here is unbelievably cheap. What is the condition of the factory worker? Despite notable exceptions, if we consult available statistics it is in general very bad. The ordinary working day is twelve hours, rarely eight, sometimes fourteen. At noon there is usually only one-half hour for rice. While some factories give Saturday afternoon and Sunday off each week, it must be remembered that the country is still largely pagan, and hence there is no such thing as a universal Sunday rest. The Tenth of October is a national free day, and there are a few others, from three to five, for instance, at the Chinese New Year, which the Government is now trying to abolish in favor of the Western New Year. Women workers, of whom there is an undue proportion, have in general even fewer holidays. Children under twelve years of age are often forced to follow the regular twelve or fourteen hour program, and that for the night shifts as well as day shifts.

At the instigation of the International Bureau of Labor, the Chinese Government, then at Peking, promulgated on March 29, 1923, a provisional regulation for the protection of workers in industrial establishments. Employers were forbidden to hire boys of less than ten and girls of less than twelve years of age for factory work. It limited the working day of youngsters under seventeen to eight hours, and forbade them to be put on night shifts. However, as no official sanction was imposed and in the meantime civil war overthrew the Peking Government, these regulations can hardly be said to be in force today. The present National Government at Nanking between October, 1929, and March, 1930, passed a number of excellent laws insisting on an eight-hour day, the exclusion of children under fourteen from the factories, forbidding night labor for women and for children under sixteen, insisting on the sharing of profits, obligatory instruction of apprentices, etc., but as yet the Government has not sufficient authority to enforce such laws throughout the country.

For the most part the salaries seem to an American unbelievably small. They vary of course in different sections, but in 1927 at Canton the average monthly wage of a factory hand was seven Chinese dollars—the par value of which is less than one-half that of a United States dollar—while the maximum went up to fifteen dollars, very rarely to thirty-six dollars. The woman worker received one-half or two-thirds the wage of a man; though many young girls working for the British Cigaret Co., of Shanghai, make twenty dollars a month, equivalent to between four or five dollars in gold. According to the Revue Internationale du Travail for December, 1924, children were frequently hired in the rural districts by giving two dollars a month to the parents for each child. The food and the lodging of these children were so poor that their factory life was little better than slavery.

Lest one should draw unwarranted conclusions from the above it must always be remembered that if wages are low, so are prices; and yet with the cost of living continually on the rise it is not to be wondered at that intelligent Chinese leaders should be anxious to remedy the situation as far as possible.

Dr. Sun Yat-sen's famous "Economic Demism" has precisely for its aim the solution of the social question, and though he realized that the time had not come to solve it, because China had not as yet sufficiently developed industrially, still he looked forward to the day when his successors might seriously take up the task of solving it, and laid down principles according to which he believed it might be handled. In fact, when, in 1923, he gave his series of conferences on the peasants and laborers of Canton, the result was that more than 300 syndicates, or workingmen's associations, were formed in that place and 200 more in the nearby city of Hongkong. Unfortunately during the civil strife of the succeeding years the Communists exerted a strong influence over the workers, and these syndicates have in general become quite radical, even when not Communistic. According to official statistics in 1929 there were a total of 1,007 syndicates registered, representing 1,901,442 men.

If only two million laborers are represented it is evident that the vast army of labor in China is not at all well organized yet. The present syndicates have no very definite aim and no carefully thought-out program for collective action, because the very poor classes do not yet understand the meaning of a labor union. Yet the activities of these bodies are increasing year after year and are beginning to take on a greater and greater importance in the national life. For instance, the number of strikes during the past few years, for political reasons, for increase of wages, and sympathy strikes for discharged fellow-workmen is rather astounding, and in many cases far from praiseworthy. There is need of intelligent and high-principled leadership today in social questions above all.

According to the recent report of Justice Feetham, Shanghai is China's largest industrial centre, fifty-three per cent. of the total number of cotton textile spindles in China being situated here, while spinning, flour milling, and ship-building likewise flourish.

Bishop Defebvre samples the wares of the "bun boy." Monsignor McGrath looks a likely customer, too.

Moreover, it is still in its infancy as a manufacturing centre, and so the local social question will become more and more pressing as time goes on. From here it may well be that the movement for a satisfactory solution may also come, and local Catholic leaders are not overlooking the fact.

What, then, of the Catholic attitude in face of the labor situation in the Orient? Because of the peculiar circumstances here it must be confessed that Catholics are not nearly so far advanced as in Europe or America in this matter. The question of applying to China the fundamental principles of Leo XIII on the condition of the workingman by means of promoting Catholic economic associations, came up at the great General Council of the Catholic Church in China in Shanghai in the year 1924. The principle of workingmen's associations was, of course, definitely approved, but it was decided that because of the troubled conditions at the time, a false beginning might bar the road for future social works.

Msgr. Auguste Haouisee, S. J., the new Vicar Apostolic of Nanking, believed that an important Catholic impetus could be given to the solution by joining actively in world-wide commemoration of the Fortieth Anniversary of Leo XIII's labor encyclical. He wished that the Chinese Christians of the important industrial centre of Shanghai, menaced by the dangers of Socialism and Communism, should be made familiar with the social doctrine of the Church.

The first meeting of the four-day celebration was held in the native Chinese city. It was a solemn affair, well attended, and destined solely for leading Catholic employers and factory superintendents. His Lordship in a stirring address first refuted the accusation that the Church is the enemy of the workingman, showing that it was precisely the Church which insisted on the application of the great principles of justice and charity upon which the solution of the social question in every country depends. After explaining to these Chinese employers the dignity of the worker and of work sanctified by Christ in person, and that if there was an inequality among the classes it was like the dignified inequality of various members of the human body, he warned his hearers above all to oppose the growing menace of Communism, pointing out Russia herself as a sad example. He exhorted them to treat all their employees and servants in a truly Christian manner, giv-

The Devil in China

by observer

One of our esteemed correspondents, a very dear friend of mine, has asked if Observer in his chats would tell something about the worship of the devil in China. As to the nature of the devil worship and what the Chinese believe regarding the evil spirits I shall treat in due course. Meanwhile, it might be of interest to all our readers to hear something of the instances in the past where the devil has actually been put to flight by the prayers of faithful Christians and the sprinkling of Holy Water. Such instances abound, and even in our own district today we have had the most consoling evidence of the fact that in China the day of miracles is still with us. In Tsingtien district, for example, Father Sharkey had the consolation of seeing an epidemic of meningitis arrested by the sacrament of Extreme Unction. In Chuchow we have seen children seriously ill of meningitis recover after being anointed and pagan children in the same vicinity succumb although not so seriously affected. These are the things which sustain and console the missionary and make him feel that God is very near him in his feeble efforts to wrest from the power of the evil one the souls for whom Christ died.

The story which I shall now tell you took place many years ago in the village of Cham-ham, near Chinchow. A pagan family was subjected to a relentless and terrible persecution on the part of the evil spirits. Invisible hands overturned and broke the furniture of the house without any warning, and often there would suddenly appear in the middle of one of the rooms a great blazing fire where a few moments before there had not been even a spark. Meanwhile, as the fire blazed and the family cowered in terror the most hideous and awe-inspiring figures appeared from nowhere and took shape on the paper pictures hanging on the walls.

Superstition in Vain.

There were many other forms of diabolical persecution, and the father of the family spared no pains to avail of the most effective forms of superstition with a view to delivering his family from this relentless terror. He appealed at first to the Bonzes known as the Hochans, those who adore the great idol Foeh and preach the doctrine of the transmigration of souls. They are the authors of those fantastic and ridiculous fables which they brought into China with their idols about 70 A.D. In this instance the Hochans failed miserably to dislodge the powers of evil, so the man appealed to the Tsay Kongs, or Bonzes of a higher order. They came to the house and performed all the superstitious ceremonies at their command but only to their own confusion. The smashing of the furniture still continued and the diabolical apparitions were just as terrible as before. There were three of them at first and they attributed their failure to a lack of numbers so summoning seven more they once more essayed to rout the devil who openly mocked them and their exorcisms. Great crowds flocked around the house as the ceremonies went on, but it was only a comedy absolutely devoid of the least result as far as the devils were concerned. By chance there happened to be a Christian among the number of the spectators one day. He could not but be struck by the mockery of their proceedings and in a loud voice so that all might hear he proclaimed:

"How greatly the people of this house are to be pitied. They are spending a great deal of money on all these ceremonies which can do them no good. If they but had recourse to the God of the Christians who is the Lord of Heaven and earth and the terror of the demons they would soon have peace and it wouldn't be necessary to spend any money to procure it." The people paid little attention at the time to what he said, but they couldn't but be struck by the vigor of his denunciation.

The bonzes continued their ceremonies but the devil held firm and openly mocked them, and finally when the Tsay Kongs had to admit defeat the distracted pagan householder had recourse to the Sao-Says. The latter were very proud at being called to settle such a difficult case. Proudly they marched to the house and with great boasting proclaimed that they would very soon put an end to the wiles of the evil spirits. But pride goeth before a fall. Scarcely had they entered the house when a shower of stones came tumbling down upon them and it was impossible to begin their ceremony. They beat a hasty retreat and made no further efforts to deliver the poor family from their affliction.

The man was desperate. His friends advised him to leave the house which, they said, was haunted because of some crime. He would find peace in some other section of the village. But even this plan was useless. The spirits followed him and the same manifestations continued. And it was at this juncture that he met the christian who had so loudly proclaimed the power of God but a short time before.

"Aren't you the man" he asked, "who made mockery of the bonzes in my house and pretended that the God of the Christians alone could help me?"

"I am," the man replied, "and it is up to you to prove the truth of what I have said. In your neighbourhood there are many Catholics, full of piety and fervour; call them and some other christians of the village to come to your house and pray all together to the God Whom we adore. God will hear their prayers in your behalf. As for me, I am only a sinner, only one recently converted from paganism and I would not dare go alone to your house because it would be presumption for me to ask God to work such a miracle. But I am sure that the prayers of my fellow christians will be heard and you will have reason to know the power of the only true God. Don't be alarmed at the number because it won't cost you any money, or even a banquet."

The man listened and appeared to be impressed but the hour of his conversion was not yet at hand. He made no attempt to enlist the help of the Christians of the village. A few nights later the demons returned in force and the man, beside himself with fear, hastened at midnight to the home of this christian, made him open the door and implored him, in the Name of the God Whom he adored, to come to his assistance at once. In vain did this humble soul entreat him to wait till next day when he could summon the help of the more worthy members of the faithful. He would not be denied and insisted that an attempt be made then and there to see if the devils feared this unknown God.

Recommending himself to God the poor man hastily took his beads and some holy water and betook himself to the scene. The family was huddled in terror in one room and as soon as he entered he knelt and once more prayed God to show his power to those who did not believe in His Name. Seizing all the idols and the other objects of superstitious worship which the pagans would not dare to touch he made a huge fire and consigned them one by one to the flames. He then blessed the house with the holy water and asked them to promise that if the trouble ceased they would all study the doctrine of the Catholic Church. They promised, and from that moment the house was troubled no more.

Faithful to his promise the pagan began to observe the fast and abstinence of the Church and came each morning and night to prayers. The next time Father Barborier arrived at Cham-ham he had the happiness of baptizing him and his whole family.

Another Case.

A young pagan woman came to pay a visit to her parents who were both Christians and fell suddenly ill with a strange and violent malady. They were very much alarmed and sent for the catechist Paul, a man of great zeal in his work for souls. They didn't say a word to the daughter but when they entered the room she suddenly addressed them:

"You have sent for Paul, and in a great hurry. He will not come for a long time, I know."

As a matter of fact the catechist was away on a mission trip at the time and they could only leave a message for him and nobody could tell just when he would be able to come. One day, when nobody was even thinking about him, the sick girl suddenly rose up and spoke, in the plural:

"Let us go, let us go! Paul is coming and we mustn't stay".

GODS

The gods of other people
Are dressed in silver and gold;
They live in beautiful temples,
They are never naked or cold.
But my God is naked and shivering,
His home is wind-swept and raw.
My God is a little infant
In a manger filled with straw.
The gods of other people
Are objects of fright and fear—
They clasp in their hands a weapon
Their face is a hellish leer.
But my God, He is so different,
His face is so sad and sweet
That one could not help but love Him
And kneel at his crucified feet.

FATHER SHARKEY

Her parents ran out of the house to see if it were true, and lo and behold, there was the catechist on one of the streets of the village, but in a place where he could not possibly have been seen from the house. As soon as he entered, the girl said that she felt completely cured.

"What was the nature of your illness?" he asked the girl.

"For some time past", she explained, "creatures like men, but with a terrifying countenance, seemed to be binding me in chains and I was not able even to speak for myself. As soon as you approached they fled and I felt free again." She asked to be instructed in the Christian doctrine and some time afterwards both herself and her husband were baptized.

There are cases where the simple blessing with Holy Water is not sufficient to drive away the evil spirits, and they have declared defiantly to the missionaries that they are not afraid of Holy Water. Yet the contortions of the possessed persons and their look of agony when Holy Water was sprinkled on them showed that it made them suffer and caused consternation among their tormentors. The recent startling things that have happened in the north of China in the territory of the Society of the Divine Word show that there are still, as there were in the time of the first disciples, those evil spirits who are not to be cast out except by prayer and fasting. A well-known Vicar Apostlic related this as his own personal experience:

"One day, the feast of the Epiphany, in the village of ————, they brought me a possessed person, bound and carried by his friends because he had refused, absolutely, to come to see me. I held my cross in my hand and told the afflicted man to invoke the name of Jesus. He turned his head away and screamed, in a terrible voice:

"Why has he thrown me into Hell? Why has he thrown me into Hell? He is unjust; He is unjust!"

"God is just!" I replied." If He has condemned you to Hell it is because of your pride."

"The demon then confessed before all present that God was just but he added that Jesus Christ could not save him. At the same time he burst forth into terrible screams, alternating with shrieks of fiendish laughter. I ordered him to leave the man. He refused. I then asked several of those standing by to hold the man while I pressed the cross to his lips. Immediately the devil left him. The man afterwards studied the Christian doctrine with great zeal. He is now a Christian and the devil has not bothered him any more."

There are times when the devil does not content himself with private posession but makes use of an unfortunate individual to deliver a message to the public and to prescribe the route of processions that are to take place in his honor. Here is indeed a most remarkable story which shows that while the devil is all powerful among the unfortunate and benighted slaves who adore him he trembles and is afraid in the presence of even the humblest christian.

In the vilage of ———— there were held regularly three great pagan processions, at fixed dates; the 28th of the third moon, the 7th of the seventh moon and the 10th of the eighth moon. The remarkable thing about those processions is not the elaborate ceremony and the gorgeous effects which cost a tremendous amount of money but rather the weird manner in which the devil regularly indicates the way it is to go and the idols that are to be carried.

Some time before one or other of the feasts some individual pagan is possessed by the devil. One time it is a rich merchant, another time a poor coolie or small tradesman. On the fateful day he suddenly leaves his elaborate mansion or his poor hovel as the case might be and runs around the streets like a raving maniac. He is impelled by some utterly irrestible force and is utterly oblivious of all that is going on around him. Throngs of people follow but he seems to be unaware of their presence. The villagers are quite accustomed to such apparitions and they recognize the man at once by his haggard and wild appearance. He knew what was going to come to pass. They would follow him and see.

"The Tong Tsay is here. The Tong Tsay is here," they cry. "See the possessed one who announces his arrival."

They follow him and suddenly the possessed man enters a pagoda. Hardly has he crossed the threshold when he is seized by some invisible power and thrown violently on his back. He is frothing at the mouth. His eyes, which had been rolling wildly during his mad march through the streets are now staring fixedly at the temple roof. He is rigid. For about an hour he remains in this position. Then he "comes to life" again and rising slowly goes and sits down.

There is an awed silence among the crowd. The Tong Tsay (the devil in him) speaks in a very loud voice but his words convey no meaning. He is speaking in the mandarin language, unknown by the individual when he is in his ordinary senses and unknown by the vilagers themselves. But a professional sorcerer —the Ta-Po has been waiting patiently and now he stands beside

"JUST SINGING IN THE RAIN"

Last night when retiring to bed, everything was as it should have been. It was raining steadily but not heavily. About one fifteen a.m., I had to perform the important household function of letting out the cat. At that time there was nothing unusual; it was still raining. Later during the night I was awakened by a violent downpour of rain, but I soon went to sleep again, lulled by the constant tapping of rain drops on the tiled roof.

Whether my clock rang or not I couldn't say—I didn't hear it. About five thirty I wakened, stretched, got a cramp in my foot and sat up. Ye gods, there was no floor! I looked down where the floor had been last night, and saw myself looking at myself. Water, water everywhere, seven inches of it. Everything that could float was bobbing around quite merrily. Gingerly enough I prepared and dove out of bed. B-r-r-r, but that water was cold on the feet, and dirty (no, the water). Half of Lungchuang was in the house! Yet it is indeed an ill wind that blows nobody good, for outside I could hear the shrieks of merriment and laughter of the kiddies.

I splashed around to see what the damage was and found it slight. On account of the ever-present dampness we keep everything raised about sixteen inches from the floor. This proved the salvation of all articles of value. Of course, my everyday shoes, a pair of Chinese slippers and such like were soaked through. A valise or two suffered a like fate. A regular river was flowing between the house and the Church. About seven o'clock the rain let up, and in an hour's time the water had drained out of the house. I put my socks and running shoes (which were saved from the water) under my arm and waded out to the Church to prepare for Mass. During Mass the rain commenced again, and by the time I returned to the house it was filling up with water once more. Since the kitchen is much lower than the house it was impossible to use the stove; all the available firewood had floated off to divers places. Luckily we have an oil stove and this came in handy in preparing our combined breakfast-dinner meal.

During this time the rain came down in sheets and I had nothing else to do but watch the water creep up slowly. The cat was utterly disgusted and showed it by constant meowing. The experience was entirely new to him and he didn't relish it a bit. When the thunder began to peal I decided we were in for a deluge, and made preparations to move upstairs. Happily the thunder proved to be a sign of the end. The rain gradually stopped and the water began to recede. At twelve o'clock the floors were clear again. At three in the afternoon I was able to go to the Church.

Later a Christian came along and told me of the only casualty so far known. A woman, whose husband is a "lauda" went down to his boat to see if he was safe. How she got there I don't know for the water in the streets was more than knee deep. Her husband was not in the boat but at a friend's. She jumped into the boat and in so doing broke the rope that held it, and away went boat and woman on the angry waters of the flood. No one has yet heard whether or not she has been saved. This is the first flood in a long time in these parts. I hope they are not having flood worries in other places in our District.

THE DEVIL IN CHINA.

the possessed man and translates his message for the crowd. The devil declares that a particular idol in this temple is to be carried to such and such a place. Then he declares sulkily, that he (the idol) does not wish to leave the temple at all. Then it is that the monks must play their part. They go on their knees and implore him to touch the heart of the idol and induce him to deign to accept the honors they are preparing for him. The possessed one relapses for a moment into silence, He prays, as it were, and then gives a final answer. If it is favorable he tells which pagoda it is where the worship must be paid.

Fear of the Christians.

Sometimes, in the middle of his discourse, the Tong Tsay stops abruptly. A christian has entered the pagoda. The demon has felt the effect of his presence and has lost his voice through fear. Weakly and timidly he then announces that there is among the crowd an adorer of the true God. and he avows, piteously, that he cannot make any reply in his presence. It would be hardly possible to imagine a more complete confession of impotence and defeat. Had he the power how gladly would he drive this intruder from the scene. But he is powerless, and in order to induce the christian to depart this proud demon grovels before him and implores him, fawningly and obsequiously, to allow him to continue with his message to the people.

Once the possessed man's mission as interpreter of Hell has been completed, the mask is dropped. He becomes once more the peaceful merchant or the poor coolie-farmer and returns quietly to his place of abode.

If such stories are of interest, dear readers, we shall tell you more from time to time. For us there is method in the telling because we need your prayers. We should like to impress upon you that in China today the devil is still supreme in his tyranny over 500 millions of people. Pray without ceasing that we may be able to wrest still more souls from his grasp and restore them to the loving Saviour who died for their salvation.

CHINESE CATHOLIC SOCIAL ACTION.

ing them every opportunity for fulfilling their religious duties, even suggesting that the whole household servants as well as members of the family, should come together for common prayer in the evening. To meet a crying local need, he urged likewise that a Catholic association be founded for little Christian apprentices who are obliged to work for pagans.

On the following afternoon a special session for female workers was held in the Catholic village of Zi-Ka-Wei, and before a large audience his Lordship explained how to sanctify one's labor by performing it in a spirit of faith, hope and charity, after the example of the Mother of God. Next day the workingmen in the same village were assembled, and he explained the true meaning of equality and inequality, the end and nature of their work, holding up Christ the Divine Workman, as their model.

The final exercises, opened to the general public, were held on Sunday, May 17, in the great church at Zi-Ka-Wei. Four bishops from neighbouring vicariates were present with Msgr. Haouisee in the sanctuary, while the Rev. Paschal M. D'Elia, S.J., spoke of the nature of Christian work. He showed how labor was first intended as a Divine gift to man, then became after the Fall a punishment and a stimulus; that while despised by the pagans it had been restored by the "Word made a Workman." The laborer could thus be proud of having Jesus the toiler for a model and companion. The orator then dealt with the reciprocal rights and duties of employer and employee, the necessity even in China of the Sunday rest; of the important duty the workman had to labor honestly and conscientiously, and of the employer to give a salary which would permit the worker and the family to live decently.

The lamentable condition of many of the workers in China was emphasized, especially the impropriety of having women and children toiling long hours in the factory. Father d'Elia recalled also to the laborers that they must not waste their salary in gambling, to which there is a particular temptation here, but to think constantly of their family interests and provide for their own old age, for unexpected illness and the education of their children. Employers were shown how the family life of their employees would be seriously injured by forcing women and children to work at night. Both groups were finally exhorted to strive for a closer union instead of a separation of the classes, to help bring to this pagan land a truly Christian solution of the social question.

Many copies of Leo XIII's encyclical, translated into the vernacular, were distributed, and a message from Pope Pius XI, who sent his paternal benediction for all Chinese Christian workers, was delivered.

In the past the Catholic attitude towards the social question in China has been not so much theoretical as practical, consisting in building orphanages, old-age homes, and hospitals for the solace of innumerable human beings who would otherwise perish miserably. That may not be enough for the future. The gospel of Young China on the social question is the "Economic Demism" of Sun Yat-sen, and his affirmations and conclusions, not really socialistic according to the intention of their author, must be interpreted in the Christian manner day in and day out, else they are liable to fall under the complete mastery of evil-minded men who will use them to spread a Communism which Dr. Sun did not at all intend.

Because of the small number of Catholic workers there is a particular difficulty in forming Catholic syndicates. The principal work in the near future will be to make the wealthier Christians understand more and more clearly the duty they have of thinking of the needs of their neighbor. The traditional unity and discipline of Catholics should make it possible for them to give a definite Catholic interpretation to the principles of the Founder of the Chinese Republic, and by means of their Catholic Youth and Catholic Action organizations they should be able with time to elaborate a definite social program that will do credit to themselves, to their nation, and the universal Church to which they belong.

We have our suspicions that the member of the Lishui "orchestra" at left can make as much noise as any of the others.

FIRST CANADIAN BISHOP FOR CHINA.

We offer our congratulations and best wishes to the Right Rev. A. Lapierre, who on August 4th, amid the splendours of the Catholic liturgy, in the presence of the Apostolic Delegate, the Cardinal Archbishop of Paris, many high dignitaries of the Church and a great throng of clergy and laity, in the mighty Basilica of Montreal was consecrated Bishop, being the first Canadian raised to that dignity for the Chinese Missions.

He will leave this month for his far-distant Vicariate, Szepingkai, in Manchuria, taking with him ten newly-ordained priests of the Montreal Seminary for Foreign Missions. Ad Multos annos!

THE WANDERING STORY-TELLERS OF CHINA

The story-teller, or, as he is popularly called by the Chinese, "The Narrator of Ancient Things," is really the historian of the common people. Without him, the history of the past, and the story of the great men that lived in ancient times, and the deeds of heroism, and the revolutions of dynasties, would all be lost in oblivion. The great mass of the Chinese are absolutely illiterate, and cannot read the books that contain the stories of the past. The story-teller comes in to supply the lack of learning, and he recounts the tales of great battles that were fought in the dawn of Chinese history, and he tells of the struggles that the Empire has had with the warlike tribes that lay along the northern frontiers of China, and in vivid word-painting he describes the heroes and sages that have played so mighty a part in the building up of the Middle Kingdom. It is entirely due to him that the past lives in the thought and imagination of the men of to-day, and that men's blood is fired and their passions moved at the thought of the great deeds that their fathers in days gone by were able to accomplish.

These men are accustomed to come out every afternoon when the weather permits and take their positions in some well-known public resort, and recount their stories to the groups of people that very soon gather round to listen to them. Their favorite place is in front of some popular temple towards which the roads converge, and where incessant streams of people pass and repass without ever ceasing their flow. Some of these are always sure to stop awhile and listen to the stirring tales that never seem to lose their attraction for the Chinese.

Some of the most popular of these are taken from a standard work, half fiction and half history, called "The Three Kingdoms." This book contains a description of the times when three great rivals, occupying three different sections of the country, were contending for the mastery with each other (A.D. 221). It is written in a very delightful style, and is crammed full of adventures of the most exciting and romantic description from the first page to the very end.

The story-teller has an inexhaustible store of adventures, and romances, and love scenes, and great episodes in history upon which to draw. He has also the free use of his pictorial powers in drawing the scenes and pictures with which he would stir the imagination and the enthusiasm of his audience. Many of these men are real artists in their profession, and they can hold their hearers spellbound whilst they give a realistic picture of some stirring event that happened ages ago, or of some great catastrophe in which a dynasty disappeared amidst scenes of carnage and bloodshed, and the new one came in to the sound of music and amidst the rejoicings of a nation.

Teeth are things you have out just before the doctor decides it was your tonsils, after all.—Houston Chronicle.

A New Yorker was spending a night at a "hotel" in a Southern town, and told the colored porter that he wanted to be called early.

The porter replied: "Say, boss, I reckon yo' ain't familiar with these heah modern inventions. When yo' wants to be called in de mawnin', all yo' has to do is jest to press de button at de head of yo' bed. Den we comes up and calls yo'."

"Did you deliver that message?" said a clerk to his messenger boy.

"Yes," was the reply; "only the man doesn't live in Grove Square, but in Queen Street, and not on the ground floor, but up three flights of stairs, and not in the front room, but in the back room; besides, his name isn't Johnson, but Thompson, and he isn't a man, but a woman!"

Captain — "If anything moves, shoot!"

Sentry—"Yessah; an' if anything shoots, Ah move!"—Fifth Corps News.

"Now, Minnie, what do you think a land flowing with milk and honey would be like?"

Minnie: "Sticky!"

Theatre-goer: "Can you change these two K stalls for to-morrow night?"

Clerk: "We haven't got the same seats. You can go to L."

"You are lying so clumsily," said the judge to the defendant, "that I would advise you to get a lawyer."

Indignant One—"Why don't you put Wet Paint on that bench?"

Painter—"I did."

Auntie: "Well, John, and how do you like your new baby brother?"

Four-year-old John: "Asleep."

Customer: "The first time I buttoned that coat which I got here, the seam in the back split."

Salesman: "Well, that shows you the buttons were sewed on good."

Teacher: "Johnny, how old is a person who was born in 1894?"

Johnny: "Man or woman?"

"Arthur darling, will you grant me one little wish?"

"Certainly, darling. It cannot be too little."

She (on trans-Atlantic steamer): "Did you notice the enormous appetite of that monster man at dinner?"

He: "Yes; he must be what they call a stowaway."

Young Buyer at Fair—"But aren't these shoelaces rather dear?"

Hawker—"You see, they're real mohair, miss. It's a risky job hunting the mo!"

"So Ethel returned your engagement ring?"

"Yes, she mailed it to me and she had the nerve to paste a label on the outside of the package: 'Glass, handle with care'."—Advocate.

Mrs. Nexdore: "My daughter has arranged a little piece for the piano."

Old Gruff: "Good! It's about time we had a little peace."

A clergyman advertised for an organist. One of the answers read as follows:

"Dear Sir: Noticing you have a vacancy for an organist and choirmaster, either lady or gentleman, having been both for several years, I beg to apply for the position.'

Dear Old Lady: "No, I'm afraid I know very little about golf. I couldn't even tell one end of a caddie from the other."—Humorist (London.)

Collector — "I'd like to get some action on this bill to-day!"

Mr. Brohke — "All right. Put it on the floor and I'll dance a jig on it."

"Our romance began in a most romantic way. My wife saved me from drowning. She's a magnificent swimmer, you know."

"I notice you don't go out very far now."

"No. I don't know if she would save me again."

Two druggists were talking about one of their confrères.

"He is a great druggist," said one.

"He is," admitted the other. "But don't you think he makes his chicken salad a little too salty?" — Hudson Star.

"How is Dub getting on with his golf?"

"Pretty good. He hit a ball in one to-day."

He: "Dearest, do you think you could live on three pounds a week?"

She: "Yes, but no longer."

"Are there any bill collectors coming to your door?"

"More than I care to admit."

MacDonald—"That's a poor blade you've got on your safety razor, Sandy."

MacTavish—"Well, it was good enough for my father and it's good enough for me."

"Can you take me on this afternoon, doctor?" inquired a timid little lady over the telephone.

"Sorry I can't," the dentist apologized. "I have eighteen cavities to fill, and these will take all the afternoon."

And then the doctor hung up, and turning from the telephone he slung his bag of golf sticks across his shoulder and walked away.

OUR WORK

In order to provide missionaries for China the Seminary provides for the education of students in colleges and in our Seminary.

It supports parishes, churches and schools in the district allotted to it by the Holy See.

It establishes schools, employs native teachers and promotes Catholic education among both Christians and Pagans.

It trains and maintains catechists for instructing the Pagans in Catholic doctrine in districts in which there is not a resident Priest and to assist the missionaries in the larger mission centres.

When circumstances permit, it establishes dispensaries, medical missions and other charitable institutions for the poor and suffering. Through these and other practical works of charity the influence of the Church is extended and many are brought into the true fold.

To carry on this work the Seminary depends solely on contributions from the Faithful. We need your assistance, dear reader, if we are to help Our Lord bring to a fruitful issue the work which He came on earth to inaugurate.

His Holiness Pius XI says of our work:

"Since Jesus Christ proclaimed that the special mark of His disciples would be that they loved one another (John, 13:35; 15:12) can we vouchsafe to our neighbors a greater or more signal charity than that of having them withdraw from the darkness of superstitions, and instructed in the true faith of Christ? Nay, this surpasses any other works or testimonials of charity, as the mind surpasses the body, heaven, earth, eternity, time; and everyone that exercises this work of charity to the best of his ability, shows that he esteems the gift of faith as much as it is meet and just that he should esteem it, and moreover, he manifests his gratitude towards the Goodness of God by sharing with the poor Pagans this gift, the most precious of all."

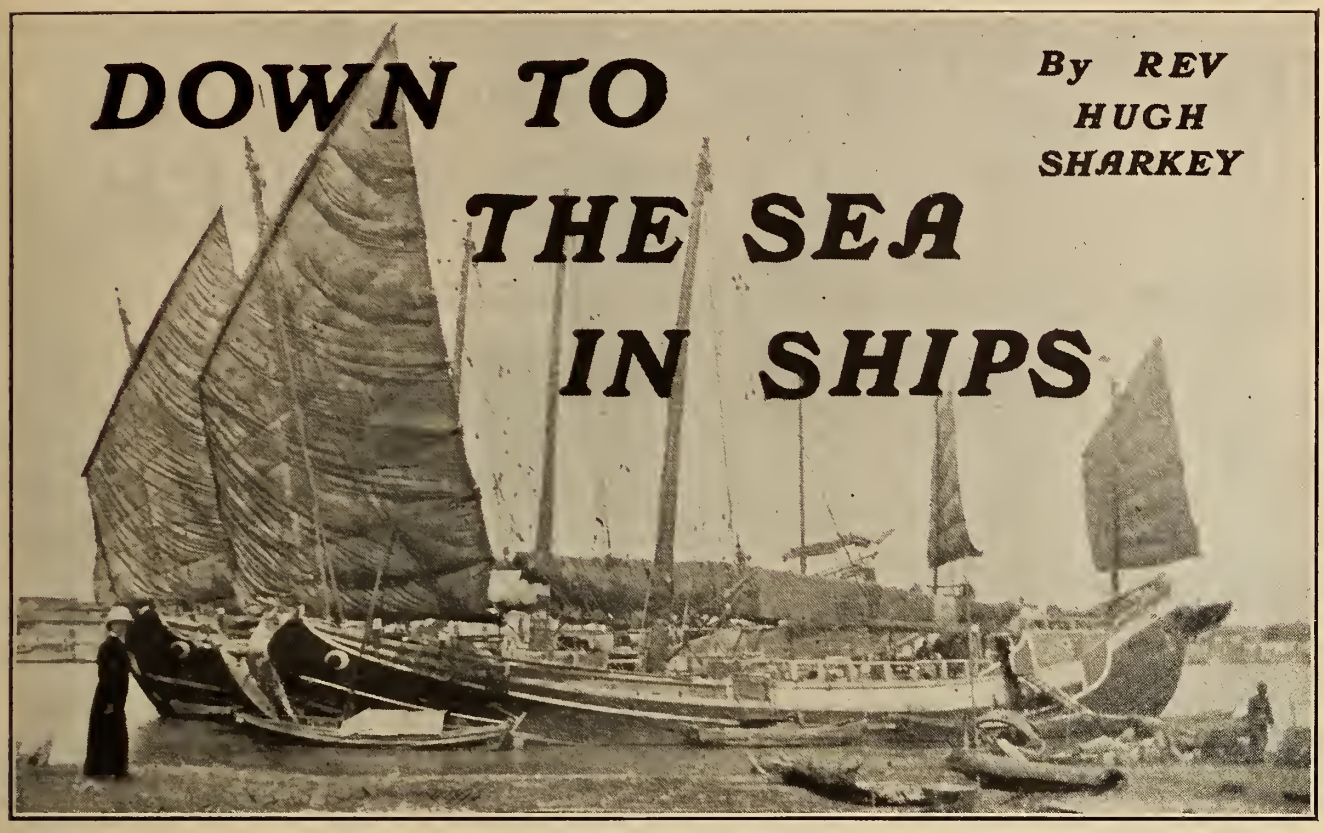
PRIVILEGES OF BENEFACTORS:

1. They share in all the masses and devotions offered by our priests.

2. A Solemn Requiem Mass is offered each year for our deceased benefactors on the feast of All Souls.

3. They share in the prayers of our priests and students.

4. Two novenas of Benedictions of the Blessed Sacrament are offered yearly for the intentions of our benefactors.



5. Benefactors may apply all these privileges to their deceased friends.

Donations to the Seminary should be addressed to

DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS

By REV HUGH SHARKEY

In Canada, the days of wooden ships have passed away, and with their going has gone much of the romance of the long ago. The schooners, the clippers, the frigates, have given way to the great, white, trans-Atlantic, trans-Pacific liners of our day. But my heart is still with the three-masted schooners, the graceful frigates, the swift-sailing clippers of days now gone by; moss-covered, barnacled hulks of the port of old St. John, with their mass of sails and rigging strong with the smell of the sea and of far places. They seem to blend more beautifully with nature, and fit more perfectly into the picture of the sea in its manifold moods, while about them clings that romance and adventure that speaks of buccaneers and the Spanish Main, of Devon smugglers, of Roman galleys and Viking warriors, of Columbus and Cabot setting out on their perilous voyages into the unknown Western Sea.

But in China—age-old, unchanging China—the days of wooden ships are with us yet. The junks of China, famed in song and story, redolent of the past, still go down to the sea. They are the selfsame class of junks which in the time of Christ crossed from far Cathay to Rome, laden down with jade, spices, tea, silks and pottery. They are the selfsame junks within whose darkened, evil-smelling holds the intrepid French missioners secretly entered the forbidden land. They are as old as China herself, picturesque, graceful and mysterious. One would not be at all surprised to see flying at their masthead the black flag with its skull and cross-bones. Certain it is, that there is many a pirate's rendezvous within the maze of islands that form the archipelago of Chusan.

The junk is formed like a giant fish. The bow of the boat represents the wide-open mouth of the fish, and two monstrous eyes add to the realistic design. From the prow, the main part of the vessel is shaped like the body of a fish, curving to the stern, which is high and represents the uplifted tail.

Painted in gaudy colors, the junk looks indeed fantastically beautiful. To see one under full sail, gracefully tacking or running before a stiff breeze, is to see a thing of beauty and life—such a scene as Whistler would have loved to paint. Churning up the water about it, it slips over the waves, the sea-gulls fluttering and circling about its rigging.

Monsignor McGrath and myself, armed with our cameras and our limited knowledge of Chinese, boarded a couple at Ningpo, determined on a more intimate acquaintanceship. We were rowed out to them in a sampan, and we mounted to the high deck by means of a rope stairway, which was slung out at the side of the vessel. The crew, a jolly, simple bunch of men, were very kind and very inquisitive, and showed us all there was to be seen. We thanked them in our best Chinese and offered them cigarettes. In true Chinese fashion, they refused them several times and then accepted them, protesting how unworthy they were to do so. They were very interested in the mechanism of Monsignor's camera, and were delighted to have their pictures taken with us. We took down the names of the two junks, and promised the crews they should have some copies of the pictures when we next passed through Ningpo.

It gave me a thrill as I stepped onto the deck of the first junk. It was a mass of rigging and canvas, but everything was quite clean and in order. There was about it all that unmistakable tang of the sea. It brought back to both of us, I am sure, visions of Saint John's, Newfoundland, and of Saint John, New Brunswick—

"Where the tides meet on the rips,
And the ships go down."

I think that I would more than enjoy a trip on one of those junks. Stoutly built, they would stand the

RECLAIMING the STRAYED SHEEP

Father Boudreau in a novel manner tells of the difficulties encountered during a visitation of his parish of Pi-wu-ka.

Rev. Bernard B. Boudreau

I WAS always given to understand that story books and white lies added to history, but had no appreciable value. What may be true of one place may be false of another. Illusions are subjective, and have an objective origin. The poor Irish immigrant arriving in New York with not a soul to look up to, finds his dreams shattered to bits, the books read, the long letters received, and newspaper articles extolling the New World just lies, lies, lies. He becomes sick and tired of thinking, dreaming. He looks up all the "ad" columns, goes for a job, and gets disgusted. Throws up his hands, No Use! Thus far the ailment is all subjective. Soon he will rid himself of it with the proper remedies, and only to face an objective, almost fatal sickness, an absolute strangeness. He learns the truth. His sickness disappears. He is rubbing elbows with the rich and the poor. He knows his business. He likes his job. He has learned the truth.

I took up my charge here at Pi-Wu-Ka on January 1st. I knew and understood the location I was to work in, but not the inner workings of the Parish. I was not long in getting the place repaired and looking sensible. I soon had my plans made out for my visitations. I was anxious to get the Christians also patched up and looking sensible. I got all my records in order after one month of chasing around. It is really marvelous how this place has existed up until now. I began my Easter Mission tour and visitations early, and with a stranger Catechist for convenience sake. It was more or less of a success. Imagine looking for James. Is he baptised, married, or what? Who in the name of creation is James? Or who is Mr. Hou? When baptised, by whom, and where? Then you come to the marriage records and find that James is married, but to whom, how, when, and where, is of no concern. Then you look at the "Defunct" book. Half are not in. Some are marked dead who are still alive. Some are marked "about to die". I ask the Catechist: "Why are not all the dead jotted down here? Any reason?" "Well, you see, Spiritual Father, they are not Christians any more, and there is nothing more to find out about them." The mission, by the way, is fifty years old or thereabouts.

"Venerable Old One, what is your honorable name?"

"My despicable name is Leaf."

"And how old are you this year, Mr. Leaf?"

"I am miserably spoiling my 67th year."

"How grand! You still keep looking quite young. You have many sons?"

"Yes, I have eleven mouths to feed."

"When were you baptised?"

"I am an old Christian. My whole family is baptised, even to the grandsons."

"The blessings of God upon you. But how is it I have not met you until now? I have made three missions before now. I have been stationed just a short distance from here and still I have not seen you."

A brief silence, then Mr. Leaf minutely exposed his tale of woe, and how himself and all his family had been away from Christianity for eleven years.

* * *

"And what is your name?"

"You are too polite. My name is Big Water."

"I mean your family name?"

"Leaf."

"How is it I have not seen you until now?"

"Oh, I am kind of lazy and cold. I have forgotten all my prayers."

"Are you married?"

"Yes."

Any children?"

"Yes."

"How many?"

"Two."

"Wife Christian?"

"No."

"Got dispensation?"

"No."

"Children baptised?"

"No."

"Why?"

"My folks would not allow it."

A long tale. A wrecked life, tossed, shaken, and trampled upon by the devil. All away from the church for twenty years. Himself a miller, bought and sold three wives. His father, a former Catechist, now a fortune teller, teacher, and on the 1st and 15th of the month offers his little sacrifice to idols.

* * *

"How is it I have not seen you as yet?"

A little laugh and half grunt: "Oh, I am very busy."

"What do you do?"

"I am a farmer."

"Why do you not come to Church on Sundays?"

"Well, to put it brief: I had my prayerbook stolen from me one fine Sunday. I thought it was a pretty dirty trick to do. So I told the Catechist I would come no more!"

"Bravo! Three cheers! You are staunch, resolute and brave!" I took note that he had half an ear on one side. "Well, Mr. Hou, whenever you get your fifteen-year account in order we can talk business. How about it?"

"Oh, I will come next Sunday." I have not seen him yet.

"Well, my good Catechist, how many are there like this here?"

"Ah, Spiritual Father, there are many; but you see these people do not know their doctrine very well. With many it is their pride. Here is another Christian. We will speak to him."

* * *

"What is your precious name?"

"My cheap name is Forest."

"And, Mr. Forest, what is your important occupation?"

"I used to be a Catechist. I taught school for Father. . . I am cold and lazy now. I have a big business. I am a Vaccinator, and I travel much."

"Whole family baptised?"

"Yes."

"All living?"

"No."

"Who is missing?"

"My wife is dead some years. I have two sons now. One died some time ago. I am quite alone. Both my sons have gone the way of all flesh."

"Are they dead, then?"

"No. I mean they have gone bad."

"Oh, you mean they have gone the way of some flesh. But come, you are old, your head is silvered, and alone. How about going back your ten years, and fixing it up with God?"

"I will come next week or so." He has not yet made an appearance.

"Who is this man, Mr. King?"

"He is a poor fellow. An official weigher by trade. He sold his son. Now he is having a lawsuit to get his son back. There is a sort of blindness coming over him and so needs his son's help. He has two sons. The older gambles and smokes opium. All are baptised, and have not been to church for . . ."

Some false Gods adored by the Chinese.

"Oh, how do you do?"

"Well! Where is the Spiritual Father going?"

"I am just getting acquainted with my good Christians. Where have you been hiding yourself? Three missions I have made before this, and living here now some months, and I have not seen you at all."

"Ha! Ha! You are wasting your time. I am well on the road to perdition."

"You are very cheerful about it anyway. Did you ever think of walking another road?"

"Oh, I knew doctrine and prayers at one time, then there is this thing, and that thing, and market days, and travelling . . . but my daughter is good. She will come to Church."

"But presently you interest me. Until Sunday, then, good-bye!"

"It is time for supper, Mr. King. Let us go back home and check up on our tour. We have been very busy, and you look tired. I think to-day has been a good day. Do you think these people whom we have seen, and those down-hearted ones, and those bitter ones, and those good ones . . . in short, what is your summary?"

"Huh, the Spiritual Father is much too polite. I have no brains. I was always quite stupid. You see, Pou Kung, many of those we have seen are very childish. For instance, the true reason for Mr. Leaf being away so long is that Father . . . would not allow him to sacrifice to the idols for his dying son. Mr. Forest was caught in the act of worshipping an idol, josh stick in hand, and so lost his job as a Catechist. Mr. So-and-So, whom we saw at the north corner of the town, has two wives and is quite prosperous. Mr. River is all right. He righted his wrong. The others we saw with him do not come to church out of sympathy for Mr. River. Most of them have their little josh-stick bowl."

"What have you been doing all this time, Mr. King?"

"Every Saturday, I call all the Christians, but they do not come. They are always too busy. I have tried every possible system of coaxing and all of no avail. Now that the Priest is here they will probably come."

"I have been here some time now and two-thirds have not showed up. How do you account for that? I send you around still to call them!"

"Do not ask, Spiritual Father, it is all an old sickness. It is pretty hard to bend an old tree. But there is one remedy we can try. Give some of them a few biscuits when they come for Mass. Those that live far away, buy a bowl of macaroni for them."

"Let us go to bed. It is late now and I am tired. See you again in the morning."

* * *

Chiulung is the first and oldest place in the whole district. In the town bearing the name there is not one Christian. What Christians there are live five, ten and fifteen li away. Being more than fifty years old one would expect to find a flourishing, healthy mission. You meet the old-timers ready to spin almost unbelievable yarns and stories. I doubt most of them. They will tell you how Father . . . did this, and how Father . . . did that, and how Catechist so and so was no good, and how Catechist so and so never did his work. They will tell you about all the Christians there were in the old days. I am very much interested here because there is a combination of Russianism and Deadism. There is everything in the line of spiritual drought, and downright laziness. Each one you meet is supposed to be the lamp-post light of his place. I am certain of the lamp-post, but not so sure of the light.

"To-morrow, Mr. State, we shall begin a very thorough visitation and bar none. I took you along to help me because you have never been stationed here and consequently there is no feud or old sore. Have a good sleep, and think well where we will begin. Good-night."

* * *

"My, it is a bad start. The signs are very poor. You were the only one at Mass. What do you think?"

"I don't think, that is what it is, and it is that!"

"Please elucidate. It is darksome."

"The Spiritual Father will see by evening."

* * *

Our first stop: "Is Mr. Millet in?"

"No! but I will get him."

"Mr. Millet, this is the new Priest. He is stationed just 12 li away and very anxious to meet all his Christians."

In answer there was a grunt plus a dirty look. The Catechist told me this was one of the oldest Christians.

"I say, Mr. Millet, by whom were you baptized?"

A grunt for an answer.

"How long have you been a Christian?"

Another grunt.

"I will be at the chapel this evening. Will you be there?"

His Eminence, William Cardinal Van Rossum, the great Prefect of the Congregation de Propaganda Fide, died recently while on a visit to his native Holland. In addition to directing the Foreign Missions of the Universal Church, Cardinal Van Rossum filled many important posts in Rome.

Still another grunt.

"Is it not that Mr. Millet has a cold, for he seems to want to cough?"

Grunt four.

"Come, my Catechist, we are disturbing him."

* * *

"Mr. ....." and no farther. Certainly not wanted. Our presence was dangerous. Such bitterness. I told my Catechist: "Bricks and stones may break our bones, but names will never hurt us."

"Father, it is useless. They are all alike at this end of the town."

"No! I am determined to at least have a look at them. Let us go on."

* * *

"Here is a Christian, I was told."

"No use!" came a shout from the doorway.

"No use for what?" I yelled out. "I am thirsty, have you a cup of tea?"

"No use! Let us go to the next place."

"Fine people these, eh? So sociable that way."

"Golly, we have been walking for some time, and nothing yet! Say, Catechist, do your stuff. Lend me some of your catch words."

"Ah, the Spiritual Father is understanding."

"Yes, understanding my hat!"

"Let us go to So and So, maybe he will have dinner for us."

"Right you are. I am victim of a Chinese stomach just now."

We had a wonderful dinner at Mr. Tang's. He had chicken, eggs, fish, pork, rice, vegetables, little sweet fruits (dried). We smoked after. Talked matters over. Decided to go home early, as we had just a few more calls to make.

* * *

Of the fruits of the day Mr. Liu was the first to come. He had been a long time away. He has a very bad cold.

"Well, Mr. Liu, how are you?"

"Well."

"I suppose there will be many here this evening?"

"Yes."

"Are your two brothers coming, as they said?"

"No."

"Are the ladies next door to you coming?"

"No."

"Are the two young gentlemen down your street near the store coming?"

"No."

"Is the man who makes bean-curd coming?"

"No. He is going to see a play."

"Hm-m."

"Ah, Mr. Tang! You are just in time. Did you meet anyone on the way here?"

"I met a few Christians, but they were all going to see the play. They said they had no time to come to-night."

"We will have night prayers, and confessions after."

Three people made the mission. One who, after three askings, had refused to go to the sacraments, committed suicide two weeks ago. He hanged himself in despair.

* * *

"What are some of your suggestions, Mr. Catechist? You are Chinese and understand your people well."

"Well, Spiritual Father, formerly the fruits here (as there are a few fruit trees) were divided among the Christians. On Sundays they used to be served lunch and on . . ."

"Never mind the belly. I want suggestions to get these people back."

Lishui from Day to Day

by observer

Greetings to the old students after their well-earned holiday and here's a welcome handshake to the newcomers for this year. They are starting out on the road that will one day lead to China and their hopes are high. We know they will soon feel at home in their new surroundings. It doesn't take anybody long to feel at home in St. F. X. Seminary. Here's wishing them, and the old guard, a happy and successful year.

* * *

Father Hugh Sharkey has been appointed Parish Priest of Tsingtien (Greenfields) with Fr. John J. MacDonald as assistant. The name "Greenfields" evokes memories. Take off the "s" and you have Greenfield. Just put "Ont." after it and you are back in good old Glengarry. And Glengarry in my mind will ever stand for kindliness and princely hospitality. Just a word of greeting to Fr. Gauthier and my many priest friends there and the hope that we may meet again.

* * *

Here, Fr. Editor, are two items for Ripley: 1. Our town has lifeboats instead of a fire brigade; 2. I am writing this instalment by hand because it is too hot to use a typewriter. It is too hot to make any kind of effort, but the items for the great journal must be on their way. So excuse everything.

However, they say we've weathered the worst of the heat. Here's hoping. We are emerging fairly well from the ordeal, but some of the priests look as if they could stand three good square meals and a touch of rouge. Soon old sol will resume his accustomed role of friend. During the merciless, cloudless, breezeless days of late he has been a relentless foe. The only thing that saved our lives was the 50-foot well where we keep our bottles of boiled water in "the old oaken bucket", the Lishui frigidaire.

By the time you read this our retreat will be over, the first retreat in Chuchow. In former years our priests all went to Ningpo. We are hoping to have Fr. McGoldrich of St. Columban's as retreat master. Through his many splendid articles in "The Far East" Fr. McGoldrich is already well known to all at the seminary.

Our last instalment found us "possessing our souls in patience" in Tsingtien where we had been held up for two weeks by floods. How did we make out? Well, we finally made a break and got within 30 li of Chuchow before the boat was stopped again by further floods. This 30 li (10 miles) we walked in a veritable downpour. That's a very trifling walk. Fr. Venini reels off 30 miles a day many a time. He's our long distance champ.

Before prayers each evening the Catechist brings up the news about town. It helps to get our ear attuned to Chinese. But we haven't yet reached the stage where we can dispense with the services of Fr. Gignac as interpreter. Fr. Gignac is our professor of Chinese.

Last night the old man (I don't mean Fr. Gignac) was all excited. "You can't buy a coffin in town," he said. "They can't make them fast enough to cope with the cholera epidemic." The coffin-maker opposite his house had sold four that day.

* * *

I never thought it possible that there would be a shortage of coffins in Lishui. There are coffin-makers everywhere. And they never stop work. Their shops are piled high with those huge, heavy boxes. But any infectious disease reaps a grim harvest in China. Isolation and sanitary conditions are unknown, and cholera just mows the poor people down.

* * *

And the way those poor people die! When they are almost in their agony their relatives have recourse to the most barbarous attempts to keep them alive. The dying man is allowed no peace. The soul-caller is summoned and for hours keeps up his dreary, high-pitched incantations to which all the crowd respond in chorus—"Way Lee! Way Lee! come back, come back."

* * *

That alone would be bad enough, we think. But the cruel part of it is that they feel obliged to make the most unearthly noises, if possible taking the sick man by surprise. Somebody will sneak up behind him and without any warning give a terriffic blast on a trumpet right in his ear. Another will explode a long string of those little red firecrackers—hundreds of them—right beside his "bed."

* * *

Of late we have been awakened by those firecrackers at all hours of the night, like the sharp rattle of machine gun fire. So we know that a great many people are dying. The pitiful futility of it all!

* * *

Our brave sisters are doing heroic work in the dispensary. There are from 150 to 200 patients daily and there is a great run on medical supplies. Many dying babies are brought along and while unable to cure their bodily ills, the good sisters do infinitely more. They feel that if they never accomplished anything more it would be well worth the long journey from Pembroke to Chuchow to open the gates of Heaven to so many little "thieves of Paradise." Were it not for the sisters, few, if any, of those pagan children would receive baptism.

FOR YOUR CONSIDERATION

Although we are fully cognizant of the present universal economic depression we make no apologies to our one hundred thousand readers for presenting at this time a strong appeal for financial assistance for our mission work. The following facts are our justification for doing so.

Eight years ago Saint Francis Xavier Seminary opened at Scarboro Bluffs with 13 students in attendance. Today it has 15 priests in China under Monsignor McGrath, four priests at the Seminary, one at the Canadian College in Rome, and two ready to sail for China this month.

During the summer the College of Brignole Sale, Genoa, Italy, offered to take eight of our students annually, free of charge, to make their course in Theology. This institution is devoted solely, as we are, to the education of priests for the Foreign Mission Field. Their generous offer was gladly taken advantage of, and early in September five young men who completed their philosophical course with us were sent to Genoa to continue their studies.

At the re-opening of the Seminary on September 13th, we had thirty-two students (besides our priests) housed in a building originally designed to accommodate 20. The result is that many of those young men have to be placed two in a room intended for only one. Our little Chapel is sorrowfully overcrowded. Two years ago we had hoped to add to our building; we had plans prepared, but lack of funds and our unwillingness to burden ourselves with a huge debt prevented their execution.

We have a mission field in China at our disposal, we have the young men who are inspired with the desire to become missionary priests, but we have no place to accommodate them. Thus it happens that we have been compelled to refuse students who wished to give themselves to God for work in China, and we shall be forced to refuse more every year UNLESS SOMETHING IS DONE ABOUT IT.

To our friends we appeal for funds to enlarge our Seminary, and for assistance to take care of the large expenses we shall have to meet this year in providing for a record number of students. We know that multitudes of our helpers have been sorely stressed during the past three years, so we appeal especially to those who have funds that they can dispose of without jeopardizing their own interests. It is due to our benefactors that we have a Seminary at all. It is owing to their unstinted generosity and faith that we have reached the point where their faith has been realized in the results. We pray that God may ever make us worthy of the sacrifices of our benefactors.

It is foreign to our policy to weary our readers with appeals for this and appeals for that; we have no particular wish to assume the role of beggars—even though we be but "beggars for Christ", but the fact is that we have need of help and we must make known our needs to our friends, confidently expecting that Divine Providence will inspire those whose means permit to come to our assistance.

We need enlarged accommodation at our Seminary, and need it in the worst way if we are to continue to make progress in our efforts for the salvation of millions of pagan souls. To our readers, rich and poor alike, we present the facts and ask them for their spiritual and material assistance, reminding them that, before God, they shall not be without their reward.

"That even one soul should be lost through our tardiness, through our lack of generosity; that even one missionary have to halt because the means fail which it may be we have refused him, is a responsibility of which we have not, perhaps, thought too frequently in the course of our life."

POPE PIUS XI.

FATHER SHARKEY RETURNING TO CANADA.

For some time past, His Excellency Archbishop Duke of Vancouver has sought the services of one of our mission priests to look after the spiritual interests of the Chinese residing in Vancouver. As we go to press we learn that the honor has fallen to Father Sharkey to begin this new work, and he is now on his way across the Pacific.

Father Sharkey's home is in Saint John, N.B. For the past three years he has done excellent missionary work in China, and very recently was appointed Parish Priest of Tsingtien. His experience in the mission field will be invaluable to him as he enters a new field of missionary labour nearer home.

MISSION SUNDAY.

The second last Sunday in October has been designated by the Sacred Congregation of Rites as a day of special prayer and effort throughout the whole Church every year in behalf of Catholic Missions. Our Holy Father the Pope desires that this Mission Sunday be observed in every diocese and parish in the world in order that Catholics everywhere may be brought to understand better the work which missionaries are striving to accomplish in all countries in the midst of privations and hardships. It is a day of prayer and of action, of propaganda and of organization, set aside to awaken the dull spirits of many Catholics and to render more alive and active the enthusiasm of those who realize that there is no apostolate more beautiful or beneficient than that which is exercised in favour of missionary work.

To all the faithful who receive Holy Communion on Mission Sunday (October 23) and pray for the conversion of infidels a Plenary Indulgence, applicable to the souls in purgatory, is granted.

TWO GREY NUNS GOING TO CHINA.

The Mission Band going to Chuchow this month includes two Sisters from the Motherhouse of the Grey Nuns of the Immaculate Conception, Pembroke, Ont. Sisters St. Juletta and St. Angela will be welcome and valuable reinforcements for the Community already doing marvelous work among the Chinese in Lishui. They leave Vancouver on October 22nd. Although not taking part in the official "Godspeed" which will be tendered at St. Michael's Cathedral on Sunday night, Oct. 16th (see back page), we feel sure that those two heroic missionary Sisters will carry with them the best wishes of all our readers. and we wish them "bon voyage".

A GOOD START.

Our students made the three-day Retreat at the opening of the scholastic year on September 13th. The Retreat was given at St. Augustine's Seminary by Father Augustine, C.P. On Sunday, September 18th, Mr. Hugh McGettigan was raised to the subdiaconate for the Chinese Missions, and Mr. Craig Strang received Second Minor Orders. Class work is now in full swing, and it is a fine sight to see all our students walking across the field every morning to attend the lectures at St. Augustine's Seminary.

PRIESTS AND STUDENTS AT CHINA MISSION SEMINARY, SEPTEMBER, 1932

OUR LADY OF THE HOLY ROSARY, PRAY FOR US.

RECLAIMING THE STRAYED SHEEP

"With a little money they can be induced to . . . "

"Money for doctrine! Money for prayers! Money for Christians! You are not mad! Argue with me. I would like suggestions."

"Suppose, my good Catechist, I get new benches, repair the edifice, whitewash it, make it look inviting, get a new Catechist, one who has never been spoilt, they will come, eh? Food and money unnecessarily, no! no! And then maybe if I build a nice little meeting hall, with lots of pictures, and books, a paper or two, the young men will come from curiosity. Give them a little tea, tobacco, maybe a cigarette. A conversation will begin. Gradually we will win their confidence, and their conversion. What do you think of that?"

"It is one way to gain favor, eh? What do you think, Catechist; feed the youth, then you get the children and the old men? It is logical. The army is filled with young blood. Young blood is holding important, responsible Government positions, and maybe . . ."

"But, Father, to come down to earth, for now, the best suggestion is prayer. Induce the Christians under your care to get together and make novenas to the Sacred Heart which has bled so for man."

"Indeed, prayer is first in logical order or in any other kind of order; but I must get the Christians together before I can tell them that. What I want is to get them here to talk to them. I have much to tell them. If we want light we must co-operate: 'Whatever YOU ask in my name . . .'."

"Father, I overheard this afternoon some Christians say that they would really return if they had a good place to sit down and talk. Maybe the end room could be fixed up in some sort of way."

"Good, we shall visit and speak with these Christians in the morning."

* * *

"Ah, you are Mr. Liang? I did did not see you the day of my visitation." I told this gentleman very politely: "I wonder, since you are an old-timer, if you would lend a hand for the time being."

"Sh-sh, Father, he does not like to speak of religion."

"I leave in the morning. Will you come this evening for a chat?" And so he walked away.

Thus ended what was supposed to be a proposition.

* * *

"My good Catechist, what do you think of it now?"

"I have already expressed myself to the Spiritual Father." He sighed heavily: "It is no use!"

"Are you sick? No use? Who told you?"

"You say, a part of a coin you will not give, lunch you will not serve, and you do not say for certain what you are to do."

"Right you are. The pagans nearby find time to come for a chat, and the Christians are too . . ."

"Ah, you have started a suggestion."

"What! you have been sleeping all this time!"

"Pardon me, Spiritual Father, I have been thinking, mostly about some of the things you have said. What I would like to say now is, let us begin this evening on those pagans who come to see you."

* * *

After supper, in walked a rather old fellow with a little son. We exercised on him. "Have you had your rice, sir? And you, little fellow, did you have your fill?"

The little fellow answered for his father as well: "Two bowls I had," and he tapped his little punched belly up and down.

"It is a grand night. There are so many stars out. Look at that bright one next to the moon. Notice how it outshines all the others. It beckons to us, as it were. You seem to want to grab for it. Funny, isn't it? Did you ever stop to think where it came from, any star in fact? I bet your intelligent little son knows."

"Yes, I know. The other night the wandering story-teller told all about the things suspended from the sky, and guiding the spirits."

"I can tell you more than that story-teller. I can tell you where they really come from. By the way, Sir, did you ever think of adoring God?"

"I do not know God, how can I adore him? Furthermore, I am not young any more, and I am happy and contented now. Excuse me, my wife is all alone to-night. I must go home."

DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS.

buffetting of the waves, and a few weeks' voyage on board one would not be without its fill of adventures.

There is something indeed typically symbolical of China in the junk—something typically symbolical of this ancient, conservative, unchanging land. As the junk stands out in striking contrast to the modern liners of other countries, just so does China stand out in striking contrast to the other nations of the world. The gaudily painted junk, with its strange shape and monstrous, staring eyes, symbolizes perfectly this most ancient of nations, which has come down unchanged through the centuries—this land of pagodas and pagan temples, of heathen idols and quaint customs, of idolatory and superstition.

The junk symbolizes China's ship of state, which comes sailing out of the ancient past, on into the future. Christianity's part in that future is of paramount interest to us all. God forbid that, like Russia, she should become shipwrecked on the reefs of Bolshevism. And yet, just such a danger is imminent for this nation of four hundred million souls.

Beside the Tiber stands God's beacon of Truth, a guiding light to all the nations; and the nets of Peter the fisherman sweep the seven seas for souls. Pray God that China may follow that guiding-light on to a glorious future in Christ, and that His missioners, His "fishers of men", may save many, many souls.

Those Who Stay Behind

To the Parents of Departing Missionaries

"Great though our tribute be to those who go, greater still must be our homage to the dear ones who stay behind, and especially to the ageing fathers and mothers of these boys. It is not unlikely that a Missionary career was not the life they had dreamed of for their sons. Perhaps they dreamt that their lads would be near them in their last hour. Is it hard to sympathize with the first shock at contrary news? The Recording Angel alone knows the unseen tears, the heartbreak and the final triumph of Faith. Spare a prayer, then, for the Mothers and Fathers of the Missionaries who go."

FROM DAY TO DAY.

Our readers must feel that some people get to Heaven easily. In fact we have heard people make that remark in reference to such children. However, we should rejoice even if it were true that those who arrive at the eleventh hour receive the same reward as those who have so long borne the burden and the heat of the day. But the reward of Heaven is not like the penny which "every man receiveth" in the gospel parable. It isn't the same for all. "Star differeth from star in glory" and so it is with God's saints. And what a reward awaits all those kind friends of ours whose charity has made it possible to have Heaven placed within "easy reach" of so many of God's abandoned little ones, future gems in their eternal crown of glory.

RECLAIMING THE STRAYED SHEEP.

To make a long story short, our system failed. The reason is this. You see it written all over the faces of the pagans nearby. The moment you mention the advantages of being a Christian they snicker, the upper lip goes into a curl and they say: "Yes?" The Chapel is there. Some Christians do not come at any time. The Missionary forbids them to go to plays, and they go. The Missionary exhorts them to renounce the devil, and they don't. "What is the difference!" the pagan wants to know.

"Mr. Catechist, I think we will pack up early in the morning and go home for Easter. Together, after Easter, we will return."

LITTLE FLOWER'S ROSE GARDEN

Edited by FATHER JIM

CONDITIONS OF MEMBERSHIP

The only conditions of membership in the Rose Garden are: (1) To say every day the Prayer for the Conversion of China; (2) To go to Holy Communion once a month for the Intention of Missionary Vocations. Certificates and pins will be sent to all members.

Sometimes buds may wonder why their letters do not appear in "China" for quite a while after they write to me. Please remember that the letters appearing in this issue came in at least three weeks ago. They had then to be taken to the printer to be "set up" in type. It often happens that, after being "set up", there is no space to include them all in the following issue, and then they must wait over another month.

Anna Campbell, aged 10, is in Grade 6 in the Glace Bay School, and asks for pen-pals of her own age. "Aster" is her pen-name, and her address is 776 Mechanic Row, Glace Bay, N.S.

* * *

Louise Norman, Long Harbor, Nfld., got service when her name appeared in our column asking for pen-pals. "China" reached her, and the following mail brought her a letter from Rosella Heffernan, Port Arthur, Ont. A long newsy letter from Louise told me about the letters that have since been exchanged between those now fast friends. And, by the way, Louise, I don't object to being called "Uncle Jim". I got as much "kick" out of it as you did.

* * *

Mount Carmel School,
New Waterford, N.S.

"Dear Father Jim:

"We, 46 boys of Grade Four, wish to join the Little Flower's Rose Garden and help the missionaries and the poor pagan Chinese by our prayers. Many of us get 'China' at home, and now that we are members of your Club, we are going to be more interested than ever. We wish you and all the priests every success. We enclose a little offering."

Thank you, boys. Make yourselves right at home with us, and let us hear from you once in a while. I'm sure the Glace Bay buds are going to be mighty interested in their very own missionary, Father McGillivray, who is going to China in October.

* * *

From Dornoch, Ont., we have Edward Casey, Joe Casey, Paul Vasey, Norman Moran, Lena Desjardine, Gloria Hayden, Mary Malone, and Josephine Hayden.

NEW MEMBERS.

Anxious to join with so many others to do their bit for the missions are: Mary Roach, George St., New Waterford, N.S.; Dora Bubanko, Box 19. Crowland, Ont.; Audrey Gates, 66 Kenneth Ave.. Oshawa, Ont.; Agatha Corcoran, Piusville, P.E.I.; Susie Byrne, West Mines, Bell Island, Nfld.; John McLellan, 132 King's Street, New Waterford, N.S.; Myles Murphy and Willie Cahill, Bell Island, Nfld. And, of course, they would like very much to hear from fellow-members of our Club.

Margaret Collet, 507 Albert St., Peterboro, Ont., is going to prove anything but a "Thorn" in our Rose Garden, to judge by her letter. Even if I were a "composition teacher", Margaret, I couldn't find anything in your letter to "censure"—so let's have another one soon. Between yourself and Dot you ought to get those other High School girls over their "shyness". We have lots of High School pupils in our Garden, and I hope some of them drop you a line.

For Dorothy Grady, Peterboro: The answer to that "very important question", Dot, is "I don't know; it certainly was not I." But you have me curious now as to how you are going to link Father Kam and Father Jim together. You'll write again, eh?

We extend a hearty welcome to our Club to twenty-two new buds from St. Ann's Academy, New Westminster, B.C. Thanks to Marcia Dorgan for her encouraging letter. Our buds from the West are "right in there" every time.

* * *

Very glad to hear from an "old reliable" like Margaret Reynolds of Antigonish, and to know that her work for the missions is as constant as ever.

* * *

To the Buds who have sent used stamps from time to time for the Missions I am very grateful. For their information I would say that only the higher values of Canadian and American stamps are worth saving at all.

Hello, Buds:

I suppose most of you have just about forgotten the happy days of holidays now, and are "all set" for hard work in school. When all is said and done, 'tis great to be back to school again, though, isn't it? Meeting all your chums again, and having lots of fun together.

Well, Father Jim is trying hard these days to make up for lost time away from our "Garden". Oh yes, I had a vacation, too, and believe me I sorely missed the daily mail from all you Buds. Those new members who have not yet received their certificates and badges can be on the lookout for them soon.

From now on I'll be entirely at your service, and I hope you're going to keep me right at work. No "unemployment" for Father Jim, remember, and I want all the young boys and girls who read "CHINA" to become members of our popular and fast-growing Rose Garden.

This is the Month of the Holy Rosary, and I know you will often offer your Beads for the Missions. Remember especially those brave priests and sisters who leave Canada for Chuchow on October 22nd.

Yours,
FATHER JIM.

I am very grateful to Mary MacInnis and Margaret Coin for the lovely spiritual bouquet they sent. I also want to thank other Buds for spiritual offerings made for the missions, and for stamps which they so kindly saved and sent. The spiritual bouquet from Senior Fourth Class at St. Gregory's School, Oshawa, was much appreciated.

TWO LETTERS.

Dear Father:

Enclosed you will find a cheque for sixty-five dollars, the "sacrifice pennies" of your little missionaries, the children of College Street School. They would like this amount to be added to the Saint Madeleine Sophie Barat Burse. Would that their mite could increase a hundred times, as they are very anxious to see this burse completed. Though the present does not seem very bright, they are hoping to see their desire accomplished in the not-far-distant future. Assuring you of their prayers for success in your great work . . . . . .

Enclosed please find post office order for six dollars, the proceeds of Mite-boxes in our school. The Mission intention for one month was "The China Missions." . . . .

"We have just begun our instruction classes again after a long holiday. Although some of the buds did not write to you during the summer, they assured me they did not forget the important part—the prayers and Holy Communions for the missions. Am sending list of new members for the Rose Garden . . . M.O'S."—Thanks for the pictures. I will try to have them in next month's "China."

GRANDMA'S HEAVEN.

When I am risen from the dead
May I in glory stand;
A crown, perhaps, upon my head,
But a needle in my hand.

I've never learned to sing or play,
So let no harp be mine:
From birth until my dying day
Plain sewing's been my line.

Therefore, accustomed to the end
To plying useful stitches,
I'd be content if asked to mend
The little angels' breeches.

DO YOU KNOW THAT:

China is the largest nation on earth.

China's area equals that of the United States and all her dependencies with enough left over to make twelve states the size of Pennsylvania.

China's population is one-fourth that of the entire earth.

China's population is over 450,000,000.

China's history began about 2500 B.C. A contemporary of Babylon and Chaldea, it has seen those powerful nations rise and fall. Always great, China has not yet reached the height of its development.

The Great Wall of China, the world's most stupendous engineering marvel, was begun 200 years before Christ.

The Catholic Church is represented in every part of China.

Franciscan missionaries, contemporaries of Marco Polo, made a systematic attempt to christianize China in the 13th and 14th centuries.

St. Francis Xavier attempted to reach China, but died in 1552 on Sancian Island, off the coast of China.

One out of every 180 Chinese is a Catholic.

There are 75 bishops, 2,000 foreign and 1,400 native priests, 700 brothers, nearly 4,000 sisters, native and foreign, caring for the spiritual interests of China's 2,500,000 Catholics.

Six native Chinese priests were consecrated bishops by Pope Pius XI on October 28, 1926.

There are over 450 advanced primary and secondary schools maintained by the Catholic Church in China, having government recognition. The total number of Chinese Catholic schools is over 11,000. The pupils in these schools number nearly 270,000.

The preparatory, minor, and major seminaries in China have in attendance nearly 5,000 students. Of these an average of 100 are ordained priests each year.

Among the letters that I enjoyed most were the big, long, newsy ones from Mollie and Agnes Maynard, Thorburn Road, St. John's, Nfld. It was a real pleasant duty for me to write to them, and I hope they will hear from many of the Buds. A sister, Catherine, and a brother, Philip, are also Buds.

Dear Father Jim:

"Our teacher has been telling us about your Rose Garden, and we wish to join it. This morning our class appointed me as Secretary. Am sending you the names of the 35 girls in the class, and we will be very glad to receive our membership certificates and badges. We are all in Senior LLL in St. Joseph's Girls' School. We are trying to fill our mite-box to help the missions, and every day in school we say the prayer for the conversion of China. Sincerely yours,

"Sadie Zahab."

I am very happy indeed to have such a splendid class added to our list of Ottawa buds; your certificates, etc., will reach you soon. May God bless you all for your interest in the Chinese Missions.

Prospective mother-in-law: "My daughter can play the piano, sing, dance, act, swim, paint, pilot an aeroplan, drive a car, and what can you do?"

Prospective bridegroom: "Well, I can cook, darn, and possibly do a little spring-cleaning."

Teacher: "You weren't here yesterday, Charles."

Charles: "I went to a funeral."

Teacher: "Was it a close relative?"

Charles: "No he lived ten miles north of here."

During the hearing of a case, the judge was being disturbed by a youth who kept moving about in the rear of the court.

"Young man," he exclaimed, "you are making a good deal of unnecessary noise. What are you doing "

"I have lost my overcoat and am trying to find it," replied the offender.

"Well," said the judge, "people often lose whole suits in here without half so much fuss."

Perfume maker in Paris has been ordered to pay his wife $5,200,000. Of course it would not be right for him to cut her off without a scent.

The clergyman had returned to the town of Cowes, in the Isle of Wight, afte a few years abroad. The people among whom he had been a favorite flocked to hear him preach again.

When he went into the pulpit and commenced to speak they were all mystified by the following sentence:

"I am quite glad to see so many Cowes faces before me again."

A gentleman was put sorely out of patience by some blunder of a new groom. "Look here!" he cried in anger, "I won't have things done in this way! Do you think I'm a fool?"

"Sure, sir," said the groom, "I can't say, sir. I only came here yesterday!"

First Boy: "My dad has a fine cedar chest."

Second Boy: "That's nothing; my dad has a wooden leg."

Referring to George Washington, an American said to a Scotchman: "He was a great and good man sir. A lie never passed his lips."

"Weel," the Scot replied, "I presume he talked through his nose like the rest o' ye!"

Mr. Spink: "I need a button on this shirt."

Mrs. Spink: "Well, call up the laundry; I'm tired of telling them."

The pugnacious clubman glared around the room. His confreres tittered, as they listened to him. But the self-possessed little hustler was not afraid to speak.

"There," he shouted, "take it or leave it. I'm an independent self-made man . . ."

Before he had time to finish the sentence one of the older members of the club called out: "We accept your apology."

"It must be awful to be a debt collector. You must be unwelcome wherever you go."

"On the contrary, practically everybody asks me to call again."

Smith: "There are two periods in a man's life when he is most interested in his personal appearance."

Atkins: "When are they?"

Smith: "One is at twenty, when he watches the hair coming out on his upper lip, and the other is at forty, when he knows that the hair is coming out on the top of his head."

British Guide (showing places of interest): "It was in this room that Lord Wellington received his first commission!"

American Tourist (suddenly interested): "How much was it?"—Tit-Bits.

Hostess: "Aren't you afraid your husband will neglect the cat while you are away?"

Gambler's Wife: "Oh, no. Bill always likes to see plenty in the kitty."

Kitty: "It must be five years since I saw you last. How much older you look. I should hardly have known you."

Catty: "Yes, it is a long time. If I had not remembered your coat, I should not have recognized you."

"Pardon me, sir," Mrs. Portly addressed a fellow train passenger, "but would you mind assisting me off at the next stop? You see, I am very large, and when I get off I have to go backward, so the conductor thinks I am trying to get aboard and helps me on again. He has done this three times."

"Hello, Johnny," said the neighbor, "can I see your father?"

The little boy thought for a while, then said, "I'm afraid you can't, sir. He happens to be wrapped up in his work at the moment."

"Oh, what's he doing?" asked the neighbor.

"Papering the living room," Johnny confessed with a knowing twinkle in his eye.

Lawyer: "Then you say that this man was drunk?"

Witness: "I do not. I merely stated that he sat in his car in front of the excavation for three hours, waiting for the red light to turn green."

He married a spinster who owned over a thousand head of poultry.

Robinson: "How came she to marry him?"

Smythe: "Just like a woman. If she can't get a man by fair means she will by fowl!"

Worried Old Gent: "I fear my hair is coming out very badly. Can you recommend something to me to keep it in?"

Breezy Barber: "I've just the thing, sir. You can have an excellent cigar-box, empty, for sixpence."

Question: How do you make a maltese cross?

Answer: Stick a pin in him.

Judge (to prisoner): "I can see the villian in your face."

Prisoner: "I think that's a personal reflection, your honor."

Workman: "Mr. Brown, I would like to ask for a small rise in my wages. I have just been married."

Employer: "Very sorry, my dear man, but I can't help you. For accidents which happen to our workmen outside the factory we are not responsible."

Gladys: "Do you see that young man standing over there next to the flivver with golf pants on?"

Harold: "I see the fellow, all right; but where is the flivver with the golf pants on?"

Tramp (in a coffee shop)—"Ow much for coffee?"

Waiter — "Twopence sitting at a table, a penny standing at the counter."

Tramp—"Anything knocked off if I stand on one leg?"

OUR WORK

In order to provide missionaries for China the Seminary provides for the education of students in colleges and in our Seminary.

It supports parishes, churches and schools in the district allotted to it by the Holy See.

It establishes schools, employs native teachers and promotes Catholic education among both Christians and Pagans.

It trains and maintains catechists for instructing the Pagans in Catholic doctrine in districts in which there is not a resident Priest and to assist the missionaries in the larger mission centres.

When circumstances permit, it establishes dispensaries, medical missions and other charitable institutions for the poor and suffering. Through these and other practical works of charity the influence of the Church is extended and many are brought into the true fold.

To carry on this work the Seminary depends solely on contributions from the Faithful. We need your assistance, dear reader, if we are to help Our Lord bring to a fruitful issue the work which He came on earth to inaugurate.

His Holiness Pius XI says of our work:

"Since Jesus Christ proclaimed that the special mark of His disciples would be that they loved one another (John, 13:35; 15:12) can we vouchsafe to our neighbors a greater or more signal charity than that of having them withdraw from the darkness of superstitions, and instructed in the true faith of Christ? Nay, this surpasses any other works or testimonials of charity, as the mind surpasses the body, heaven, earth, eternity, time; and everyone that exercises this work of charity to the best of his ability, shows that he esteems the gift of faith as much as it is meet and just that he should esteem it, and moreover, he manifests his gratitude towards the Goodness of God by sharing with the poor Pagans this gift, the most precious of all."

PRIVILEGES OF BENEFACTORS:

1. They share in all the masses and devotions offered by our priests and seminarians.

2. A High Mass is said for their intentions the First Friday of each month.

3. A Solemn Requiem Mass is offered each year for our deceased benefactors on the feast of All Souls.

4. Two novenas of Benedictions of the Blessed Sacrament are offered yearly for the intentions of our benefactors.

5. Benefactors may apply all these privileges to their deceased friends.

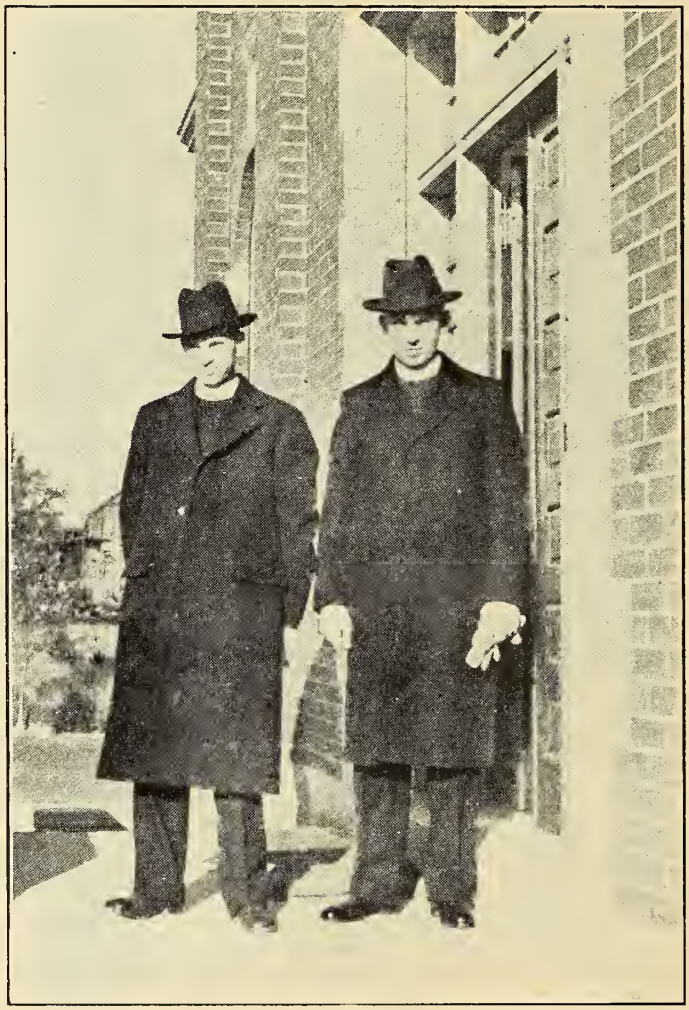
MISSION INTEREST

Mission Sunday for 1932 has come and gone. In preparation for its worthy observance a letter was sent to all the directors of the Pontifical Society for the Propagation of the Faith by its President, Archbishop Salotti, and through them to all Catholics, "reminding them of the beauty and significance" of mission-work and insisting on "the supernatural motives which should urge everybody . . . to participate in the most noble of all apostolates." We hope, and we believe, that this annual day of prayerful co-operation and propaganda on behalf of Catholic Missions is going to show results as the years go by. It is "CHINA'S" big task—and humbly we say it—to help keep before the minds of Catholics in Canada and Newfoundland the efforts of foreign missionaries and their crying need for more helpers in the Field Afar and more generous support from Catholics "at home". We feel that it is too much to expect that there will come a day when such "propaganda" as we are privileged to assist in will be entirely unnecessary; too much to expect that a time will come when Catholics everywhere will regard assistance to the foreign missions as a natural consequence of their own possession of Faith. We must go on month after month pleading the cause of the missions and trying to awaken in the hearts of our people an understanding sympathy for the plight of hundreds of millions of fellow human-beings who are without the knowledge that leads to eternal salvation.

What a consoling thing it would be if every day in the year could be termed a "Mission Day" for all of us as far as our circumstances permit. The words of Archbishop Salotti serve the useful purpose of bringing to our notice the vast possibilities for missionary advancement when we all begin to realize the spiritual power that is ours, and which can be used to bring down blessings on the mighty work of the Foreign Missions. "At the foot of the altar, in the presence of our Eucharistic Lord, let all Catholics meet and prepare for apostolic work. Through prayer rising from every quarter of the globe, together with Holy Communion, the faithful will be fired with zeal for the growth and increase of the Mystical Body of Christ, i.e., the Church, which is the specific object of the work of the missionaries who toil until death overtakes them in foreign lands.

"That is also the object of the prayers which Catholics should offer up to God. They should beseech Him to enlighten every mind with Faith in Christ. They should ask Him to unite all nations with their diverse races and tongues into one people who will adore one and the same God and profess one religion. The more fervent and widespread the prayers offered up the more speedy and complete will be the universal reign of Christ.

"The faithful should learn the beauty of that evangelical truth that has transformed nations and renewed the world. They should understand this sacred duty of the Church to spread the Gospel. Let all learn that by the sacrifices of the missionaries seeds of new life are sown in pagan soil and the hopes of Christendom are raised, because the world was not created to live in vice and error, but to rise to the heights of Faith and light that purify and elevate the soul.



"May every Christian become a zealous worker and propagandist of the missionary ideal, resolved to fight the good fight by word and action."

We may be prejudiced in the matter, but it is our conviction that too many Catholics are lacking in interest and charity towards their brethren who are wandering far from God; they forget that Christ their Saviour is to be served in His desolate ones, especially in the souls that are most abandoned on earth —the wandering sheep of paganism. They fail to realize the depths of the agony which rent His Sacred Heart as He hung on a cross bleeding and dying for the souls of men. They read or hear of the thousands of souls who die in pagan lands every day without ever knowing the One True God, and the figures have no meaning for them. Yes, there are too many Catholics who go their way forgetting that those abandoned souls have a claim upon them on every ground on which they themselves hope for life eternal through Christ. In China alone there are almost half a billion pagans—suffering, heavily-laden human souls. Men and women and children, living and dying ignorant of the Cross of salvation—and too many of us go our way forgetting.

Missionaries Leave for Chuchow

THAT events in connection with the Missions have a strong appeal to our Catholic people was well demonstrated on Sunday night, October 16th, when a huge congregation filled St. Michael's Cathedral, Toronto, to witness the Ceremony of Departure which marked the official sending forth of Reverend Fathers McGillivray and McNabb as missionaries to China.

Singing a beautiful motet the boys of St. Michael's chancel choir led the procession from the sacristy. It was indeed an inspiring sight as the seminarians and priests made their way through the aisles of the crowded Cathedral, with the two young missionaries preceding their Excellencies, the Bishop of Hebron, Rt. Rev. Alex. MacDonald, D.D., and the Most Rev. Archbishop of Toronto, Neil McNeill, D.D., who officiated at the Ceremony. Entering the sanctuary, the Archbishop intoned the "Veni Creator", which was continued by the Seminary choirs of St. Augustine's and St. Francis Xavier's under the baton of Father Ronan. At the conclusion of the congregational singing of "Come, Holy Ghost", Reverend Dr. Joseph Ryan, Rector of St. Mary's Pro-Cathedral, Hamilton, preached the farewell sermon, a forcefully eloquent discourse on the "Triumph of the Church". Going back over the ages to the very foundation of the Church, and tracing its institution and its works, the reverend speaker pointed out the strikingly missionary character of God's church as she spread to the ends of the earth, whilst she endured attacks and persecution from within and without and successfully overcame them all. Today the Church is being persecuted and hindered, yet she goes on to newer and greater triumphs; when she is being refused and despised in Spain and Mexico and Russia, her faithful sons lessen not their efforts, but carry the Truth to far-away nations, and those who were fortunate to be present at the departure ceremony were witnesses of another triumph for the propagation of our holy Faith. It was a triumph for the Church in Canada to have more of her sons leave for the foreign missions; it was a triumph for the young priests about to realize their great ambition; and it was a triumph for their seminary to see such fruits of its establishment. To the vast congregation and to the thousands who were "listening-in" all over Canada, Dr. Ryan appealed for whole-hearted support for the missions, emphasizing that further conquests of souls depended on the attitude of the individual Catholic. Feelingly addressing the missionaries, Dr. Ryan paid tribute to their sacrifice and heroism, bade them farewell, and asked the blessing of God on their journey and their future labours in Chuchow.

Father McNabb and Father McGillivray as they stepped out of the Seminary door to go to St. Michael's Cathedral for their Departure Ceremony.

The departing missionaries stood before the great Gothic altar and faced the congregation whilst their Seminary companions sang the touching farewell hymn. All present were visibly moved as the strains of the "Farewell, Brothers! Farewell!" penetrated to the farthest corner of the Cathedral.

The missionary crosses having been blessed, Archbishop McNeil placed them on the missionaries, and after they had repeated their oath of fidelity to the missions they lay prostrate before the altar as His Excellency charged them to go forth on their great mission of saving pagan souls. Then the Archbishop, who had been a member of the Episcopacy years before those missionaries were born, gave them his solemn blessing. The ceremony proper concluded with the singing of the Itinerarium, the official prayer of the Church for those about to undertake a journey. Solemn Benediction was given by His Excellency the Archbishop, assisted by members of China Mission Seminary, after which the congregation received the blessing of the two missionaries.

Fathers McNabb and McGillivray left for Vancouver on Sunday night, and sailed for China on the "Empress of Britain" on October 22nd. Early in December they will reach their new home in Chuchow.

The Seminary wishes to express its thanks and gratitude to the Rector and staff of St. Michael's Cathedral, to Father Ronan and the Choirs, and to Station CKGW, Toronto, through whose courtesy the ceremony was broadcast.

BIG DAYS for the YOUNGSTERS

By
REV. JOSEPH KING

IT IS a sad fact that many little Chinese babies are exposed to the horrible fate of being either drowned, suffocated, or abandoned to die of hunger and exposure by parents who have no compassion or pity for the weak and helpless little ones. Millions of pagan children, of course, escape that fate, and it is the usual custom to give a name to a baby before it has reached the age of one month. If it is a female child it is brought before the image of the god Nainai; if a male child, it is brought before the ancestral family tablets in order that its wee head may be shaved for the first time.

This event in the early life of the little pagan child is surrounded with much ceremonial; candles are lighted, incense is burned, a sacrifice of thanksgiving is offered, and the friends and relatives are cordially invited to partake of a banquet. The eats served at this banquet include pickled ginger and preserved eggs which have been dyed red. The guests present gifts to the child, and nothing is left undone which can add to the wee one's happiness.

When baby has reached the age of one year another sacrifice of thanksgiving is offered, and more presents are given by the guests who have assembled again to partake of a banquet, and this time to witness the important choice of a future occupation for the young person, and, strangely enough, the one-year-old is supposed to make the choice himself. Here's how he does it!

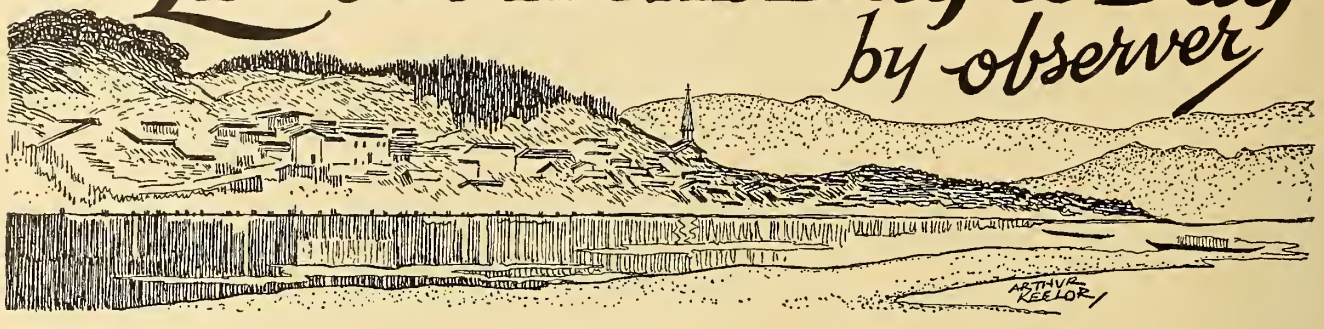
A large sieve resembling those which are used by the farmers to winnow grain is brought in and laid on a table whereon burning candles and smoking incense are already prepared. Into this sieve is placed a miscellaneous collection of articles —money scales, a pair of shoes, a mirror, a ruler, a Chinese pen, stationery, a few books and the much-used abacus. Baby is brought and placed right in the midst of all those things. Everyone present then steps up to have a "look see", for this is thought to be the all-important event in baby's life. The Chinese think that whatever article the little one first picks up from the sieve will determine the occupation or profession he will follow later on in life. In most cases baby tries to grab and hold everything at the same time.

Great as those two aforementioned days may be, the New Year festivals are for those almond-eyed tots, as well as for the grown-ups, the greatest of all celebrations. All dressed up in their finest, the boys strut out with their fathers to visit their friends. Those visits bring them many little gifts such as a few cents or a few trinklets.

Ordinarily the Chinese child is not the recipient of much attention. The boys are much more favored than their sisters; often parents may be seen looking after the baby boy in good style, but the lot of the baby girl is by no means an enviable one. This may be explained, perhaps, by the fact that only male children are eligible to continue the ancestral worship in the family. Naturally, parents do not set such value on girls who cannot continue this very dear form of remembrance when the parents are no more.

It saddens one's heart to see so many innocent little ones living in such an unhealthy pagan atmosphere. If only more of those dear, lovable young children could have the advantage of a sound Christian education how the number of Catholics in China would increase! Many of them who sincerely ask to be baptized have to be refused because their parents or guardians object. Would to God they might realize that human souls are so precious in God's sight.

When we meet our young friends on the street the majority of them call us by name; this is equivalent to a friendly salutation. For some reason or other there are a few who always appear to be frightened at us; quite a number attempt to repeat what they have heard us saying. For the most part they are real typical boys and girls full of fun and merriment. Many of the boys who attend our parish school soon learn to serve Holy Mass extremely well.



"Suffer the little children to come unto Me," is our Blessed Lord's request; dear friends back home, pray for us that we may be the humble instruments to lead many of China's pagan little ones to the source of those graces and blessings which are so necessary for all of us.

"Mm-m-m, 'tis good!"—and those happy little schoolboys in Lishui know it.

Lishui from Day to Day

by observer

A few days ago we decided to try to escape for a while from the summer heat, so a little excursion was arranged to the pagan temple at Neh Ming San, about half an hour's walk from the other side of the river. We prepared a lunch and started out to "make a day of it", Frs. Gignac, King, Venadam and myself and three of the "boys" from the mission. The first stage of the journey was a short trip across by ferry.

* * *

Fr. Editor, of course, will not be able to publish all the pictures we took on that occasion. I had to risk losing my passage to take one of a large live black pig (all the pigs we see are black) suspended from a long pole carried by two men. He was "legs up", fore and hind legs securely "lashed to the mast" and it seemed that about four or five miles of a sort of straw-rope bandage was slung around his back and up over the centre of the pole. After this description I dare say it will be necessary to publish the picture. (Necessary or not, you will see it on opposite page.—Ed.)

* * *

At the temple we were received very politely by the monks and a servant brought basins of hot water and small face towels so that we might refresh ourselves after our walk. This was followed by the usual bowls of tea. The place was delightfully cool in comparison with the Mission Residence, so we settled ourselves to do some reading and answer a few letters from the folks back home.

* * *

With the help of Father Gignac (our Chinese Professor) we deciphered a notice on the wall which informed us that to refrain from killing animals was the highest virtue. To offset this negative morality it urged the reader to buy animals and keep them alive and well cared for. It enumerated the following: Cows, horses, pigs, sheep, chicken, ducks, turtles and shrimps. It would be rather difficult, we thought, to keep them all.

In return for kindness to animals it promised long life, riches, children, freedom from trouble in court or with the soldiers and from death by fire or water. While economic conditions make it impossible to live up to this advice, the Chinese still regard kindness to animals, with the possible exception of the mongrel house-dog, as a very great virtue. In Hangchow, on the famous West Lake, we saw many water snakes that had been given their liberty by individuals desirous of obtaining some favor from the gods. In Shanghai the bird-sellers who congregate near the race course do a fairly good business with people who are anxious to liberate a thrush or a canary once in a while.

We spent the day in the temple, enjoyed two meals and received very courteous and efficient service from the boy whose task it is to see to the welfare of visitors, and returned home about sundown in a downpour of rain. The ferry was just returning as we reached the landing and we noticed that one of the passengers had a water buffalo "in tow", literally. The buffalo was swimming beside the boat and the passenger was holding him by the horns.

It wasn't what you'd call an exciting day, but at least it afforded escape from the heat for a while.

However, don't run away with the idea that life is too prosaic over here. Within the last month we have had two big events in town, movies and a travelling show. It was the first time movies ever had been shown in Lishui and the travelling salesman—for such he was—who operated a little hand-cranked movie machine must have cleaned up quite a harvest. He was a real nice man, didn't charge anything for his performance. All you had to do was to buy four packages of Red Lion cigarettes and you received a nice little red ticket admitting you to the show. And the man who ran the other show, a sort of miniature circus with one trained horse representing the animal section, was also out to help the people. As a side line he carried the most wonderful medicines, which were yours for a mere consideration.

Well, they're here at last. We thought for a while that 10,000 miles would be sufficient to place us out of reach of travelling salesmen, but no. "Step right up, ladies and gents." No haven so remote as to be free altogether from the gentlemen who fill "long felt wants" for humanity.

* * *

We didn't attend the movies but stood a treat for some of the boys and next morning after breakfast we asked one of them to tell us all about it. He was wild-eyed with excitement as he recounted the adventures of our hero and the many tight spots from which it seemed there was no possible means of escape. We could have told him to put his money on the hero, come what may, but he told us that for a while things really looked bad.

Our hero, by the way, was just a rugged, honest Chinese without an enemy in the world. One day, for some reason known only to the producers, he took his wife for a little stroll right into the middle of a bandit stronghold. When all seemed lost he knocked over six armed men, grabbed a horse, and taking his wife under his arm, leaped into the saddle. On all sides his way was barred by fierce looking bandits armed to the teeth, but urging his noble steed he charged right into the guns of the enemy. Five more bit the dust even as the echoes of his horse's hoofs were dying away. I forget how many he killed altogether, but anyway, the boys got a great thrill out of it and agreed that honesty was always the best policy.

We shudder to think of what might happen if the market over here were opened up for some of the old serials of twenty years ago, now reposing in film cans somewhere in America. I dare say it will come in time—not, let us hope, in our time.

Of late we have been awakened at all hours of the night by the sound of exploding fire-crackers and screaming bugles accompanied by the rattle of drums and sound of many voices. This means that many people are dying and it is so because of an epidemic of cholera which has been raging in many parts of China for the past few months. The poor people are fighting it as best they know how and when a patient becomes seriously ill, the bugles and fire-crackers are brought into play as a last resource. What a hope! Might as well try to stop a forest fire with a brass band!

Read Fr. Stringer's article (on page 155) for details of this procedure. The person he calls the "High Ejector" is in great demand these days — or rather, nights. And it is bad throughout the district, too. That we gathered from Fr. Morrison, Pastor of Sungyang, who has just arrived for retreat. "Must be a lot of sickness around", he remarked last night. "We passed dozens of straw boats on the river, high and dry".

* * *

At this point you will want to know what possible connection there can be between sickness and straw boats high and dry along the river. Well, it is just a step further in the superstitious means employed to drive the devil away from sick people. When they feel he has been ejected by the means indicated above they prepare a nice little straw boat, about two feet long, fit it up with mast and sail, put some rice and watermelon seeds aboard as food for the devil and then set it adrift on the river. He is supposed to take his departure in the boat.

* * *

Father Morrison was quite casual about it. All our veterans get that way. To us the idea of the straw boat was quite novel but they all tell us that we are approaching the stage when everything will be commonplace. Then there will be nothing to write about and Observer may have to cancel his page, and that will be one break for readers of CHINA. (A bad break which we hope they will not have to experience for a long, long time, Observer.—Ed. Note.)

WOMAN in CHINA

Infancy
Education
Foot-binding
Marriages

IN China a bow and arrow or a little red flag is frequently seen outside the door of houses in cities and villages. The bow and arrow denotes the birth of a boy—da-hi, or "great joy"; the little red flag tells of the coming of a girl—siou-hi, or "little joy". This seems to be a very ancient custom, for we already find mention of it in the book Li-tyi, the Book of Rites. On the sixth day after a birth, relatives and friends may expect to be invited; for the birth of a son is always celebrated with great rejoicings, and sometimes also, that of the first daughter; but never is there celebration in the event of subsequent female offspring. About eight days later, a simple name is bestowed upon the child by the grandparents or, in case of their death, by the mother herself. The boys generally receive names with some superstitious meaning—for instance, Lin-dshu ("Stay here"), Shuan-dshu ("tied up"), or the like. The boy is also given the name of Kui-nu (or Yato) which means girl. This is done to deceive the evil spirits who like to seize the boys (so it is believed, because the people themselves also prefer them). The girls sometimes receive pretty names, such as Tsuin (Pretty), Mei (Beautiful); but in other instances they are given contemptible ones, as, for instance, Bien (Crushed one), Loeng (Abandoned one) and many another.

Although the girls are not so welcome as the boys, their parents, nevertheless, love them and watch over them. As far as my observation during many years has extended, infanticide or exposure of new-born girls is by no means customary among the rural population. True, exposed children are sometimes found, but I believe these are, in most cases, illegitimate children. Among these, boys also are found. It may also happen that parents, in case of great poverty, will try to rid themselves of their new-born child, but in most cases of these instances they try to find someone to adopt the baby. In the cities, the custom of child murder may exist, but I believe that here, too, there is question only of such as are born out of wedlock, who find no place in the family.

Educating the Chinese Girl

The education of the girls, like that of the boys, is very meager. The parents do not trouble about the bringing up of their children. As soon as the little ones are able to walk, they run about and play with the older ones. The parents see to it that they have enough to eat, and provide them with warm clothing for the winter. Otherwise, they do not bother about them. In summer the girls sometimes wear a small embroidered apron and, when they grow up, trousers. In winter, they wear dresses all wadded, and gay calico dresses on feast-days.

At the age of seven or eight, the girls assume the office of nursery-maids in the family. All day long, these girls may be seen dragging about a baby brother or sister, at one time carrying it on their back, at another placing it on the bare ground. But mother need not fear, for baby is in good care when in charge of its prudent little sister. When they are a little older, they share in the cares of the household. Since the introduction of the hair-net industry in many places in Shantung the little girls are also employed in this work. But the general occupation of the little girls in Shantung is the plaiting of straw braid. In East Shantung, the women and girls are occupied all day with making lace. Usually, several of them gather together under the shade of a tree, or at the open door, and work very diligently.

Foot-binding

The fashion of foot-binding is general in China. As early as the period toward the end of the Tsin dynasty, edicts were promulgated against this deplorable practice, and a fine placed upon it, but all was of no avail. Lately, schools for girls have been opened in many places, in which the girls and young ladies are emancipated from this ancient custom. A few years ago the students of the province of Honan sent out a proclamation in which they declared they would not marry any girl with crippled feet. In this way the custom is gradually being abolished among the wealthy. But the rural population still continue to practice it. At the age of six, the mother compresses the feet of her little girl with tight bandages that hinder the growth. This cruel process is extremely painful, and the poor child cries day and night. Often the little toes rot off, and not seldom the children become lame. The health of the children generally suffers much from the want of proper exercise during this period. But the mothers are inexorable on this point, and console the girls with the prospect of a good marriage and a good mother-in-law in consequence of their pretty feet. After about three years, the pain ceases and the bandages are removed from the feet, from which all the life has been squeezed out. The girls walk on their heels; but they do not find so much difficulty as might be supposed. In general, they are quite at ease, and run and play about merrily. In rainy weather they sink deep into the mud with their stumps that serve them for feet. The ordinary Chinese still thinks it excessively vulgar to have large feet, and the girls who have not had their feet cramped up in their infancy find it no easy matter to get married.

Four young Chinese brides who were married a year ago at Ningpo. They and their husbands were orphans raised by the Holy Childhood Association.

How They Are Married

The marriage of her daughter is a matter of great solicitude for the mother. She desires an "eligible" for her daughter; furthermore, she wishes to have her near home, yet not in the same village. It is not uncommon to betroth children in their early youth — sometimes, shortly after their birth. On the other hand, parents often wait until it is possible to effect a really desirable alliance. In East Shantung the parents expect a large sum of money from the bridgegroom. Young widows are sold by their parents-in-law. People of rank do not accept any money but presents only. A go-between, in most cases a woman, is generally employed for the preliminary arrangements. Much cheating is done in these bargains over marriageable merchandise. There is a story told of a go-between who wrote, ostensibly in praise of the beauty of the bride-to-be: "Raven hair no pock-marks." In Chinese writing no marks of punctuation are used; therefore, the legend was understood as being intended to read thus: "Raven hair; no pock-marks." But when the bride-groom came to look upon his spouse for the first time unveiled, he discovered that she was bald and that she was literally covered with pock-marks. Astounded and enraged over the deception which had been practiced upon him by the mediatrix in the affair he accused this go-between of falsification. However, the latter merely laughed, and replied that she had stated nothing but the exact truth in the matter—namely, that she had written: "Raven hair—no! POCK-MARKS."

When the bargain is concluded, the parties are affianced. Each party receives a copy of the marriage-contract, and neither can thereafter draw back. The bride-groom is bound, moreover, to possess his bride, living or dead. In the event of the bride's death before her marriage, her body is claimed by the groom, and is buried from his house. In the district of Antchiu the daughter of an opulent family had been betrothed as a mere child to the son of a rich neighbor. But when the time for the marriage arrived, it was found that the bride was afflicted with leprosy. The family of the bride-groom now wanted to declare the marriage contract null and void. But the bride insisted upon its ratification. A lawsuit followed, in which the bride won the case. In the meantime, the bridegroom had already entered marriage with another. But in spite of this, the bride was taken to his house. But after a short time she died. The mother-in-law, to escape the annoyance of her presence, gave her poison that killed her.

Usually, it is the mother who makes the first advances and arranges the articles of the contract and the rest. The young people are not consulted, nor are they at liberty

THIS OFTEN HAPPENS
When one of the students gets a letter from the priests in Chuchow it soon becomes common property, and one is lucky to be "next" on page umpteen as it makes the "rounds".

FROM OUR MAIL

Dear Father:—

Herewith one dollar renewal subscription for two years to your splendid publication. Our dear Canadian priests and nuns in that far-off Mission are brought very close to us at home each month when our gayly covered copy of "China" arrives. The contributions from those "at the front" seem like personal letters to each of us, and the spirit of courage and optimism which they breathe is indeed a lesson we can take to heart in these trying days. I would not willingly miss a single copy of "China".

I am enclosing also one dollar as contribution to the work of the Seminary.

Sincerely,
E. M. L.

HAVE A SMOKE?

The few of us who make use of the privilege of smoking during recreation period had a rare treat recently when Father Venadam sent from Lishui sample packages of some twenty different brands of cigarettes which may be purchased there. The Chinese certainly "know their smokes", or at least they give them some fancy names. We can't even hazard a guess as to which brand is "kindest to your throat" or which one the inhabitants of Lishui would "walk a mile" to secure, but you can picture some stalwart walking into a store and asking for a package of "Rats", "Lobsters", or "Lucky Birds". Our mission museum is the richer now by samples of the following cigarette brands from Lishui: "Lieu Ma", "Tatung", "Swallow", "Capital", "My Dear", "Ruby Queen", "Fragrance", "Tse Tsung", "Lucky Bird", "Red Seal", "Hatamen", "Hung May", "Golden Glow", "Cloud and Dragon", "Pearls", "The Rat", "Peony", "Lobster", and "Red Lion".

WOMAN IN CHINA

to marry according to the choice of their heart. Yet, in most cases, the marriages turn out to be happy.

On the day marked for the marriage celebration, the bridegroom, surrounded by musicians and men carrying banners, leaves his father's house in a gaily decorated palaquin, to call for the bride. The bride, in another palaquin with gay curtains, covered with brilliantly colored silks and ribbon streamers, awaits him. The whole procession, considerably augmented by men carrying tables, chairs, boxes, and all kinds of household utensils, moves away. The bride is adorned like a queen. When the procession has once more reached the house of the bridegroom, he alights; and the bride, led by two women, follows him into the court. Here, on a table, incense and offerings are burnt. The bridegroom, led by his father and accompanied by his relatives, kneels down before the table and prostrates his face, nine times, to the ground, to "adore heaven and earth". The bride stands back of him, but does not prostrate herself. Such is the ceremonial of a pagan marriage. Afterwards, the bridegroom conducts the bride to the bridal chamber. Here he climbs on the bed and walks up and down on it several times. The mother-in-law then rolls a small bundle of straw into the room, and places it on the bed. In some places the father-in-law rolls a round piece of wood on the bed, and afterwards carries it away in his arms like a baby. The bride now sits on the edge of the bed while the bridegroom goes out to rejoice with his friends who await him in the men's apartment. During the whole day the bride observes silence, and must subject herself to the taunts of her neighbors who have free access to the room, all day, to satisfy their curiosity. In some places it is customary to throw bran at the bride. Bran means Futsi ("happy children"); by the way of a pun. In other places chestnuts and prunes are placed in the pillow and in the spreads—all of which things are intended to have reference to progeneration. In the evening, finally the bride is relieved from the annoyance of the "nau-hi-fang"—that is to say, the tumult of the bridal chamber. During the course of the evening the husband returns, and a dainty dinner is set before them. This is their first meal together.

"DEVIL-EJECTORS"

By REV. D. STRINGER

"Our Motto: Service with Absolute Bedlam."—"Hear our Noise, Second to None." These would serve as good advertising slogans for the class of gentlemen I will designate as "Devil Ejectors". The term may not be found in a dictionary, but it describes fairly accurately a "business" not uncommon in this part of the Celestial Empire.

First, let us find a sick person. Then let us presuppose that he has in vain gulped down, or chewed, or inhaled, or rubbed on quantities of cure-all medicines before he permits himself the luxury of the services of Devil-Ejectors & Co. Thus, the stage being set, let us settle down to view the performance.

From afar come the strains of rattling boilers, screeching circus-like thingimabobs, tooting of horns—all blended together in the harmony (?) we love to let others hear. As the "Ejectors" come into view we notice at once that one individual keeps apart from the others; this is none other than the "High Ejector". Preceded by a banner-bearer and the "orchestra" he walks along, serious of mien, crowned with a conical hat, and evidently conscious of the furore he is creating.

Crash! Bang! The all-night programme has commenced, regardless of whether the sick person is already in view or not. I saw the "Ejectors" go to work once on a man who lived just across the street from us. To all appearances the poor old fellow was just about due to join his ancestors. As medicine had failed him (and his mind had almost failed, too) the logical conclusion was that the devil was in him. Entering the sick room the High Ejector takes his place in the middle and the members of the "orchestra" range themselves along the walls, plenty of elbow room being allowed for each one. The High Ejector begins his incantations, shouting a sentence or a stanza. This is followed by a blast (literally) from the musicians. Another stanza, another blast; then an ensemble with such noises as can be made only by pounding boilers, rattling pans, and thumping drums all at once; whirling, gesticulating, and performing all sorts of antics, the High Ejector attempts to lay hands on the luckless devil. Suddenly, silence. Again the noisy pantomine is repeated, and so on all through the night. If the devil could be disheartened at the noise and hence flee from the sick person, no doubt this form of healing would be at a premium everywhere. In the case I mention, the sick man took it all as peacefully as if he were sleeping through it.

Some time in the early hours of the morning the High Ejector succeeds in laying his hands on the troublesome devil and everyone then hustles outside the town to the accompaniment of noisy drum-pounding and horn-blowing. Just how they know when it's time to "grab" the devil or get him on the run I couldn't tell you, and I wouldn't like to ask embarrassing questions. Anyhow, the sick man got well; the devil knows when to give in so that he may more surely ensnare his victims for the final great struggle.

A BEAUTIFUL SPOT IN CHINA.

LITTLE FLOWER'S ROSE GARDEN

Edited by FATHER JIM

CONDITIONS OF MEMBERSHIP

The only conditions of membership in the Rose Garden are: (1) To say every day the Prayer for the Conversion of China; (2) To go to Holy Communion once a month for the Intention of Missionary Vocations. Certificates and pins will be sent to all members.

"Better late than not at all", so I offer congratulations, sincere and hearty, to Jeanne O'Malley, Eastview, Ont., on winning a $2,000.00 C.W.L. Scholarship. Jeanne and her sister have always manifested keen interest in our Club, being among our early members, and we are all very delighted at her wonderful success. . . . Kathleen Hollohan, Black Head, Nfld., thinks Father Jim "not fair" to leave her name out when her two sisters got mentioned. Here you are, Kathleen, and thanks for the stamps you sent. . . . Glad to hear again from Ita Denver, Dundas, Ont. . . . Another old friend, George Nicholas, writes to say he has moved from Beiseker to Bow Island, Alta., and sent along a subscription to "China". He tells me his parish priest saw me in Ireland. I have been mistaken many a time for an Irishman, George, but never had the good fortune to set my foot on the Emerald Isle. Perhaps I will, sometime, and maybe I will meet some of those Irish "buds" who joined our Club within recent months. . . . Marcella Doyle, Box 190, Arthur, Ont., takes the pen-name "Teresa" and asks the buds to pray for a favour she would like granted. . . . Patricia Disley writes on behalf of the pupils of Senior III., St. Aloysius School, Sudbury, Ont., and says "we have already formed our Little Flower Club to help the missions by our prayers and Communions, and our pennies will find their way into the China Mission mite-box." Twelve more boys and twenty-one girls gives Sudbury a large membership. Welcome, and congratulations on your mission work. . . . Mary Walsh, 32 Henry St., St. John's, takes "Rose" as a pen-name, and says she always likes to read the Rose Garden pages when "China" arrives. Good for you, Mary. . . . Norma Mills, Toronto, would like Father Jim to visit her school. Perhaps I have been there, Norma, "in disguise". I have not forgotten to pray for your intentions, and if I ever catch up on my "gardening" I may answer your letter. . . . Mary Anita Flaherty and her cousin, Annie Flaherty, Alton, Ont., joined our Club on the Feast of the Little Flower. I surely enjoyed their newsy letters. They asked for pen-pals, of course. . . . Kathleen Kervin ("Rose Red") and her sister, Eileen, are interested in the Missions. Writing from 150 Brock St., Oshawa, Eileen hopes there is room for her in our "Garden". Sure thing, Eileen, and now I won't have to tell Kathleen why I omitted her name before. . . . Walter Reid, 191 Copeland St., North Bay, heard a lot about China when Father Fraser spoke at North Bay, and Walter says all the boys and girls up there are answering Father Fraser's appeal for prayers for the missions. . . . Here Father Jim wishes to apologize to those who have had to wait some considerable time for their badges and certificates, and he explains the delay by saying that the long summer months brought much mail as usual, but he being away from the Seminary, it had to remain unopened. Then it was a case of "first come, first served." Even the most recent members will have their certificates, etc., when this issue of "China" reaches them. Many of the buds who frame their certificates and wear their badges to school are doing a lot to spread devotion to the Patron-

Some of the other Marys in the Club would do well to satisfy her longing. . . . Margaret Gerrier is a new member, and she says she just must have a letter from Mary King, of Long Hr., Nfld. Margaret's address is 19 East Street, Summerside, P.E.I. . . . One of our most faithful correspondents is Mary McAskill, of Mt. Stewart, P.E.I. Mary tells me she likes writing letters, and begs some of the eighteen-year-old buds to write to her. "I see there are an awful lot of buds trying to find out who you are. Well, I have that over, anyhow." With this "bait" Mary should catch lots of enquiries. Your picture will be published some time. Thanks for sending it along. . . . Margaret McPhee, New Waterford, N.S., and Kay Delory, 158 Bartlett Ave., Toronto, are new members looking for pen-pals. . . . From Montreal comes a letter from an adult: "My little nephew, one of your 'buds', is so enthusiastic about your page that many of us have become intensely interested in the good work of your Club and offer congratulations on the success it has achieved in arousing mission-interest among the young people."

Dear Buds:

I am more than pleased with the large numbers who are daily adding their names to our Rose Garden membership. Things are going along fine, and you have kept me so busy that I am not yet caught up on my work. As a "gardener" the approach of the cold weather will not mean "unemployment" for me at all, and I am glad.

Perhaps many of you had the privilege of "listening-in" on the sermon at St. Michael's Cathedral when Fathers McGillivray and McNabb left for China last month. They are somewhere out on the great Pacific Ocean now, and I am sure when they reach China they can count on the everyday assistance which all you little missionaries are going to give them by your prayers and Holy Communions.

This month of November the Church asks us to keep in mind the souls of our dead. Pray often for the Souls in Purgatory and you will be storing up merits for yourself against the time when you will need someone to pray for you. Remember especially the "buds" who have died since our "Garden" first began.

Good wishes to you all from

FATHER JIM.

A LETTER FROM FATHER VENINI

To His Little Missionary Friends Who Read "China"

I AM sure that after having studied China in your geography classes you are all familiar with this celestial kingdom and will be interested in hearing something about the peoples, customs and beliefs. To most people in the Western World China is a far-away land of such strange customs that one is inclined to believe very readily tales told concerning its inhabitants that have no foundation in fact. But we do rightly think of it as a land of mighty walled cities, of lofty pagodas, of quaint, curved temple roofs, resting upon brilliantly colored bracket cornices, of curious customs and strange products, precious silks and satins, fragrant teas, beautiful porcelains and lacquered wares.

REV. JOSEPH VENINI,
Pastor of Kankou, Che., China.

We may think of it, too, as a land of topsy turvydom, where one's surname comes first and christian name last, where your friends when they meet you, shake their own hands rather than yours, where left, instead of right, is the side of honor, where one begins to read at the back of the book rather than the front and finds the "foot" notes at the top of the page. It is a land where dessert comes first at the feast and soup last, where men dress in silk and satin gowns of brilliant hues, and where, until the recent revolution, they wore their hair in long braids. This description of China will give some idea of the difference between their ways and yours.

Weird Beliefs

The beliefs of the people are still stranger. The ordinary Catholic school boy, who studies his five-cent catechism well, knows more and has far clearer ideas about the creation of the world than any of the dark-haired sons of Han. According to some Chinese historians, the first man, called Pankoo, came into existence some two hundred thousand years ago. Others held that there were three kings who lived simultaneously and were the first inhabitants of our globe, and this no less than ninety-six million years ago. From these three monarchs descended others who taught the people the use of wood, fire, iron, etc. The idea of one God, Creator of all things, does not even get passing mention. The false gods of mud and clay have usurped His place. There are a great many sects among the Chinese, followers of Budda, of Confucius and of Tao-tsu. Some profess not to adore idols, but one of the first things that attracted my attention after arriving in China was the great number of temples with their hideous idols. Once we visited one of the largest of them in Chuchow and amongst the idols we noticed one particularly ugly black fellow. Our guide told us that it was erected to the memory of a foreign gentleman who died in China. He must have been a negro. The origin of these idols is told in many fictitious stories. A few of the most popular of them are Foo, Kwan in, Tsow chen, Tchen hwang and Long chen, and I shall tell you something about them in next month's "China".

THE WRITER.

When Father Fraser returned to China in 1925, with him were Father Serra and Father Joseph Venini. Father "Joe", as we all know him, began his missionary work as pastor of Lungchuang. Recently he has been appointed to the newly-opened parish of Kankou. In times past the readers of "China" have enjoyed articles written by Father Venini, and now the younger readers are being especially favoured. After you read his letter I want you to stop a moment and say one Hail Mary for Father Venini that God may bless his mission labours.

NONSENSE

The sailor was recounting his experiences to the dear old lady, when she interrupted him.

"But what rank did you hold?" she asked.

"Ship's optician, lady."

"Ship's optician! I never knew there was such a rank in the navy. What did your duty consist of?"

"Scraping the eyes out of the potatoes," the sailor replied.

"I wish you'd come down off your high horse," her husband growled.

"Oh, Bill," retorted his ultra-modern wife, "why do you insist on using such old-fashioned expressions? Why don't you learn to motorize your thinking?"—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Her Father (sternly) — "Young man, do you think you can support my daughter on forty dollars a week?"

Nervy Suitor—"I'm willing to try, sir—if that's the best you can do."

A man journeying homewards in the early hours found a belated reveller vainly endeavoring to insert his key into the keyhole.

After the eighth attempt the man approached and said: "May I assist you?"

"Shertainly—hic—not," replied the man with the key. "S'out of question."

He returned without success to his attack on the keyhole.

"Well, I'll knock for you?"

"Mos—mos — hic — decidedly not," said he of the key; "let 'em wait."

"I've just shot a dog."

"Was he mad?"

"Well, he wasn't very pleased."

A little fellow sat on a doorstep crying bitterly. Presently a sympathetic old lady came along.

"What's the matter, little boy?" she asked.

"Got my new pants covered with dust," sobbed the boy.

"But they're clean now, dear," continued the woman.

"I know they are," wailed the lad.

"Then why do you still cry, child?"

"Cos mother wouldn't let me take 'em off while she beat the dust out."

Irritable Old Man: "Say, does this car always make this racket?"

Chauffeur: "No, sir; only when it's running!"

An author says he would not enjoy smoking a cigar which he had smuggled into this country. Duty before pleasure?

Landlady: "Yes, those are ancient fossils on the wall over there."

Guest (sampling steak and handing it back): "Yes, you can hang this one back again."

A Spaniard, an American, and a Scotsman were discussing what they would do if they awoke one morning to discover that they were millionaires.

The Spaniard said he would build a bull ring.

The American said he would go to Paris and have a good time.

The Scotsman said he would go to sleep again to see if he could make another million.

"Could you help a poor man who has just come out of prison?"

"You should be ashamed to own it."

"I didn't own it, mum. I was only a lodger."

James came to a word he could not pronounce.

"Barque," prompted the teacher.

James snickered.

"Barque," exclaimed the teacher harshly.

James (obediently): "Bow-wow."

Mrs. A.: "How can Mrs. Bromley afford to keep three servants?"

Mrs. B.: "Oh, she plays bridge with them every Saturday evening and wins back all their wages."

A sailor stuck his head in the door of the public bar and said: "Does anybody here want a fight?"

Nobody said a word and the sailor repeated: "Does anybody here want a fight?"

One man broke the silence and said: "No, Jack; no one wants to fight in here."

"That's good," said the sailor. "Then it's safe to come in."

Modern Village Smith.

Under a spreading chestnut tree
  A stubborn auto stands;
The smith, an angry man is he,
  With trouble on his hands.
The carburetor seems to be
  The cause of all his woe;
He tightens half a dozen bolts,
  But still it doesn't go.
He sits beside the road to give
  His brain a chance to cool,
He ponders on his training
  In the correspondence school.
And then he starts his job once more,
  And just by chance 'tis seen,
The cause of all his trouble is He's out of gasoline.

—Schoolmate.

Teacher: "And you don't know which letter comes after 'H'?"

Willie: "No, Miss."

Teacher: "What have I on each side of my nose?"

Willie: "It looks like powder from here, Miss."

Little Eric wanted to go to the swimming baths with the bigger boys, but his teacher, thinking him too small, refused permission.

"It wouldn't be safe," he said.

"But I'm a good swimmer, sir," said the boy.

"Can you swim a length?" asked teacher.

The boy did not appear to grasp his meaning, so the teacher, seeking to make it clear, said:

"Can you swim from your desk to the door?"

"Oh, no, sir!" Eric replied. "There's no water there."

"Man Proposes," and woman makes him stick to it.

"What! Another new dress? However do you think I can find the money to pay for it?"

"Darling—I'm not inquisitive."

"H'm! Severe headaches and pains in the neck. What is your age, madam?"

"Twenty-four, doctor."

"H'm! Memory affected, too!"

Mrs. Newly-Rich was recounting to an acquaintance the thrilling events of the night before, when the house had been burgled.

"As a matter of fact," she said, "we were eating our soup——"

"Then, of course," interrupted the candid friend, "none of you heard anything."

It isn't a woman always getting the last word that nettles a man; it's her delay in reaching it.

Teacher: "I must write your mother a note thanking her for this lovely apple."

Johnnie: "Would you mind thanking her for two, please."

"Now," said the hypnotist, "I shall make this man forget everything."

"Hold on," yelled a man in the back row, "he owes me $10."

Friend: "Say, there's a bunch of people outside waiting to be presented to you. Among them is a bishop who says he married you some time ago."

Film Actress: "Gee, I'm practically certain I never married a bishop.

A SUGGESTION for Your Charity-Giving during NOVEMBER

Why not give a donation to the HOLY SOULS BURSE in memory of your dear deceased relatives and friends?

This Burse now stands at $3,101 and needs $1,899 to be completed.

IF we had sufficient donations to our BURSE FUND our Seminary would become SELF-SUPPORTING

BURSES—What are they?

A BURSE is the sum of $5,000 given to the Seminary, at one time or in installments, which, being securely invested, produces sufficient revenue to support a student. The capital is not touched, but remains intact. Year after year the revenue from a single Burse would be used to educate a student. When he is ordained and goes to China as a missionary, another student would be educated, and then another, and so on indefinitely.

Those blessed with an abundance of this world's goods could spend to no better advantage than by becoming the Founder of a Burse for China Mission Seminary.

A Burse is absolutely the most worthwhile monument to leave behind to your memory. What greater good can you do with your money than guarantee a succession of missionary priests perpetually?

Even small donations will be gratefully received to help complete any of our present incomplete Burses.

Help us by sending donations to our BURSES, either to the Seminary or in care of the "CATHOLIC RECORD", London, Ontario

A Christmas Contrast

About all that's left to us of the disappearing year is the Feast of Christmas. And that means much to all of us. Even now, what people are pleased to call "the spirit of Christmas" is in the air, so to speak. We suppose that in a Christmas edition our readers expect to find some extra space devoted to the subject, but we are in the position of one whose chief interest concerns a land where there is very little of what we know as Christmas; true, we are writing for readers to whom December 25th is the "big day", and hence when we speak of the Feast we have no option but to stress those facts which give to it its real and true significance in our Catholic lives.

* * * * * *

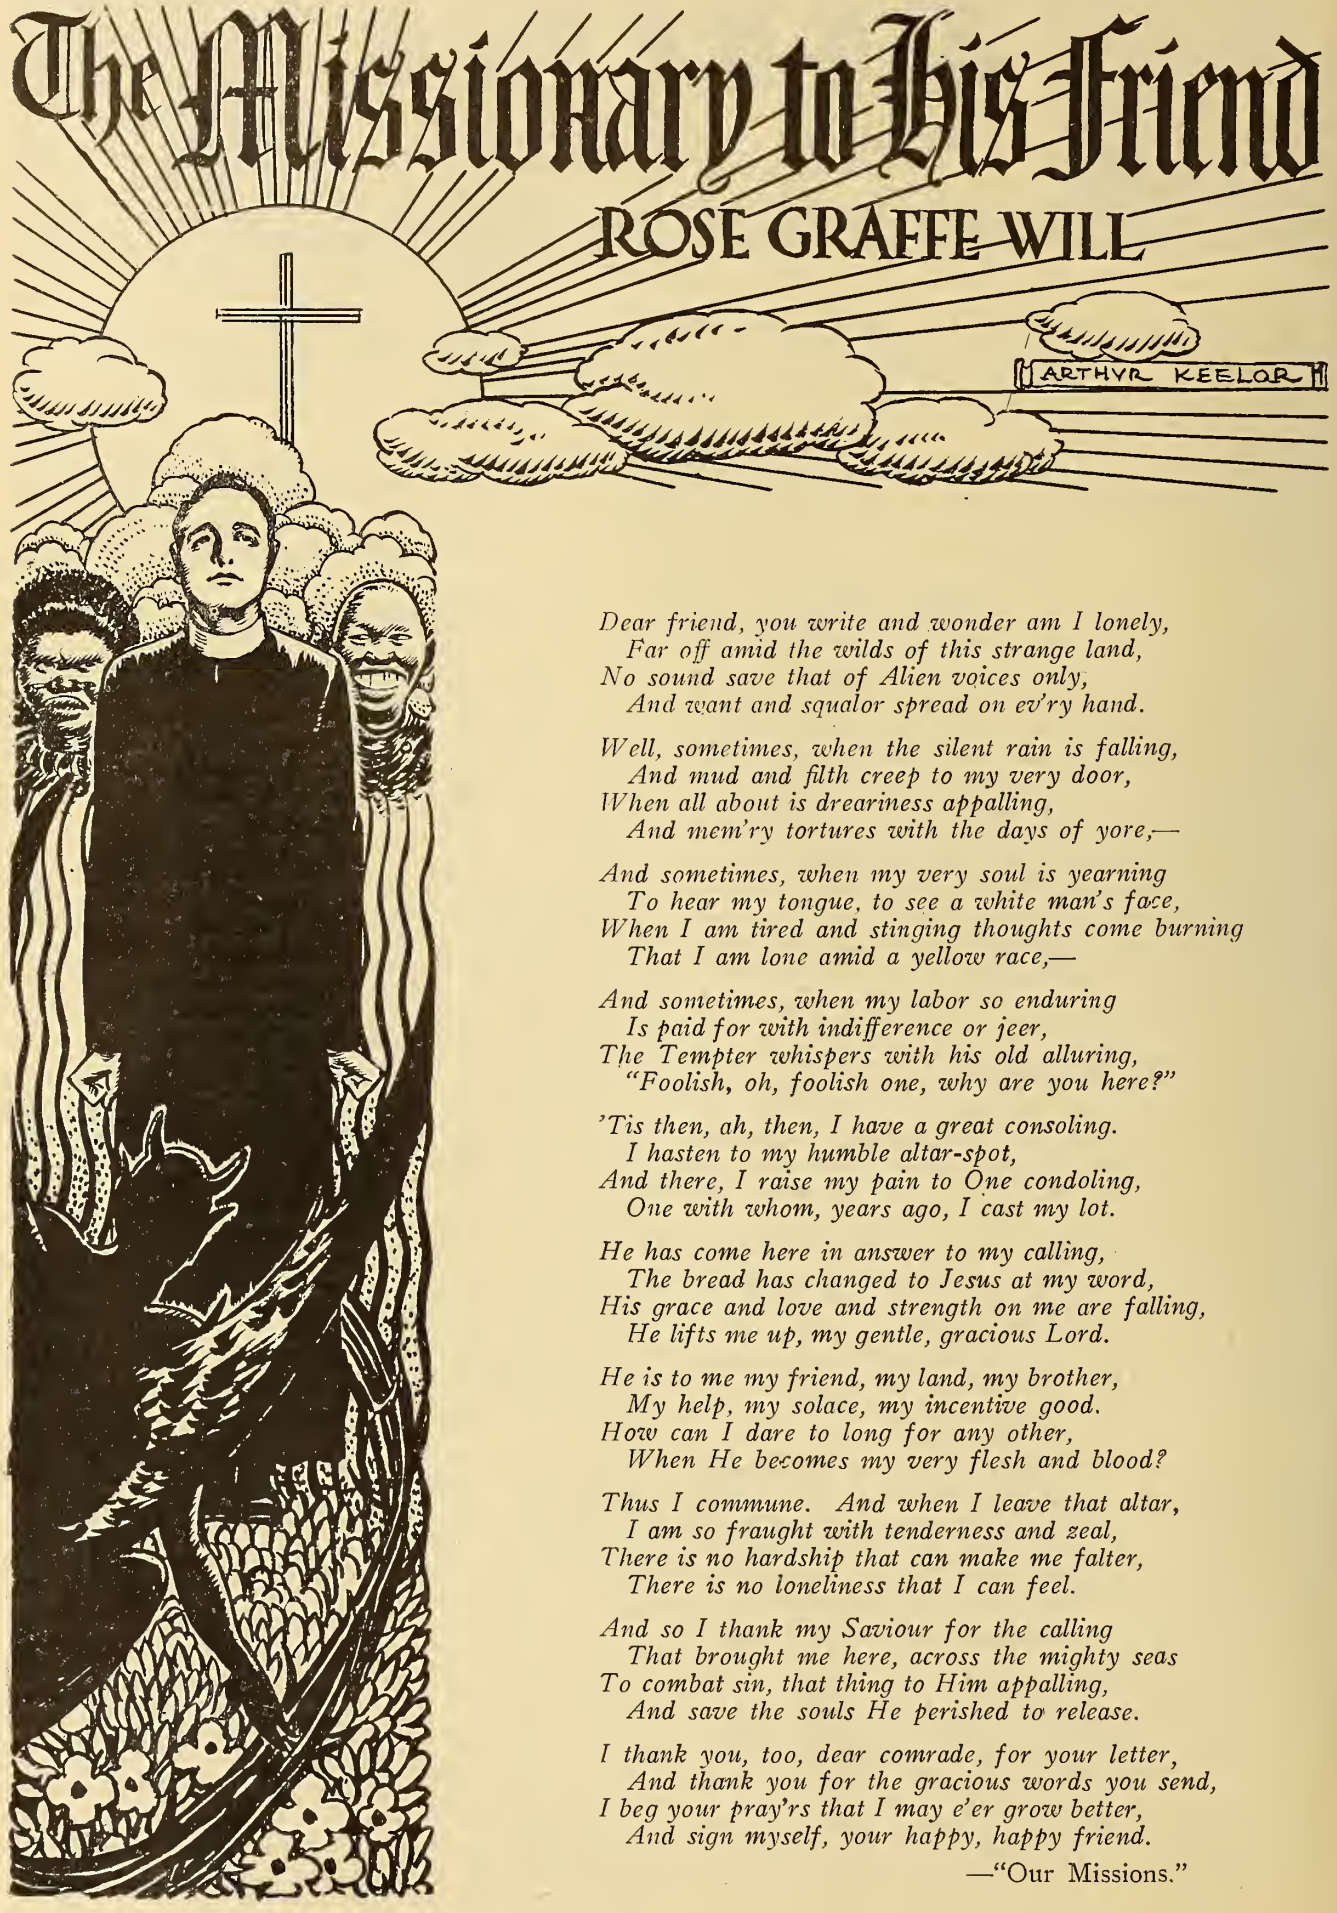
Beneath all the talking about Christmas, and all the writing about Chrismas, and all the celebrations and decorations incidental to the season, we really feel inclined to ask just how much consideration is being bestowed on its essential characteristics—its spiritual and Christian aspect. Surely it is but stating a truth to say that there are many—too many, alas!—who regard Christmas only as a time of increased commercial activity, just another holiday season that quickens the pulse of business, an occasion for having a "good time" as the world understands that phrase. Unfortunately, there are many to whom the Feast means just that, and nothing more. But we direct attention to the Gift which Christmas is meant to commemorate.

* * * * * *

To us the Nativity of the Lord, the Incarnation, means Redemption, for Christ was born to give us salvation by His death. He came to earth that we might get to Heaven, and the manifold helps He gives us on our journey are the fruits of that blessed first Christmas night. Our Faith, and all that it means to us and to the whole world, is the result of that first Coming of God to man, and if we set proper store on our priceless heritage we shall be mindful at this Holy Season of our sacred privileges and gifts. Unlike the inn-keepers of Bethlehem, we shall make our hearts and our homes a welcoming place for the Infant and His Mother, and as we welcome them our minds will instinctively turn to those millions of souls who are denied the benefits of Their coming, those millions of unhappy pagans who have yet to hear and hearken to "the tidings of great joy that shall be to all the people". Contrast our lot with theirs and we shall realize that we have something to be thankful for; and may the contrast bring us to the realization that we can help, and to the determination that we shall help, to bring Christmas and its Divine Gift even to far-off China, where so few adore the new-born King.

* * * * * *

To aid you in making the contrast, let the following words of Father Heneghen sink deeply into your mind. Writing in the Irish "Far East", he says:



"Shut your eyes for a moment to the countless blessings of faith by which you, who live in a Christian land, are surrounded. Pass along those crowded streets in a Chinese city, where the incense-stick burns before every home in honour of a cruel deity; hear in the heavy incense-laden air of the temples the prayers which these poor men and women, in ignorance and fear, are offering to the god. Those temple walls are soaked with cries of souls in anguish, with prayers uttered in despair of spirit, the cry of the human heart for its God and its Helper; but no prayers are said in the Name of Him through Whom alone salvation comes to men, no vision of a Mother of men floats in the gloom. Watch those people when death has come into their homes; look into those eyes, troubled by an immortal soul, which do not look beyond the morrow, and have never heard of a Saviour, kind and gracious, Who came for the sorrowing ones of earth.

"Those men and women in the city, those people toiling from morning till night in the fields—are all under the same doom; not one city, but thousands, not a hundred, but millions of souls in the same plight. Imagine the loneliness of a priest in this sea of paganism! The paganism of China envelops, grips and holds the soul in its embrace; here is the battleground for our Missionaries.

"Imagine yourself for one vivid moment living in some pagan land, and as you rise from your knees from this dream of horror before the Crib, thank God for the gift of Faith, but do not let the awful vision pass until you have burnt into your soul a mighty resolve to work and pray for the Missions. Prayers and sacrifices offered for the conversion of pagan souls will widen and deepen our own spiritual lives and make us more appreciative of the good things of Christ."

The Missionary to His Friend

ROSE GRAFFE WILL

Dear friend, you write and wonder am I lonely,
Far off amid the wilds of this strange land,
No sound save that of Alien voices only,
And want and squalor spread on ev'ry hand.

Well, sometimes, when the silent rain is falling,
And mud and filth creep to my very door,
When all about is dreariness appalling,
And mem'ry tortures with the days of yore,—

And sometimes, when my very soul is yearning
To hear my tongue, to see a white man's face,
When I am tired and stinging thoughts come burning
That I am lone amid a yellow race,—

And sometimes, when my labor so enduring
Is paid for with indifference or jeer,
The Tempter whispers with his old alluring,
"Foolish, oh, foolish one, why are you here?"

'Tis then, ah, then, I have a great consoling.
I hasten to my humble altar-spot,
And there, I raise my pain to One condoling,
One with whom, years ago, I cast my lot.

He has come here in answer to my calling,
The bread has changed to Jesus at my word,
His grace and love and strength on me are falling,
He lifts me up, my gentle, gracious Lord.

He is to me my friend, my land, my brother,
My help, my solace, my incentive good.
How can I dare to long for any other,
When He becomes my very flesh and blood?

Thus I commune. And when I leave that altar,
I am so fraught with tenderness and zeal,
There is no hardship that can make me falter,
There is no loneliness that I can feel.

And so I thank my Saviour for the calling
That brought me here, across the mighty seas
To combat sin, that thing to Him appalling,
And save the souls He perished to release.

I thank you, too, dear comrade, for your letter,
And thank you for the gracious words you send,
I beg your pray'rs that I may e'er grow better,
And sign myself, your happy, happy friend.

—"Our Missions."

Blessed Francis de Capillas

The first missionary known to have shed his blood for the faith in China

FRANCIS FERDINAND DE CAPILLAS was, as his name suggests, a Spaniard, and he seems to have been born about 1608. Blessed with devout parents, he preserved himself unspotted from this world, and at the age of seventeen received the Dominican habit in the famous royal convent of the Order at Valladolid. In 1631, when no more than a deacon, having offered himself for the foreign missions, he was sent by his superiors to Manilla in the Philippines. After his ordination and the completion of his studies, he was assigned to the Cagayan district of Luzon. Here, under that burning, tropical sun, he spent his next ten years, labouring among a people largely given over to idolatry, and striving at the same time to lead as rigidly an observant life as in the great priory at Valladolid. To his prayers he added penances, offering all up for the conversion of sinners. Ever ingenious in discovering further means of mortification, notwithstanding the heat, he would shut himself up in his little room, and then, rolling back his sleeves, positively invite the mosquitoes, with which the place is infested, to come and do their annoying work. His bed consisted of a wooden cross, and even upon that, at night, he would lie down only for a few brief hours.

Part of his duty during this period, consisted in looking after a hospital, and we may well imagine with what regularity and fervour he fulfilled this obligation. It is hardly to be wondered at that a religious, so full of holy zeal, was burning with desire to shed his blood for the faith. Nor will it cause any surprise that his superiors, now confident alike of the purity of his intention and of his virtue, at last acceded to his request and allowed him to set out for the dangerous Chinese mission. In company then with a veteran, Father Francis Diaz, O.P., the future proto-martyr reached Fogan, in the month of April, 1642. On their way they picked up Father John Garcia, another member of the Order, who had been recuperating in the Island of Formosa, and who, previously to that, had been working single-handed over a vast area in China, where he had broken down. All went well for a while, a mandarin being in power who regarded Christianity with favour. The missionaries, therefore, were enabled to do immense good, spreading the faith in every direction. For six years Blessed Francis laboured in this distant land, extending his activities from Fogan to Moyan, and even to Tingteu, preaching, catechising, and administering the sacraments.

Then, alas! came a revolution, and anarchy prevailed. The Manchu Tartars, seizing the opportunity of extending their territory, obtained possession of the whole huge province of Fokien, and as soon as Fogan fell into their hands, persecution began. The Tartars, of course, made out a case for themselves. They asserted that the faith of these Christians taught children to disobey their parents, wives to despise their husbands, besides forbidding (as it certainly did) the Chinese worship of their dead—and, in any case, the masters of this new religion were foreigners. Warned in time of the approach of this horde, the Fathers fled for their lives, and hardly had arrived at Tingteu before they heard that the standard of the Tartars was floating over the ruins of their church in Fogan. Here, however, the advance of these savage people was stayed by opposing Chinese forces; but unfortunately, in the course of the war which continued, Blessed Francis fell, in the very performance of his sacred ministry, into the hands of the Tartars, who carried him off as a prisoner to Fogan.

Confronted with all the old false accusations, dragged from one tribunal to another, and then subjected to the most terrible tortures, the saintly missioner bore every fresh trial with such heroic composure that his persecutors actually thought he must have some talisman about him. Offers of pardon, to be sure, were also made to him; bribes, the promises of wealth and rank, were held out before him, if only he would renounce the Christian faith and cease outraging the Chinese gods. Tortured, and thrown back into his horrible dungeon, he must have lain there half dead. But when he came to himself, he continued to show such patience, that his very gaolers appar-

ALL in the DAY'S WORK

By REV. J. L. BEAL, Sungyang

NO doubt you are all familiar with the period of the summer solstice known as the "dog days". Just what influence that dog star has on these despicable Chinese quadrupeds known as dogs seems difficult to explain — but an influence there is, and a morbid one at that. Last week I was called to the local telephone office to answer a rush call. One of our brightest and most promising students was seriously ill. Yes, I would go to see him immediately.

Having inquired at three "taxi stands" for a chair, and finding none available, I had to rely on good old shank's mare. After two and a half hours of brisk walking I covered the eight miles to the home of the sick student to find all much distressed in the household. In very few minutes the room was put in order and those present were invited to leave the room while I heard the boy's confession. He was in a highly nervous condition, due partly to the medicine he had taken and also his fear of dying without the priest. It was the first case of rabies I had encountered, although at the moment I did not know the nature of the boy's illness.

My words of comfort were useless to change his state of mind, hence confession was rather difficult. After continued exhortations sufficient matter for absolution was obtained, and then the penitent became more reconciled. During the entire ceremony of the Last Anointing he continued to froth excessively from the mouth. I was at a loss to explain his outbursts of rage and wild vociferations against his poor mother, who is the personification of meekness and kindness. Know him as I did, this conduct puzzled me.

The local chief of the medical profession called in during lunch time. He told me that the boy had been bitten by a dog some six weeks previously and after a few applications of "Cure-All" he apparently had improved. The dog had died within a week or ten days, and all thought the matter ended there.

His mother, ever anxious and solicitous, asked if he cared for a lunch. "Yes, you have starved me now for three days," he shouted. A lunch was immediately brought, and he ate rabidly fast as one devoid of his senses. Little did I think it was a death hunger. Before I left the home the boy was resting quite peacefully, and he asked for my blessing. Six hours later I learned of his death.

The family was in very poor circumstances, and I made another trip next morning to arrange for the funeral. A coffin was purchased for eight dollars and carriers engaged for the next day. When all necessary matters were attended to I rushed back to Sungyang to see how the masons and carpenters were getting along with the construction work on our new mission residence. My arrival was sudden and unannounced and I was not surprised to find them all taking life easy. "We can play when the boss is away" is the same in every language. The boss' job in China is to be on the job.

Early next morning I left by chair to celebrate mass and obsequies at Chu-Z-Ca. While still some distance from the chapel several friends of the deceased came out to meet me, and with a continuous wail and lamentation accompanied me to the chapel. It was the Feast of the Nativity of our Blessed Mother, and at that early hour many came for confession and Holy Communion. During the Mass many pagans came in to "look see". I made use of the opportunity to preach my first panegyric in China. It was well past ten o'clock when we had breakfast. Let me say right here that Chinese breakfasts do not register with me at all. After taking tea and something that looks like a first cousin to a fried egg I

SUNGYANG

Girt round by the eternal hills you lie
Nestling upon a wide expanse of plain,
A city of tiled roofs and cobbled streets
Encircled by its emerald fields of grain.
A pretty picture 'neath the golden moon
When day has sung its "ite Missa Est",
And silence settles o'er a sleepy town
Touched with the magic wand of loveliness.
You who, perchance, were old when Rome was built,
You who are young now Rome has passed away,
Fool would I be if I, presumptive, thought
That I could sing your glory in a day.
Let other cities boast their right to fame,
Let other places claim they are more fair,
You have a narrow street where stands a house,
And He who made the world is living there.
You have a home that is the home of all,
And of that home this wonder may be said,
The Bread one eats becomes one's very Host,
The Host one eats becomes one's very Bread.

THE INNOCENTS ABROAD

A CHINESE DRAMA

IN 3 ACTS — A TRUE STORY

(Illustrated by Arthur Keelor)

FOREWORD.

Still is there honor among thieves in the land where ways are dark and tricks are not always vain. Certainly, there was nothing vain about this trick played on three guileless foreigners. It worked well. But hush!——

THE CURTAIN RISES.

Act 1. Scene 1.

Grounds of St. Paul's Seminary, Ningpo.
(April 26, 1932.)

Benediction time, and three foreigners with hats, coats, umbrellas and cameras arrive at the chapel door.

Father Amyot:

"It seemeth good to me, my worthy friends,
That our attire be safely placed
While we do enter here."

Father Sharkey:

"Hast spoken well—e'en so; take thou our things
And place them where they're safe from itching hands,
Lest hatless, coatless, home we wend our way,
And no more pictures from those distant shores
Should grace the pages of our monthly CHINA."

Father Amyot departs and places everything in a room nearby. Scarcely have the priests entered the chapel when a figure approaches stealthily. He has trailed the foreigners for many an hour and now, at one fell swoop, he hopes to earn a year's salary or more.

The Stranger:

"For many a weary day I've toiled and groaned
To carry foreign dogs in my poor rickshaw;
For one small Ko I've labored for an hour,
And oft, 'neath blazing sun, my daily wage
Hath been but ten small coppers in Their foreign coin computed.
But now—if gods be kind—I'll have my day,
And with the proceeds from their precious wares
Will hie me to a rousing fan-tan game
And there recoup my losses to Fan Teh.

He hurriedly grabs two cameras, a coat, and á breviary. Startled by the sound of footsteps, he leaps over the wall and is away. Benediction over, Father Amyot goes to the room to collect the belongings.

* * * *

Act 1. Scene 2.

Father Amyot (returning):

"Grim tragedy doth all our footsteps dog;
Full well should I have known! (I who long enough
Have spent 'neath Chinese skies to grow this beard
So oft made object of your heartless jest).
Yet just for once, thought I, I'll take a chance
And lo! the luck's against us.
Your breviary and coat, Observer bold,
Your camera and mine, oh poet from Saint John,
All, all are gone, and now are on the way
To be redeemed in some poor Chinese pawnshop.

Father Sharkey:

"Oh, say not that 'tis so, oh whiskered seer,
Alas for teeth that bite the hands which feed.
From Canada 'neath healthier skies we come
To help the heathen of this wretched country.
Speak not to me, Observer, of their gentler traits
While my good Kodak, gift of friend at home,
Is taken from me with such callous boldness,
For it was worth 200 Mex. or more,
And I must hie me to Shanghai to-night
And never—yea, I fear it—never more
May such a camera click beneath my fingers."

* * * *

Act 2. Scene 1.

Mission Residence, Ningpo, two days later. Father Amyot enter's Observer's room to lend him his breviary for the third time.

Father Amyot:

"Take thou this book and at thy leisure read;
Mine is the fault that robbed thee of 'pars verna'."

A knock sounds at the door, and Father Buch enters, breviary in hand.

Father Buch:

"This morning ere the light of day had dawned
This book was left beneath the Mission window.
Full glad I am that this at least returns
And shows that spark of honor still remains
Even with those who steal for their profession."

Father Amyot:

"See now, Observer, the grace of this fair land,
For had you but been waylaid in New York
Your book would now be in the Hudson River."

Observer (thoughtfully):

"Oh, yeah!" (He can think of the cutest things).

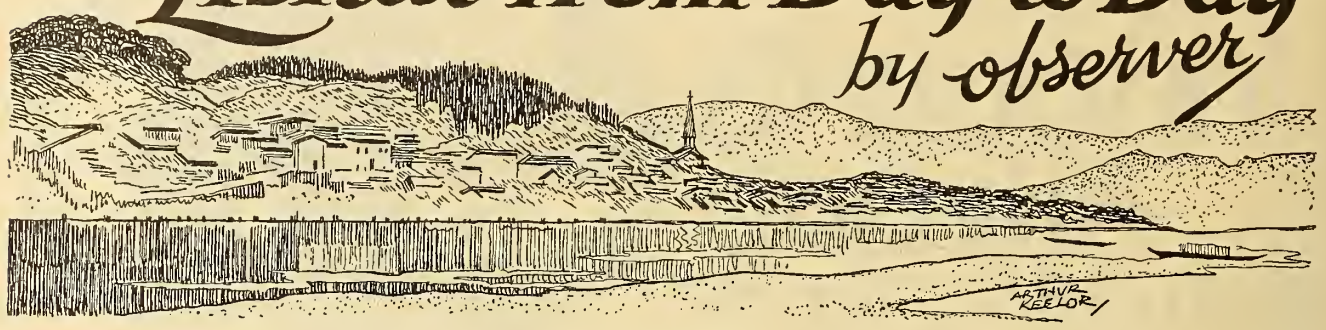
* * * *

Act 3. Finale.

The Mission Residence next day.

A servant enters to tell Observer that the stolen property has been located in a pawnshop; he has seen a document certifying that $29.00 Mex. were paid to the thief whose name the pawnbroker will never reveal. Father Amyot goes with the servant to negotiate for the return of the goods. He is greeted aimably by the proprietor of the shop and, in spite of his feelings, must observe the amenities of Chinese etiquette.

Pawnshop Proprietor:



"Ten thousand welcomes, friend from foreign shores,
Deign not, I pray, to enter my foul mansion.
Only to-day most worthy goods of thine
Were brought by friend whose name has just escaped me;
They tell me, too, that you are bearing gifts
To give to my unworthy self—how could you?
In gratitude, accept these things of yours
So out of place in my vile house of traffic."

Father Amyot pays $34.00 for the articles and leaves, smiling. But if looks could kill!——

THE END.

Lishui from Day to Day

by observer

A correspondent wants to know why "all missionaries in China wear beards". We answer that it isn't that bad, and back up our assertion with the camera. Take a look at the picture of our priests on the next page and you will note that the bearded gentlemen "of the old school" have fallen on evil days. Led by Fr. Serra and Fr. Amyot, the Van Dykers are putting up a valiant last stand, but their cause is hopeless. Already they are outnumbered by 10 to 5, and we hope to roll up a much more formidable score as the men from Scarboro Bluffs arrive year by year. It is not too much to hope that in Chuchow the beards will soon be as extinct as the dodo.

* * *

This picture really represents a historic occasion, the first time since mission work in this district began that a retreat was held at Chuchow. Formerly the priests made the rather long journey to and from Ningpo each year.

* * *

By the time you read this the men you see in the picture will be scattered to the four winds of Chuchow, and even farther, because Father Sharkey will have arrived in Canada to prepare for his work among the Chinese in Vancouver. The evening that saw the close of our retreat also witnessed a little farewell dinner to himself and our retreat master, Father McGoldrick of St. Columbans. Father Sharkey was formerly pastor of Tsingtien (Greenfields), the first place in our district to extend an annual welcome to new arrivals from the homeland.

* * *

Those of us who arrived last year will always have a "warm spot" in our hearts for Father Sharkey and Tsingtien. It was there we were gradually thawed back to life after three weeks of suspended animation during the coldest spell China had witnessed in years. Father Sharkey had a stove, actually, and came gallantly to our rescue with all the foreign food in his possession. What was left after our stay he put into our boat for the journey up river.

* * *

He always sent us the Saint John papers, too, from Tsingtien and plenty of reading matter to beguile an occasional hour at Chuchow. The greatest fault we could find with Fr. Sharkey was his utter inability to keep anything for himself.

* * *

Fr. Boudreau proposed his health that evening, and we agree with his remarks that the work in Vancouver is really going to be harder than the work in China, work that is utterly devoid of the glamor that even the most hard-boiled feels at times over here. However, it is a work of supreme importance. Only too long have the Chinese in America been neglected and allowed to imbibe any and every religious or irreligious doctrine. We have seen some of the baneful results already in the school laws promulgated by Nanking, and we know only too well that there are in the Chinese Government today many American-educated men who "discovered" on the other side of the Pacific that religion was not only unnecessary but harmful.

Father McGoldrick, by the way, thinks he's a pretty good retreat-master. "I feel sure, Reverend Fathers," he said that evening, "that I have preached the best retreat ever given in Chuchow." (Applause and laughter.) We do say that his retreat was most inspiring, and it is with great enthusiasm and hopes running high that our priests return to their missions.

* * *

Yes, the priests will be scattered, alright, when you read this, preparing to celebrate Christmas in many poor little chapels among the lofty Chekiang mountains. Father Amyot and Father King, for example, will be in their newly-opened parish of Wong-Da, and they won't be able to come down and pay us very many week-end visits. Here's how they get to Wong-Da.

* * *

Two days by sampan to Wenchow; four hours by motor "house boat" to Geu Way, from which place they take a sort of half junk, half sampan, for the three-day journey up rivers and canals to Oh Keu (I am coming as close as I can to

CO-OPERATION

Mr. A.—"Who else should we remember this Christmas?"

Mrs. A.—"What about the China Mission Seminary?"

Mr. A.—"Oh, oh! I nearly forgot those missionaries. Had them in mind when I started this list, too. Thanks for reminding me."

ARE YOU FORGETTING?

those Chinese names). From there, some fine morning, they will be transferred, bag and baggage, to bamboo rafts and six hours' poling will bring them to Taw Oh, with luck, just about in time for dinner. Then follows the final stage of the journey, a 9-mile walk to Wong Dah, all the baggage being transported on the shoulders of Tan Tan men, or carriers.

A five days' journey up river by sampan from Chuchow, and two days' walk will take Father Venini into virgin territory, his home in the newly opened parish of Kan Kou, where he has just built a small chapel and residence combined, and where there are as yet but two Christians. Father Amyot will have about forty Christians for a start in Wong Da.

Fr. Stringer will be parish priest of Lungchuang, with Fr. Wong as assistant, while Fr. Gignac, our former Professor of Chinese (don't know what we're going to do without him, as a matter of fact) will replace Fr. Sharkey in Tsingtien. With Fr. Gignac will be Fr. John "Chook" MacDonald. To them will fall the welcome task of greeting our new missionaries this year when they strike "home soil" for the first time. As Fr. Jim McGillivray is in the band, it will be a sort of double-header St. F. X. reunion, that of St. F. X. Seminary at Scarboro Bluffs and St. F. X. University at Antigonish.

With the appointments made this year there will be seven parishes opened up in the Prefecture of Chuchow. When we took over the district six years ago there were only two priests for the whole territory, and it was impossible, physically impossible, even to administer the last sacraments to all the Christians. We feel very happy over the progress that has been made and grateful to Divine Providence that we are also able to respond to Archbishop Duke's request for a priest to work among the many thousands of Chinese in Vancouver.

A GOOD IDEA

Mr. M.—"What did you say, Mary, about giving something to the Missions this Christmas?"

Mrs. M.—"I was saying it would be a good idea to share what we have with them. They depend on people like us to help them, especially at Christmas."

Mr. M.—"Well, to make sure we will not forget, I'll get a money order for a few dollars and send it to Scarboro Bluffs today."

We take this opportunity to extend to our readers and friends throughout Canada and Newfoundland our best wishes for a very Happy Christmas. Although separated from you all by such a vast distance we feel that you are really very close to us when we whisper your names during the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass. Neither length nor breadth nor height nor depth nor thousands of miles of Pacific Ocean can separate those who are living members of the Mystical Body of Christ. And this year, in many a little chapel, as we welcome the King of Kings on Christmas night, our thoughts—and our prayers—will be with you all at home.

THE CHINA BOY—By A. J. M.

(From a lady correspondent in St. John's, Nfld.)

I have often had the pleasure of reading your "China". Invariably I turn first to the "Nonsense" page, and then settle down to enjoy the interesting articles from your missionaries, such as "Lishui from Day to Day". When I was small I owned a book on China and liked it very much—it was so unusual, so different from our own place, and yet in some little things there is always a likeness. Anyway, I intended to arrive there some day and paddle up the rivers in one of those sampans—or is it junks?—and I really hoped that there might be one of those famous Mandarins left in some out of the way place, and—well, you know how it is; he might present me with a little piece of jade ornament, a famous costume, or one of those dinky little teacups as a souvenir. I suppose we must all have dreams. You know to drink real Chinese tea in a real Chinese cup with a real Chinese Mandarin and his wife—and then be given the cup, well, there are some who appreciate such dream-moments.

I had heard that in China they have a lovely way of cooking ducks, but I don't think I would like the ancient eggs if they are really cooked the way we read about them. However, we do not worry about little things like that; we are of the type willing to see China on rice, with a party thrown in here and there, of course.

China appeals to us as a country with a great future when it shall become Christianized. It is so inexplicable that the pagans are so slow to accept a religion which has wrought such wonders in the West and brought it to its greatest fruition in the short span of not two thousand years; a religion which has conquered slavery and converted savage warriors into artists, teachers, writers, builders, doctors, everything except destroyers.

This little article comes under the strange heading of "The China Boy" just to recall a little Eurasian

A WAY TO HELP.

We feel sure that many of our readers realize how difficult it is in these days to procure help for our missionary work at the Seminary and for our priests in China. We should like to draw your attention to the fact that Offerings for Masses are a real need with our missionary priests; it would help things very considerably if we could keep our twenty-one priests constantly supplied with Mass Intentions. If you wish to have the Holy Sacrifice offered for any intention and you send your stipend to the Seminary, the Intentions will be promptly cabled to our missionaries in China. We are grateful to the friends who have remembered our priests in the past by sending them Mass Intentions.

TO BE ORDAINED.

On December 21st, Rev. Hugh McGettigan will be ordained to the Priesthood for the Chinese Missions. The ordination will take place in Saint John's, Nfld., His Grace Archbishop Roche having graciously consented to perform the ceremony which will give China Mission Seminary its third Newfoundland priest.

BACK FROM CHINA.

We were glad to welcome at the Seminary Rev. Hugh Sharkey, who spent a short holiday with us preparatory to taking up his new work among the Chinese in Vancouver. With the exception of Monsignor Fraser, Father Sharkey is our only priest who has been recalled from the Missions for work in Canada, and during his stay with us he was often the centre of gatherings as the students kept piling questions at him about life in China; his talks and lectures have added to the enthusiasm with which we all look forward to our turn to "go over".

The Sad Christmas of the Pagans.

called it quits and gave orders for the procession to start out to the place of burial six li in the country. The chair men were marshalled into line and away we started. The September sun was blazing down, and my two escorts were grumbling at the extra forced march. However, we soon reached the grave-side and the final finishing touches were added. The mourners performed their part of the ceremony by sprinkling holy water on the coffin in order of seniority as it was being placed in its final resting place.

The hot sun proved too much for me; a sickly weakness came over me, and an old Christian led me to a pagan house quite near, to have tea and a rest until the others followed. This home was a good distance removed from the mission trail usually taken by the priest on mission tours, hence I was a stranger in their midst. When the usual barrage of questions was answered, my Christian friend laid aside his pipe and proclaimed to the household who I was and what had transpired during the past two days. He repeated my sermon practically verbatim, and added that since the family of the deceased was financially embarrassed the priest had supplied the coffin, which, by the way, is of major importance in China. The pagans were practically bereft of speech at such unheard-of generosity, and expressed the hope that some day they might have the good fortune of belonging to such a charitable organization of which I was a minister. It was indeed gratifying to see the expression of joy and happiness light their faces as he unrolled the sermon much more lucidly than I had first pronounced it. It all helped to soothe my throbbing headache.

Such, dear readers, is an incident that is all in the day's work here on the missions. Difficulties and trials are often our lot, but they are mercifully tempered with consolations and rewards which come from the knowledge that we have been instrumental in bringing souls to our dear Divine Lord. It is a wonderful life after all.

THE CHINA BOY

who lived in this city, an almost startlingly good-looking little Oriental, whose features and the colour in his cheeks and eyes made him decidedly "different" than other pretty little Chinese whose pictures I have often seen, for instance, those boys with the water-melons shown in the November "China". He went by the name of "the China Boy". It brought thoughts of an artistic teacup, or a bridge with a bit of sky in the distance, or water falling, or—anything, except the eternal sameness of everything. "Me no servee ricee, me only servee wine." Perhaps an altar boy.

BLESSED FRANCIS

ently were struck with sympathy as well as surprise. The story goes that they allowed faithful Christians secretly to bring him food, thus frustrating the wicked plan of his persecutors, that he should slowly die of starvation.

A few words of the Blessed Martyr have come down to us—on what authority, I know not; but words worthy of being handed down, for even if he never actually uttered them, the saint would now surely endorse them from his throne in paradise. He is reported to have said in prison to his Christian visitors: "If Our Lord wishes to leave me here all my life, I shall be well pleased; if He wishes to call me to Himself, I shall be still better pleased; let Him do with me whatever He wishes. One thing only I beg of you: Ask God to give me strength in my torments, so that I may glorify Him by my sufferings, as I am no longer able to make Him known by my words." And when he stood before his judges, he replied to their false accusations: "I have had no home but the world, no bed but the ground, no food but what Providence sent me from day to day, and no other object but to do and suffer for the glory of Jesus Christ, and for the eternal happiness of those who believe in His name."

Meanwhile Fogan became a beleaguered city, and in one of the first assaults on it, the chief mandarin was killed. This incident infuriated the military governor, and sending for his Christian prisoner, he sought to lay upon him the responsibility for the siege of the city. Blessed Francis may well have guessed that his end was at hand, and prepared himself for immediate death. He was condemned, and the sentence seems to have been carried out at once. With one stroke of the sabre, his head was severed from his body, and the first of the many known Martyrs of China had shed his blood for Jesus Christ. Thrown out by the Tartars, the remains of the Martyr were preserved incorrupt, and when found by the Christians, reverently buried. Later on, when further troubles were being experienced, the Fathers of the Order disinterred the body and hid it, no one knows where; the head of Blessed Francis, however, they managed to have taken first to Manilla, and then to Valladolid, where it is venerated as a precious relic at the present time.

LITTLE FLOWER'S ROSE GARDEN

Edited by FATHER JIM

CONDITIONS OF MEMBERSHIP

The only conditions of membership in the Rose Garden are: (1) To say every day the Prayer for the Conversion of China; (2) To go to Holy Communion once a month for the Intention of Missionary Vocations. Certificates and pins will be sent to all members.

Westport, Ont.

So many boys and girls are joining your interesting club. I want to be with them, too, and I hope some of them write to me. Audrey Tobin.

Sulphide, Ont.

Although not a member of your Rose Garden, for three years I have been corresponding with one of your Buds, Marguerite Dawson, Harbor Grace, Nfld. I want to be a bud myself now, and will take "Morning Glory" as my pen-name. I hope Marguerite answers my last letter soon. Alda Langevin.

Perth, Ont.

I still have a lot of pen-pals who write me such lovely long letters. I am sending one dollar to help your missionary work. It isn't very much, but I know every little helps. Mary M. Kerr, Box 47. Thank you very much. Mary. Always glad to hear from one of the "old reliables" like yourself.

Bay Bulls, Nfld.

Nearly every family in Bay Bulls subscribes to "China", and all are interested in your Garden. I have seven sisters but only one brother. My pen-name will be "Shamrock". My sister Eileen is taking "Blue-Eyes" for her pen-name. Mary and Eileen Maloney.

Glace Bay, N.S.

Saint Therese is my favourite saint, and I am happy to ask you to enroll me as a member of her Missionary club. Please ask Margaret M. Hogan. St. John's, Nfld., to write to me. Annie McLellan, 71 Union St.

Long Harbour, P.B., Nfld.

I am eleven years old, and to me the most interesting thing in "China" is the Rose Garden. I am in Grade VII in school. If I lived handy to the Seminary I believe I would find out who Father Jim is. I am sending the name of a new bud to you, Sarah Pretty. Would like to get a letter from some buds in Canada. Lizzie M. Murray. Don't forget that picture you promised to send, Lizzie. Long Harbour must have quite a few buds now, eh? Give them all my best regards.

Toronto, Ont.

I always like to read "China", and now I promise to fulfil the conditions required for a member of your club. I will often say a prayer for you, too, Father Jim. Vincent Brady, 104 Brookdale Ave. You are very welcome to our club, Vincent, and I thank you for your nice letter.

New Waterford, N.S.

I am thirteen years old, and go to St. Agnes School. Nearly all the pupils here are in your club, and I don't want to be left out. Do the buds have to send you their pictures? Marguerite Rice, 510 Warren Ave. Well, Marguerite, although you do not have to send me your picture, wouldn't it be nice to let us all see you? Thanks for the stamps you sent. Once again, let me remind the buds that two and three-cent Canadian and American stamps are of no use to us.

Hamilton, Ont.

Having read your Rose Garden pages so often I thought I would at last "join the force" to help the missions. I am twelve years old, and go to St. Thomas Aquinas School. James Flynn. Welcome, James, and now that you're with us, how about some more of the boys following your example? There's room for lots of boys in our Garden, and admission is easily secured. Just fulfil the conditions which are noted on the top of this page. Let's go, Hamilton!

Windsor, Ont.

Elizabeth Strong makes an earnest appeal for some buds to drop her a line. She is 14, and in 3rd Form High School at St. Mary's Academy. Address: 470 Pelissier Street.

Beech Grove, Que.

After much hesitation I have at last decided to write my first letter to you and ask you to receive me in your club as a "Wild Irish Rose". Eileen Muldoon. Even without that pen-name, Eileen, we would know you were Irish. 'Tis not so hard to write once you have "decided", is it?

Toronto, Ont.

I am sending you my picture and I want to become a member of your Rose Garden. My sister Catherine and I will try to fulfil the necessary conditions of membership. Josephine and Catherine McDermott, 113 Wright Avenue. How about your picture, too, Catharine?

New Buds.

Rita Murphy, Box 90, New Waterford, N.S.; Laura Dominic, 64 Fisher St. E., North Bay, Ont.; John Burke, 221 Earlscourt Avenue, Toronto; Alice Young, 6 Hillside Avenue, Glace Bay, N.S.; Anne Dowe, Marjorie Morrissey, Mary Grace and Rita Hughes, all c/o 146 Goulburn Ave., Ottawa; Edward and Rita Lecuyer, 121 Nicholas St., Ottawa.

Charlottetown, P.E.I.

I thank you very much, Father Jim, for the beautiful certificate and pin you sent. I think they are just lovely. Annie MacIsaac.

Here is another bud anxious to join your club. I am 15 years old, and have been in this Sanatorium since July. We have been getting the "China" at home for years, and I always read it, especially your pages. My home is in Summerside. I am on the same sun-porch as Annie MacIsaac. We have a great time together. Phoebe Des Roche.

Attention, Buds!

You've read the two letters above from Charlottetown. Now I want a good number of our members to write to those two buds at the Provincial Sanatorium, Charlottetown, P.E.I. Your letters will help to cheer them up and brighten their days of illness. And the approach of Christmas is a nice time to write, too. You won't forget now, will you? Father Jim will be grateful if you write them.

CHINESE GODS

Last month Father Venini promised to tell you something about the strange Chinese gods. Here are a few of them.

Foo

Foo was supposed to have been born in India and his cult was introduced into China as a result of a dream of one of the emperors. For many centuries this cult languished but was revived by a later emperor who brought one of Foo's bones from India and commanded that the prisoners were to adore it as the price of being set free. For the sake of their freedom they did so for a while but then fled away. They were captured, however, and a part of their head was shaved so that they might be easily recognized. They fled again, were once more captured and this time their whole head was shaved. At certain intervals of the day, at the sound of a bell, they were obliged to assemble for adoration of the bone of Foo. This is said to be the origin of the bonzes, or pagan priests, who shave their heads and accompany their chants with the ringing of bells.

Kwan In

Kwan In was a young girl who was caught in a burning temple and burned to death. She afterwards appeared to her father in a dream, telling him that she had been saved from the flames by catching hold of the branch of a tree, and had been changed into a goddess. She therefore commanded him, as king of the city, to erect a statue in her honor and order it to be adored by his people. Her wish was carried out and a statue, with many eyes and arms, was set up, to denote that she was to oversee the whole world and render assistance to all.

Tsow Chen

Tsow Chen is the god of the kitchen. He was a schoolmaster's cook. Among the pupils of his master there was a poor boy to whom Tsow used to give the leavings from his master's table. This poor boy afterwards became rich, and wishing to recompense Tsow Chen, he sent for him, only to find that he was no more. Nothing daunted, in order to show his gratitude, he named Tsow Chen the god of his kitchen.

Long Chen

Long Chen is the name given to two snakes which in the days of the emperor Song were found near an imperial temple. There came a great drought; the people sought aid from these reptiles; their prayers were heard and rain fell in abundance. And so the snakes from thenceforth occupied an honored place in the gallery of the gods. Such are a few of the gods before whom millions of Chinese bow daily in adoration. There are others too numerous to mention. As a matter of fact, the life of the average Chinese is one long continual act of superstition. Next month I will tell you of some strange Chinese customs.

"THE MOTHER OF A PRIEST—THE MOTHER OF A MISSIONARY!"

By Bessie C. Byrne

"MOTHER, how sweet the name, gently and softly I whisper it, lest my very utterance fall harsh upon the sacred memories entwined about each golden letter that spells so sweet a word.

"No wonder they've hung it round with garlands. May we not be sure it was the first word that graced the Infant Lips of Christ, Our God, and King Divine?"

I love to think of that day in the long ago when methinks the Heavens opened wide their portals and the very Angels stopped their Song of Praise to listen in wonderment at what might be the first human word their God would speak upon the earth—the God of Majesty before whom they had for centuries bowed a lowly adoration, and in Whose sight the very Heavens trembled.

But lo! the word they hear is the sweet gentle name of MOTHER, and could they be sad it would only be because they never knew the happiness of having that sweet gift of God to man—A MOTHER.

That first word lisped by the Infant Lips of God-Made-Man brought a thrill of joy to Mary's Heart, and ever since that sweet name stammered by baby lips has gladdened Mother's hearts all the world over and made them forget they ever suffered pain.

And oh, how like the Virgin Mother at Nazareth is the noble generous heart of the MOTHER OF A MISSIONARY.

For she guides the steps and trains the heart and mind of ANOTHER CHRIST, Who will go forth to redeem his people, and carry the gift of Faith to those who have it not; and carry to bleeding, breaking hearts of Magdalens all the world over the precious Balm of Christ's Own Healing.

But oh, if there is in that Mother's heart a glad joy at being chosen to be the Mother of God's Anointed One, so surely is her soul, as Mary's was sword-pierced by the ever-present vision of the parting that all too soon must come and the Mother's heart knows a pain that none but God and Mary understand.

And, if it were not for the generous self-sacrificing hearts of the MOTHERS OF OUR PRIESTS AND MISSIONARIES, the world would cry in vain for God; and breaking hearts would break, and never know the healing balm that only Christ's Anointed ones can bring.

So, GOD BLESS YOU, DEAREST MOTHER, and bless you abundantly, and yet more, and may He Whom you received from God and gave back to God be your Bright Crown of Joy in Heaven where God will take you near and close to His Sacred Heart for your goodness and your self-sacrifice, and in memory of His Own Blessed Mother, Who was—THE MOTHER OF A PRIEST—THE MOTHER OF A MISSIONARY!

In this picture you see some of our most enthusiastic "Buds." Yes, they are from Welland, Ont. Congratulations to Miss Mary O'Sullivan, who keeps the work going so well.

The chief salesman of a certain London firm had a very loud voice. One morning when the manager arrived at the office he heard a terrible noise coming from the salesman's office.

"Who is that shouting?" asked the manager.

"That's Mr. Hill talking to Edinburgh," replied his secretary.

"Then why on earth doesn't he use a telephone?" asked the manager.

"No suh, Ah ain't got no use foh dem airplanes. Ah stays on terrah firmah, and mo' firmah de less terrah."

A woman went to the bank and, not finding the cashier who usually waited on her there, asked where he was.

"Out of town," said the assistant.

"Gone for a rest?" asked the woman.

"No, to avoid it," replied the clerk.

McTavish was on holiday, and one day he entered a barber's shop for a shave.

The barber was cheerful and trotted out topic after topic to start a little chat.

Nothing doing! McTavish was as dumb as an oyster.

At last the operator asked point blank if his customer was always so silent, or if he was ill.

McTavish said never a word, but silently pointed to a big notice on the wall above a telephone. The notice read: "All conversations must be paid for."

"I see the jury acquitted the girl who killed her employer, on the ground of insanity."

"Yes, and quite right, too. Anybody who kills an employer these days is certainly crazy." — Farm Journal.

Two ladies in a car disputed concerning the window, and at last called the conductor as referee.

"If this window is open," one declared, "I shall catch cold, and will probably die."

"If the window is shut," the other announced, "I shall certainly suffocate." The two glared at each other.

The conductor was at a loss, but he welcomed the words of a man with a red nose who sat near. These were:

"First, open the window, conductor. That will kill one. Then, shut it. That will kill the other. Then we can have peace."

First Guest — "I'm sure I don't know why they call this hotel "The Palms". I've never seen a palm anywhere near the place."

Second Guest—"You'll see them before you go. It's a pleasant little surprise the waiters keep for the guests on the last day of their stay."

The Magistrate: "The prisoner says he had two glasses of 'double brown'. What is this 'double brown', Sergeant?"

The Sergeant (sadly): "Not wot it was, your worship!"

Sambo, carrying a crate of eggs, tripped and fell headlong, with dire consequences. His friend Rastus, happening along just then, threw his head back and shouted with laughter.

Rastus (gargling) — Ho-ho-ho-ho! Dem yolks, dem white, dem shells! Ho-ho-ho-ho!

Sambo (after watching him a moment)—Boy, shut yo' mouf so Ah kin see who yo' is.

During one summer a baronet, well known as a sportsman, arranged a cricket match between a team of his guests and a local club, and, in the absence of any more capable umpire, a footman was called upon to officiate. The baronet went in to bat, and the second ball he received was stopped by his leg. "How's that?" cried the bowler.

Turning to his master, the footman said half apologetically, "I'm sorry to say, 'Not at home,' Sir John." "Not at home!" said the baronet. "What do you mean by saying that?" "Well, then, sir," replied the footman, "if you will have it, I mean that you're hout!"

"Last night, madam," said the tourist, "you informed me that the Duke of Wellington once stayed in this hotel. Is it a fact?"

"It is, sir," beamed the landlady, "a solemn fact! He slept in the very room you had last night."

"Was it just the same as it is now?"

"Just the very same."

"Same bed in it?"

"The very identical bed."

"And the Duke of Wellington slept in it—he actually slept in it?"

"Ain't that what I'm tellin' ye? He actually slept in the very bed you 'ad last night!"

"Great Caesar!" exclaimed the tourist. "No wonder they called him the iron duke!"

She—"He's so romantic! Whenever he starts to speak to me he says: "Fair Lady."

He — "Shucks! There's nothing romantic about that. That's just force of habit. He used to be a conductor."

"Some of you pedestrians walk about as if you'd bought the streets."

"Yes, and some of you motorists drive about as if you'd paid for your cars!"

The buttonless husband contemplated his jacket which he couldn't do up. It occurred to him that he might get something done by a little appropriate sarcasm .

So, as he was just about to go shopping with his wife, he remarked:

"Oh, by the way, remind me to get some needles and thread when we're out, dear!"

His wife gave him a dazzling smile.

"You silly, extravagant boy," she cooed, "you can always borrow mine, you know!"

Messenger Boy (to newsboy) — "Who's the swell guy you were just talkin' to, Jimmie?"

Newsboy—"Aw, 'im an' me's worked together for years. He's the editor o' one o' my papers."

Real Estate Agent: "Well, what do you think of our little city?"

Prospect: "I'll tell you, brother. This is the first cemetery I ever saw with lights."

In the American advance during the final days of the war, a sergeant ordered an unbleached private to go into a dugout and clean out any Germans that happened to be there.

The colored gentleman blanched a bit, swallowed his Adam's apple, and then said, huskily, "Ef you sees three or fo' men cum a runnin' out ob dat hole, don't shoot de fust one."

Employer—"Isn't it rather strange that your grandfather should be seriously ill every time there's a big football match on?"

Office Boy—"Yessir. I sometimes wonder if he's shamming."

Mrs. Thompson (learning to drive) —"Henry, that little mirror up there isn't set right."

Thompson—"Isn't it?"

Mrs. Thompson—"No; I can't see anything but the car behind."—Cincinnati Christian Advocate.

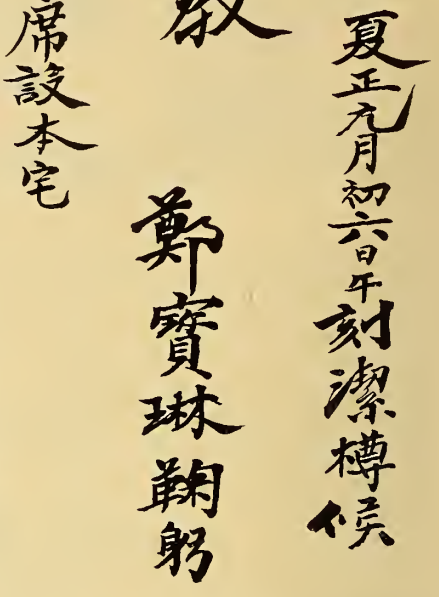
RETROSPECT AND PROSPECT

Whether times be difficult or whether they be otherwise, it makes no difference in the purpose for which missionary institutions such as ours were founded; our work is of such a nature that there can be no change in our outlook, there can be no curtailing of the forces involved, there can be no slackening of effort, for we are urged on by the reality of a Divine Commission, and we measure not our gains in terms of the material. Whilst we look forward with hope and confidence to the days that lie ahead, it is meet that we be grateful to God for the favours and blessings He has granted us during the past twelve months. By His grace we have made progress. In the matter of vocations we are happy to report a new enrollment record; never before have our limited accommodations here been so overtaxed, and promising young students have come to us from every Province in Canada and from Newfoundland; cheerfully and fruitfully they are preparing themselves for the big work to which they have so generously devoted their lives. For the first time we have been enabled to have some of our students pursue their theological course in another Foreign Mission Seminary, a sign of the expansion of our work. The number of our priests has been increased by the ordination of Father McGettigan, and two priests have been added to the forces on "active service" in the mission field. The outstanding events of the year for us were the appointment of Father McGrath as the first Prefect-Apostolic of our own mission district of Chuchow, and the elevation of Father Fraser to the dignity of a Protonotary Apostolic. Since Monsignor McGrath's appointment new parishes have been opened in Chuchow, and our mission Institute has been entrusted with a new field of labour in Vancouver, B.C. Taken all in all, 1932 has seen us develop to such an extent that we can face the coming year with renewed vigour. It may well be that the darkest shadows of "hard times" are still in the future, but, nothing daunted, we go forward trustfully, and, according to our means, however limited or curtailed, we will continue to make progress as we follow Christ in the path of missionary service.

* * * *

It has always been our feeling that the readers of "CHINA" are so closely associated with our missionary efforts that they are interested, individually, in all that pertains to our well-being. We would not have it otherwise, for we know that our very existence as a missionary Institute depends, in very great measure, on the loyal co-operation given to us at all times by our readers. They are the friends who have made our success their concern, and we acknowledge with sincere gratitude the assistance so generously given us.



* * * *

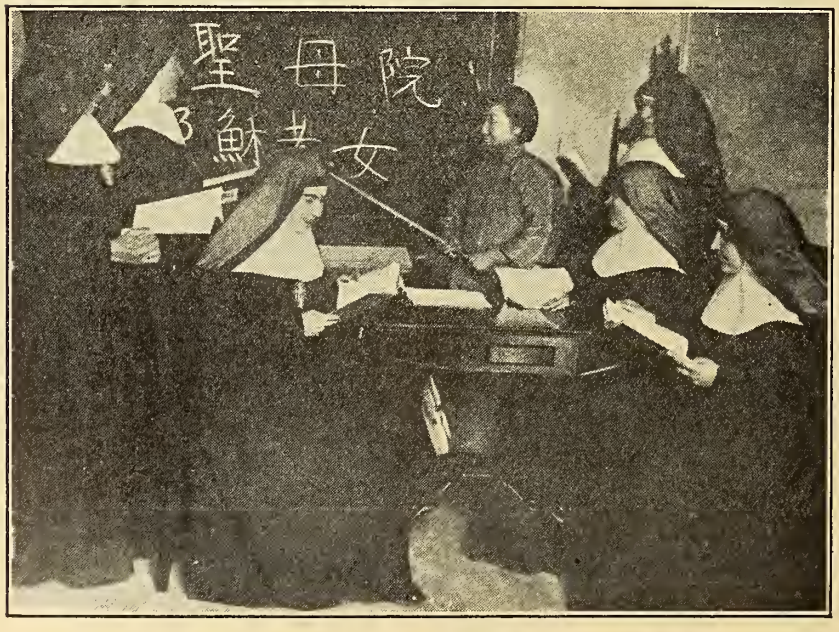
In presenting to our readers this brief resume of achievements during the year just ended, it is well for us to remind them that the future progress of our work depends on their continued interest. If there are some Catholics who do not see any sense in being interested in foreign missions it is just because they fail to understand that the foreign missions are a duty imposed on us all by Christ our Saviour. From the Pope down to the humblest layman this mission-duty extends; as earthly Head of Christ's Church the Sovereign Pontiff has a grave obligation to promote the spread of God's Kingdom, the Bishops of the Church have likewise that solemn duty, and so has each individual priest. Now missionary priests are the chief instruments of spreading the Faith among pagan peoples, and it is the duty —and the privilege—of Catholic people to do all in their power to provide a sufficient number of missionary priests for the salvation of the heathen. The need of the pagan world is for priests to preach the Gospel and to instruct unto salvation. Our Seminary is maintained for the specific purpose of providing missionary priests for China, and in carrying on that work it is essential that we have the whole-hearted support of the Catholic laity. By their active interest in aiding the Seminary, the Catholic people of Canada and Newfoundland are discharging their mission obligations in a practical way. Facing the New Year we are prompted to appeal for a fuller participation in mission work on the part of all Catholics, and to the readers of "CHINA" we suggest that 1933 be made a real missionary year, during which every family that receives "CHINA" will participate, as far as their means permit, in the serious business of supporting Foreign Mission endeavours.

* * * *

Not as a mere matter of form, but in all earnestness and sincerity we wish our many friends a VERY HAPPY NEW YEAR. May 1933 bring encouragement and heavenly blessings in abundance.

The Trials of a Strange Tongue

By REV. DESMOND STRINGER



Our district has no tower of Babel, but that is as far as the difference goes. It seems to me that here there are more sounds which emanate from the human throat than any dictionary could hope to catalogue. Mandarin is the official language of the country, but I am told even that varies from place to place. But in this article we are only interested in our nook of the woods; I want to give you an idea of the bogey that confronts us here, of the headaches it gives us all in trying to dispose of it. Throughout our Prefecture there are no such things as roads. There are paths sometimes one foot wide, sometimes three feet, which are for the greater part of cobblestone. The smoothest surface is that of the river, and it has many rapids. One couldn't use an outboard motor on it with any safety (for the propellor). Lack of communication means isolation, and isolation of peoples breeds peculiarities of speech.

Some time ago I was on a riverboat coming back to Tsingtien. Beside me was a native of the city in which I resided. A man from the port we had just left began to speak to him. You can imagine my surprise when they were unable to carry on a conversation—they couldn't understand each other's "woa" (our term for dialect).

Boatmen, carriers, and others whose business takes them around the country pick up the peculiarities in language of the various places they stop in. But take the man who travels little or none at all. He knows the "woa" of his own locality and that is all. Once while I was in C—— a terrible uproar started near me. It was a fight. Now I don't mean our kind of fight with black eyes and noses bleeding. This was the "Geneva" type, a rapid-fire affair. The object of such a contest is to see which entry can curse the other and that other's ancestors with most effectiveness. At such a time one hears many terms that are not found in any book. In this particular case a referee was not found until some minutes had elapsed. When he silenced the two he began to ask them the cause. It turned out that they were from different places and, not understanding each other too well, a misunderstanding promptly cropped up.

The farther apart two places are the more pronounced is the difference in language. In this city (Lungchuang) the language differs quite extensively from that of Chuchow. A few examples will give a clearer idea. To eat, chi and tieh respectively; water, shui and ü; cold, lan and tseng; where, cha-di-fong and dz-dah; boiling water, kwen shui and pei tong; mother, mei and nian; look, mon and tsiu. In the one place certain words terminating in "n" are, in the other, pronounced as "eu"; the "i" sounds become "z". Hence a dictionary is of use only in finding the meanings of any given characters. Thus one cannot invite another priest to come and preach a sermon or two to one's Christians. Some will understand, but I doubt very much whether in that few would be numbered one woman or child.

Turning to the written word, much the same difficulties are encountered, but in a lesser degree. The printing press from which we

To learn first and then to teach is the programme to be followed by all missionaries who wish to instruct the Chinese in Christianity. These Sisters are learning the language from their little Chinese mistress. Chinese has its difficulties because of the many characters and because of the number of tones. Still, Chinese is not the most difficult language—if that is any consolation to the learners.

buy many of our doctrinal books is situated a great deal farther north than are we. Not a few times, in reading over the text with a Chinese native to this city, he will point out several characters and tell me they are not used locally. In preaching or instructing our flocks we cannot take the "Catechism Explained" and read to them. We cannot take the New Testament and read it from the pulpit as is done in Canada. One must translate it into the local dialect. If we could preach in the Mandarin tongue, most of our problems in this category would disappear. But it is not feasible, for the people will not understand. In many parts of our Prefecture an individual missionary will find that he must learn several "woas", for he has chapels to visit which are often quite distant from his headquarters.

Tones are another source of difficulty. There are four of them, and any given romanization may be pronounced in each tone, meaning something different each time. The characters themselves are different, which makes the reading of them rather easy. But when one gets two different characters with apparently the same sound, then the trouble or the fun starts. For instance, take the words "to kill by shooting" and "to compel". The romanization for both is "ch'iang-pi". They are distinguished by tone, and by "tone" do not understand bass or tenor or the like—nothing so easy as that. Context, however, clears away many of these hazes.

The study of the written language is very interesting. Chinese is a "picture" language, and the dissecting of the various characters brings out many traits of the race. As regards grammar and syntax, some authorities hold there is none. Which to study first, the written or the spoken language, is also a debated question. With us circumstances call for the mastering of the local "woa" as soon as possible; for there are two million people waiting to hear what life is all about.

Perhaps it might be interesting to our readers to take a lesson now in etymology. The majority of the characters I have so far met with which contain the symbol for "woman" have not a too-complimentary meaning. For instance, the character for "jealousy" is made up of the symbols for sickness and woman; another has it stone and woman; "covetous" is wood and woman; "mutual slandering" is two women; "tranquility" is hand and woman (woman well in hand); "peace" is house and woman—evidently the Chinese think that if peace is to be preserved women must be kept in the house.

The study of the characters reveals that human nature here was, and is, much the same as anywhere in this little world. A word meaning "to covet" is made up of two symbols which signify "being in the presence of wealth". Chinese have their little mannerisms, too. Did you ever see a man trying to keep patience by drumming his fingers on the arm of his chair, or by tapping his foot? The word "patience" is made up of hand and beard; so if some day you see an old patriarch scratching his chin, it's best to be going. As yet the most humorous word I have met is one for "surprise". It put me in mind of the story carried some years ago in the "China" about a Scotsman who became a Mandarin. This word for "surprise" is made up of "to receive" and "seldom". Of course, well, I couldn't help noticing the report of the Building Fund. One time during a Retreat the Master told us the word for "recreation" was well coined, for many needed re-creation after it. If he should chance to read these lines he will be glad to know some old Chinese sage who probably never heard of God is of the same opinion, for in seeking to form a word for "recreation" he put together parts meaning "to scatter the heart".

The word for "good", however, I have purposely left till the last, and I put it in for two reasons. First, to show that not all characters with the symbol "woman" are uncomplimentary, and, second, because of the interest I first had in it. The word for "good" is made up of woman and child. At first I wondered whether or not there was an old, old, very old tradition being expressed by it, and I was a wee bit disappointed when I read the standard interpretation—woman and child, the two things a man loves best, hence "good". But even so, the thought persisted in my mind, "woman and child, woman and child", and I thought of the Woman and Child and the promise that was made at the dawn of Mankind's work-day, a promise that was "GOOD"—yes, and Divinely Good!

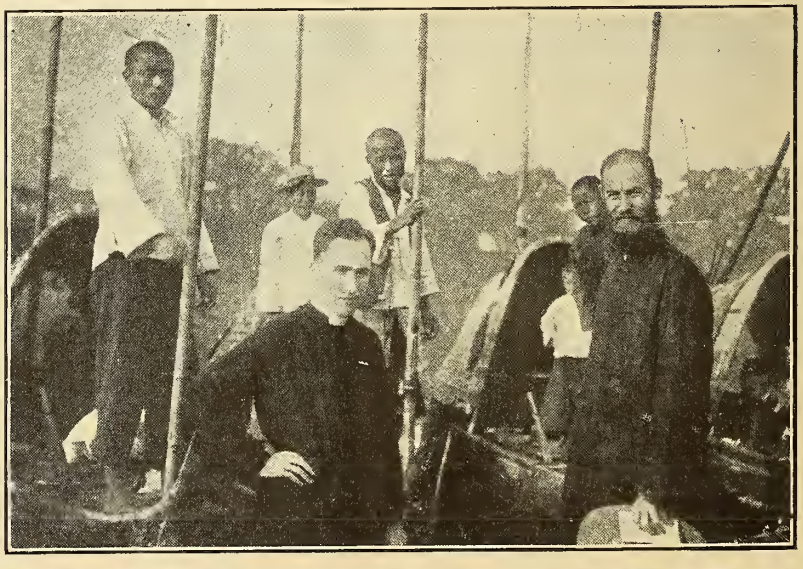
Introducing Ourselves in Wong-Da

By Rev. Wm. K. AMYOT

Changing One's Address on the Missions Has its "Ups and Downs" as Father Amyot's Letter Tells Us

Catholic Mission,
Wong-Da, Cke.,
October 11, 1932.

Dear Father ——:



Well, here we are, Father Joe and I, safe and sound up among the Chekiang Mountains. We left Lishui on Thursday morning, Oct. 6th, taking the steamer via the Canal route to Jeuh-an. We very fortunately had fine companions enroute, for Bishop Defebvre, Father Prost, and Father Sing were going along to the Ping-Yang section. It took us only three hours to get to the mission from the city of Wenchow. The time passed quickly, for both the Bishop and Father Prost were well acquainted with the various places along the way. The mountains are very pretty in places, and as we went we noticed some excellent waterfalls, and some large temples, chapels, etc.

Jeuh-an.

At Jeuh-an we were not slow to accept the Bishop's gracious invitation to dinner. After looking over the mission quarters we said "au revoir" to our companions, and as it was still early, Father King and I went to "explore" Jeuh-an. It is a larger place than Lishui, boasting many canals and some fine stores, while they have electricity that does service all night long. We climbed up a wall near a small pagoda for a "look-see". The regular steamer, the Jui-Ping, was in harbour. It makes the trip to Shanghai every other Tuesday. 'Tis said that things can be sent direct from Shanghai to Jeuh-an without having to go through any customs. The drying of fish and work with bamboo seems to be the main occupation here at this time of the year.

A False Alarm.

The boat carrying our baggage came in a little after 5 p.m. and tied up for the night at the back door of the Mission. About 11.30 p.m. I heard excited shouting down close to the boat, and my first thought was that some barbarians were attempting to rob our baggage. One boat had moved off and the crew shouted to others: "lee, lee, qua-si-ya, qua-si-ya". This resulted in a rush being made by five or six other boats, a banging of oars, quick rowing, and much shouting all round. It surely sounded like something was in the wind, but the boats finally cleared up the canal after a great deal of bumping and pushing. The mission, of course, is outside the wall of the town, and the soldiers are inside, so the place is pretty exposed. When I got down to our boat I found only another man there chatting with our law-dah, or boatman. Quiet reigned the rest of the night. Friday morning the tide didn't start in till 10.30, so we had lots of time to get everything stowed away in the boat before making arrangements to be towed to Ping-yang-ka. We got away about 1 p.m., being the only extra boat in tow on this trip. The winding course of the river rather lengthens the journey, but it gave us a good chance to see lots of the country. Hills, dotted with few trees, come right down to the water's edge, and terraced fields were visible everywhere on the mountain-side. The rapids in this river are mere rips over the stones, no real drops anywhere.

Fathers King and Amyot setting out from Lishui for their new home in Wong-Da.

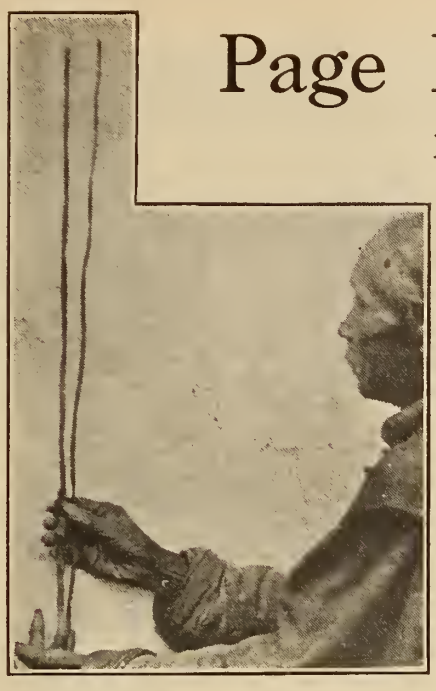
Pushing Onward.

We pushed on by moonlight to Wu-Zee, and slept there that night in the chapel. Left early in the morning and at 2.30 p.m. we reached Oh-Keu, a small village. We were able to arrange for a room in a pagan's house, and we said Mass on Sunday before beginning our raft-trip up the tributary stream. We saw plenty of goats going up, but it was too early and too dark to make use of our cameras. When the sun did come out we were in the more open part of the river.

Early Monday morning we pulled up at Dah-Oh, and carried all our things to a restaurant on "Main Street". It would remind one of a Jewish picnic or a repetition of the Tower of Babel as preparations were being made for a new allotment of baggage loads. It was awful, but finally we straightened things out. In this section, loads are paid for by weight.



Before setting out at noon we had dinner at Dah-Oh, and the room was filled with spectators, as is usual in China, all anxious to get a peek at those "queer foreign gentlemen". Dah-Oh is the bigger of two large towns in this valley, and it even has soldiers. From the last town a long steep ascent begins, and it lacks the usual stone "stairs", rising in a gradual slope. The mountains about this place are exceptionally rugged and pretty. One large rock was very like a huge sculptured dog.

"Home" at Last.

Just after three o'clock we reached Wong-Da. Thank the Lord there were not too many people about; those who were on hand popped off firecrackers and then just looked and looked and looked. We were glad of our tea then, and Father King and our "boy" were happy we had reached our journey's end. I didn't feel tired till the next morning, and then—oh, boy!

I think they must be having school up here in the chapel since Father Kam wrote to them. The catechist was busy next morning when I started to "stir the pot", and already things have begun to move. People were occupying our little mission quarters when we arrived, but we got them to move all right. We have already begun to repair the place, but I fear it will be impossible to build a complete new chapel right away, as some of the people expect us to do. We have a farmer-cook, but he's willing to do his best so we won't starve. Am making arrangements now about a sacristan, and we have the masons busy doing some very necessary repair work around the place. Bricks have already arrived, and I have ordered some wood for the roof, etc. So far we have not been able to unpack anything owing to lack of space. The man we brought along with us from Tsingtien proved a lifesaver, as he speaks the local "woa", or dialect. The next business is to take an inventory to find out just what's what here. Father King remarked that the windows were all well because they had no "panes". We will have to send to Wenchow for panes.

And so for now I'll have to sign off. Hope those few random remarks will be of interest; they give a fair idea of the work entailed in moving into a new home on the missions. We are confident that things will go along well here once we get them organized, and until you hear from us again remember in your prayers the two missionaries "at home" in Wong-Da.

Page Mr. Ripley

By Observer

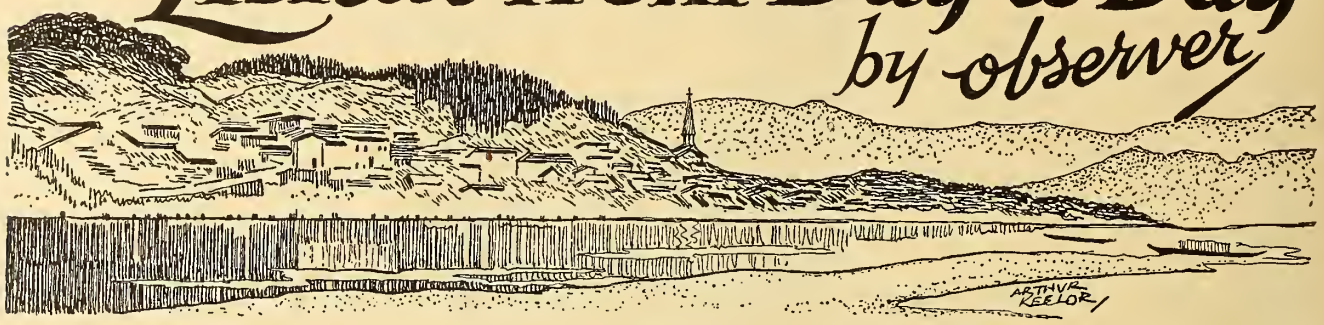
A short time ago Mr. Ripley of "Believe It or Not" fame, visited China. Among other things he discovered that there had once been a man in China whose fingernails grew to be 18 inches long.

Mr. Ripley, why didn't you come to Chuchow? We could have shown you plenty. We have cities that keep public lifeboats in the town hall instead of fire fighting apparatus; we could have told you about a chapel in our district that was burned down by a flood and reposing on my desk at the present moment is a photograph, yes, Mr. Ripley, a photograph of a Chinese whose fingernails, which he kept wrapped up in tubes for the most part, were not 18, but 25 inches long.

Do I know if it is a genuine photo, you ask. Yes, I do. I know the man who took it, Father Legrand, of Hangchow, and the old candy seller—for such he was—who held the all-China record for digital longtitude, if I may so express it, offered to sell him the nails for $300.00 to make medicine.

The picture, I'll admit, is not a very good one. Father Legrand takes the blame for that. But the story about selling the nails. Thereby hangs a tale.

Father Legrand happened to hear that the old man had been offered $340.00 by the local drug store for his nails because they were supposed to be of great value in compounding prescriptions. What was his surprise then one day when the old boy himself appeared at the mission, nails and all, and offered to sell them for $300.00.



"But the druggist offered you forty dollars more," he said. "Why, then, do you come to me?"

"The druggist," replied the old man, "wants to pull them out by the roots, but if you cut them off they are yours for $300.00."

Now, that's a true story, believe it or not, and above you can see a copy of the picture, fingernails and all. Some other time we'll tell you about the chapel that was burned down by the flood, if you can't figure it out for yourself meanwhile.

Lishui from Day to Day

by observer

JANUARY, 1933! Any signs of the "good old Canadian winter"? We're picking oranges in the garden over here while the boys are shovelling off the rink, or romping home to victory (?) in the Inter-Seminary hockey series. Well—almost! To be exact, it is 5 a.m. over here the next day when the hockey sticks are clashing at 4 p.m. in Scarboro Bluffs. And nobody picks oranges that early in the morning. But oranges we have, in our own garden, and a goodly crop at that.

* * *

There are about 75 fine peach trees, too, which bear fruit in July and August, and in one of our mission stations, Chulong, in Fr. Boudreau's territory, there is a fairly good pear orchard. At present we are negotiating for the purchase of a piece of property as extension to the mission grounds in Yunhwo, about 40 miles from here. The new property contains one of the finest pear orchards in the district. This is a fine fruit belt. The only thing is that most of the fruit is smaller and a little more like the wild stuff than the better cultivated variety at home The pears, however, are of monstrous size, almost as big as grape fruit. But they taste woody, and are very fibrous in texure. But they make good preserve.

* * *

You'd have laughed, alright, if you were here last night. The picture of this year's students at the Seminary had just come by mail. Mr. Wong, the catechist, was in for the evening "Chinese chat", so we had to show him all the handsome young men who are preparing to be priests, over here later on. We noticed that he wasn't particularly impressed, but, of course, he was very polite in a non-committal sort of way. "That's Mah Kung," he said, pointing to Dr. McRae. He had met Dr. McRae here in Chuchow, and recognized him in the picture.

"But the others, Mr. Wong, are there any others you recognize?"

"Tung Tung Yang, Tung Tung Yang. All all same, all all same." They all looked alike to him. A few years ago a Japanese girl student at Toronto University was asked how she liked everything. "Oh, it's all very nice," she replied; "the only thing is I can't tell one person from another. You Canadians all look alike." And we always thought (at least I always did) that it was the Chinese who "all looked alike".

At this point I should like very much to put a question to you, dear reader, that is if you care to read on. It is this, and I am very serious about it:

If you were over here in China now, seated at a desk, pounding out a few "thoughts" on a little typewriter, and you felt that the greatest thing you could accomplish would be to induce people at home to pray for the work of the Missions—if such were the case, WHAT WOULD YOU WRITE ABOUT?

That is the position, precisely. We mustn't talk shop all the time, of course. It could become terribly boresome and ill-timed. There are so many things to write about over here, strange things, weird things, funny things. But at times—let me confess it—we seem to be just "fiddling while Rome burns" if we speak of anything but our direst need of all, the need of prayer and more prayer from all our friends at home. Our priest friends above all! What power is theirs when they offer the Holy Sacrifice! Can't you see Satan cower and shudder as they plead for us, place ourselves and our labors for souls before God in the Memento of the Mass!

Dear friends, that is not rhetoric; that is not imagination. That is something more than a mere metaphor. It is a living reality. Satan does live over here; it is his very kingdom. Not a single missionary in China but sooner or later will come face to face with his evil power, face to face with himself. He roams through China "for the destruction of souls", and how soon he would "sift us as wheat" were it not for the power of prayer and the help it brings us from on high.

* * *

And our friends in convent and cloister, those consecrated souls who also belong to God alone. What power is theirs with their Heavenly spouse, power to obtain from Him precious graces that Well-trained catechists are the hope of the missions. They are the indispensable "right-hand men" of the missionaries. Here you see the Lishui catechists. The picture was taken during their Annual Retreat held in Lishui last September. Seated are Fr. Serra, Msgr. McGrath, P.A., and Fr. Kam.

Evenings at Sung-Yang

Due to extensive building operations in the Mission the opening of school this term had to be deferred. The school has been converted into a carpenter's work-shop, the hand-ball alley is being used for preparing lime, the remaining available space for storing logs, stones, etc. Last week a number of the carpenters and masons asked to sleep in the mission. They explained their boarding-house mistress found it too difficult to be preparing breakfast so early, early meaning before 8.30 a.m. I pointed out that we had certain set rules for all living in the mission and that these must be observed. They all expressed their willingness to observe the rules. Later I suggested to the boss having a class in Doctrine four nights a week and music three nights to relieve the tedium of remaining in after supper. They were pleased to see the priest interested in arranging a programme for their benefit.

Tuesday evening was set for the opening of class. The Ka-ting (parlor) was well lighted for the occasion. I brought over enough Edgeworth tobacco to last us an hour. I acted as Chairman, made the opening remarks, and stressed the serious obligation resting on each one of saving his soul. All those present seemed anxious to learn something about this obligation. The catechist was called on to give the history of Creation. They were eager listeners as the Bible story was told in their own dialect. I then asked one of the masons if he had any difficulties to ask about. Why, yes! How could that Person he calls "Tien Chu" (God) make the world if he did not have mud and sand? I assisted the catechist with the explanation. One of the younger carpenters wanted to know who planted the trees in Paradise? Another fellow felt like shouting "Eureka". He at last had a satisfactory explanation for the lump in his throat—Adam couldn't swallow the apple. The Doctrine on Original Sin was accepted without difficulty. One fellow said that Adam was deserving of a severe punishment for offending God, having a nice place to live in and no work to do, sure of his rice every day.

The class was suddenly interrupted at this point. An elderly lady came in much excited saying her grandchild was seriously ill, and could we do anything for him. I asked her to bring the child to the mission. In a few minutes the mother and husband came in; when the wraps were removed there was revealed a pale little figure on the point of death. It was hard to tell the mother that her child would soon die but I consoled her by saying I could do something for its soul. They both wanted the boy, their only child, to be happy in the next world. Almost as soon as the Formula of Baptism was pronounced the child emitted one gurgling sound—as if in gratitude — and then closed its eyes to sleep in the Lord.

The poor mother was overcome with grief, and gave vent to her feelings. This was an unusual occurrence in the mission at that hour of the evening, and it very favorably impressed the workmen. Several are already listed as Catechumens. I hope all will persevere in their good intention.

J. L. BEAL.

Oct. 8, 1932.

REV. HUGH M. McGETTIGAN,
the third priest from Newfoundland to be ordained for the Chinese missions, was raised to the Holy Priesthood at Saint John's, Nfld., by Archbishop Roche, on Dec. 21st. Father McGettigan comes from a family that has already given a priest and three nuns to the church. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. McGettigan, reside at 28 Leslie Street, Saint John's.

A FRUITFUL INVESTMENT.

How to meet expenses in such an institution as ours is always a difficult problem. Relying as we are on the free-will offerings of the public at large it often happens that our bank account is overdrawn. Once in a while we get an encouraging "lift" by the receipt of a substantial donation. Recently, such a donation came very timely when a cheque for one thousand dollars reached us from the executors of the estate of the late Mr. John Ryan, of Ottawa.

Mr. Ryan has made fruitful use of his earthly possessions. His generous remembrance of the foreign missions not alone eases the burden of those charged with the administration of our Seminary, but it also secures for the deceased donor an unceasing remembrance in the masses and prayers of the priests and students whom he has helped to carry on in their noble work. Well-to-do Catholics who remember the missions in their last wills are laying up for themselves treasures in time and in eternity. God rewards those who "do good for His Name's sake". We beg a prayer from our readers for the soul of our deceased benefactor.

GIFT TO SEMINARY LIBRARY.

Our thanks are due to Rev. Dr. O'Leary, Pastor of St. Joseph's Church, Toronto, for having sent to our Seminary volumes of the "Ecclesiastical Review" covering the past twenty-five years. Such a gift is a valuable addition to our Seminary library, for the "Review" is a much-used work of reference on many matters.

WELCOMED AT SHANGHAI.

A letter dated Nov. 17th comes to us from Father McNabb. It was written at Wenchow "on the very threshold of our own District of Lishui, our new home"—just one month after Fathers McNabb and McGillivray had left Toronto. Their trans-Pacific journey was very pleasant, and they received a warm welcome from Fathers Beal and MacDonald, who had gone down to Shanghai to meet them. Sister Catherine was on hand to greet Sisters Juletta and Angela. By this time the Orient will be not so strange for our 1932 mission band.

LITTLE FLOWER'S ROSE GARDEN

Edited by FATHER JIM

CONDITIONS OF MEMBERSHIP

The only conditions of membership in the Rose Garden are: (1) To say every day the Prayer for the Conversion of China; (2) To go to Holy Communion once a month for the Intention of Missionary Vocations. Certificates and pins will be sent to all members.

Dear Girls:

Some of the boys will be shocked to see me addressing my letter to the girls only of the Rose Garden, but I mean it. I have decided to give this month's columns to our girl buds all for themselves, for they deserve it; they are such splendid little missionaries and always write me such nice letters. The pictures this month, too, as you see, are all of little ladies. But hold on! The boys are going to get their turn next month, and the girls are going to be left out. That's not very chivalrous, is it? But the boys, too, deserve a month all for themselves, and the February issue is going to be for them, so I hope they get busy now and give me lots of letters and pictures for their own issue. I know the young ladies of our Club won't mind my making use of their letter to make this appeal to their brothers. And what's more! I think we ought to spare some space at a future date to publish a few letters from the grown-ups, so teachers and parents are now invited to write to Father Jim and tell him just what they think of the children's own section of "CHINA".

Beginning the New Year, we have approximately five thousand members in our Club, and only God knows the immense amount of good so many innocent young souls must have accomplished for the Missions by their prayers and good works. The missionaries in China are all delighted with the success of our Club, for they, more than anyone else, perhaps, realize the value of prayers for their great work of converting pagan souls. We are all very proud of our young Catholic girls who have shown such fine interest in our mission Club, and as a New Year lies ahead of us we expect great things from their daily prayer for the conversion of China. Make it a real solid resolution not to forget the missionary priests and sisters; they are God's heroes and heroines on the foreign missions. We all want to love God, and we all want to show our love by our deeds. If you continue to live up to what is expected of you as "Buds of the Little Flower", then you are showing your love of God in action.

In our Patroness, Saint Therese, we have a wonderful example. She loved the missions, and she loved to work and pray for missionaries; all of you can recall incidents from her life showing this mission-interest. This month brings us three dates in St. Therese's life that are of interest: her birthday on January 2nd, her Baptism on January 4th, and her "Religious Clothing" on the 10th.

Many requests have come from members asking for Mite-boxes. Although we have carefully refrained from introducing appeals to our buds for material offerings, we know that the mite-boxes in the schools all over Canada and Newfoundland find ardent supporters among those pupils who are "buds". Sacrifice of spending money on the part of children is sure to bring graces to them now and add to their merit in eternity. All cannot give money, but ALL CAN PRAY, and we are more than satisfied at that. Remarks from some of the buds would make their adults blush at lack of adult support for the missions. We know that the prayers of the little ones will sooner or later inspire generous Catholics who have means to help the missions in China.

Here I am taking up a lot of valuable space on our girl-members, but I'll give you an extra page this month to make up for it.

And now let me wish every one of you A VERY HAPPY NEW YEAR.

Gratefully yours,
FATHER JIM.

Frances Cooney, 3886 St. Urban St., Montreal, and Rita Curley, 43 Cobourg St., Ottawa.

Victoria, B.C.

We have been getting "China" for a long while, and always for me the Rose Garden proves interesting above all. I am 15, and am in Grade 9 at St. Ann's Academy. My hobby is music, first and foremost the violin, but I also play the piano, mandolin and guitar. I like drawing and painting, too. It has long been my custom to pray for the missionaries and go to Communion for them, and now I want to enroll "officially" in that work. If your buds could do so, how willing they would be to help the missions materially, too. Wishing you every success in your good work for others, and hoping to get my certificate and badge soon, I am, Your friend, Rosette Lee, 834 Broughton St. Rosette tells me she is a Handmaid of the Blessed Sacrament, and she asked me to extend her congratulations to Jean O'Malley. Write soon again, Rosette.

St. Ann's Academy,
New Westminster, B.C.

Dear Father Jim:

Let me tell you about a very happy day here at St. Ann's. Our teacher, Sr. M. Virginia, brought to the classroom a parcel, which when opened amidst great excitement disclosed certificates, badges, and pictures for each member of the Little Flower's Rose Garden. Immediately we all knelt and recited the prayer for the missionaries in China. We felt certain this act was pleasing to our saintly Patroness, and in her own sweet way she will obtain help for the missionaries to carry on their noble work. With thanks, on behalf of the class,

MARCIA DORGAN.

I have been waiting for some time to get a chance to publish a picture of the executive officers of the Sodality of the Infant Jesus at St. Ann's Academy, and when it appears the buds will see some splendid little missionaries from the West.

* * *

I was very glad to get the nice letter from Senior III Class of St. Joseph's Girls' School, Ottawa, and to know they liked their certificates, etc., so very much.

Left: Kathleen Brynildsen and her sister, 30 Waldegrave St., St. John's, Nfld. Below: Josephine McDermott, 113 Wright Ave., Toronto, and Mary McAskill, Mt. Stewart, P.E.I.

Right: Margaret and Bernice MacDonald, R.R. 1, Greenfield, Ont. They all want buds to write to them.

Elizabeth Miller, writing on behalf of Senior First and Second Class, St. Aloysius School, Sudbury, added 40 new members to our already numerous contingent from St. Aloysius School, Sudbury. Father Jim had a fine time reading all the letters he received from the Sudbury buds, and perhaps at some future time he will be able to answer the questions each one asked. Iris McCann wrote a dandy little letter which brought certificates and badges to the members of the Primary class who have made their first Holy Communion.

St. Agnes School, New Waterford, N.S., seems determined to keep among the first rankers in point of numbers in our Club, and the new members from Grade VIII are welcome additions to the missionary forces. Sister Edna's letters are always very encouraging, and we know the missions are benefitting considerably by all the spiritual offerings her pupils make for the priests and sisters in Chuchow. Grade VIII pupils ask for some pen pals from Vancouver.

1025 Central Ave.,
East Windsor, Ont.

Dear Father Jim:

We have been told by our teacher that we could do our little bit for the missions by becoming members of the Little Flower's Rose Garden, and we are very anxious to secure our certificates and badges. We will be glad to fulfil the obligations as members.

Sincerely yours,
Clemence Leduc, Dorothy Greenwood, Julia Couvillon, L. Couvillon, Helen Nantais, Annie Karpinko.

Familiar to all the readers of the Rose Garden columns is the name of Philomena Dobbin, Bell Island, Nfld. We venture the bet that every family on Bell Island knows plenty about Father Jim and his Buds through her active "propaganda". She told me Father Jim's real name in a recent letter, but as it was written in "double Dutch" I can't say how correct she was in her guess. Thanks for the list of new members, Philomena, I always enjoy your letters.

HAVE YOU A ROSE TO SPARE?

Little Therese, Little Therese,
I come with a whispered prayer,
Little Therese, Little Therese,
Have you a rose to spare?

No pale bud do I ask of you;
But a bloom that is wondrous fair:
Little Therese, Little Therese,
Have you a rose to spare?

Too little your hands to hold them all;
You are dropping them everywhere:
That beautiful one so near your heart;
Have you that rose to spare?

Ah yes, I know for your Love's dear sake,
Thorns were your hoarded share:
Sometimes though, you asked your Love,
If He had a rose to spare.

What do you whisper, Little Therese,
As you smile from your picture there?
Have you but thorny stems for me:
Have you no rose to spare?

Then teach me, like you to prize the thorns
With their hidden healing rare,
And I shall be glad, because for me
You had truly a rose to spare.

(Written by the late Sr. M. Geraldine.)

St. Joseph's Convent,
Oshawa.

Dear Father Jim:

Will you please send us 25 mite-boxes? The children will soon be sending their money for "CHINA". In recent months they gathered up a great number of trinkets and odds and ends suitable for giving as little rewards to children. These they sent to Father Venini in China for his catechism classes, and they received a nice letter from him. Another package is being sent to China now, principally of linens and altar requirements. Enclosed is a spiritual bouquet offered for all the missionaries of the world by the Senior Fourth class at St. Gregory's School. They are helping all they can. Asking God's blessing on your efforts to further His cause, I am,

Yours sincerely,
Sister M.M.

The Rose Garden has no more enthusiastic friends than the children at St. Gregory's, Oshawa. Their work for the missions is a proof that our Club does get results. I will try to find space for Father Venini's letter in a later issue.

And here's something for all of you! A bud from St. John's, Nfld., does not like a bit some of the remarks made about "foggy Newfoundland", and she asks Father Jim to be good enough to correct the false notions of those "wise folks" who pity the people who have to live in a fog-covered country. Her explanation of the cause of those fogs and her assurance that they rarely come inland to "spoil the sunshine and fine weather which we enjoy in full measure" is really very interesting. I took care to show the letter to Father Editor, and all he had to say was: "Well, I'm tired telling you that, and now I hope you'll quit your kidding. You ought to know long ago that Newfoundland is a fine country; your buds down there seem to be among your best correspondents." I just added a humble "Amen", and changed the subject. Don't want to fall out with the Editor just before asking him for an extra page for our Garden.

FROM DAY TO DAY

will water the stubborn arid soil of the paganism that surrounds us, graces that will strengthen and sustain the missionary in his very real struggle, very real fight to the finish with him who is ever robbing the Sacred Heart of the love of those souls for whom It bled.

To you all, dear friends, we appeal for the greatest gift that is yours to give, especially when you approach Holy Communion and that same loving Sacred Heart beats in unison with your own. And our little friends, the children, ever so dear to God, the thousands of members of our "Rose Garden" Oh, what power could be ours in this struggle if from the hearts of our hundred thousand readers but one silent prayer ascended to the heart of God!

* * *

Take your own case, dear reader, NOW. You have glanced through the CHINA, at the pictures and the articles that interest you. You are going to lay it away and pass on to your duties about the house or office or the school. Will you remember us tonight when you say your prayers or tomorrow when you receive Holy Communion? Will you, even now, send one small request straight to the loving heart of Christ in Heaven? "Dear Lord, help our missionaries in their struggles to win souls for Thee." The answer will be heard, and felt, ten thousand miles across the Pacific. And some soul, whose fate is even now in the balance, will forever thrill to the rapturous eternal love of God because a little child at home has said some little prayer or made some little sacrifice as the price of its salvation.

Strange Chinese Customs—By Rev. J. Venini

As I promised you last month, I will give you a few lines on some of the strange things done in China. To us those Chinese customs are indeed strange, but they are part of the life of the millions of pagans who live in unhappy China. First, a few words about Ancestor Worship.

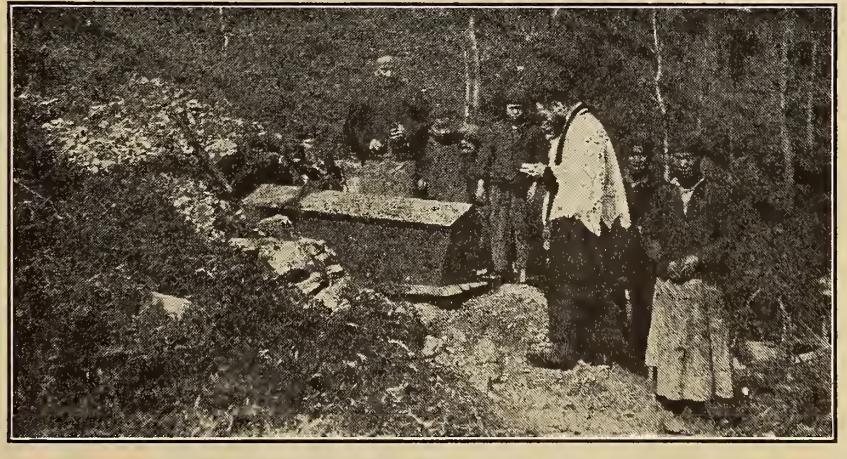
The bonzes (pagan priests) say we must not kill any living creature because when we die our soul passes into the body of some animal. When a member of the family dies it is the custom to prepare a table near the coffin and to place upon it candles and a small tablet of wood upon which is written "The abode of the soul of Mr. N—" The relatives and friends of the deceased person offer gifts to this tablet, genuflect before it and adore it, with their forehead touching the ground. They believe that the soul of the departed one has entered into this tablet. This is part of the "ancestor worship" of China, of which you have often heard.

False Money.

Money is very plentiful in China, at least false paper money, and it is burned very generously in favor of the gods and the dead. The devil receives heaps of it on the occasion of a funeral, as "tips" that he will be favorable to the dead person. It is also intended to provide the departed soul with ready cash for his travelling expenses on the journey to the other world. The good services of the dead may be procured for a liberal offering of this currency and it is often placed on their grave and renewed from time to time.

The Grave Hunters.

When the day for the funeral arrives the coffin is not simply carried to its last resting place. Oh no! The "grave hunter" must be called in. His duty is to select a propitious burying place. If a good place is chosen the relatives of the departed one ought to become rich, noble and enjoy long lives in recompense for their solicitude towards the dead. If, on the other hand, an unpropitious spot is selected, nothing but misfortune may be expected. If a person has been buried and a gravehunter reports the location as unfavorable, the coffin must be immediately taken up and buried elsewhere.



Propitious Seasons.

Not only must the place of burial be favorable, but the season as well. If one should be so unfortunate as to die during an unfavorable month or year the burial ought to be deferred for even six months or more till the advent of a more promising season. The reason for this caution is as follows: Among the snakes there is one big fellow called "Long", who fell from the heavens one day, and hid himself in the earth. He succeeded in gaining control of the goods of the earth and distributes them to those whose graves open directly into his treasure chest. This location the grave hunters are supposed to be able to find, with the help of a compass. Funerals are also put off for many months to await the arrival of some distant relative or friend and some cities have their "morgue" where these uninterred coffins are kept.

A Clever Ruse.

Only recently I heard of the clever ruse adopted by the natives of a city in the South of China to outwit the gods. Some great disaster was to arise in the near future, a chastisement by the spirit of evil. So to fool the evil spirit what did the Chinese do? They simply put their calendar ahead six months so that the period of danger was a thing of the past. Quite a simple trick. Can't you imagine the poor, duped evil spirit gnashing his teeth in fury?

And so, my dear children, I have told you during the past several months about a few of the gods and superstitions of China. How foolish, you will say, and to us they are foolish, because we have the blessed light of faith. Why we should be the fortunate ones, with so many hundreds of millions sunk in the darkness of paganism, a prey to such pitiful beliefs, is one of the mysteries of Divine Providence. Humanly speaking, however, we have that gift because twelve poor fishermen were not afraid to leave all behind them and at the word of the Master carry the word of truth to the uttermost confines of the earth. I am glad to see so many boys and girls joining the "Rose Garden", as it shows they are interested in helping the work of the missionaries by their prayers.

Father Venini at the burial of one of his Christians.

NONSENSE

The absent-minded professor called his biology class to order shortly after the lunch hour. "Our special work this afternoon," he said, "will be cutting up and inspecting the inward working of a frog. I have a frog in my pocket here to be used as a specimen."

He reached into his pocket and pulled out a paper sack, shook its contents on the table, and out rolled a nice-looking sandwich. The professor looked at it, perplexed, scratched his head and muttered: "That's funny, I distinctly remember eating my lunch."

"Look here," yelled the infuriated bridegroom of a day, dashing wildly into the editor's room of the country weekly, "what do you mean by such an infernal libel on me in your account of our wedding?"

"What's the matter?" asked the editor calmly. "Didn't we say that after your wedding tour you would make your home at the Old Manse?"

"Yes," howled the newly made benedict, "and just see how you've spelled it."

And the editor looked and read:

"After their wedding tour the newly married couple will make their home at the Old Man's."

The minister, in making an announcement for the evening meeting, said: "Elder Jones will present a paper on 'The Devil'." Then he added earnestly: "Please be prompt in attending, for Brother Jones has a carefully prepared paper, and is full of his subject."

Passerby: "What's the fuss in the school yard, boy?"

Boy: "Why, the doctor has just been around examinin' us an' one of the deficient boys is knockin' the everlastin' stuffin' out of a perfect kid."

"Pa, when I look in the mirror the left side of my face seems to be the right side and the right side the left."

"Yes, the mirror reverses them."

"Then why doesn't it reverse the top and bottom of my face the same way?"

Little Johnny: "Mrs. Takedown paid you a big compliment to-day."

Mother: "Did she really? Well, there's no denying that woman has sense. What did she say?"

Little Johnny: "She said she didn't see how you came to have such a nice little boy as I am."

Chatting with one of her neighbors, a woman related her experience when converted, many years ago, as follows: "I used to be very gay and fond of the world and all its fashions, till the Lord showed me my folly. I liked silks and ribbons and laces and feathers, but I found they were dragging me down to hell—so I gave them all to my sister."

Ho: Can you stand on your head?
Bo: No, it's too high.

Miff: "I once knew a man who fell off a window-sill that was on the tenth floor of a building and he only got a slight bump."

Big: "Nonsense. How could that be?"

Miff: "Well, you see, he fell inside the room!"

The retired admiral was expostulating with his daughter about the lateness of her hours.

"I won't have it," he asserted, "going out with that landlubber in his car and not getting home till past midnight."

"But, daddy," replied the sailor's daughter, "we were becalmed. The wind died right down in two of the tires."

The curate of a large and fashionable church was endeavouring to teach the significance of white to a Sunday School class. "Why," said he, "does a bride desire to be clothed in white at her wedding?" As no one answered he explained: "White stands for joy, and marriage is the most joyous occasion of a person's life."

A small boy inquired: "Why do all the men wear black?"

When a certain officer of the Governor's staff died, there were some applicants for the post, and some were indecently impatient. While the dead colonel was awaiting burial, one aspirant buttonholed the Governor, asking:

"Would you object to my taking the place of the colonel?"

"Not at all," the Governor replied tartly. "See the undertaker."

Little Eva: "Mother, what is a book-worm?"

Mother: "One who collects books."

Among the guests next evening was Miss Sparks wearing many rings. Little Eva, very observant, suddenly cried out: "Look at Miss Sparks, mother, she must be a ring-worm!"

The curate had tried his best to have Mrs. Brown choose a saint's name for her baby about to be baptized. None of the suggested names seemed to suit, so the curate advised her to look over the Litany of the Saints for a suitable name. Later, she proudly announced that since it was her first baby she thought it well to start at the beginning and call it "Kyrie Eleison".

The man who used to get drunk and hold up lamp-posts, now drives a car and knocks them over.

"What shall I do? The baby drank all the ink."

"Don't get excited. Write with your pencil."

Little Boy: "Let's play neighbors."

Friend: "How do you play that?"

Little Boy: "We just have to borrow things from each other."

"Mr. Manager, there's a salesman waiting outside with a moustache."

"Tell him I've got a moustache."

"How is it your daughters have never learned to cook?"

"Well, I'll tell you. My daughters have always been so busy with the problems of the working girl, settlement house work, and the like that they never had time for such academic matters as learning to cook."

Mrs. Flatbush: "What does your husband call your dog?"

Mrs. Beacon: "Do you mean when he is calling him into the house, or when he's chasing him out?"

Brown: "You have a notice in your window, 'A suit of clothes made while you wait.' Do you really do that?"

Tailor: "Yes, sir. You leave your order and a deposit; then go home and wait till the suit is finished!"

Benny, aged four, met Harry, aged five, and the following conversation ensued:

"What's the matter with your head?"

"Bumped it on the ceiling."

"On a stepladder?"

"No, I was playing 'ith my papa on th' floor an' I was sittin' on his tummy."

"An' 'nen what?"

"Papa sneezed."

Joe: "I love you; I love you. Won't you be my wife?"

Jess: "You must see mamma first."

Joe: "I have seen her several times, but I love you just the same."

ISLANDS IN AN OCEAN OF PAGANISM

Those who have always been used to a life of ease and luxury find it difficult to see things from the same angle as the poor; those always in good health are not quick to sympathize with the sick and the suffering; so, too, those who have been reared from infancy in the Catholic Faith, and who have never had to endure difficulties and hardships in the exercise of their holy Religion, find it not easy to appreciate the conditions that people in missionary countries have to meet and overcome in order to be faithful to their religious principles. Hence, our readers will do well to peruse the article in this issue: "Islands in an Ocean of Paganism". It gives an insight into the obstacles which militate against those pagans in China who have embraced Christianity and it may help us to understand the need for prayers on behalf of our Oriental brethren, a need which the Holy Father realized when he set this month's Mission Intention: "The Church in China".

CAMPAIGNING FOR CHRIST

Father Desmond Stringer, who has written some fine things for "CHINA", draws attention to the same condition in "Campaigning for Christ". Unfortunately, our people are wont to consider the work of missionaries as going along all the time "with sails set full"; they view the efforts of the missionary more or less as routine ministration to the needs of already-full-fledged Christians. But it is something more than this; it is the attempt to drive an opening wedge into a vast mass of paganism and to lay solid foundations for the true Faith among people who are steeped in traditions inimical to Catholic religion. Obstacles, difficulties, and disappointments are the daily lot of every priest in China, and tired bodies and aching hearts oftentimes are their reward of heroic labour. But after the example of our Divine Lord they keep at their task and eventually the grace of God will produce results in the conversion of pagan souls. No wonder that the constant plea from mission lands is for more spiritual support from the faithful at home. Prayer and sacrifice are the weapons that will conquer paganism, and if we are true to our Catholic instinct we will not neglect a daily prayer for the spread of the Church in China and elsewhere.

CORRUPTIO OPTIMI PESSIMA

The writings by "Observer" have been always vigorous and interesting. In this issue he has something to say on a subject that should interest every Catholic. Even in our own country, where we enjoy the utmost religious freedom, the matter of maintaining schools for our Catholic youth is somewhat of a problem; our people in Ontario and in Western Canada are even now engaged in a struggle to preserve for Catholic children their inalienable right to religious education. It requires no stretch of the imagination to picture the terrible results that would follow the banishment of religious education from the lives of our school children, yet the Church in China is faced with this sad state of affairs, and "Observer" expresses strong views as to the cause. His denunciation does not spare those who are responsible for the Godless education which is the curse of our generation and which now has borne evil fruit in hampering the work of the Church in the East.

NEW CONTRIBUTORS

Our two latest missionaries in the field introduce themselves through the columns of "China" this month. We welcome them among the contributors from Chuchow, and we look forward to other accounts from them when they begin to form impressions of their new surroundings. Fathers McGillivray and McNabb have "joined the family" across the Pacific, and our readers will follow their missionary careers with interest, praying that they may be granted long years of health and strength and Grace to carry on their noble work for souls.

ELEVEN FRUITFUL YEARS

Sunday, February 12th, will mark the eleventh anniversary of the Coronation of Pius XI as Successor to St. Peter. Since his elevation as Supreme Pastor of all the Faithful, our Holy Father has been unwearying in his efforts to advance the cause of the Foreign Missions. His reign has been marked by tremendous activity, and perhaps China has been the special object of his paternal care. He has multiplied mission districts there and personally consecrated Chinese Bishops to give greater impetus to the work of conversions. His faithful children everywhere have heard his voice time and again pleading for that support for the missions which they so richly deserve.

By REV. D. E. STRINGER, Lungchuang

SUCCESS depends on knowledge and effort. In the battle of life it is highly important that we KNOW what we are about in order that our energies may not be squandered on non-essentials. "Know thyself" is the advice of a great philosopher.

* * *

In an article recently published in "China" I asked our readers to attend Holy Mass and receive Holy Communion twice a week to the end that the daily toil of the missionary might be blessed with more abundant fruit; and since writing the thought occurred to me, "Have our readers the correct and clear conception of our work necessary to spur them on to more strenuous endeavour?" for, judging from letters I received, some have the impression that our sails are full as we sail along questing for souls. Such is not the case; yet I do not wish to give the impression that we are becalmed,—most emphatically we are not! What, then, is the state of our Mission?

* * *

First of all, we are not working on wholly virgin soil. When we were assigned to this territory by Propaganda, the missionaries then caring for it breathed a sigh of relief, and well they might, for the number of souls they had to care for was enormous, and they themselves were numerically inadequate in spite of the heroic attempts they made. One has but to look around him at home to see the spiritual ravages which time wreaks on a priestless Catholic community; the indifference that creeps over it as stealthily as night-fall. In China the same thing can happen, and it has happened to many who doubtless at baptism gave great promise.

* * *

In the January, 1932, issue of this magazine I tried to give our readers a glimpse into the trials and temptations that beset a Christian in China who tries to live up to his duties. Even with a missionary living in the same town with him, it means a constant struggle; and so it is not so surprising, nor should it scandalize one, to know that for not a few the fight is too difficult. I am speaking from experience in our own district with its two million souls.

* * *

Lishui, as you know, is our headquarters, and we have now six other sub-centres with resident priests. Each of these sub-centres has several dependent missions, where there is a Chapel or its equivalent, with, however, no resident priest. Briefly one classes one's Christians into fervent, lukewarm, and apostates. This last class is made up of those who have returned to the gods of their fathers, putting up all the paraphernalia of paganism in their homes and offering sacrifices. The bad example given by such is difficult to measure. I remember not long ago looking up one of my flock but a few years baptized and already finding the burden irksome, and when I asked him why he didn't come to Mass, he replied by asking me why many old-timers didn't. In the city of S——— I went to see a man many years baptized but who had ceased to come to Church. In reply to a question, he answered that he didn't want to be bothered with the "rules", quietly assuring me that when he came to die he would send for the priest. Such cases may be extreme, but they are many. I think it was Hilaire Belloc that called statistics the third class of lies, but even so I must risk that danger in giving figures for one of our missions; it has one hundred and twenty-three baptized people, and of these fifty-nine are apostates, twenty-two are regular, and the rest come often enough to be known as Christians. As regards our territory as a whole, the most lenient criticism would be to say that our regular attendants are the fewest. So much for the status quo.

One of the treasures a missionary parts with when he comes here is privacy. The Chinese ideas and ours on this subject are not by any means one. Hence in looking up strayed members of one's flock one cannot have the quiet talk that might do some good. On the other hand, one cannot cause a Chinese to lose "face", be the reason ever so good. In my experience I have found it impossible to give them a talk on their duties, for the simple reason that as soon as they know what I have come for, they repeatedly assure me that they will be at Church the next Sunday. At first I believed them, failing to see it was just their way of avoiding loss of "face". Such as these will never be argued into fidelity,—prayer alone and sacrifice will dispel the mists that envelop their faith.

An excuse with the majority is that they lack the leisure to attend regularly. I will readily admit that there is a very large kernel of truth in this. Our present Christians are all from the poorer classes, which means that they have a constant struggle for the necessities of life. The poor were always beloved of Jesus Christ, and He will be the Judge of such excuses. Yet when the Cross begins to rub, then they do find time to ask Him to ease it. One of my Christians gave me that argument. He is really a faithful fellow, and I can understand his reasons. Yet quite recently his child took sick, and he found time not only for Sunday Mass and Holy Communion, but also came several times during the week.

* * *

As regards the pagans, it is not safe to generalize. In some localities they are quite interested in the Doctrine. As a rule the cities are the least promising thus far; the pressure of business pursuits is too engrossing to give such as are engaged therein much time or inclination to turn the mind to things spiritual. Schools are a sine qua non, but under present legislation we cannot have one and teach a course of religion. Depriving Catholics of schools is universal enough to expose the real author of such bigotry, and he and his legions are the implacable enemies of Christ and His Church. Our hope is in the children, who will be the citizens of tomorrow.

* * *

Such is a resume of the obstacles we must daily meet and try to overcome. One can see at a glance that we must all storm heaven for more Grace. It is the work of the Church to Christianize the pagan world, which means it is the work of every single soul who rejoices in the name of Catholic; for in the opening words of the definition of the Church we read, "The congregation of all the Faithful, who, etc." We all of us are prone to measure our prayers by responses which coincide with our wishes, but such a frame of mind is entirely out of the question if we are to pray fervently and constantly for the conversion of the world. I am sure that our good Catholic readers will renew their resolutions to pray for us, and knowing that the Seed often falls on ground that is far from fertile, will do all in their power to moisten and soften it with the Dew that comes from heaven. This is my hope in writing these lines; and so in the near future, when I find that my Christians are endowed with a more lively Faith and when my pagans show a more decided interest in our Holy Religion, I will know where to seek the cause for such a happy turn. In closing I would earnestly ask you to follow out the inspiration that at this moment fills your souls and make that effort to receive Holy Communion at least twice a week for these poor souls "who still sit in darkness and in the shadow of death".

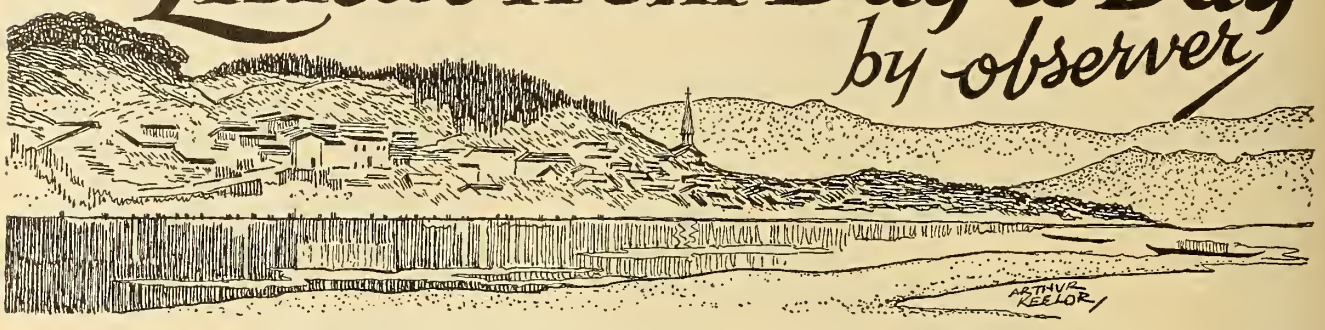
MORE THAN 10,000 BAPTISMS IN A YEAR.

Ningpo (Chekiang, China).—During the year ending June, 1932, the Vincentian Missionaries of the Vicariate Apostolic of Ningpo administered baptism to more than 10,000 souls. Adult catechumens baptized numbered 1,256, and 2,229 children of Christians received the Sacrament. Baptisms, at the point of death, were administered to 579 adults and 6,151 infants. Pagans now being instructed in the Catholic religion number 4,647. (Fides.)



A HEROIC GIRL.

A young married Chinese woman named Liu-chinchu, of the parish of Mat Oan, was converted seven years ago to the Catholic Faith. Her life since then has been one continuous torment. Her father-in-law, with whom, according to the Chinese custom the married couple live, has not ceased to subject the poor girl to unremitting persecution in the hope that he may force her to return to paganism. The climax came recently when they threw her out on the street. The parish priest heard that she had been turned out from her home, and engaged her as a catechism teacher, sending her to a neighbouring town. Upon this the enraged parents-in-law sent her husband to fetch her back, promising her that all would be forgotten and that she would be allowed to live in peace. The girl accordingly resigned her post and returned home.

When they got her home they imprisoned her in a little room. Now, she cannot move out at all, and if she is kept there long will certainly die. But Liu-chin-chu is not weeping. She has even refused a well-planned opportunity to escape. "Thank you," she told the woman who had arranged it, "but I would rather die here at their hands than run away. If I flee they will think me disobedient, and then there will be no chance of converting them. I am offering up my sufferings for their conversion, and while there is one breath left me they cannot stop me from using it to pray that they, too, may one day accept the gift of the Catholic Faith."—"The Far East."

Lishui from Day to Day

by observer

(In presenting this thought-provoking article to our readers we wish it were in our power to give it greater circulation—Ed.)

At home we occasionally meet "fallen-away" Catholics who have far more real hatred for the Church than any unspoiled pagan I have ever met in China. Unspoiled, I mean, by Western influence. Corruptio Optimi Pessima! It doesn't seem difficult to demonstrate from history that nothing can become quite as bad as something which has once been very good; no fall can be quite as thorough and irreparable as a fall from the pedestal to the gutter. In how many ways, alas, has this not been proven since the Prince of Darkness and Lucifer fell like lightning from Heaven!

We could quote examples without number. Look at so-called Christendom itself. Think of it in the ages of faith and watch now as it reaps the whirlwind of the Protestant Reformation. Only in eternity will it be known how much of christian man's inhumanity to man has resulted from that great rending of the seamless robe of Christ.

* * *

Corruptio Optimi! We have lived to see what never world saw before; paganism corrupted by Christendom's decay, the darkness of the shadow of death made darker by death itself, where there should have been life abundant. And what spiritual death seems more utterly incapable of resurrection than that of a one-time christian civilization which has sinned against the light! What yet, we ask ourselves, has God's unwearying Mercy in store?

* * *

It remained for the decadent West to out-pagan paganism. Already responsible pagan Chinese have been heard to raise their voices in protest against the output of filth from American movie "factories". Think of it! For centuries human nature has reached its lowest ebb at junction points where "the twain do meet"—Yokahama, Singapore, Macao, Shanghai, and other such cities "where there ain't no ten commandments". But even this is not the worst. The most significant development has been reached within the past ten years.

* * *

I refer now to the American Public School System, which has stretched its obnoxious tentacles across the broad Pacific, as if it were not content with banning the Name of God from the minds and hearts of millions of children at home. We think of Christ's words. Millstones and the depths of the sea! Worse this than Hollywood, worse than Singapore. Worse because malice is ever more diabolical than the mere weakness that flesh is heir to. I make the statement that THE CRUEL BLOW STRUCK AT CHRISTIANITY BY THE CLOSING OF MISSION SCHOOLS ALL OVER CHINA CAN BE LAID AT THE DOOR OF THE AMERICAN UNIVERSITY.

* * *

It is notorious that the anti-christian movement in China has been largely directed and "inspired" by Chinese who have studied abroad. According to Dr. T. C. Chao, of Yenching University, "Those who are leading the anti-christian movement ARE ALMOST ALL MEN WHO HAVE STUDIED IN AMERICA." Those young men set forth in quest of education and enlightenment and through the American University they discovered the literary and philosophical gods of the West. Darwin, Huxley, Shaw and Wells; Tolstoi, Bergson, Spencer and — of all men — the "angel of darkness" himself, Bertrand Arthur William Russell, F.R.S., central figure in the recent storm of protest re his admission to a Southern American University. Russell, least dangerous perhaps when he sticks to his pragmatism and plays his philosophy by ear, has enjoyed tremendous popularity in China since his series of lectures in 1920 in Pekin. Many of these were decidedly anti-christian, many just philosophical.

The very mildest impression that a fair-minded Chinese student could carry back from America would be that religion is at least utterly unnecessary. In most cases they have come to regard it as worse than unnecessary; as distinctly harmful, as a drug or opiate to the people. The whole American University system is a monument to that fallacy. And due to the swiftly changing events that followed the foundation of the Chinese Republic, it was not long before the Chinese educated abroad were in a position to convert their made-in-America ideas into swift and decisive action. Nanking's educational decrees are too well known to require comment, and today, from end to end of China, one-time thriving missionary schools and colleges and great educational institutions lie empty and deserted. Young China has learned, and is still learning, from America. The disciple has even outstripped the master in this regard.

* * *

However, in our arraignment of others, let us not imagine that we are free from blame. The children of darkness are still wiser in their generation than the children of light, but they are also more zealous and industrious. The enthusiasm with which the Reds of Moscow are striving to enforce Communism on the world is something which should make us hang our heads in shame. What they will do for Lenin many of us will not dare for Christ. Often we rest too complacently upon the assurance of the Divine assistance to the Church, as if Christ intended that to be a refugium for apathy and indifference.

* * *

In America the minds of those young students were sufficiently "cultivated" to afford a fertile field for the seeds of anti-christian Communism. Marx, Lenin and Trotsky form Russia's contribution to the galaxy of Young China's gods, and their works, as well as those of the other writers mentioned above, have been translated into Chinese and are being widely read today. Chinese students read and read and read. The percentage of illiteracy is still very high, but the educated are the rulers of the country and in their hands lies the moulding of China's future destiny.

* * *

Let us admit it: our heads have been buried in the sand. How much interest have Catholics in America ever taken in the thousands of Chinese students attending the Universities? What is being done today for the 3,000 students there? Will history repeat itself? Will they be ignored, as their predecessors were ignored? If so, they will return to China hostile to Christianity and their hostility will soon be translated into further laws to restrict and oppress the Church. It is we and not they who are to blame. The Catholic Church alone possesses the true enlightenment they came to the West to seek, but our indifference in their regard has been supine. It is high time the Catholics at home became aware of the Chinese in their midst.

PAGAN PRIESTS AND NUNS IN CHINA.

There are monasteries scattered very liberally through the provinces, some of them so large that they will have over a hundred resident priests, all engaged in the one duty of chanting the praises of the various gods in them, and in superintending the worship of the throngs of people who crowd to such places to make their offerings to the different idols. There are also numerous nunneries, where women devote their lives exclusively to the service of the Goddess of Mercy, and spend their years in trying to get from her the peace of mind they have not been able to obtain in their own homes.

In addition to the above, there are mountain temples in all the hilly regions, and little shrines built by the roadsides, where passing travellers may offer up their devotions to the gods enshrined in them, and a multitude of devices for drawing the attention of men and women to the duty of remembering the services they ought to pay to the gods of the land they live in. The more one studies this question, the more one is impressed with the fact that idolatry is a huge system that completely covers the whole of the Empire with its ramifications. — Sidelights on Chinese Life.

Islands in an Ocean of Paganism

Virtues and Shortcomings of China's Old Catholic Families

Have China's Old Christians their shortcomings? Of course they have. To begin with, their extraordinary respect for the priest, the exalted place he holds in their estimation, the almost unlimited powers they attribute to him—these very things lead them to expect too much of him and to make his life anything but a bed of roses. I could give any number of illustrations of this. A young missionary who goes to China for the first time, for example, and who gets to see for himself the extraordinary faith, devotion and spirit of sacrifice of these Old Catholics — their willingness to sacrifice even their lives, to say nothing of their liberty and property, for the Faith—is pretty sure to get a rather rude shock some day when he finds that these same Christians are anything but inclined to enthuse over his efforts to make new converts amongst their pagan neighbours. Their attitude is frankly one of suspicion: they are cold—one would almost think antagonistic. This attitude of theirs worries him: he cannot make out the basis of it. How on earth can he reconcile it—how can they reconcile it—with their general attitude towards Christianity? Is their Christianity Catholic at all? The young missionary finds it all exceedingly difficult to understand; but after a time he discovers the solution of the problem.

Back of every one of these Old Catholic families are centuries of deep-seated antagonism to their whole pagan environment—and to their pagan neighbours as pagans. Let us try to realize the position which every one of these Old Catholic families has had to take up and maintain consistently down the centuries in pagan and hostile surroundings. Do we realize that they were nothing more or less than so many islands in a vast ocean of paganism? They were in the community but not of it. Every department of social life was a point of collision for them with the life around them. For practical purposes they were in the position of boycotted families, at least as far as public functions or amusements were concerned. The fact is they had to ostracize themselves in order to live the Catholic life at all; they had to boycott all social functions. Try to picture their lives. Life in rural China is at best drab, very drab; rarely does anything "out of the way" happen in village or town. Every week has seven full working-days, and funerals and marriages are the only recurring things that break the routine drudgery. The Catholics could never participate in either of these functions, carried out, as of course they always were, with pagan rites. In China, funerals especially are most important functions, and neighbours who fail to attend them are regarded as queer—out of joint with the life of the community.

From the point of view of amusements the position was the same. In China there are no regular amusements. The only amusement that ever comes to brighten the lives of the people in the towns and villages is something corresponding to a circus—a sort of show or play run by vagrant dramatic companies of a rather low type, that pander to vitiated and even licentious tastes. The Chinese are extravagantly fond of these theatrical shows. The players arrive in a town and parade the streets in their stage costumes — "dragon" and "python" robes—and buskins, brandishing swords and spears of gilded wood, etc., all to the accompaniment of drums and noises that would be regarded as perfectly discordant and ear-splitting in Western countries, but which constitute one of the chief joys of life for a Chinese. Then the townsfolk give up all work and start a sort of carnival, which lasts while the show-people remain with them (usually a few days). These plays are so immoral that no Catholic is allowed to attend. To make matters worse, attached to the improvised theatre is a gambling-booth—or booths—where numbers of the people come and play for comparatively high stakes. Many of them beggar themselves and their families before the show leaves the place. The gambling instinct seems to be part of the very get-up of the Chinese—it is in their blood—and the men who conduct these shows realize this. So, they allow people to come to the show free; there is no charge whatever nor is anybody attending the show bound to patronize the gambling booth as well. But the proprietors of the show invariably make money because their gambling establishment is always well patronized; and, like the proprietors of casinos in places like Monte Carlo, they get a percentage of the "rake-off" from each game played by the gamblers. Now, from the point of view of the local Catholics, just imagine the sacrifice entailed by the coming of a show of this kind to a village or town. It is a free show, but they were not allowed to see it. The dull routine of their lives continues uninterrupted; while their neighbors make merry and the whole place is seething with excitement, enjoyment and general hubbub they have to stand coldly aloof.

WHIRLING DEVILS IN A STREET "SHOW" IN CHINA
"The players arrive in a town and parade the streets in their stage costumes . . . . . while their pagan neighbours make merry, Catholics have to stand coldly aloof."

It is obvious then that a pagan in China who decides to become a Christian must steel himself to make tremendous and recurring sacrifices. He has to break forever with his own kith and kin, with old friends and neighbors and with his entire environment. Functions like weddings and funerals, processions on big pagan festivals, public amusements like the travelling show—these things that used to brighten existence for him to some extent must pass out of his life for ever. Life, drab before, will now be doubly drab for him. He is a social renegade, even his best friends drop him; he has abandoned the religion and traditions of his ancestors and embraced the religion of foreigners whom the people of China regard with suspicion and distrust.

It takes the young Missionary in China quite a while to realize all this: to find out for himself what a fight these Old Catholics have fought down the centuries in order to remain Catholic at all, the stubborn attitude they had to adopt and maintain—day in day out, year in year out—towards their pagan neighbours and their entire social environment, how these pagans coldshouldered and persecuted them, often spilling their blood for the faith—when all this is realized, or even half-realized, by the missionary he finds it easier to understand and sympathise when he finds these Old Catholics sceptical, suspicious of new converts. They have good memories, and in spite of their Faith are still human.

How could any missionary think of abandoning these fine people in time of persecution? Persecution is nothing new to them, they have scarcely ever known anything else. Their loyalty to their religion, their love and respect for the priest, their greed for the Sacraments have cost them many a sacrifice, many a jeer, many a blow. Now a new persecution breaks out; they are hounded down by a new set of enemies, or by the old set under new colors. They are liable to robbery, imprisonment, even death. But, whatever happens, they will be spared at least one mortification, one sorrow—their pagan neighbors will not be able to point the finger of scorn at them and say that the priest they loved and respected and did so much for has abandoned his post, leaving them at the mercy of their enemies and without the consolations of the religion their fathers shed their blood for. They will not be asked: "Where now is this wonderful foreign God of yours? And where is this great representative of His? All your lives you have been standing up for them, suffering on their account. Where are they now? Both have let you down. You were fools, fools!" Imagine an aged Christian dying in such circumstances. All his life he has been looking forward to the consolation of having the priest by his side in his last moments, to receiving Extreme Unction and the Holy Viaticum in preparation for death. All his life at great cost he has been true to Christ and true to the priest. Now he is dying in a storm of persecution, his enemies are all round him, and the one friend he had relied on to be by his side to con-

LITTLE PAGAN MAID

Oh, little pagan maid of seven years
And eyes of blue;
Eyes that are dancing, mischievous and bright
And, oh, so true.
Something within me leaps for very joy
When I meet you,
And you look up at me and smile
And say—"Zung Vu".

You seem so out of place along this street—
I'm glad you do.
You are a little ray of sunshine sent,
A drop of dew.
You in your gay pajamed calico
Of startling hue,
Bobbed hair and saucy nose and smiling lips
And wee, red shoe.

Each day I say a little prayer to God,
Dear child, for you.
You who indeed belong to fairyland
Beyond the blue.
I hope some day we'll meet in Heaven's street,
When life is through,
And you with smiling face look up at me,
And say—"ZUNG VU".

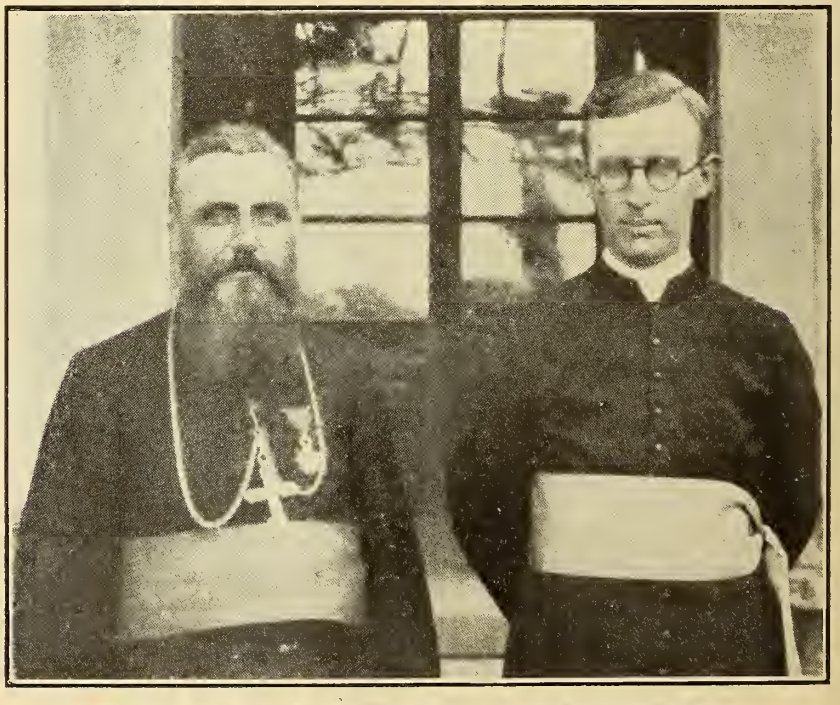
My First Christmas in China

A letter from FATHER McNABB

HERE we are at last settled in our little home in Lishui. I believe Father McGillivray and I made a record for speed this year. We came right through from Shanghai, and saved a week or more by not having to stop off at Ningpo. After a hearty welcome from Fathers Beal and MacDonald in Shanghai, they "showed us the town" in fine style. On the morning of Nov. 16th we left Shanghai on the respectable little boat, the "Haean". The weather was ideal for sailing and we enjoyed the trip very much. We had heard a good deal about some "bandit islands" en route, but nothing disturbed our passage. The following morning we were in Wenchow. Here we were greeted by Fathers Amyot and Gignac, and Father Prost of the Lazarist Procure. We made no attempt to go ashore till some of the bustling and pushing among the other passengers had quieted somewhat, but in the meantime the priests had managed to come aboard. Naturally, everybody had much to say, and said it, too. Talk about rackets, those Chinese rickshaw fellows take the cake. Being an old hand, Father Prost very soon had us stowed away with our hand luggage in some of the best "taxis" that Wenchow could boast of.



Father Gignac had had a new altar built in Wenchow for his church in Tsingtien, and had just completed arrangements to have it sent up the river. It was decided that I should go along with him the next day (Friday), so at 8.30 we set out, and made excellent time aided by a favourable wind. We left the boat and walked the last few li into Tsingtien, reaching there at 4 p.m. I was agreeably surprised at the Mission quarters; they are much better and bigger than I had supposed, although I must confess to fearing I should fall through the floors at first, they seemed so shaky.

On Saturday we erected the altar and were kept busy at odd jobs around the place. Just before the time for second Mass on Sunday the other priests arrived from Wenchow. We had been expecting them Saturday evening, and had gone out to meet them, but learned they had "camped out" for the night. Sunday passed very pleasantly, and Fathers Gignac and MacDonald showed us around their parish.

We left Tsingtien on Monday. Father McGillivray will tell you about the remainder of the journey while I give you an account of my first Christmas in China.

Preparations for the Feast began somewhat early, as much decorating and cleaning had to be done to make everything "hawga" for the celebration. The sacristans, teachers, and catechists all helped in making lanterns, flowers, and a beautiful arch which adorned the main entrance to the church. This entrance forms a sort of lobby, and it is here that they always put the crib so that the pagans will be sure to see it. It was all very nicely done—"haw-mo", as the Chinese would say. In the church there were many banners, strung from pillars and window-ledges. Some were covered with Chinese characters, and others bore representations of the Saints or of the Blessed Sacrament. All around the walls below the Stations of the Cross were hung flower-shaped lanterns. While those preparations were in progress we could hear the boys of Father Venadam's choir practising hard for the musical end of the celebration.

During Christmas Eve the Christians from outside Lishui began to gather at the Mission. Some of those good souls had come a long way, one of them 70 li (25 miles)—and not in a Ford either. By evening time a steady stream of people was pouring through the front gate, but most of those were pagans who were dropping around to have a "look-see". Father Kam preached at 8.30 and again at 11 p.m., and between the sermons the Christians chanted their prayers and prepared for the reception of the Sacraments. It seemed as if everybody in Lishui had paid us a visit. The Christians, of course, were adorned in their best. It is a treat to see the children in their multi-coloured clothing. One little one in particular had a head-piece (I suppose you can call it a hat) with bells hanging all around the sides, and one twist of the head produced quite a nice little tune.

The choir boys and the sanctuary boys carried lighted candles as they joined those on ceremonies in the processional entry to the church. Things looked really beautiful, and one would imagine oneself at home to see that procession move down the centre aisle as Father Venadam played Christmas airs on the organ. The Midnight Mass was celebrated by Monsignor McGrath, assisted by Fathers Serra and Kam as Deacon and Subdeacon. To me fell the lot of master of ceremonies (seminary days again!), but my lack of knowledge of Chinese was a decided disadvantage when it came to asking action from the sanctuary boys. The singing during the Mass was a distinct surprise to me; our local professor of Gregorian Chant certainly deserves much credit. A composition of his own rendered in two parts was a real musical treat. I allowed myself the distraction of comparing the vocal efforts here with some of those I took part in at the Seminary, and I'll be kind enough to Craig and Rollie not to record my judgment. Father Serra was to say the morning Masses, but the rest of us made use of our mission privilege to celebrate our three Masses after the midnight Mass. The Christians were served a little lunch afterwards, and gave vent to their happy Christmas feeling by exploding firecrackers galore.

On Christmas morning there was another sermon by Father Kam, and many attended the Masses at seven and ten o'clock. In the afternoon Solemn Benediction was given, and the Christians who had come from a distance set out for their homes.

Father Jim McGillivray spent his first Christmas in China assisting Father Boudreau at Pi-wu-ka. On Christmas Eve I had the happiness of baptizing six boys and one woman—my first baptisms here in China. The mail on Christmas Eve brought along the "Inter Nos" (a monthly chronicle from the seminarians to the priests in China) and other welcome letters.

The Sisters do not believe in Christmas vacation, for the day following the Feast they were very busy attending to the dozens of sick people who sought "foreign" medicine. They are doing mighty fine work, and great will be their reward.

"Not that we like 'CHINA' less, but we like the camera more", say these little lads in Lishui. Anyhow, it's a cute picture.

CONGRATULATIONS TO MONSIGNOR CROWLEY.

Very Reverend Dean T. J. Crowley, the esteemed Pastor of Sacred Heart Parish, Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., has been recently honored by the Holy See with the rank of Monsignor, and "China" is pleased to offer to this very faithful old friend its heartiest felicitations, and to wish him sincerely "ad multos annos" in the enjoyment of his well-merited honor.

A MATTER OF WORDS.

In a recent issue of the "Northwest Review", a splendid Catholic weekly newspaper published in Winnipeg, we read the following:

"The latest craze in the States is for everyone of importance, and lots of no importance, to issue a list of their idea of 'The Ten Most Beautiful Words'. The 'Review' joins in the parade.

"How's this?—

"Circulation, subscriber, paid-up, advertisement, contract, enclosed please find money order.

"There are no more beautiful word in the English language."

As a matter of business, "China" approves the choice of the "Review" and says (ungrammatically) "them's our sentiments."

LISHUI AND LISIEUX.

Dear Father:

"I am sending herewith one dollar for renewal of my subscription to 'China' for two years. Owing to hard times, we have been obliged to curtail many of our expenses, but we cannot cut out our 'China' because we like it too well. I have always been interested in your lovely magazine since it first was published in Almonte. I enjoy so much the first-hand information it brings us from our own Canadian missionaries. Each one in turn has something so very interesting to tell the readers of 'China'.

"Has it not occurred to you how very much the new name for Chuchow—Lishui—suggests the place—Lisieux—hallowed by your beloved patroness the 'Little Flower'? I think she must have whispered it to someone over there herself."

Yours respectfully, M. N.

Outremont, P.Q.

"SHOULD AULD ACQUAINTANCES BE FORGOT?"

If you wanted to have the same group as above pose for your camera today you would have to do a lot of work and spend a few thousand dollars to bring the members together. The picture was taken seven years ago on the site of what is now a splendid open-air rink at our Seminary. Nine of those shown in the group are now priests in China, and one (Father Sharkey) is a missionary among the Chinese in Vancouver. Incidentally, the photographer is also in China. We hope it will bring back pleasant memories to the "labourers": Fathers Amyot, Kam, Morrison, Sharkey, Gignac, Boudreau, King, Stringer, Beal and Venadam. Some of them went to China before seeing the fruits of their manual labour as our present students enjoy them today. Many a "wisecrack" enlivens the weekly manual labour period for the students. None of those workers above have suffered any ill-effects so far, and that should encourage those at the Seminary now who may fear to lean heavily on their picks and shovels (and there is more than one meaning for the phrase, "leaning on your shovel"). Perhaps some future editor of "China" will be searching the files for a "historic" picture when some present-day workers will be veteran missionaries in China, thinking of the days when they used to raise the blisters (?) on their hands building a ball park or mixing concrete for the greater enjoyment of recreation periods at the Seminary. It was lots of fun—then and now.

ISLANDS IN AN OCEAN OF PAGANISM

sole and help him is not there. That story will never be told.

Of course in some districts here and there the Christians are in a relatively strong position. In fact that is the tendency. When an isolated family becomes Catholic in a district and adheres to the Faith for, say, a generation, their pagan environment tends to drive them away to some other place where they will have a few Catholic families to make life a little more tolerable for them. In the latter sort of district the Catholic community thus tends to become stronger and more influential with the lapse of time, and as a result we find, here and there in China, villages and districts that are predominantly Catholic—better still, Catholic in the old sense. These places are the joy of a priest's life in China.

Of course, it can be readily understood that there are times when the presence of a priest in a locality would really hurt the Catholics. If, for example, Communists from other parts come to a district hunting for a priest, and if the priest doesn't happen to be there the Catholics have a chance of getting off much lighter. The Reds may tolerate the people being attached to the new religion, but they will not forgive them so readily if they find them giving shelter to and determined to protect the foreign priest. But both the priest and the people will know the temper of the times, and they'll come to arrangements between themselves as to the best thing to do in any given set of circumstances.

The Catholics in China know too when to profess the Faith openly and when it is the proper thing to hide the fact of their being Catholics. If I may be allowed the expression, I would say there is the martyr instinct in the hearts of these splendid people. No one could charge them with being reckless of life, but they know the times when they must profess their Faith.—Father Laffan, in the Irish "Far East."

The JOURNEY'S END

By REV. J. D. McGILLIVRAY

AFTER a very pleasant but uneventful ocean trip Father McNabb and I got a real "kick" when we detected two of our former "pals" waiting for us on the pier at Shanghai. We had the usual bewildering experience of the newcomer trying to figure out the Chinese money system during a shopping tour of the great city. Going up to Wenchow we were struck by the wonderful scenery, but when we landed at Wenchow I thought to myself that the view from the sea gave better "first impressions" than conditions on land would warrant. This being the first typical Chinese city we visited I was prepared for the disappointing change, and it was all very interesting to "see the sights" in the company of two more of our priests and Father Prost.

On Saturday, Nov. 19th, we left for Tsingtien to join Fathers Gignac and McNabb, who had gone down the day before. Five boats comprised the party: one for the Sisters, one for the priests, and three for our baggage. These river boats are a little longer than a good-sized dory, with a shallow interior and a bamboo covering over the centre. Each boat had two "lawda", or boatmen. They pole, row, and sometimes drag the boat with ropes from the shore. Over the rapids they have almost to carry it. It is strenuous work, and they were grateful when we occasionally helped them.

From Wenchow to Lishui is about one hundred miles. The journey could not have been very pleasant for the Sisters, but they did not seem to mind it. We certainly admired their courageous spirit; when they were not singing hymns they were playing the gramophone. To hear the soft strains of those convent hymns coming from one of those boats in the heart of a pagan country was something to remember.

On Saturday afternoon we ran into a head wind and a rain storm, so it was impossible to make Tsingtien that night. When darkness came on we "parked", rolled up in our blankets and slept well. Sunday we enjoyed the hospitality of Tsingtien, and set out for the final stage of our journey on Monday. On several occasions we left the boat and walked. During one of those little walks we visited a pagan temple for the first time. Father McNabb remarked that if the idols were removed the place would resemble a barn.

About four o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, Nov. 22nd, we got our first glimpse of Lishui. The Church and convent were easily visible from the river. At the landing we got a great old welcome from Monsignor McGrath and Fathers Serra and Venadam. The school children, bearing banners to greet us, and the Christians, were out in force, and it was quite a formidable group that accompanied us through the narrow streets to the Mission. The Christians certainly enjoyed "big face" that day all right. Firecrackers seemed to be exploding everywhere near the Mission, and we knew that the advent of the newcomers was being worthily heralded in Chinese fashion.

It did not take us long to be shown over the Mission premises, and we were delighted with all we saw. Everything went fine till time came for supper, and then yours truly thought things were not so good. Prepared for anything, I entered the dining room. The table was "set" with nothing but bowls of rice and chopsticks. That was the first of Monsignor McGrath's little jokes. After enjoying our reaction, he had the rice removed, and as if it had dropped from the sky, we were seated before a banquet table with one of the finest dinners I ever saw spread before us. We had everything down to the plum pudding. The good Sisters across the street certainly contributed their share to welcome us.

And now it remains for us to get our bearings and settle down to the study of the language. We are in good company and we feel that our days on the missions are going to be very happy. I have made no attempt to record deceptive "first impressions", but I did notice that the poverty of the ordinary people is something to wonder at. However, externals do not matter so much. When Our Lord said, "Whatever you do to one of these, My least brethren, you do unto Me," He must have had the Chinese in mind. Maybe there is something in poverty and misery that we know nothing about; One far greater than any of us was born in a stable.

NONSENSE

The train halted for a moment at the station and the traveller reached out, called a small boy, and said: "Son, here's 50 cents. Get me a 25-cent sandwich and get one for yourself. Hurry up now."

Just as the train pulled out, the boy ran to the window. "Here's your quarter, mister," he shouted. "They had only one sandwich."

Professor (looking at his watch): "As we have a few minutes to spare, I should like to have someone ask a question."

Student: "What is the time, please?"

"How do you like my new hat?"

"Sweetly pretty; suits you beautifully, dear. It almost covers your face, doesn't it?"

Lady (to chauffeur): "What is the matter, Parker?"

"Sorry, m'lady, but the engine seems to be missing."

"Missing! How exceedingly thoughtless of you to have left it behind."

Crustay: "Now that I have an airplane I can fly over to your country home in a jiffy."

Wesanay—"We would be delighted if you would drop out some time."

As Frankie stood beside his mother, who was making some purchases, the grocer told him to help himself to a handful of nuts. But Frankie shook his head.

"Why, what's the matter?" asked the grocer. "Don't you like nuts?"

"Yes," replied Frankie.

"Well, go ahead and take some."

Frankie hesitated, whereupon the grocer put a generous handful in Frankie's pocket.

When they had left the shop his mother turned to her small son and asked, "Why did you not take the nuts when the kind man asked you?"

" 'Cause his hand was bigger than mine," Frankie replied.

Mrs. Brown: "Was your husband cool when the burglar broke in the other night?"

Mrs. Jones: "Cool! Why, he was so cool that he shivered all over."

A slow paying customer wrote to his grocer:

"Please send six dozen eggs. If good, will send check."

The grocer answered:

"Please send check. If good, will send eggs."

Berger: "How is your hearing now?"

Schultz: "It was beautiful in Wiesbaden."

Berger (raising his voice): "I said how is your hearing now?"

Schultz: "No, not so very dear."

Berger (shouting): "No, no; I asked you how your hearing was?"

Schultz: "Oh, my hearing—why, it's much better."

Dolly was just home after her first day at school. "Well, darling," asked her mother, "what did they teach you?"

"Not much," replied the child, "I've got to go again."

Mr. Bacon: "Did you hear those measly roosters crowing this morning early?"

Mrs. Bacon: "Yes, dear."

Mr. Bacon: "I wonder what on earth they want to do that for?"

Mrs. Bacon: "Why, don't you remember, dear, you got up early one morning, and you crowed about it for a week."

"You probably don't remember me," began the self-made man proudly, "but thirty years ago when I was a poor, humble boy, you gave me a message to deliver."

"Yes, yes," cried the busy man. "Where's the answer?"

First Shark: "What's that funny, two-legged thing that just fell in the water?"

Second Shark: "Dunno, but I'll bite."

"I admit I hit him, your honor," pleaded a prisoner, "but he's such a silly fool, I could not have helped it."

"That makes no difference," replied the judge. "Fools are human beings, just like you and me."

A negro was pleading his own case to save expense. He called the chief witness to the box and demanded:

"Joshua, where was I when we stole them chickens?"

Excitedly the manufacturer of the world's greatest insect exterminating powder burst into his export office.

"Hey," he bellowed, "have we got an agency in Egypt?"

"Why-er no, sir."

"Well, why haven't we? I saw a film of them pyramids last night and it said they were covered with millions of hieroglyphics." — Legion Weekly.

"I was in the middle of the jungle when suddenly I saw a tribe of savages charging down on me."

"Good heavens! What did you do?"

"I stared at them until I was black in the face, and they took me for one of their own tribe."

The class was having its weekly lesson on painting, and the teacher said, "Sir Joshua Reynolds was able, with a single stroke of his brush, to change a smiling face into a frowning one."

"That's nothing," murmured little Jimmy, "my mother can do that, too."

Jackson came home after a visit to friends.

"Well," asked his wife, "did you see the Jones' twins?"

"Yes."

"Oh, George," she went on eagerly, "don't you think the boy is the picture of his father?"

"Yes," he said, "I certainly do. And the girl is the talkie of her mother."

A four-year-old boy, on being asked by a lady what his name was, replied, "Bunny."

"Have you no other name?" asked the lady.

"No," came the answer.

"What is your father's name?"

"Daddy," replied the child.

"Has he no other name?" asked the lady.

"No," said the boy.

"Then what does your mother call him?" the lady said at last.

"Fathead," piped the youngster triumphantly.

"Pardon me," said the little man, "but are you sure it was a marriage license you gave me last Christmas?"

The clerk turned up the particulars, "Why, yes, sir, of course," he said. "But why do you ask?"

"Well, I've been leading a dog's life ever since, that's all."

Mrs Fayle: "Why don't you ring the dinner bell, Bridget?"

Bridget: "I couldn't find it, ma'am."

Mrs. Fayle: "Why, it's on the sideboard."

Bridget: "Och! an is it that one it is? An' yerself tould me last night that was the breakfast bell."

Teacher asked a 7-year-old girl what a bridegroom was.

"Please, teacher," was the reply, "it's a thing they have at weddings."

CHINA MISSION BURSES

TO EDUCATE PRIESTS FOR CHINA

A BURSE is a sum of $5,000 (FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS) which, being securely invested, produces sufficient revenue to educate a student for the missionary priesthood. The capital is not touched, but remains intact. The Seminary would have the use of the ANNUAL INTEREST from each FIVE THOUSAND DOLLAR FUND to educate young men for the priesthood in PERPETUITY.

SEVERAL of the Burses already completed have been outright gifts from individuals, but the others have been built up over a period of years by the large and small offerings of our faithful friends. We invite contributions to any of the Incomplete Burses listed on this page. Even the smallest offering will move some Burse nearer to completion, and we certainly have need of such help now. We could never finance the education of all our students on the interest of our Burses as they now stand.

THOSE blessed with an abundance of this world's goods could spend to no better advantage than by becoming the Founder of a Burse for China Mission Seminary. It would be absolutely the most worthwhile monument to leave behind to your memory.

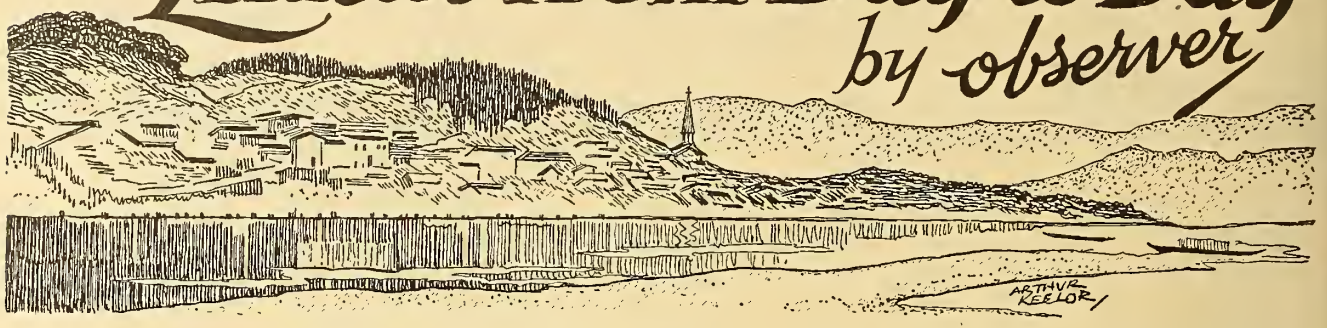
A SPIRITUAL CRUSADE

In our editorial columns last month, commenting on an article by Father Stringer of Lungchuang, we said that the missionaries in China, despite many reverses, "keep at their task, and eventually the grace of God will produce results in the conversion of pagan souls. No wonder that the constant plea from mission lands is for more spiritual support from the faithful at home. Prayer and sacrifice are the weapons that will conquer paganism, and if we are true to our Catholic instinct we will not neglect a daily prayer for the spread of the Church in China and elsewhere."

While the above words were being written a letter was on its way across the Pacific addressed to "CHINA". That letter, written by a missionary, bears out the truth of what we had tried to make known to our readers, and we ask you to read carefully "A Call to Arms" which appears on pages 40-41 in this issue. Not alone do we ask you to read it, but we want you to ACT on the suggestion it contains, and for that purpose we have inserted a form at the bottom of page 45. Make use of that form and you will become a partner in a great Spiritual Crusade for the salvation of souls in China. Do not lightly pass it by. It is an opportunity to show yourself an active missionary who realizes the power of missionary prayer. St. Therese of Lisieux, Patroness of Missionaries, says that "God's love for us is so unsearchable, so tender, that He wishes us to share in all He does. The Creator of the universe awaits the prayer of a poor little soul to save a multitude of other souls, ransomed like her at the price of His blood." In this apostolate of spiritual acts, so closely linked up with the spread of the Church, there is no one who cannot make a telling contribution. The work of intercession is within the reach of all, young and old, rich and poor, strong and weak; it only requires a heart aflame with the interests of our Divine Lord, a remembrance of Christ's desire that all may be one, to constitute one fold under one shepherd.

THE NECESSITY OF ENDOWMENT



Those who write to us invariably tell us that they like our magazine. We hope that those who do not write feel the same way about it. Sometimes we have the suspicion that readers may imagine we make too many appeals for money. Of course, only a small number could entertain such an opinion, but we are anxious, nevertheless, to justify ourselves with this small number and to point out to ALL our readers the necessity we have of making such appeals. Not for a moment do we admit that we do an unnecessary amount of "begging" in our columns. Considering the size of "CHINA" we think we are very considerate in this regard, and unprejudiced readers will concede that we give them a splendid "content" while at the same time we plead an important "cause". We are definitely above that class of publication which "has a cause but not a content".

For some time we have been featuring on our outside back cover our Burse Fund. There's a reason for it, and we want to tell you about it. First, let us impress upon you just what a Burse is. It is an ENDOWMENT FUND TO PROVIDE FOR THE EDUCATION OF PRIESTS FOR CHINA. The money we collect for Burses we cannot spend for our present needs. It is invested, and we get the current rate of interest on the investment. This interest is the money we have to use to do the work for which our Seminary was founded. We are always sure of the income from our Burses. Our aim and object in calling attention to them is to secure sufficient donations to yield us an interest return sufficient to enable us to continue our efforts to supply mission priests for the Prefecture of Chuchow.

Now look at our Burse Fund receipts listed on the back cover. Twenty-six incompleted Burses with a total sum of less than $23,000. Ten Burses are already completed, amounting to $50,000. That leaves us with a total Endowment Fund of less than $73,000. Figure it out for yourself just how the Seminary could get along on the interest from such a sum computed roughly at 5% per annum, remembering the varied needs involved in housing, feeding and educating nearly forty students, and in addition to that giving the means of support to more than twenty priests now engaged in our work. The figure for a completed burse is set at five thousand dollars. Of the 26 yet incompleted, only 2 are above the half-way mark, 15 are less than one thousand dollars, and 8 are less than one hundred dollars. Suppose that some good person were to suddenly complete all our listed burses (we never dare dream such dreams), we still would be far short of the amount necessary to make our Seminary a self-supporting institution. And until such time as Divine Providence permits us to reach a stage where we can be self-supporting, we have no other option except to appeal to our friends for funds. The need for an Endowment Fund is strikingly apparent, and the foreign missions are deserving of the whole-hearted financial support of every Catholic. That is why we have to run the risk of wearying our readers with appeals for material support, and we must depend on YOUR backing to win souls for Christ.

Lishui from Day to Day

by observer

FATHER GIGNAC, pastor of Tsingtien, is a visitor at Lishui "over the week end". Except for the fact that Fr. "Chook" MacDonald has gone over to the enemy and started to grow a fierce-looking beard, he reports things as quite normal in the parish. For a while we thought we were going to have a real story for "CHINA" because his boat was fired upon by soldiers about ten miles downstream, but it was only their way of enforcing orders. All boats are being commandeered these days for the nth time in two months.

* * *

But we couldn't get Fr. Gignac to tell us that the bullets had passed even close. We reminded him what a swell story it would have made had he arrived with a hole in his hat, but somebody said what did we think, was it Chicago or something. He walked the ten miles to Chuchow and arrived just as we were at supper.

* * *

Just accidentaly I learned from him that his last sick call—to Ba-Gna—about two weeks ago, involved a little walk from seven in the morning to six in the evening, with twenty minutes' stop for fish, eggs, rice and a smoke at a wayside restaurant. This may be quite commonplace and as unworthy of notice as Fr. Gignac thinks, but I hereby go on record that it has "news value" for me. Eleven hours' walk to a sick call in the mountains is just "all in the day's work" for many of our boys who were playing baseball on St. Augustine's diamond and hockey on St. Augustine's rink a few years ago. But it makes me want to moralize because I feel ashamed of the comparatively easy life that is the portion of those of us here at headquarters.

* * *

It seems that after Fr. Gignac left the boat the "lauda" or boatman did a little clever manoeuvering and managed to run the gauntlet. The last he saw of the boat it was heading downstream under full power, both men rowing like fools while the soldiers took pot shots from the bank. Of course all his baggage, including his portable typewriter, was on board, but the boatman had told him that his stuff would all be delivered once the danger had passed. Sure enough, two days later it turned up at the mission, everything intact. The soldiers meanwhile had grabbed all the boats they could lay hands on and headed upstream to Lungchuan.

The priests at Tsingtien decorated in fine style to greet Fathers McGillivray and McNabb and Sisters Juletta and Angela when they made their first stop in Chuchow District.

Soldiers have been arriving these days in thousands. Not a day but sees hundreds of them in the dispensary, where free treatment is available. The sisters are doing their usual heroic work. There are plenty of murderous-looking revolvers on display, but the men are orderly and well-behaved, and, to the great delight of the townsfolk, they pay for everything they buy.

* * *

These are the unknown soldiers in person. Utter strangers in these parts and speaking a "woe" which is unintelligible even to the ordinary Chinese here, they form a pathetic remnant of the forces recently engaged in China's latest civil war. You have heard, no doubt, of the recent Uncle-Nephew feud in Shantung, which made the cables from Geneva sizzle, and in which some 20,000 men were slain. As a means of restoring peace, 30,000 soldiers were shipped out of the Province. They were unwanted everywhere. No Province would accept them until Chekiang came to the rescue. Hence the recent activity in these parts.

* * *

A sort of entente cordiale is developing between ourselves and the Middle School here, and it began with our presence at the annual school field day. I hope Fr. Venadam will describe that event for you in detail because he and I were present as guests of honor, seated with the dignitaries on a shaded, elevated platform, smoking cigarettes and sipping tea.

* * *

It happened that a whole stack of small prizes were stored near where we sat; pens, pencils, note books, ping-pong balls, etc., etc. "What a pity we didn't think of bringing a few prizes ourselves," I whispered to Fr. Venadam. He agreed, and that afternoon found us downtown selecting flashlights, fountain pencils, sports socks, palmolive soap, note books, and—except for the soap—other things dear to the schoolboy heart.

* * *

Also, in case you don't know, you can buy tennis rackets, safety razors and blades, running shoes, twenty-five different kinds of cigarettes and cosmetics enough to paint the town red. And what you can't buy, in the wearable line, can be made to order very quickly: hats, caps, shoes, soutanes—anything.

* * *

We sent the prizes down that evening, and received a very nice note of thanks. A few days later came an invitation and five tickets to the school play. The newcomers get all the breaks. Fr. McNabb and Fr. McGillivray had been here but two days, and here was the first time we had been invited to such a performance.

* * *

The appointed evening found us being ushered to a bench about half way up the hall. The place was crowded, and a Chinese orchestra was playing as we entered, and we deemed it quite in order that Fr. Venadam, our Gregorian Chant Professor, should be elected musical critic. I don't know enough about the individual instruments to give a detailed description, and besides, the rest of us hadn't acquired sufficient taste for Chinese music to do justice to its finer points. Of course, I could tell you what the ensemble suggested—to me—but perhaps you'd better ask the Professor.

* * *

The programme varied as the evening wore on. It began at 7 o'clock, and—to get a little ahead of my story—11.30 still found us right in there, a little groggy, perhaps, but nevertheless "on our feet". There were speeches, mostly about Japan; a short two-act play, in which the Chinese soldiers won, and several violin solos (foreign violin) with piano accompaniment. The violinist is fairly good. He plays "Nocturne in E Flat" acceptably, and makes a fairly good job of "Traumerei". His playing, I need hardly say, was, for us, the big surprise of the evening. At the end of each act a referee's whistle blew, and the screen was pulled across front stage. Several times I thought the whistle had been mislaid.

The piano-violin numbers just didn't go with the crowd, and they made no bones about it. No doubt they understood just as much of the foreign music as fifty per cent. of an average Massey Hall Toronto house understands of Rachmaninoff or De Pachman or Elman—in his esoteric moods. But they felt no particular urge to let genteel applause dissipate any suspicion of Philistinic ancestry. I couldn't understand their comments because I don't yet know too much Chinese, but some of them sounded suspiciously like "take dat guy off". The piano, by the way, is the only one in town.

* * *

The accompanist has a lot to learn. She is, I am told, one of the lady teachers, but her idea of accompanying is to play the solo in unison, more or less, with the violin. Of course it spoiled the thing, utterly. Two smaller pupils then gave a violin-piano duet, a typical little thing, "Dance of the Dewdrops" or "Frolic of the Goblins" or something. It wasn't bad at all. We noted with satisfaction that the little fellow at the piano thumped out his little chords instead of chasing around after the melody. This number might have been rendered by small pupils anywhere. I was just going to make an awful break and say Mt. St. Vincent, or Mt. St. Bernard, or The Pines, or St. Mary's Academy, or the Mercy Convent.

* * *

At this stage the lights were darkened, one by one; quite a tedious process because it meant climbing ladders and putting large "feed bags" over the kerosene mantle lamps. We had a shrewd suspicion that there was a torch dance in the offing, and, sure enough, it arrived. During its performance one of the torches fell with a clatter, and then we knew it wasn't fairies. Up to this point Fr. McGillivray had been showing no great signs of strain, but when he remarked that it was never worth their while to darken the stage "for that" I knew he was beginning to crack. It was the first four hours that were the hardest.

* * *

Now came the pièce de résistance, the act of an individual vaudeville star, perfect mimic, perfect actor, most of whose stuff was lost on us because of our lack of knowledge of Chinese. He was a wise cracker. Anybody could see that. The applause was simply uproarious. Every time he said "TOO-O-O-O-O-RIST" (tourist) he brought the house down. All eyes would turn in our direction, and we concluded that tourists in general were being given a one-way ride that night.

* * *

Of course we laughed, too. Not always at the right time, perhaps, because on a few occasions we were a little over-anxious to display our intelligence and beat the gun at the wrong moment.

The show was insufferably long, but it would have been impolite to leave. About five numbers from the end the crowd began to thin out, and then, for the first time, the remainder of the audience became aware of the presence of five dark-robed foreigners in their midst. It was just too bad for the actors after that. We were the show. The singers sang and the players played. It seemed almost de rigeur that the entire faculty be represented in some number or other. But the crowd had discovered us. They could hear songs any time.

We found ourselves confronted by hundreds of pairs of eyes. Necks were craned in our direction from every angle of the hall, and those in front were now standing up to get a good look-see. I ask you, was our face red? Was our nonchalance being put to the test? And not a United Cigar Store within ten thousand miles. All we could do was light a Red Lion and feign a fierce, compelling interest in the now desperate efforts of the beleaguered entertainers.

* * *

At this point Fr. McGillivray pulled himself together for a last stand, and from then on my admiration for him mounted steadily. Never did he bat an eye as his gaze roved over the crowd. Toe to toe, stare for stare, he slugged it out with all in range. Some of his stage whispers were such as to tax our poker-faces to their uttermost limit. As for himself, Helen Wills in her most disdainful moments never gave a better display than the man from Glace Bay, N.S., in that dire hour.

* * *

Came the end—at last. We braced ourselves for the final effort to run the gauntlet of curious fans, and were soon swallowed up in merciful darkness outside. Home, 11.45. Bread and coffee; a lingering cigarette; end of a perfect day.

THE CITY OF LISHUI AS VIEWED FROM THE MISSION

MEMORIES of CHRISTMAS

By REV. J. D. McGILLIVRAY

ONE of the new priests has to go to Pi-Wu-Ka for Christmas to assist Father Bernard Boudreau. Father McNabb, having been Master of Ceremonies at the Seminary, would be very useful at the prefecture here in Lishui when Msgr. McGrath pontificates on Christmas Night. Consequently, on Saturday morning, Dec. 24, I started out on my first missionary journey.

The ordinary way of travelling is by boat; not anything like the boat Father McNabb and I boarded at Vancouver just two months ago. With bands playing, crowds cheering, confetti and streamers flying, that occasion was quite thrilling. But here it is different. You simply walk down to the shore, step into one of the river-boats, shove off from the land; and your two boatmen pole, row, or pull the boat along from the shore with a rope. At some places, where the rapids are very strong, they almost have to carry it. Lately none of those boats are available; the soldiers, who are passing through here, have commandeered them all. The next best means of travelling is by "taxi".

A "taxi" in this part of the world consists of a bamboo chair fastened on two bamboo poles, and carried by two men bent out of all natural shape from their heavy burdens. That is their work. You give them employment. They are paid for carrying you. But they do not object at all to your walking most of the way. In such a conveyance I left here the morning of Christmas Eve.

The distance from Lishui to Pi-Wu-Ka is forty li (about fifteen miles). Except for crossing ferries, the road is a narrow stone path winding through muddy rice fields. Early in the afternoon we came in sight of the town of Pi-Wu-Ka.

Walking up the main street of any of our cities at home on Christmas Eve, anyone can experience the spirit of Christmas that pervades the air. The crowds of people taking home their Christmas shopping, the mutual well-wishing of the season's greetings, the store windows beautifully decorated, the laughter of the little children, everybody is happy that day.

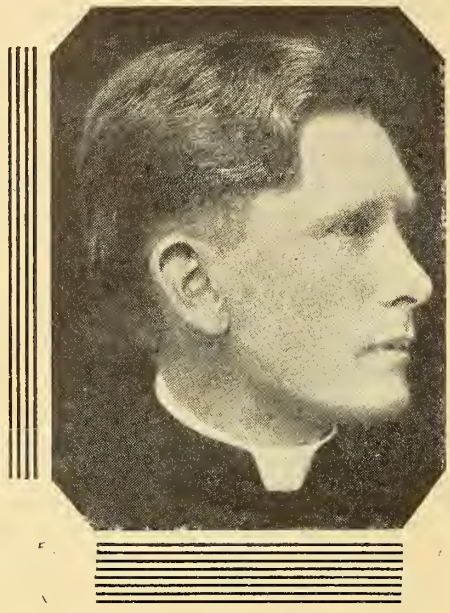
There was nothing of that nature walking up the main street of Pi-Wu-Ka; no wishing you a merry Christmas—these people never heard that term; no toys or decorations in the windows—there are no windows; and it is the land without a Santa Claus. The streets are dark, damp, and dirty, and so narrow that two persons can barely pass each other. Yet as narrow as are the streets of a Chinese city, the traffic laws are quite simple. In fact, there is only one regulation, and it is never intentionally violated. It is this: the black pig—and there are hundreds of them—has the right of way on all occasions. A short distance further on and we see a cross over a sort of stone shed. My pagan carrier announces it, "T'ien Chu T'ong" (The House of God). No wonder he is a pagan!

My friend, Father Bernie, is there to welcome us. Had I not seen a snap of him with his beard and Chinese dress, it would take a lot of arguing to convince me this is the same man to whom I said good-by at Toronto three years ago.

Pi-Wu-Ka has no church; no place to keep the Blessed Sacrament. There is an altar on the loft of this shed, and that serves for a chapel. After a while we visited the loft. It was not even a good loft. As one moved from one side of the altar to the other, the whole structure would shake.

"It is a bit wobbly, Father."

"Yes, but it is safe; the props are good."



At half-past seven the Christians began coming for night prayers at eight o'clock. At nine the catechist preached to the pagans. At eleven o'clock Father Boudreau began his instruction and sermon. By that time the loft was packed; three hundred and fifty men, women and children had crowded through the hatchway.

Sitting there listening to the sermon, and not being able to understand one word of it, my thoughts could not help going back to this night one year ago, when I celebrated my first solemn Mass, being ordained four days previously.

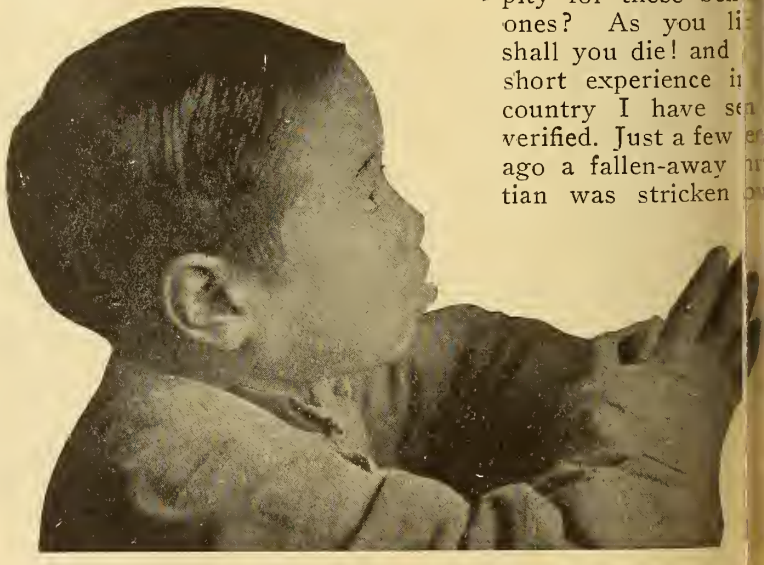
What's all this about? It looks as if St. Patrick's Day was being celebrated in Lishui. The picture was taken there last March 17th, and quite a few of the boys are sporting a sprig of shamrock. We don't know whether to blame Fr. King or Fr. MacDonald.

A CALL



By REV. DESMO

WAR! What terrors this small word inspires! It conjures up before our mind's eye scenes of carnage, of pillage, of destruction, of death. Without fear or favour it strikes into the homes of all. It casts its shadow over every hearth. It cares nothing for the sacredness of the sanctuary. Old and young, weak and strong, none but feels its blighting curse. The Angel of Death rides on the winds.

There is another war of which temporal conflicts are but dim likenesses, puny in their greatest strengths, merciful in their most cruel barbarities. It is a war from which we shall emerge in a blaze of glorious triumph, eternal and undying; or else we shall be bound in fetters which never will be loosed. It is a war which began in the timeless regions of Eternity when that arrogant cry, "I will not serve!" rang through the vault of heaven and was challenged by that thrilling acclamation, "Who is like to God!" Its fires spread to earth to char and blacken and turn Man's Paradise into a vale of woe. For century upon century tribes and peoples bowed beneath the yoke of Darkness, until the Prince of Light came forth and in single combat fought and died and rose again to captain His new Army.

Today His militant Church raises high His Standard, and the Angelic hosts join with us to shout the battle-cry, "The Kingdom of the World for its true King and Lord!"; and from this battle front of Chuchow we look back to you. Two million souls!! Ours and yours for the winning! Two million souls to be rescued from our strongest and craftiest enemy! Two million souls whose destiny hangs in the balance. And what is most terrifying of all, two million souls who think the darkness Light. "And if the light that is in you be darkness, the darkness itself how great shall it be!"

Among our two million souls scarcely two thousand are now baptized. Of this number, many have fallen back into their former ways, succumbing to the forces of ignorance, of poverty, and of indifference which two lone priests had tried for years to stem,—valiant missionaries who gave themselves until we came to help, and who are still spending their energies now in other parts of this great country. You have caught gl of our struggles through the accounts whic appeared in "China". Yet words are powerles quately to paint the soul of Paganism. Try to ent the heart of a pagan and look upon God's c through faithless eyes. The very elements are f with hidden terrors. The very air you breathe is p with countless unseen spirits. d died without visible reconciliation, gone in the inking of an eye to render his account. In yet another ıtre an old Christian, having fallen away, has dragged wn with him his son and daughter-in-law. This son d been married a year. His wife was apparently rren. Was there to be no offspring to carry the family me? Such a possibility was alarming. Then, temptan. It held out a hope. The urge of centuries preiled; sacrifice was offered; the woman conceived, and son was born! Coincidence? God knows, I don't. it this I do know. There was no point more vulnerable ainst which the devil could have launched an attack. ıe old man longing for a grandchild to perpetuate his emory; the son trying to silence conscience by his derstanding of filial piety; the woman shrinking from stigma of sterility. What a seething mass of otions! He knows and He will judge. The defection these three was untold loss. But more than that, the l of such bad example goes abroad and proves a mbling block to others. This is not fiction, for I have ard it thrown up to me by one who is little more than nere child. "Why don't the old Christians obey the ng Vu (priest)?"

Articles you have read from time to time have given u some slight conception of the wrench the step from ganism to Christianity occasions. To break from old stoms that have entwined themselves around one's ily life; to bear the ridicule, yes, and the contempt and ws that sometimes follow one's conversion; to withnd the entreaties of a pagan father or mother to have ourse to superstition when prayer and sacraments mingly have failed; to suffer being held as one devoid filial affection because one now must not perform the gan rites in honour of a parent; these are trials which ne of us have ever had to bear. And if these weary ıls should shrink from the painful effort necessary to ercome them, shall we dare to accuse? Let him who basking in the sunshine of Catholic Faith remember ıt "if in Tyre and Sidon had been wrought the great ngs that have been wrought in you they would have ne penance long ago, sitting in sack-cloth and ashes". ıu, dear friends, who read these lines,—you who are happily blessed with all the treasures of our Faith,—you who walk hand in hand with our loving and lovable God, remember, "freely you have received, freely give".

But when we look upon the upturned faces of the little ones, —ah! then it is we feel the horror of paganism searing our very souls. Little tots, soiled, it is true, by the sin we all of us carry into this life, yet free from all that load of lies, of calumnies, of evil that lurks in wait for their awakening minds. One undersands more clearly that terrible and awe-inspiring "woe" which fell from the lips of Him Who is gentleness itself. Woe to him who scandalizes one of these little ones. Oh! the pitfalls that await their unwary feet! What a mystery life is! As I write these lines the strains of that beautiful hymn, "Adeste Fideles", come to my ear. Is it unmanly that tears unbidden should well up when all around are little ones who have never heard the old, old story of this Feast we are now celebrating, the Feast that makes us all look back with longing eyes to times of innocence when as yet we were unscathed and happy, protected from life's cares and trials?

A CALL TO ARMS!! For one week we ask each one of you to come to China—to Chuchow—and stand beside us to make a mighty drive against the forces of Evil. To come physically is impossible; but it is not the only way. Come by your prayers. Come by that great highway, the Communion of Saints. Join in a great crusade; band all of us together to hurl an overwhelming force of graces against our common enemy. We ask each one of you to go to Holy Mass and to receive Holy Communion on seven consecutive days if at all possible. This appeal will be read in well-nigh thirty thousand homes; each home will average five souls. One hundred and fifty thousand Masses and Communions daily for seven days! What a thunderous cry to raise to Heaven! What a dense cloud of fragrant incense to waft up to God's throne. And if so commonplace a thing as a cup of cold water given in His Name will not be without its reward, who can hope to gauge the stream of Grace which will flow down upon these benighted souls? Two million souls, each in the image and likeness of God! Each capable of ravishing the Heart of God! Fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, harken back to that first Good Friday. Hasten through the thickening gloom to

AT TSINGTIEN.

A letter recently received from Father John MacDonald, assistant priest at Tsingtien, told of the pleasure it was for him and the pastor, Father Gignac, to welcome Fathers MacGillivray and McNabb on their arrival in China. Christmas at their little chapel was well celebrated. The sanctuary boys neatly decorated the mission quarters and Father "Chook" himself manufactured a Crib by making use of all available wrapping paper, etc. While in Shanghai he had secured figures for his Stable of Bethlehem and with the judicious use of such material as was at hand he made a Crib which he considered would "do credit to any Church at home". "We were greatly encouraged," he writes, "to see as many as 120 persons present at Mass on Christmas. We had about 40 Confessions and Communions. Many of those people had walked from 10 to 30 li to attend Mass, and walking that distance is quite an ordeal, as I have found out from experience on mission trips. Those who came from the country had to spend the night at the mission; all they needed was sufficient space on the floor to curl themselves up on a straw mat. For the first time in Tsingtien the people heard a Missa Cantata; I celebrated, and Father Gignac was the choir. Two sermons by Fr. Gignac, one by the Catechist, Benediction in the afternoon, and Baptism of two boys and one woman rounded out my second Christmas Day spent in China."

AN INVITATION TO ALL THE "MACS."

If you look over the list of incompleted Burses on the back cover of this issue you will see one "The MacPherson Burse." The establishment of this burse and its steady progress has been due to the zealous work of Rev. D. MacPherson, Parish Priest of Port Hood, N.S. Father MacPherson long ago realized the need for an Endowment Fund for Canada's Foreign Mission Seminary, and we are more than grateful to him and his good friends for their generous efforts to provide for the education of priests for the Chinese Missions. From a letter recently received from him we quote the following lines: "It is now four years since the MacPherson Burse was put on the market. In spite of the hard times it is mounting up. We want just $40.62 to make an even $1,250.00. Come along, Mac. Take a chance. I asked some of Fr. Jim's 'Rose Buds' if they could figure out how we could complete the Burse ($5,000.00) before I should leave for Purgatory. They have not come out straight with the answer, but they must be praying hard. Keep at it, 'Buds,' and watch us next month with that $40.62."

MEMORIES OF CHRISTMAS.

Midnight Mass! Who will fittingly describe what it means to a Catholic. The whole spirit of Christmas centers around that event. Preparations are being made weeks in advance. On that night the richest vestements are brought forth, and the lights, the flowers, the incense, all vie with one another to give glory to the New-born King. The choir is at its best with hymns so famous that they are identified with the season itself. Surely, it is a great event for any Catholic. But to the newly ordained priest who is celebrating his first Mass on that occasion, with his mother, father, relatives, friends, the people he knows, present, it is one of the good things in life that is not soon forgotten.

To-night I am far away from that scene of a year ago; so far apart are we that the ten thousand miles distance do not express it. Here, we are in a world so strange that now last Christmas seems unreal; it all appears like a beautiful dream. Or perhaps I am dreaming now. No, I am not. This is a real Christmas night in the heart of pagan China. Father Boudreau in his sermon is having no difficulty in portraying the journey of Mary and Joseph from Nazareth to Bethlehem; many of his listeners came from outlying country districts. Two of them walked a distance of seventy li (about twenty-five miles). No need of describing the crowded narrow streets of an eastern city; all passed through those to-night. "No room for them at the inn; they had to take refuge in a stable." Not at all necessary to elaborate on that latter point; the present surroundings are not so far removed.

At midnight I began Mass, while Father Bernie attended to the confessions. At the words of consecration, when the same Babe of Bethlehem saw the place He is laid to-night, He must have said to Himself, "'Almost two thousand years have passed,—but the change is not very great". The shepherds who were keeping the night-watches over their flocks on the first Christmas Night were no poorer than His present adorers. We had even the animals present; not as big as the ox and the ass, but they were coming from behind the altar, an honor to their species.

The people stayed until I finished the three Masses. After that they were given some food. In the morning Father Boudreau said two early Masses. At eleven o'clock he preached a second time and said his third Mass. The loft was crowded once more.

Neither of us had eaten since our collation of the evening before; and by now we were ready for anything placed before us. After dinner, a smoke, and a little talk of seminary days; then Father Bernie played "Home Sweet Home" on the mouth organ and Christmas was over.

Hoping to acquire a little experience, I remained there a few days. Father Boudreau is a real missionary; he is right on the firing line, and he is there alone.

On Wednesday I returned by boat to Lishui, having completed my first missionary journey. True, as missionary journeys go, mine was a very short one; but it contained a most strange Christmas.

AN OUTSTANDING EXAMPLE OF MISSION ZEAL.

A year ago it was our pleasant privilege to pay tribute to the Crusaders of St. Joseph's Parish, Leslie Street, Toronto, for their interest in Foreign Missions. During February of this year St. Joseph's Church was the scene of another missionary event when a crowded congregation was present to encourage the youth of the parish as they made a presentation to China Mission Seminary of their fourteenth annual offering of one hundred dollars. We beg a fervent blessing on those ardent Crusaders and their spiritual leaders, Rev. Dr. O'Leary, and Fathers J. McDonagh and B. O'Donnell. May their example serve to inspire other parishes with the desire to be generous to the Foreign Missions.

A CALL TO ARMS!

the mount of Calvary. See that Figure, blood-stained, torn, naked! Listen to the plaintive cry He utters. Its very humanness penetrates to the soul's core. His extreme helplessness pleads with us to heed His request. What does He say? Listen. "I thirst." If you were standing then close by, what would you have done? Yes! oh, a thousand times yes! You would have, I would have,—all would have done what you are thinking now. If you could have been there and offered a soothing draught to cool those burning lips, what a treasured, poignant, ecstatic memory to lock in the depths of your heart. "I thirst!" You can do now what you would have done then. Each one of you we beg to join with us in offering Him a potion than which there is none sweeter. We do beseech each one of you to help us gather these two million souls into the one true Fold. If there be joy in Heaven upon one sinner doing penance more than on ninety-nine just who need not penance who can begin to vision the rapture caused by the Homecoming of these two million souls! Most earnestly do we entreat you to sign the promise printed on page 45. Do make the sacrifice, hear Mass and receive Holy Communion that the Light of Faith may shine in all its resplendent brightness over this great number. In those precious moments when He reposes sacramentally in your hearts, ask Him with great confidence to "shorten the time" and draw these two million wayward children to His feet. Write your name upon this pledge, and it will be written in gold in the Book of Life.

As an earnest of our good-will, and to draw closer the bonds of Faith and Charity which unite you all to us, we promise that all who send their names either to us directly or through the Seminary will have them inscribed in a book to be kept in our Headquarters at Chuchow, where a Mass will be said yearly on the Feast of Christ the King for your intentions.

Daily also will you be remembered, with all our good benefactors, in every Mass offered in every chapel of our whole district of Chuchow. A call to arms! We look to you. "Freely have you received, freely give."

LITTLE FLOWER'S ROSE GARDEN

Edited by FATHER JIM

CONDITIONS OF MEMBERSHIP

The only conditions of membership in the Rose Garden are: (1) To say every day the Prayer for the Conversion of China; (2) To go to Holy Communion once a month for the Intention of Missionary Vocations. Certificates and pins will be sent to all members.

Dear Boys:

Of course you are all mad at me for leaving you out of the February issue, but it just couldn't be helped. When Father Jim goes away on a holiday and gets back too late to have his "copy" ready, the old editor doesn't mind, but goes right ahead and uses up your pages. Then, to make me good and sore, he takes part of your second page again this month, but to show how forgiving I am I will say something to you in favour of the editor's part of your second page. I refer to the piece at the bottom of next page. You see there an appeal from the missionaries in Chuchow asking for spiritual help for their work. Now, the object of our "Rose Garden" is to supply just such help to our missionaries, and I want EVERY MEMBER of our Club to get busy and be sure that you send your name to the Seminary promising to go to Mass and receive Holy Communion for our missions. Talk about it to your parents and to your teachers and ask them to get interested, too. The missionaries in Chuchow will be very pleased, I am sure, to see all the "Buds" come through with THEIR ANSWER to such a request. And the Holy Season of Lent is a good time to do this work for the missions. Many of you will be going to daily Mass, and it will be easy for you to make your intention of attending the Holy Sacrifice for the benefit of the Chuchow Missions.

When I write to the boy members of the "Rose Garden" I always feel that among them are some future missionaries, and I am happy in the belief that God will reward their youthful interest in the missions by granting vocations to many of them. The priests in China and the students in the Seminary owe their vocations to the fact that as schoolboys they, too, were interested in the missions and they prayed to become priests. God always blesses those who take an interest in His work of saving souls.

Although the girls outnumber the boys in our Club, still there are many hundreds of young lads who have signed up to do their bit for the missions as members of our "Rose Garden", and the greater number of letters I got last month were from the boys. In January I published pictures of girls only, so this month being especially for the boys the girls have to stay out of the pictures. Next month I will give both a chance, and I hope many will send their pictures. And don't forget that I intend to give the grown-ups a chance later on if they will write me concerning the "Rose Garden".

This month of March is given especially to devotion to St. Joseph. Every boy should have a great love for this wonderful saint; he is, as you know, the husband of the Blessed Virgin and the foster-father of Our Lord. He is named the Heavenly Protector of the whole Church, and the special patron of two great countries, Canada and China. In your prayers ask St. Joseph to obtain from Almighty God many blessings for the Chinese through the labours of Canadian missionaries in China.

God bless you, Boys.
FATHER JIM.

Petty Harbour, Nfld.

Father Jim has become acquainted with a new group of buds in Newfoundland, and this time from Petty Harbour. I regret exceedingly that space does not permit me to publish some of their letters this month, but they were certainly worth reading, and I hope to hear again from St. Joseph's School. Among the boys who have become "Buds" are: Theodore Lee, John Kennedy, Philip Price, Dan Predham, Gerald Chafe, Joseph Everard, Gerald Doyle, William Healey, Fred. Stack, James Doyle, James Stockman, John Lee, Henry Everard, Edward Pridham.

TWO SANCTUARY BOYS
Michael and Arthur Sampson, Fox Harbour, Newfoundland.

Dear Father Jim:

For ages I have been going to write and join your interesting Club. We have been getting "China" for a number of years. My birthday is on Feb. 10th. I am 12 years old. I am in Grade 6 at Burke Public School. I have two brothers, Bernard, age 10, and Hugh, age 8. I have quite a collection of stamps which I will hunt up and send to you. Please send my certificate and badge soon.

HAROLD G. GALLAGHER.

By the time Harold sees his letter in print he will be the proud owner of a badge and certificate for which he has had to wait some time. To the Buds who have not been answered promptly I just remind them that the mailman will soon visit them. It takes a lot of time to attend to all my mail from the Buds.

2 Plymouth Rd.,
St. John's, Nfld.

Dear Father Jim:

Having read your Rose Garden pages for the past three years I have decided to join your club. I am ten years old and go to school at St. Patrick's Hall. I will often say a prayer for you, and I think I can find out who you are from one of your mission priests whom I know. I would like some Canadian boys my own age to write to me.

JOSEPH SMITH.

I have heard about your school from the editor of "China", Joe. If you find out who I am you'll keep it a secret, won't you? I think you're just kidding me, honestly.

St. Thomas Aquinas Schl.,
Hamilton, Ont.

Dear Father Jim:

I was very glad when you answered my letter in "China". I took it to school and our Sister read it for class. When she finished everyone wanted to join your "Rose Garden", so I am sending you the names of nineteen boys from Senior III. and Junior IV.

JAMES FLYNN.

'Atta boy, James! It just takes one good young missionary to start things in a school, and I very heartily welcom e the boys from St. Thomas Aquinas.

A QUARTET OF YOUNG MISSIONARIES
Left to right they are: Jack Brennan, 182 Oshawa Blvd., Oshawa, Ont.; Arthur Pouliot, Sudbury, Ont.; Joseph Smith, 2 Plymouth Rd., St. John's, Nfld., and Oliver Plexman, 209 Elm St. W., Sudbury, Ont.

Beechmont, C.B.

Dear Father Jim:

I am eleven years old and in Grade 7. We have been getting "China" longer than I remember, and now I want to join your Club. During the winter months we have Mass only every third Sunday if weather and roads are good, but I will fulfil the Rose Garden conditions on those Sundays if you make me a member.

ROBERT THAYER.

You're a member, Robert, from now on, and I hope you liked your certificate and badge.

Ridgetown, Ont.

Dear Father Jim:

I have heard so much about your "Rose Garden" that I would like to become a member. My sister Doris has been in your club for a long while.

GORDON GIGNAC.

I'm sure your sister will be glad to have you a "Bud", too, Gordon. And there's no doubt about Gordon's interest in the missions, for he has a brother in Tsingtien, Chuchow district, as a missionary. And I bet those two buds are not the only ones Father Gignac is interested in, either. All our priests have a special interest in every young member of our Club.

Sixteen boys are on the long list of new Buds that came from St. Albert's School, Sudbury. Every school in Sudbury has taken a big interest in our Rose Garden, and we are proud of our Sudbury "Buds". The Secretary of the class writes "We earnestly desire to join your Club. We have been praying much for your missionaries and for the extension of the Kingdom of Christ our King, but we wish to become more active helpers, and so we are sending our names to be enlisted in the 'Rose Garden'."

And here's a letter I was glad to read. It is from Alphonse Marentette, Paincourt, Ont. He writes: "I am a member of your Rose Garden and I think you will be glad to know I have been doing a little missionary work. I have secured 60 new members for our Club, more than 30 of them are boys, my school companions. We are all going to do something to help the pagans of China."

That's fine work, Alphonse, and you made Father Jim very happy. I hope some of those new Buds will write to me sometimes.

Box 84,
Hr. Grace,
Nfld.

Dear Father Jim:

We have been getting "China" for more than a year, and for me the Rose Garden pages are always interesting. I am 14, and go to school at the Academy here. I would like to hear from some Buds.

THOMAS J. WALSH.

The "MacDonalds" increased their membership when Donald, Charles, Miles and William were among the number who became Buds recently from St. Agnes School, New Waterford, N.S. To judge by the number of cards in my filing system under "Mac", the Scots carry the day in point of numbers.

And here are three good men and true: Edward Wilhelm, 76 Wilhelm St., Kitchener, Ont.; John Lobinowicz, New Waterford, N.S.; and Daniel J. McNeil, Passchendaele, N.S.

Prayer for China.

O Lord Jesus, Who didst come on earth to save the souls of men, open now Thy most Sacred Heart in mercy to the people of China who still sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, and shower Thy graces upon them that they may come to the knowledge of Thy Gospel. Bless also and protect Thy missionaries, and make their work fruitful for Thee of countless souls. Amen.

MY ANSWER to the Canadian Missionaries in the Prefecture of Chuchow, China

Dear Fathers:

You have appealed to me for spiritual help in your efforts to save souls. To encourage you and to beg God's grace for the conversion of pagan souls in Chuchow I WILL MAKE AN EFFORT TO ATTEND HOLY MASS AND RECEIVE HOLY COMMUNION SEVEN TIMES FOR THAT INTENTION. In order that you may know of my support in your noble work I gladly sign myself as one willing to answer your Call to Arms, and I send my name to St. Francis Xavier Seminary, Scarboro Bluffs, Ontario, to be forwarded to China in order that I may share in the Holy Mass which will be offered each year on the Feast of Christ the King for all who answer this appeal.

Guests were expected and the mistress thought she would give the new maid a little friendly advice.

"Edith," she said, "you'd better not wear any jewelry tonight—only just while the guests are here."

Edith, however, was not gifted with a great deal of intelligence, and she failed to grasp her mistress' meaning.

"Well, ma'am," she replied, "I have not got much what you'd call valuable —but thanks for the warning, just the same."

The orator had held forth until everybody but one man on the stage had left the hall. Turning to the lone survivor the orator said, "Thank you for so attentively hearing me to the end of a rather too long speech."

"Not at all, sir," replied the other. "I'm the second speaker."

Zealous sentry—"Can't let you go by without the password, sir."

Irate officer—"But I tell you I've forgotten it. You know me well enough. I'm Major Jones.

Sentry—"Can't help it, sir; must have the password."

Voice from the guard tent—"Oh, don't stand arguing all night, Bill. Shoot 'im."

"Toothache, eh? I'd have the thing pulled if it were mine."

"So should I—if it were yours."

" 'Artford, 'Artford," called the conductor.

"You've dropped an 'h'," said a passenger.

"That's all right, sir. We'll pick hit hup hat Hamherst."

Visitor—"Why, the traffic here is nothing. Where I come from a man is run over every twenty minutes."

Native—"How dreadful. The poor man."

A western stockman, who had mortgaged his cattle to the local bank, was called in by the banker and told that his note was due and must be paid the following day. The stockman asked the banker: "Were you ever in the cattle business?"

The banker answered "No".

The cattleman said: "Well, you are now," and walked out.

An Aberdonian had been visited on several occasions by the doctor. In due course he received the bill. On paying it he demurred over the amount.

"It's right enough," said the doctor. "I paid seven visits to your home."

"I ken that," was the reply, "but on the last visit I cam oot tae the front gate when ye arrived."

Teacher—Willie, you have no good excuse for staying away from school yesterday.

Willie—Well, it ain't my fault.

Teacher—It isn't? Why?

Willie—'Cause I done my best to think of a good one.

She—"Do you know that every time you breathe somebody dies?"

He—"That's too bad, but what can I do? If I stop breathing I'll die, too."

"I'm going over to comfort Mrs. Brown," said Mrs. Jackson to her daughter, Mary. "Mr. Brown hanged himself in their attic last night."

"Oh, Mother, don't go! You know you always say the wrong thing."

"Yes, I'm going, Mary. I'll just talk about the weather. That's a safe enough subject."

Mrs. Jackson went on her visit of condolence.

"We have had rainy weather, haven't we, Mrs. Brown?"

"Yes," replied the widow. "I haven't been able to get the week's wash dried."

"Oh," said Mrs. Jackson, "I shouldn't think you would have any trouble. You have such a nice attic to hang things in."

The Boy (at the Zoo)—I say, grandma, ain't this 'ere a heagle?

Grandma (instructively)—No, dear, that air's a howl.

Keeper (compassionately revising) —You ain't none of you right. Hit's an 'awk.—Yorkshire Weekly Post.

Stout Person (engaging room)— The window is a bit small. It wouldn't be much use to me in an emergency.

Landlady—There ain't going to be no such emergency! My terms for actors is in advance.

Little Willie—"Mom, you said baby had your eyes and daddy's nose, didn't you?"

Mom—"Yes, darling."

Willie—"Well, you'd better keep an eye on him. He's got Grandpop's teeth now."

"Will somebody please pass the cow down this way?" said the funny boarder, who wanted some milk for his coffee.

"Here, Jane," said the landlady, ironically, "take the milk down where the calf is bawling."

Teacher—What does silence mean, Tommy?

Tommy—Please, teacher, it's what you don't hear when you listen.

"Smell anything, grandma?" asked the youngster who was lying on the floor drawing. Grandma assured him she did not.

The young artist gave a few finishing touches and repeated his question. Grandma sniffed the air and again decided she smelled nothing.

"Well," said the boy, "you ought to, I have just drawed a skunk."

A customer sat down to a table in a smart restaurant and tied his napkin around his neck. The manager called a boy and said to him: "Try to make him understand as tactfully as possible that that's not done."

Boy (seriously to customer)— "Shave or hair cut, sir?"

Sambo was hired out on a railway gang. At the close of the first shift he was all tired out and sought the boss.

"Mister, yo' sho' yo' all got me down on that pay roll?"

"Sure," said the boss. "Here's your name—Sambo Simpson. That right?"

"Yes, suh," replied Sambo. "Ah just thought you might have me down as Samson."

Motorist's Wife: What lovely fleecy clouds. I'd just love to be up there sitting on one of them.

Motorist: All right. You drive the car.

It was flag day for the hospital, and all the village maidens were selling flags.

Suddenly one noticed the squire's son coming down the street in his dashing sports car. She walked into the roadway and stopped him.

"Will you buy a flag for the hospital?" she asked, demurely.

"No," growled the young man. "I'm a regular contributor to it. Have been for years—"

"Oh, yes," interrupted the girl, "we know, but we're collecting money today, not pedestrians."

Judge—You were alone when you committed the robbery?

Delinquent—Yes, your Lordship. You see when you have got a mate you never know whether he is honest or not.

Teacher (to little boy who had been absent from school) — "Willy, why were you home from school?"

Willy (after turning a few shades of red) replied, "Wal, it were like this, the baby was cold, and as we had no hot water bottle, ma put the lid of the stove on the baby, and I had to sit on the stove to keep the fire in."

CHINA MISSION BURSES

TO EDUCATE PRIESTS FOR CHINA

A BURSE is a sum of $5,000 (FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS) which, being securely invested, produces sufficient revenue to educate a student for the missionary priesthood. The capital is not touched, but remains intact. The Seminary would have the use of the ANNUAL INTEREST from each FIVE THOUSAND DOLLAR FUND to educate young men for the priesthood in PERPETUITY.

SEVERAL of the Burses already completed have been outright gifts from individuals, but the others have been built up over a period of years by the large and small offerings of our faithful friends. We invite contributions to any of the Incomplete Burses listed on this page. Even the smallest offering will move some Burse nearer to completion, and we certainly have need of such help now. We could never finance the education of all our students on the interest of our Burses as they now stand.

THOSE blessed with an abundance of this world's goods could spend to no better advantage than by becoming the Founder of a Burse for China Mission Seminary. It would be absolutely the most worthwhile monument to leave behind to your memory.

YOUR DONATION for our BURSE FUND may be sent either to the Seminary or in care of the "Catholic Record", London, Ont.

THE HOLY YEAR

At a time when the whole world seems to be in a mix-up, when nations and individuals seem to have time only for conflicts and disagreements, and when the chief concern seems to be with individual and social miseries, it is refreshing to have the authoritative voice of His Holiness the Pope summon the world to "cease to fix itself only on these things and turn to those of high spirituality."

To promote such a change of heart in the world, the Sovereign Pontiff has decreed the celebration of a Holy Year to begin on Passion Sunday this month, and to continue to April 2nd, 1934. With his usual paternal solicitude, Pope Pius XI urges all Christians to commemorate the 19th centenary of the death, resurrection, and ascension of our Lord, by visiting the eternal city of Rome, saying the prescribed prayers in the four chief churches there, revering the relics of the Passion preserved in various places, and praying to the Father of Mercies, turning their thoughts from earthly and decaying things to heavenly and eternal things.

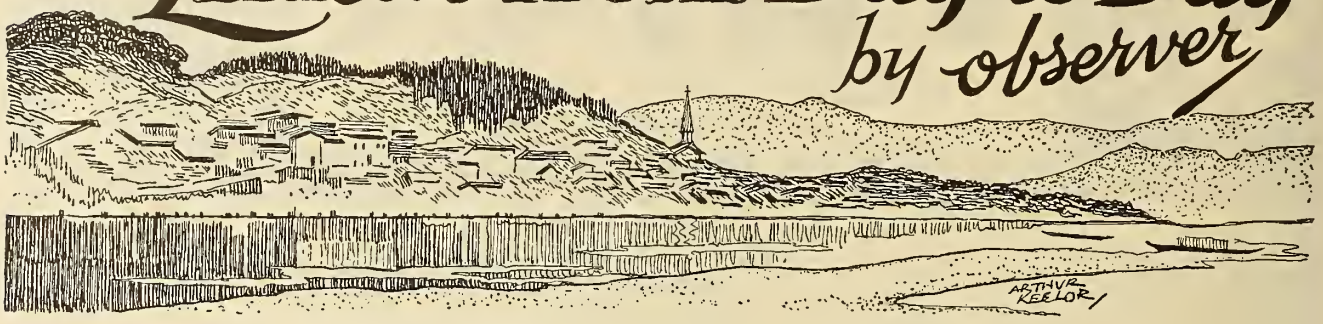
In the world to-day, after nineteen hundred years of Christianity, there is either widespread indifference or active hostility to all forms of religion, and unfortunately it must be admitted that pagan lands are not the only ones which "know not God and His Christ". The proclamation of a Holy Year, then, is intended to recall to the minds of men the significance of Christ's Christianity, and its sublime message to the world. Even pagan philosophers recognized that religion gave a permanence and stability to social institutions that nothing else could give. When God is left out of the picture and His supreme authority in human affairs denied, chaos is the necessary result. It requires the supernatural Revelation of the Godhead, speaking through Christianity, to impress men with ideas that are powerful enough to rule their lives; supernatural religion alone furnishes a broad basis for virtue applicable to all times, places and conditions, to diversities of race and civilization, and that is the lesson that the Holy Father, not only in his proclamation of the Holy Year, but in all his messages to his children, has been endeavoring to emphasize.

When we meditate fruitfully on the great events which are commemorated in this 19th centenary, perhaps it will awaken us to the realization of the blessings of Faith which we enjoy and urge us on to do all in our power to bring such blessings to those who "sit in the shadow of death."

A GRATIFYING RESPONSE

Under the title of "A Call to Arms", we published last month a stirring article from Father Stringer, in which he appealed to the readers of "China for spiritual assistance for our missionaries in Chuchow. We are more than gratified at the most excellent response. Already thousands of names have come to us. Individuals, societies, schools, convents and seminaries have joined in this spiritual crusade, and we feel sure that the results of their combined good works will mean a great deal for the success of our missionary efforts in China. On behalf of the missionaries we express gratitude to all who have so generously answered their appeal. In order that all may have an opportunity to join in the good work, we have repeated in this issue the form which you may sign. It is printed on page 53. May we add that it is not necessary that the Masses and Communions be offered on consecutive days.

HOLY CHILDHOOD ASSOCIATION



The current issue of the "Annals for the Propagation of the Faith" contains the announcement of Father Hugh Sharkey's appointment as the new Director of the Holy Childhood Association for Ontario and Western Canada. The choice is a very happy one, and we congratulate Father Sharkey on the new possibilities that will be his for the exercise of his apostolic zeal as director of this official Catholic Children's Mission-aid Organization, which does so much for the Foreign Missions.

Concerning the appointment, Rev. A. T. Lellis, National Director of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith, writes: "The new Director is well known to Canadians. A Missionary Father from the China Mission Seminary, Scarboro Bluffs, he has already spent three years laboring in the Canadian Prefecture-Apostolic of Chuchow, and only recently returned to his native land to work among the Orientals of Vancouver Archdiocese, under the direction of His Excellency, Most Rev. Wm. Duke, D.D. Thus, the China Mission Seminary, in addition to the task of converting a large and populous section of China, is making an important contribution from its limited staff to the solving of our own Canadian Oriental problem on the Pacific Coast.

"That Father Sharkey will make an ideal director for the important work of the Holy Childhood is obvious. His missionary experience will be invaluable. He knows the sad lot of the pagan children. He has walked with them, talked with them, has viewed their pitiable condition with his own eyes. He has lots to tell, and, fortunate circumstance! he is admirably gifted for the telling."

Lishui from Day to Day

by observer

TWO A.M. off the coast of Chekiang. The good ship Tahua, 700 tons, is gingerly feeling her way among the countless islands and treacherous shoals of the Chusan Archipelago. Pirates on the bridge, with pistols drawn, have taken command of the situation, while pirates in the first-class saloon—exactly forty of them—are telling the terrified cook to make it snappy with the fried rice and eggs and the best wine on board.

* * *

Beleagured passengers, shaking with fright, and long since relieved of all their money and valuables, take what dismal comfort they may from the loud guffaws and rollicking chantys of the bold buccaneers. For this has been a never-to-be-forgotten day.

* * *

"Drink, my hearties, drink to the shades of our honored fathers and the gods of the buccaneer!" Rarely has such phenomenal luck come the way of this pirate crew who gamble with death in their every escapade. "Pass the soothing opium pipe. Heigh-ho for the Chusan Main!"

* * *

"Fiction", you murmur wearily, "cheap stuff at that!"—and you turn for the joke page with a sigh. But hold, good friend. It's the plain unvarnished truth we're telling. For we know the vessel and we know the spot, and but two short weeks have passed since this latest episode of our modern Treasure Island.

* * *

Suddenly the engines stop. Flashlights blink from the bridge and are answered from the shore. A cluster of sampans, lights bobbing up and down, soon surrounds the Tahua. She has reached her destination, the pirate lair of the Huanlungse.

The transfer to the smaller boats is accomplished mid scenes of hilarity that disturb the stillness of the early morn. Captain and compradore are bundled in as hostages, and several harmless looking bags are guarded jealously by the chief. They contain a mere twenty thousand dollars in notes on the Agricultural and Industrial Bank in Shanghai. Judged in terms of the respective standards of living, this would correspond to at least half a million dollars at home. Small wonder that joy supremely reigns in the pirate lair.

The Tahua waits meekly in the offing, lights dimly aglow. If all goes well the captive officers are to be released and returned unharmed, and the pirates are men of their word. Thirty miles distant is Tinghai, where our good friends Sister Xavier and Sister Anne are blissfully unaware of the little drama now being enacted, not an altogether unusual one in their Archipelago of Chusan. These pirate men know the good Sisters and would not harm them for all the world. Do not the Sisters cure their diseases and give them a meal and a few Ko to buy cigarettes every time they are released from jail? And did not their honored chief die in the Sister's Hospital last year? No, the Sisters need not fear those lawless brigands. It will be a long time now before any of them will need cigarette money again.

At 4 a.m. the Captain and the compradore are returned with profuse apologies, and the Tahua heads for Shanghai with her despoiled passengers and crew. Four hundred of them have been taken for a ride, but not even the ship's cat has been injured. They are not bloodthirsty, those pirates of Chusan. Theirs is no policy of "dead men tell no tales". Those reckless fellows merely follow the game of their fathers and Chusan is still a whole lot safer than Chicago.

* * *

Once, so we were told, the Bias Bay Boys boasted of their intention to capture one of the C.P.R. Empress boats. But they never made any attempt. Hot lead and live steam are rather effective deterrents, and one push of a button on the bridge could lock any prowling mauraders into separate steel compartments where they would remain at the Captain's pleasure.

Within a few days of this raid, and almost in the same spot, another Chinese vessel, the Hsing Ning Tai, disappeared. Of course, it was thought that the pirates were responsible, but corpses and bagbage floating on the water disclosed the fact that she had sunk and there was no trace of a single survivor out of three hundred on board. Among the passengers were Mr. E. H. Owen and another member of the China Inland Mission.

* * *

On occasions like the Chinese New Year it is "standing room only" from stem to stern on those vessels. Why more of them do not founder is what we cannot understand. I never board one of those smaller Chinese craft without mentally figuring how long it would take to get out of a soutane, or comparing the respective merits of the crawl and the breast stroke.

* * *

Last summer, some of us had the pleasure of accompanying His Excellency Bishop Defebvre from Ningpo to one of the Chusan islands. About three hundred passengers were crowded like sardines on a little bit of a tug with a normal capacity of about fifty. She pulled away from the wharf with a starboard list of about 40 degrees and careened drunkenly as she gathered way. After a few ghastly moments of indecision she thought better of turning turtle then and there and made up her mind to begin the journey more or less on an even keel.

Happily, the voyage passed without incident. Had a coolie on that starboard side made a disparaging remark about the great grandfather of his next door neighbor that vessel would have been listed as missing. The ensuing verbal battle would have precipitated an immediate rush on the part of just 100 per cent. of those within earshot. Even the instinct of self-preservation is not an effective curb against the insatiable curiosity of the Chinese. Each one regards it as his inalienable right always to know what's going on—anywhere.

* * *

Our return trip was worse. This time it was by converted junk which once might have been Confucius' private yacht — if looks counted for anything. The usual crowded conditions prevailed. Bishop Defebvre and Father Amyot ventured into the forecastle, but I preferred the deck as a parking place. By all that's good let there be no bottom-up junk between me and the blue vault of heaven if ever I find myself in the China Sea.

AGED MISSIONARY BISHOP DEAD.

Six days after he had celebrated his 77th birthday, Bishop Stanislaus Jarlin, Vicar Apostolic of Pekin, died in his See city. In his long and brilliant missionary career, the late Bishop consecrated six bishops and ordained more than 100 priests, Chinese and European. Having spent more than 40 years in the Orient, he saw a territory which counted only 25,000 Catholics when he arrived possess half a million converts at his death.

NEWSPAPER ITEMS.

WASHINGTON. — Through four state lotteries China will raise money for aviation and highways. Commerce department reports received from Shanghai show that 50 per cent. of the lotteries of 5,000,000 yuan each will be distributed in prizes.

CAMBRIDGE. Mass. — There are nearly enough Chinese students at Harvard University this year to form three football teams. With 32 students enrolled, China is second only to Canada in the size of foreign delegations.

MY ANSWER to the Canadian Missionaries in the Prefecture of Chuchow, China

Dear Fathers:

You have appealed to me for spiritual help in your efforts to save souls. To encourage you and to beg God's grace for the conversion of pagan souls in Chuchow I WILL MAKE AN EFFORT TO ATTEND HOLY MASS AND RECEIVE HOLY COMMUNION SEVEN TIMES FOR THAT INTENTION. In order that you may know of my support in your noble work I gladly sign myself as one willing to answer your Call to Arms, and I send my name to St. Francis Xavier Seminary, Scarboro Bluffs, Ontario, to be forwarded to China in order that I may share in the Holy Mass which will be offered each year on the Feast of Christ the King for all who answer this appeal.

A DEATH and a BURIAL

By REV. D. E. STRINGER
LUNGCHUANG

ONE sunny morning, a day that made one feel it was good to be alive and well, a pagan lad came to the Mission with the news that his father was dying. Would the Seng Fu (the priest) come and baptize him? Yes, he had had some instruction, a neighboring Christian had explained the cardinal points of Christian Doctrine to him as best he could. I knew the sick man and I recalled that while he had his health he did not seem particularly bothered about coming to the church for instructions; he had, so I was told, performed a few superstitious rites even after he had announced his intention of becoming a Christian. And now the Angel of Death was hovering about him.

The Sick-Room

Having prepared my sick-call kit, a ten minutes' walk brought us to the house. No one here to greet the priest with a lighted candle and conduct him silently to the sick room. Instead, I entered and was presented with tea and cigarettes, and an invitation to be seated. The family, being all pagan, did not understand the necessity for hurry. I accepted the cup of tea and the smokes, but laid them down on the table immediately. They had fulfilled their duty as hosts, I mine as guest. Then I told the boy to take me to the invalid. The darkness of that room wherein the sick man lay! You could have cut it with a knife; it was heavy and oppressive. At first I could see nothing. When candles had been brought I could survey the scene in their dim light. The room was small and littered with household effects. High up on one wall a window was cut — an aperture would describe it more correctly, and it was carefully covered with paper which allowed little light and no air to enter. Over the sick man's bed hung a mosquito net of some thick material. The boy pulled back the flaps, and in the candlelight I saw the wasted form, beyond a doubt in his last struggle. At a glance I knew there was no hope of questioning him. As I bent over him I saw the terror in his eyes. After my priestly ministrations his soul presented a changed appearance to his Guardian Angel who would usher him into an eternity of happiness a few hours later.

Getting a Coffin

That evening a Christian came to see me, and after beating about the bush in oriental fashion, he told me that the dead man's family was too poor to buy a coffin. What he meant was that they were too poor to pay the cost involved in the customs pertaining to a funeral. Everyone who would walk to the grave was entitled to a meal on return; pieces of sackcloth had to be bought for the principal mourners; carriers had to be hired to bear the coffin. All this the Christian told me in his one sentence. Here was an opportunity for the Christians to practise that charity they so often preached. Many of them did "chip in", and through the generosity of some very good Canadian Crusaders at home, friends of mine, I was able to furnish the necessary expenses.

The following morning I went to the home to bless the coffin, and many Christians came along to recite prayers and to accompany the corpse to the grave. In this town the "cemetery" is about an hour's walk from the mission. When we arrived there no grave was ready. The men carrying the coffin would dig it when they came. Finally they did come, and their conduct would try the patience of Job himself.

In China, whole fields are devoted to the graves of pagan ancestors. The wealthy Chinese build great monuments to their dead, and Chinese characters extol the virtues of the deceased. Sadly missing from such monuments is the Cross, the symbol of Life and Resurrection.

Choosing the Grave

Everyone present blossomed forth on the spur of the moment as judge of a suitable burial site. Pagans have any amount of superstitious customs in this regard, and Christians are slow to relinquish them. After some fifteen minutes' discussion, a spot was selected and the diggers began to clear away the brush. Hardly had they begun operations when some sage halted them with the remark that the spot was liable to washouts. Then another conference was held with about as much success as certain European conferences nowadays. The mourners set off in all directions, and hills

MODERNIZING CHINA.

HONGKONG, (China).—Wars and rumours of wars occupy most of the space devoted to news from China. Yet more important things are happening. In the past ten or fifteen years amazing progress has been made. Scores of cities in South China have been partially or wholly modernized. Twenty years ago Canton's widest street would permit the passing of only two sedan chairs. No wheeled vehicles, other than wheelbarrows, were to be found on its thoroughfares. Today the city has over 60 miles of wide modern streets over which upwards of 1,000 motors pass to and fro. Kwangtung Province has built several thousand miles of roads. With the construction of roads and the widening of streets has come the building of modern premises of five, six, and seven storeys to replace the little huts of former days.

Kwangsi Province, whose ambitious programme of construction was interrupted for the past five years by civil strife, has again resumed its constructive efforts. Today it has about 2,000 miles of motor roads, and long distance telephone service between the larger cities. Its chief cities have been fitted out with all that a modern city requires: wide roads, sanitary systems, electric lighting, public parks, etc.

It is not necessary to explain how much all this development will help the missionary in enabling him to have quicker means of communication, better food, and a more reasonable hope of protection and peace.—(Fides).

PROGRESS OF THE FAITH IN CHINA.

Statistics released by the Apostolic Delegation at Pekin reveal that the Church in China has completed another year of steady and consoling progress, not only maintaining her former position, but clearly improving and consolidating it, thanks to the efforts of her missionaries and native priests.

Catholic Population.

The figures are contained in the Annual Report for the year ending July, 1932. The Catholic population of China shows a net increase over last year of 32,582, bringing the total recorded number of Catholics to well over two and a half millions, 2,563,425, to be exact.

The gross increase, or actual number of conversions, was 57,027 This is the largest on record since 1925. Unfortunately, nearly 43 per cent. of the gross gain must be checked off against losses which have been greater than last year, but which show an improvement over 1928 and 1930. These losses may in part be accounted for by the ravages of communism and brigandage, and in greater part by epidemics, famines, floods, and consequent emigration.

The Clergy.

During the past year the number of ecclesiastical divisions has risen from 107 to 114. Three of the newly-erected Missions were entrusted to the Chinese secular clergy. There are now 17 Native Chinese Ordinaries in charge of vicariates and prefectures in China. During the year 49 Chinese priests were ordained, the total number now being 1,553. Foreign priests number 2,195. The total number of seminarians is 6,420, which includes all aspirants in many seminaries, counting those for Religious Orders and 36 clerical students from China in the Urban College at Rome.

These various facts and figures reflect the generous and persevering efforts of Holy Mother, the Church, to share with her children in China the saving truths of the Gospel. The progress manifested is an encouraging sign for her future in the midst of this great people.—(Fides).

AN INHERITANCE TO PRIZE

"'We are the sons of the Crusaders,' said Montalembert to the enemies of religion, 'and we shall not flinch before the sons of Voltaire.' We have the Faith as an inheritance from the martyrs of all the ages. It would be criminal for us to let the dishonest theories or gaudy pleasures of to-day rob us of the Faith that neither torturer's rack nor executioner's axe could kill in the breasts of our forefathers. It would likewise be a disgrace for us to miss any opportunity of spreading the Faith to other souls now pitifully lacking it. If the Faith is worth dying for, it is worth living for.

"If the foreign missions did no more than show us men and women leaving home and kindred, and even risking death, they would be of inestimable service to the modern world, and an object lesson in real values."—"The Far East."

MANY RACES, ONE FAITH.

KUCHING, (Sarawak, British Borneo). — Several nationalities were represented at the First Mass ceremonies of Father Joseph Chin Ting Huong, the first Chinese priest to be ordained for the Prefecture of Sarawak, British Borneo. The Solemn High Mass was a truly Catholic function, the celebrant being Chinese, the assistant priest Irish, the deacon English, and the sub-deacon Dutch. The Parish Priest of Kuching, an Austrian, preached to a crowded church in Chinese and English.—(Fides).

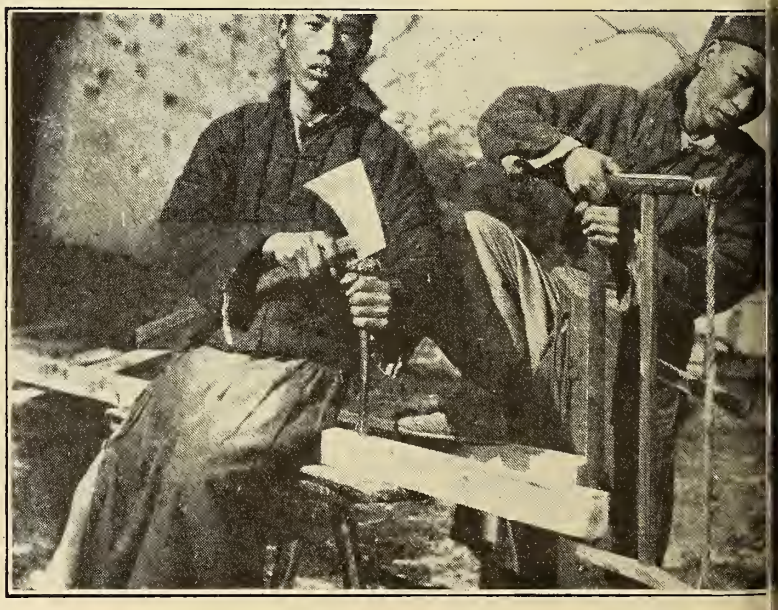
ATHLETICS AT CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY OF PEKIN.

PEKIN (China). — Though the Catholic University is the youngest University in Pekin, it has already made a name for itself in the important field of scholarship. Athletics are, of course, only a side-issue, but it is interesting to note that even in this regard the Catholic University already commands the respect of its rivals. Its various teams occupy a leading position in the whole of North China, and hold some "All China" track and field records.

Athletes at the Catholic University are now preparing for the Tenth Far Eastern Olympic Games to be held in Manilla in 1934.—(Fides).

We would appreciate it very much if our friends among the Clergy would remember our missionaries by sending surplus Mass Intentions to the Seminary.

CHINESE



By REV.

EVERY trade has its tricks. Here is one of the specialties of local thieves. Having looked over the layout of his prospective victim, the thief, under the protecting cover of a dark night, approaches the scene of his nefarious deeds. To ensure a quick getaway, however, in case anything should go amiss, or lest he should be disturbed during operations, he lights a number of joss sticks and plants them in the ground as he moves forward to the scene of action, thus having a line of lighted beacons to guide his fleeting footsteps if he be forced to make a hasty retreat. Not so dumb, you say. One moment, please. Sometimes it happens that the stalker is stalked, his burning joss sticks are removed from their original positions, replanted in a line leading to a dirty duck pond, and the alarm raised, Thief, Thief! Naturally, such an outcry is not precisely conducive to the regular heart beating of our light-fingered friend. Considerably agitated, to say the least, he commences a precipitated retreat, and—plop! he ends up in the dirty duck pond.

DEPRESSION! It has been the chronic state of the mass of the Chinese people for milleniums, or should it be millenia. It has been said that the Chinese could live on the land left uncultivated in the fence corners of American farms. Certain it is, necessity, that ever-provident mother, has taught them how to get the most out of the requisites needed to keep their bodies and souls together. Take their shoes as an example. The soles are made of old bits of cloth, discarded clothing, bedding, etc., all sewn tightly together. Even wishing to economize on this cloth, a layer of bamboo leaves will be inserted between layers of cloth. The uppers will also be of cloth, but this will have to be "good" cloth, else it would not hold together. And how to get the most wear out of those shoes? To be sure, the best way is to wear them as little as possible, and this is done; but there are times when the shoes simply must be worn, and hence both shoes are made identically the same, no distinction between right or left. That enables them to be changed, periodically, from one foot to the other ensuring even consumption on all sides and surfaces. And as for "hand-me-downs" there will never be any need to start in China any societies such as "the union that nothing be lost". Send me all and every article of discarded clothing that is cluttering up attics and cellars of your homes and I could go into business here and get rich in no time. But no, I am afraid that would get me in trouble with my Ordinary, so it would be better to send the clothing and I will make both the donors and myself rich in those treasures that "the moths consume not, neither do thieves break in and steal".

MUTTON fat is an excellent remedy for chapped skin. You may even buy it in the swanky stores of America, put up in fancy containers, given a fancier high-fallutin' name, and sold for still fancier prices. The Chinese here have no mutton but they have chapped skin. What is one of their remedies for it? Honey! The next time those cruel Canadian winds chap the skin of your hands and face, please don't go to the drug store and pay a dollar for a bit of mutton fat. Instead, buy a twenty-five cent jar of good honey and smear it liberally on your face and hands. When you are cured I trust you will not feel stuck up nor have the bees try start a hive in your ears. In any case you will not be up as much as if you had paid a dollar for a bit of n fat. You will have saved seventy-five cents and h bottle of honey for supper in the bargain. Howeve seventy-five cents will not be exactly saved, in the or acceptation of the word, as I shall expect you to con the said seventy-five cents to the Chinese missions. the present rate of exchange it would bring nearly Chinese dollars, the wages of a working man for nearly days. So why pay so dearly for your mutton fat wh can do so much good with the money saved by using There are many other economies I could suggest in fa the missions, but I do not know if you have yet turne corner that is to end the depression, and if you have fear that by practising so much economy the busines will lose so much trade they won't give the Editor an advertising. So we will stop at mutton fat this time.

embarrassed at having to choose among several kinds of meat. Meat here means pork. I saw advertised recently a book entitled "one hundred and fifty ways to cook eggs". Something along that line should be written for dealing with pork. It would be a best-seller amongst missionaries in China. Edison, it is reported, once remarked that people should eat the same kind of food every day in the year. Somebody came back immediately with the wise-crack that Mr. Edison had missed his vocation: he should have kept a boarding house. I offer the suggestion that Edison should have lived in China and he would never have make that remark. He would certainly have had to same kind of food every day. Good Lord! (forgive seem to be using the Lord's name irreverently, but I elp it). When I see those high-powered ads, or n the American and English magazines, of the har- wife, her forehead in wrinkles, that pensive, worried n her face, and saying, "Oh, what can I have for to-day that will be different, something for a change!" Lord! (forgive me again) if she would only put her nd address on the picture I would be greatly tempted e her (collect) this message: "Try boiled rice, with a egetable, 365 days in the year". This ad. will be on , and on page 17 will be a picture of Dr. Snicklefritz, na, telling you how to keep your lazy colon working. ther sections of the magazine there will be at least half n ads of medicines, patent and otherwise, for indiges- yspepsia, etc. No, dear reader, the next time you red of your roast beef, don't tell your boarding-house the joke about Mr. Edison, but recall to mind that re several hundred million people here in China who ghty glad to have a few bowls of boiled rice each day nich to keep the rust from forming in their gullet. I was returning to the mission one day, across the rice-paddies, when we were overtaken by a small chap of some thirteen summers. He was whistling, singing, talking, and laughing, all more or less at the same time. Someone must have left him a million dollars, we thought, to make him feel so happy. "Why all the merriment?", we inquired. "Oh," he shouted, as he darted past us, "we are going to have meat for supper".

The poor by the wayside in China.

"GEE, it must be great to be you", said the little white boy to the little black boy, "your mother can't tell when your face is dirty". In China, especially in the winter time, small boys (and girls) do not have to envy the little black boy. I met a wee chap the other day, or rather I didn't exactly meet him, as he spoke from under cover of the dirtiest face and most filthy bunch of rags it has been my misfortune to meet with to date. "My, you haven't washed your face this morning", says I. "Oh no", spoke up one of his companions quickly, "his mother is dead so he has no one to wash his face". "But your mother is not dead, is she?" says I to urchin number two; "or are all the mothers of all the little boys in this village dead?" If the excuse given in defence of the first lad is valid then most of the folks here have been orphans for many years. Mind you, though, I am not trying to start any face-washing movement. Anyone living in such conditions as the great majority do around here, clad in a few layers of cheap thin cotton, underfed, living in miserable, dark, unheated shacks, open to all the winds that blow, sleeping on a bit of straw, with their clothes on to provide an extra bit of warmth, a cotton-wadded quilt for covering, and ice forming in the rice-paddies outside, in such conditions I assure you there is no pleasure to be derived from tarrying in the bathroom in your B.V.D.'s, or otherwise, whilst you test the acoustic properties of the room on this cold and frosty morning. There would not be any pleasure in it even if such things as bath-rooms existed here, if the folks here were even able to imagine them. I, for one, am not going to try to explain what such things are. Not after my latest experience in the fine art of telling lies. I was caught with a copy of an American magazine in my hands. It was chock-full of those high-powered ads aforementioned. There was one of a certain gasoline company inviting you to climb down into the cylinder of your car and see what dire things would result to your car if you did not use their gas. They even put a ladder down for you and one of their engineers went down first to show you there was nothing to fear. So, as I was saying, I was caught with the magazine open at this page. Immediately I was up against a barrage of questions. Just try to explain what the cylinder of an automobile is to people who don't even know what an automobile is. After floundering around for some time my catechist came to the rescue. "Oh, I understand, it is the picture of a man climbing up on the roof of his house. Am I not right, spiritual father?" "Sure you are," lies I, at the same time thanking my lucky stars that at least ladders resemble each other east or west of the Suez. And now to resume our face-washing, or rather the discussion of it. The poor people here have my sympathy these cold days, and they can hardly be blamed for wishing to leave undisturbed any natural heat-retaining matter that may have accumulated of its own accord on their bodies. Much like the tiny fellow in the slums who was about to be given a lesson by the welfare worker. "Oh my," she cried, seeing the egg smeared round his mouth, "I know what you had for breakfast this morning. "What was it?" came the query. "Eggs." "Wrong," says the little fellow, "I had them yesterday morning."

CHINESE "LAUNDRIES" IN CHUCHOW
Canadian housewives who want to settle their "Blue Monday" wash-day worries take their articles to the Chinese laundry down the street. How do you like the way the ladies in Chuchow get "the wash" done?

BESIDES the epidemic of dirty physiognomies, winter also causes to appear an army of one-armed cripples, most of them old men and women. Three or four bowls of rice, per diem, are not calculated to produce any prodigious number of calories these cold days. Hence one of the means used to utilize these elusive calories to the utmost is to draw one arm out of its sleeve, leave the sleeve flapping in the wind, keep the sleeveless arm next to the more-or-less warm body, clutch the little portable stove (made out of an earthenware pot encased in a bamboo basket) in the free hand, introduce this tiny stove, with its handful of glowing embers, under as many layers of clothing as possible and then go into a huddle in a vain effort to keep warm until the day of the incited insect, that is, Spring. Certainly, an uninformed stranger would mistake those half-frozen, apparently one-armed creatures, for cripples. Much the same as the tourists in Shanghai, "doing" China, write about the varnished ducks they see hanging in the shops. What silly geese these tourists must feel themselves when they find the varnished ducks are simply ducks that have been cooked in oil and thus preserved. Or the visitors to Ningpo who marvel at the height of the graves that line the river bank as one approaches the city. But these tall graves turn out to be ice-houses, in which the thin coating of ice that forms on the water in the rice-paddies is stored and later used by the fishermen for shipping their fish to Shanghai and elsewhere in the summer time.

IN Europe, or at least in America, I dare say, it is the common custom everywhere to wear a black band on the arm as a sign denoting bereavement in the family of the wearer. Here in China not alone is such a band not worn, but if it were it would be a white band. Here locally the corresponding article in either a white cap, a white pair of shoes, or a circular or diamond-shaped piece of white cloth sewn on the instep of the shoes, or in the middle of the back of the jacket.

IT would appear that the dumb animals were also embroiled in the general catastrophe that overtook the language of man as a result of the confusion of tongues at the Tower of Babel. See if your collie or your pom will respond to "ya ya hoo hoo, ya ya hoo hoo." Of if you happen to live in the country and have a herd or flock, or what have you, of pigs, stand at the back door and emit a series of "none, none, none" in B flat, and see what effect it will have on your porkers. Is it time to feed the geese? Here in China they respond readily to "ngo ge ngo ge". As for the cacophony that results from a raid of the fowls on the vegetable garden I defy anyone not only to tell me how the sounds are produced, but to come even approximately close to reproducing them. Perhaps the fowls may not know how those sounds are begotten, but they certainly know what they mean and waste no time in showing that they understand perfectly. The way they clear all obstacles impeding their exit from the forbidden ground is just nobody's business.

To bring happiness into the lives of boys such as these, the missionary in China gladly "spends and is spent."

IN NARROW CHINESE STREETS.

The narrow street, only six feet wide, packed as it were with human life, is a splendid place from which to view the various items of which the life of the city is composed. The countryman is carrying a huge load of brushwood, balanced on the ends of a bamboo pole slung across his shoulders, which he is carrying to the market to be sold as firewood. He occupies more than half the roadway, and when he swings his burden from one tired shoulder to the other, the width of the street is only just enough to contain it. He passes along, however, at a steady trot as though the town belonged to him. His loud cries, "Clear the way," "Get to one side," "I'll bump against you," are uttered with an air of authority as though some royal edict had given him the authority to take possession of the road.

It is amusing to watch the good-natured way in which the ebbing and flowing crowds yield to this man from the hills. Everyone gets out of his way, and even the scholar, with pride and contempt in his heart for the unlearned masses, stands meekly at the side of the road and crushes himself up against a counter to let the imperious seller of firewood pass by. No thanks are given and none are asked, and as the tide of men close up behind him, we can hear coming down the air, "I'll bump you," "I'll bump you," "Go to the side," "Fly, fly," until the sounds so masterfully given and so meekly obeyed are lost in the distance.

In looking at this moving panorama there is one thing that is strikingly conspicuous, and that is the good-natured, easy, tolerant way with which they treat each other on the street. It would seem as though every man, the moment he got on it, had determined that forbearance shall be the word that should guide his conduct in his treatment of everyone that he meets. Just think of it; a roadway of five or six feet wide, along which constant cross currents of people, of all kinds and conditions, are travelling, and yet no collisions, or at least so rarely that they are not enough to be quoted. Business men, clerks, coolies, opium-smokers, thieves and vagabonds, country bumpkins and elegant and refined scholars, all with an instinctive sense of the rights of others, yield to the necessities of the road, and bear with infinite good nature whatever inconveniences may arise, and treat each other with patience and courtesy.—Sidelights on Chinese Life.

A DEATH AND A FUNERAL.

and dales received a thorough going over. In half an hour another site was selected. By this time the son had disappeared and I was wondering how long this thing was going to last. I learned that the son had just remembered an ideal location and had gone to view it. The diggers followed him. They had gone about ten minutes when someone remembered that the spot they had gone to view was private property, and off he went to break the news to the searchers. I was beginning to feel hot under the collar and resolved to have a say myself. It was already 11.30 and it might be 4.30 before they selected a suitable spot for burial. When all had returned and began another "conference", I asked them what was wrong with this second spot close by? "Oh, nothing is wrong with it! Why, it is just the ideal place!" Digging operations were resumed, and they had dug down about a foot when I noticed an old fellow stroking his beard and looking askance at the surroundings. He started forward to say something, but he doesn't know yet what happened to him. I figured things had just about gone far enough and that old fellow wasn't going to prolong the proceedings. I caught his eye, and if looks could kill there would have been a second funeral in that locality. When I got back home it was a quarter to two—and that's a long time from eight a.m.

LITTLE FLOWER'S ROSE GARDEN

Edited by FATHER JIM

CONDITIONS OF MEMBERSHIP

The only conditions of membership in the Rose Garden are: (1) To say every day the Prayer for the Conversion of China; (2) To go to Holy Communion once a month for the Intention of Missionary Vocations. Certificates and pins will be sent to all members.

Dear Boys and Girls:—

I am sure that during Lent you have all done much for the Missions; as we come to Passion Week this month it will be a source of consolation to you to know that you have done something to bring the blessings of Salvation to souls in China and in other pagan countries. Elsewhere in this issue you may read figures on the number of converts in China last year; I am sure many of those conversions were the result of prayers offered by Catholic boys and girls for the missions.

I remind you of two anniversaries in the life of the Little Flower this month: April 9th, 1888, she entered Carmel, the Convent in Lisieux, where she grew to such a wonderful degree of perfection; April 29th, 1923, just ten years ago, she was beatified and given the title "Blessed Therese". On those dates I will have a special intention in my Holy Masses for all our buds.

Again this month the editor has asked me to draw your attention to the appeal for spiritual help from our missionaries. This will be the last chance for schools to avail of this particular method of letting the priests in China know of their work for them. If the response this month brings as many names as did last month I will be the proudest man in the world, for our Buds certainly have given "THEIR ANSWER" in wonderful style.

Maybe you think I am "falling down" on my job of keeping all the new members supplied with certificates, etc. Well, I had some "field days" since March began, and have sent more than 800 certificates to new members. You can see our "Garden" is growing daily, and Father Jim is very much delighted.

May you all enjoy a very Happy Easter.

FATHER JIM.

Mabel Adams, Secretary of the C.C.S.M.C., at St. Thomas' School, Sudbury, sent the names of 17 girls of Junior Third Class who joined our Rose Garden. Since then, the Rose Garden has taken St. Thomas' School by storm, and it bids fair to rival St. Aloysius' School in the same town. Thanks for all your letters, Buds.

St. Catharine's, Ont.

The Editor gave me a letter from Betty Hamilton, Sec'y. of the C.C.S.-M.C. at St. Mary's School, St. Catharine's, in which she told of a very enthusiastic Crusade meeting with "Chuchow Missions" as the intention. Papers were read on various matters connected with the missions by Murray Brennan, Margaret Morrison, Patricia Harrington, and John Phalen. Musical numbers were rendered by Ed. Tousignant, Mary Colton and Loretta Tracey. An address was given by Leo Cunningham, president, and a spiritual bouquet was sent to China Mission Seminary along with a substantial donation. Many thanks, Crusaders, and may your Unit continue its fine work. The letter was forwarded to the missionaries in Lishui.

May our Risen Saviour shower down many blessings on His little missionaries, the boys and girls of the "Little Flower's Rose Garden."

From Sunny Florida.

Dear Father Jim:

"I am a pupil of St. Joseph's Academy, Jacksonville. Every month our teacher reads 'China' for us. I am interested in your 'Rose Garden' and want to become a member, taking "Pansy" as my pen-name. Please ask some Canadian and Newfound-Buds to write to me. My name is Fred David, and my address 1936 Main Street."

Very glad to hear from you, Fred, and you can feel right at home in our Club for there are quite a number of United States boys and girls already members. I think you are the first Floridian to write me, and you may be sure that if any others want to write I will be very glad. I hope you will not be long without pen-pals.

St. Thomas' School, Sudbury.

Dear Father Jim:

"Thank you for the badges and certificates which we got this morning. We will always say the prayer for China, and on our Mission Sundays we will all go to Holy Communion for the Missions. We are sending 50c to subscribe for 'China'. We have offered a spiritual bouquet for the Missions. Father Jim, would you like to hear a story? One day our teacher hung up a picture of Pope Pius XI. One boy said: 'Sister, who is that? Is that Father Jim?' Yours truly, Kathleen Sunday, Secretary, First Class."

That's a good story all right, Kathleen. I'm sure the buds will enjoy reading it. I received many letters from buds at your school, and I'm sorry I have no space to print some of them. I wish every success to your recently-formed "Little Flower" Club, whose president, Thomas Lannigan, wrote me, as well as other members of the executive, Marjorie Grace, Mabel Adams, Shelia Adams, Fay Dixon, Tom Gamey, and Justin Kitchener. One letter sent to me read: "I'm glad you like hockey, Father Jim. We have a team up here that could beat any of yours." I know all the buds in Sudbury are pulling hard for the "Wolves", and by the time this gets printed Newmarket will have tested the Sudbury team. Am I for Sudbury? Perhaps! I'll tell you when the series is over.

"Sherlock Holmes" Still Busy.

Some time ago I referred to Ena M. Farrell, of St. Lawrence, Nfld., as the "Sherlock Holmes" of our Club. I enjoy her letters immensely, but I fear she is not feeling very kindly towards me for not answering some of them. Never mind, Ena, probably by the time this "China" reaches you a letter will also have gone. I am glad to read of the buds in St. Lawrence. Give my best wishes to them all. Ena tells me: "I am still sore at you for not answering my last letter, and I will be real vexed if you do not answer this one. . . . The 'China' gives us a wonderful idea of the great work done by our missionaries. . . . We try to aid them as much as we can by our prayers. . . . I did not get any further information about you, but I think you are real, real mean not to let us know. One little bit of information I got was this: you are rather tall, have a wonderful disposition, and your name begins with an 'F'. I think you should not be so scared to give hints to those who live so far away from you. . . . I hear from quite a few buds but wouldn't mind having some more. . . . I know you must be kept pretty busy. May God bless the work you and your buds are doing. I think it is just great."

La Fontaine, Ont.

Three of the finest long letters anyone would want to receive came from the Holy Cross Sisters' school at La Fontaine. Eva LaLumiere tells me that "the boarders here at Holy Cross simply jumped for joy when Sister came in with a parcel; all expected it was from Father Jim — and were we delighted when she gave us all our badges and certificates! . . . We sent a large parcel to Father Boudreau. His sister is our teacher. The parcel was sent in the care of the Little Flower; she will have to see to it that it reaches Pi-Wu-Ka safely. . . . I have had lovely letters from Rita Curley and Margaret Rice. . . . My brother Peter and my sister Stella who subscribed for 'China' would have liked the February issue a whole lot better if the Editor had not cut out the Garden pages."

Beatrice Foster said that "all were glad to become 'buds'; the day-students will have to wait till tomorrow for their pleasant surprise; they will be as grateful to Father Jim as the boarders were. The badges are little gems, and the certificates ideal for framing. One of our buds, Edgar Beaupre, was sent his badge, etc., while in hospital. He will appreciate things all the more."

Lucille Black, in sending a subscription to 'China' for the LaFontaine buds, told me a lot of news. She says she is going to visit me when she comes home to Toronto. Lucille thinks her teacher knows Father Jim but won't tell the pupils. "I have heard from Margaret MacDonald and Mary Kerr. . . . I would like to see Father Boudreau when he gets our parcel. I hope the bandits don't get it first. . . . Last month only boys got mention in the Rose Garden; we are all waiting anxiously for the next issue. . . . Our teacher has told us very interesting things about Theophane Venard, the martyr."

FIVE SCHOOLS SEND SPIRITUAL OFFERINGS.

Below are represented the combined spiritual good works offered for the Chuchow Missions by St. Mary's School, St. Catharine's, Ont.; First Class, St. Thomas' School, Sudbury, Ont.; Convent of Mary Immaculate, Pembroke, Ont.; St. Gregory's School, Oshawa, Ont.; and Senior III Class, St. Aloysius School, Sudbury. This does not include the answer to the stirring "Call to Arms" published in last issue. Very many schools have responded to that, and we are delighted at the rich harvest of blessings that must necessarily come to our missionaries as a result of the spiritual co-operation of so many young boys and girls.

RANSOMS SECOND CHINESE BABY.

St. Michael's Academy,
Belleville, Ont.
March 14, 1933.

Dear Father Jim:—

Enclosed please find the sum of five dollars. We wish to buy a Chinese Baby Boy this time, and as Father Paul Wong has written to us from China we decided to call the baby Paul.

We put on a nice little play yesterday entitled "The Conversion of Sing Fang". It was written by the pupils of our class and we enjoyed it very much. At our meeting yesterday we had a letter read which was received this week from Father Beal. It was written to Doris Messervey, one of our pupils, and we were very glad to get it. Father Beal asked us to pray for him during the next two weeks as he had to travel a dangerous road for a distance of nearly seventy miles. So we are going to do so.

We wish you, dear Father, and the work of the Chinese Missions every success, and we ask you to pray for our success in school.

Yours sincerely,

Margaret Forster,
Secretary, C.C.S.M.C.,
Senior IV. Class.

Now that's the kind of letter that makes Father Jim get busy. I am prouder than ever of the "Buds" at St. Michael's Academy. And will I pray for their success in school? I certainly will, and I beg our saintly little Patroness to obtain many blessings for those ardent little missionaries.

Some Old Friends Write.

From Eastview, Ont., came a beautiful letter from Jeanne O'Malley. "You surely must think me the most ungrateful person in your Club for not having written long ago. . . . I still hunt out our page in 'China' the minute I get hold of it . . . if I should get mention in your column again I hope Msgr. McGrath and Fr. Amyot will see it and remember they haven't written in ages. . . . I am kept busy this year but would nevertheless like to hear from some of my old pen-pals again . . . all success to the 'Garden' and the 'Gardener'.

Pembroke, Ont., has two "old reliables" in Anna M. Culligan and Anita Martin. Two long letters from Anna surely did make up for "lost time", as she puts it. She writes: "A lot of the 'buds' seem to be very busy working out various clues they have to your identity. I hope some succeed, for I've given up. Yet I have an idea I could find out from a Sister here who was a member of your Club before becoming a nun. . . . My companions here at the Convent of the Immaculate Conception have been interested in your 'Garden', and I am sending a list of new members. . . . Enclosing a letter from Alma Chayer, too. . . . Our school has made a spiritual bouquet for the missions; we have the great privilege of daily Mass and Communion here. . . . Sr. Juletta, now in Lishui, is my cousin."

From Anita Martin's letter here are a few sentences also: "Father Sharkey's lantern lecture given in the Convent Auditorium made us all want to do something more for the Missions; it was great to see and hear one who had just come back from China. . . . Everybody wanted to know who Father Jim is—why don't you put your picture in 'China'? . . . Please ask some buds 16 or 17 years old to write me from the Maritimes or Nfld. . . . We are all praying much for the Chinese."

I appreciated those letters, and am grateful for the news they contained. My thanks are given to all at Immaculate Conception Convent for their lovely spiritual bouquet. I am sure the zeal of the new buds will mean much to our common cause.

Marystown, Nfld.

Dear Father Jim:

"Just a word from a bud in this far-away corner of your Garden. The last mail brought 'China'. It is always a welcome visitor to our home. I have learned more about China and the foreign missions of the Church from it than I ever knew before. I look upon your Club as a connecting link between the younger readers and our soldier priests who are planting the banner of the Cross in distant China. All the people here received the blessing of your newly-ordained priest, and they were very glad. I had several letters from buds. Yours truly, Annie V. St. George." P.S. "I think I have found out who you are."

That was a nice letter, Annie, and you have the right idea about our Club. It is meant to be a "Connecting link" between the Catholic boys and girls and the missionaries in China, and your prayers and Holy Communions make the "connection" very real and very profitable.

NONSENSE

"We'd better make a front-page story of this wedding," remarked the editor.

"Why?" asked the society reporter in surprise. "They aren't very prominent people."

"That may be," he replied, "but this is the first account of a wedding you have turned in for ages that hasn't had as a last line, 'They will reside with the bride's parents'."

It was at the Vicar's Christmas party. Tea was over, and games had been indulged in. The Vicar looked around.

"Well," he said, "I think we might have a song. Tommy, will you oblige?"

"I can't sing," said Tommy, "but I'll fight any of the other kids!"

The entire organization had not been completed, but they were inviting all of the Forest Hill Club members who wanted to try their hand at shooting clay pigeons and the general public.—Long Island paper.

Two men had just finished dinner in a restaurant, when one offered the other a cigar.

"Vot's the matter with it?" asked the other.

A four-word sign on a midget golf course in Great Bend, Mo., tells the story of many another. The sign runs:

"Closed. Opened by Mistake."

A musician with a tin whistle played right through a village in Fife without getting anything. As he passed the last door he turned toward an old native, "Man," said he, "I havna got a farthing in the hale toon."

"I'm no' thinkin' ye wud," replied the Fifer. "Ye see we do a' oor ain whistlin' here."

Interviewer — "Aren't you sometimes frightened when you look down at the street below you?"

Steeplejack—"Yes. Only yesterday I thought sure I was going to see a pedestrian get run over."

Business man: "Well, if it isn't John Corcoran, the man I met up in Maine one rainy night six years ago at the Moose River Junction Railway station."

Salesman (retreating to door): "Good day, sir."

Business man: "Aren't you going to try and sell me something?"

Salesman: "No. I sell memory courses."

"How come you always smoke quarter cigars?"

"Somebody else always smokes the other three quarters!"—Lehigh Burr.

In the old days if anyone missed a stage-coach, he was contented to wait two or three days for the next one. Now he lets out a squawk if he misses one section of a revolving door.

"What's wrong with the world, anyway?" asked the first pessimist.

"Too much rope is being used for making cigars and not enough to hang gangsters," replied the other.

Rural Doctor (meeting patient): "I've—er—taken the liberty of sending in my little account again."

Patient: "Is that so? Well, acting on your advice, I'm avoiding business worries for the present."

Wife—"Say, John, it is our silver wedding to-morrow, shall we kill the pig?"

Husband — "What's the use of murdering the pig for what happened twenty-five years ago."

"It is awful, Mrs. Smith, the way sports are degenerating. My boy was dismissed from the ball team because he was too honest."

"What was the matter?"

"He wouldn't steal bases."

A native of Aberdeen now residing in Canada was given a radio. A few days later a friend accosted him and asked: "And how do you like your radio, Jock?" "Ah", said Jock, "the music's glorious but I canna' read very well wi' the light."

Smith obtained a job as a packer in a big chinaware store. On the third day after his arrival he slipped while carrying a valuable vase and smashed it into a hundred pieces. At the end of the week, when he went to draw his pay he was told by the manager that a little would be deducted from his wages each week until the vase had been paid for. "How much was the vase worth?" asked Smith. "Five hundred dollars," the manager replied. Smith began to smile. "Well, it looks as if I've got a steady job at last."

The other day the telephone rang in the home of a Florida Congressman. An old Negro mammy answered. "This is long distance from Washington," said a voice over the wire. "Hit shore am," the mammy replied and hung up. —The Echo.

"How do you like me in my new gown? I got it for a ridiculous price."

"You mean you got it for an absurd figure."

Two Rolls-Royces rested side by side. Suddenly one of them twitched violently and shook a fender.

"What's the trouble?" asked the other.

"I think I must have got one of those Austins on me somewhere."

"Is that your college diploma you have framed there?"

"Well, it's a sort of diploma. It's a worthless stock certificate showing that I've been through the school of experience."

Scared Husband: "You say you found a letter in a woman's handwriting in my pocket this morning? I don't know how it got there!"

Irate wife: "I do! I gave it to you to mail two weeks ago!"

Asked what he understood by "foreign entanglements", a schoolboy replied: "Spaghetti".

The local church was making a drive for funds, and two colored sisters were bearing down on Uncle Rastus.

"I can't give nothin'," exclaimed the old Negro, "I owes nearly everybody in this here town already."

"But," said one of the collectors, "don't you think you owes de Lawd somethin' too?"

"I do, sister, indeed," said the old man, "but He ain't pushin' me like my other creditors is."

A party of six sat down to dinner. The waiter took the orders, and later, returned with the fish. Addressing a burly gentleman on the right the waiter inquired: "Are you the fried flounder, sir?"

"No," the gentleman replied, "but I'm a poor lonely sole with an empty plaice, and I'm waiting for something to fillet."—Exchange.

Mary: "Isn't it dreadful? I refused to marry Archie last October, and he's been drinking steadily ever since!"

Jane: "I should say that's carrying a celebration a little too far."

Two men were seated together in a crowded street car. One noticed that the other had his eyes closed and asked, "Bill, don't you feel good?"

"I'm all right," said Bill, "but I do hate to see ladies standing."

CHINA MISSION BURSES

TO EDUCATE PRIESTS FOR CHINA

A BURSE is a sum of $5,000 (FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS) which, being securely invested, produces sufficient revenue to educate a student for the missionary priesthood. The capital is not touched, but remains intact. The Seminary would have the use of the ANNUAL INTEREST from each FIVE THOUSAND DOLLAR FUND to educate young men for the priesthood in PERPETUITY.

SEVERAL of the Burses already completed have been outright gifts from individuals, but the others have been built up over a period of years by the large and small offerings of our faithful friends. We invite contributions to any of the Incomplete Burses listed on this page. Even the smallest offering will move some Burse nearer to completion, and we certainly have need of such help now. We could never finance the education of all our students on the interest of our Burses as they now stand.

THOSE blessed with an abundance of this world's goods could spend to no better advantage than by becoming the Founder of a Burse for China Mission Seminary. It would be absolutely the most worthwhile monument to leave behind to your memory.

\+ +

YOUR DONATION for our BURSE FUND may be sent either to the Seminary or in care of the "Catholic Record", London, Ont.

WE MUST NOT FAIL THEM

"WE are up against it good and hard." By many, the words will be read with a feeling akin to shock. They are the words of a missionary in China as he describes the conditions that have to be met with in the everyday life of our own priests in Chuchow. They are in the thick of a great battle, they are face to face with a mighty problem, but they are carrying on valiantly against desperate odds; to those who are watching from afar they send back a message, an insistent appeal to join with them in the fray, and they base all their hope of success on the co-operation of those to whom they appeal. It is Great World War days over again, but a different sphere of action. In those memorable years of struggle, when distance alone separated loved ones in Flanders and Canada, the boom of guns on the battlefield found echo in the hearts of anxious friends at home, and no effort and no sacrifice was counted too great if thereby the lot of those at the Front was made more pleasant and their task brought nearer to successful completion. Now the soldiers of Christ are waging a grand offensive on the mission battlefield and, strange paradox! they are fighting to save life and not to destroy it.

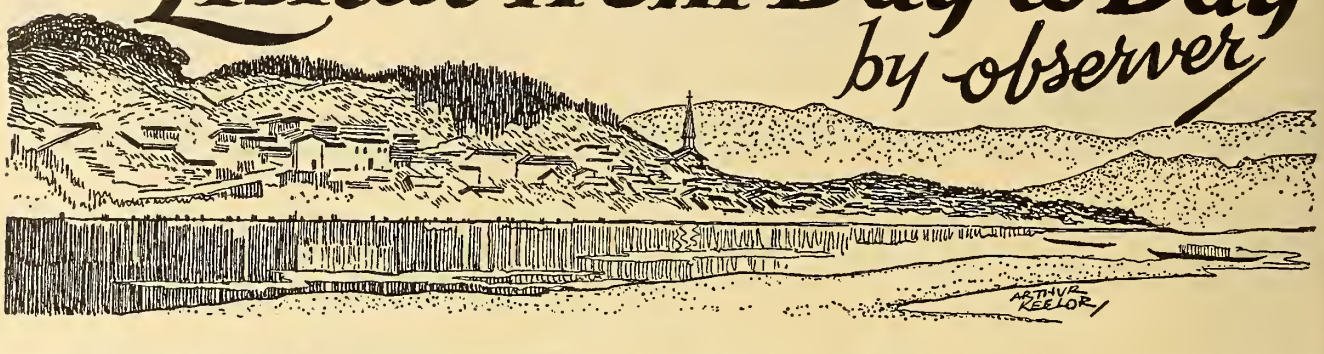
IT takes actual experience on the Missions to bring home with fullest force the need for Divine help in the struggle for immortal souls; nobody knows better than the missionary himself what need he has of prayer if his work is to meet with success; the awful atmosphere of paganism is absolutely impenetrable unless the Grace of God dissipate the mists. And God has ordained that the dispensing of His Grace depends on our asking: "Ask and you shall receive."

* * * * *

THERE lies untold strength in solidarity. An undertaking wherein the individual fails may easily be accomplished through organized effort. World movements, like that of the Foreign Missions, demand unity of purpose; and without enlisting the co-operation of the individual such movements are bound to bring only partial results. It is to the individual readers of "CHINA" that we have so often appealed, and will continue to appeal, for a real live interest in the doings of our priests and sisters on the Missions. We believe that every Catholic should somehow be a missionary. Christ's command to His apostles to "preach the Gospel to every creature" extends to the co-operation of the laity in mission efforts. It is Christ's wish that all who call themselves Christians should pray and sacrifice for the extension of His kingdom as a sign of deep and genuine interest in His work. "By this shall all men know that you are My disciples, if you have love one for another." Since we are obliged to love all men, we are also obliged to pray for all without exception. It should be our desire that God's name be glorified among all men, that His kingdom should be shared by all, and that His will should be done by all, no matter whether they be Chinese or Japanese or Africans. He has created them all to His image; He has redeemed them all through the blood of His Divine Son; and He desires to sanctify them all through the Holy Ghost and our co-operation.



* * * * *

WE have but recently solemnly commemorated the events of Holy Week; we are now in the early weeks of an extraordinary Holy Year to honor the 19th centenary of our Redemption. We cannot have failed to understand a little the priceless value of our own soul, and we know that every individual soul has cost the death of a Man-God. Our love for Our Lord should prompt us to fervent prayer for the unfortunate pagans; they are so spiritually poor and we are so wonderfully rich. Be generous, be grateful, and prove your charity by remembering in every Mass and Holy Communion, and every Rosary during this month of May, the souls of your less favored brethren in pagan lands.

And not only for those poor lost sheep should we pray, but our petitions should go daily to Heaven for those self-sacrificing missionaries who are giving their lives to save immortal souls. Theirs is no pleasant task; theirs is the heat and burden of the every-day struggle against paganism. They are doing their share manfully, and they do not ask for sympathy; they merely request that we be interested in their work to the extent of a little daily prayer for their success. If we admire the role of the missionaries, if we would be one with them in carrying out the Divine command, then we will heed the words of St. Paul: "I desire therefore, first of all, that supplications, prayers, intercessions, and thanksgivings be made for all men. For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour who will have all men to be saved, and to come to the knowledge of truth."

Lishui from Day to Day

by observer

THERE seems to be a growing feeling that the manner in which some of the Lives of the Saints were written might admit of a little improvement. The portrayal is so thoroughly idealistic! Every evidence of human frailty has been religiously, almost fanatically, suppressed; with the net result, as far as you and I and the rest of struggling humanity are concerned, that we find some such books about as spiritually helpful as Alice in Wonderland.

* * *

Please don't misunderstand. We're not going realist all of a sudden. Neither are we advocating any Lytton Strachey school of biographical "debunkers". In an age when that misanthropic "art" has become the obsession of many a soured literateur we thank God more fervently than ever for those spiritual heroes who have woven idealism into the very texture of their daily lives. But we should love to have been told that their spirituality and their sublime heroism exacted of them something more than that effortless ease depicted in certain books professing to tell the story of their lives. It would bring them closer to us instead of taking them farther away. To the average mortal who has attained the use of reason, and lives in no fool's paradise as to what sanctity demands of human nature, it would occasion encouragement rather than shock to know that all the Saints might have exclaimed with Saint Augustine: "There goes myself except for the grace of God."

* * *

Weren't you consoled, for example, when you read that the Little Flower often found it so desperately hard to keep awake during meditation! She made no bones about telling the fact. And would you be more than mildly horrified to learn that another certain young person, afterwards a canonized saint, once threw a carving knife at the Reverend Mother! It is comforting to realize that people who fall asleep at meditation may get to Heaven after all. And while none of us, I suppose, ever threw carving knives at the Reverend Mother, the story brings the rather satisfying conviction that people whose tempers are naturally violent in their early days can overcome their defect and rise to heights of sanctity. Don't you think it helps a little to know such things? Or are you shocked to death? You shouldn't be, really, to learn that God's grace can make a saint out of a spoiled child.

* * *

Something has gone similarly awry in regard to stories of missionary life. There is nobody very much to blame. The situation was more or less inevitable. It is the result of the newspaper man's law of supply and demand which even Catholic papers may not transgress. It is the old "man-bite-the-dog" story over again. There never was, and there never will be, any demand on the part of readers for what is prosaic and commonplace and humdrum. They far prefer to be told that "Whole Village Embraces Christianity" — "Lone Missionary Converts 5,000 People" — and that occasionally (due to the depression, no doubt), "Cannibal Tribe Pleads for Missionary!" Don't you just love that "pleads"?

All of which is perfectly true. And far be it from us to suspect any but the loftiest of motives even on the part of the "tribe". "Whole Villages" do embrace Christianity, but the point is that it is by no means the usual thing. We know far more villages that are not the least bit interested. Priests do baptize consoling numbers of pagans, thank God, but very often the great harvest of souls vouchsafed to one missionary has been won by the heroic sacrifice and hidden suffering of a predecessor who has sown in tears. For the rare priest who baptizes thousands annually there are many unknown soldiers of Christ who must keep plodding away at the slow and laborious and humanly thankless task of making gradual conversions among a people often indifferent. If you feel that it should be otherwise you have only to read the life of Christ. The great Father Westerwoudt spent twenty years in Borneo without baptizing a single soul and went almost convert-less to his grave.

of such "typical" news items at home? It is that thousands of people who would be on their knees before the Tabernacle if they knew the real nature of the mission struggle have been lulled into a sense of false complacency. Continued stories of mission triumphs with hardly a word of drab and discouraging mission failures have made our people feel that the priests and sisters in China and India and Africa have the situation "well in hand". "What need have they of our prayers?" unthinking people ask. "Well in hand!" God help us! The truth is that in China the real battle for souls has hardly begun. And without the help of prayer, our own prayers and yours, we shall be as helpless in the greater struggle impending as the Chinese "dare to die" sword brigade against the machine guns and tanks and heavy artillery of modern Japan. By all means tell our people of the Church's triumphs! By all means encourage them after their wonderful sacrifices on behalf of missions the world over! But do not feel that they cannot stand an occasional revelation as to what is distinctly "the other side of the picture."

As for our district here, Fathers Stringer, Boudreau, Beal, and Venini have from time to time given readers of "CHINA" an accurate portrayal of existing conditions. They have not shrunk from using the words "fallen-away Christians", and have intimated that as a result of the years when this district was without adequate number of priests it is going to take time to win back those strayed sheep as well as to bring new converts into the fold. "Be careful!", some will say; "don't dishearten the people!" We think we know the people of Canada and Newfoundland. We think they would want to be the first ones to know it if their boys were up against it good and hard. And we are. And we tell you so because we need your prayers, and because we should like you never to leave the church without a plea on our behalf to Christ in the tabernacle. Platitudinous, lifeless words! Yet how dire the need that prompts them!

But waste no pity on US, dear friends. Whether God sees fit to reward our poor efforts with objective results that can be so humanly satisfying, or to leave the harvest for those who will follow after, our success is assured if we but keep on trying to the end. Pity the suffering Saviour on the Cross, to whom immortal souls will be lost forever. This very night, ere another day has dawned, Satan will quietly, exultantly, take unto himself a grim harvest of hapless souls for whom Christ's Blood was shed. Pity the blood-stained Sufferer in Gethsemane! The vision of those wretched creatures cost Him something of that awful agony in the garden. Victory is not yet while souls stream daily into hell and there are those on earth for whom Calvary will have been in vain. Pray without ceasing—for there are souls whom only your prayers will save.

The Door Shall Not Be Closed

Three taps of a golden hammer on the great doors of four basilicas in Rome, Sunday, April 2, marked the formal inauguration of the extraordinary Holy Year of Jubilee, proclaimed by His Holiness Pope Pius XI to commemorate the nineteenth centenary of the Redemption of Mankind.

The rite of the opening of the Holy Door in its liturgic form has been preserved almost unaltered from the time of Pope Alexander VI in the Jubilee of 1500 up to today. And today as it was in former times the ceremony is impressive and carries with it a dignity and certain mysticism that thrills us even to think of it.

We may not have pondered the significance of this rite and its relation to the work of the missionaries. How many thousands are led through the golden door of faith every year by the missionaries, and how many more thousands might be led through if each Catholic considered prayer and sacrifice for conversions and for unbelievers a daily duty.

The Holy Father has ordered, moreover, that the Golden Door should never be closed, day or night, during the Year of Jubilee. To us this message should have a special import. It should inspire us to open and to keep open the door of Missions by the triple hammer of prayer, service, sacrifice. Let us plan definitely to say some special prayer daily for the conversion of sinners and unbelievers, to render some special service to a missioner or Catechist, and to make a definite sacrifice weekly or daily for the material needs of a mission. Thus, we can make this nineteenth centenary of the redemption of mankind a really holy year—a year filled with conquests of souls gained for Christ.—The "Bugle Call."

Shanghai.—Fewer new Catholics but stronger organization and stronger mission forces mark the past ten years of the Church in China. An interesting comparative study of the last three decades is given in the Annuaire des Missions Catholiques for 1933, just published by the Shanghai Jesuits.

For the decade of 1902-1912, Catholics increased 731,302; for 1912-1922, 711,214; during the past ten years, 1922-1932, due to the disturbed conditions, the gain has been but 420,226. The Catholic population has passed the two and a half million mark.

But during this last decade our organization has been powerfully strengthened. The number of ecclesiastical divisions, which in 1902 was 41, remained almost stationary for 20 years; in 1912 there were 42 and in 1922 there were 55. In the last 10 years, however, it has leaped from 55 to 117. New seminaries have kept pace with the erection of new missions and thus there is promise of a striking increase of native clergy in the coming decade. During these last 10 years native priests mounted from 1,030 to 1,536.

Finally, foreign missionaries have heavily increased during this decade. The advance for 1902-1912 was 592. The World War came during the next period and by 1922 there were but three more foreign priests than in 1912! Between 1922 and 1932 the increase was 736. (Fides).

A MISSION FLOWER

By Rev. D. E. STRINGER

WHO amongst us has not read and been thrilled by the accounts that have come down to us of the heroism of the first Christians? Of the battles they waged against the powers of evil in their day? How the story of little Agnes captivated our hearts! Innocence that was consecrated to God and the attempts of the vicious minded who would have overcome her were it possible! In this our day of freedom such happenings are impossible —so we think! But wait!

Imagine to yourself a dilapidated, tile-roofed house with walls of mud and straw. Enter in and see poverty written over everything. Windows are not needed, neither are chimneys—the cracks and crevices are innumerable, and if they allow a little sunlight to brighten up the squalidness within, they also allow the cold of winter and the stenches of summer to fill every nook and cranny. Pigs and hens and dogs roam in and out, yet nobody seems to stumble over them—babies with faces and hands almost as dirty as the mud floor on which they are sitting. Idols, cold and forbidding, hold the place of honor and exact their homage of fear and harshness. Could virtue, even pagan virtue, thrive amid such surroundings where there is nothing to urge even the best to look upwards?

In one such house lived a pagan girl and her mother. When the child was about eight years of age the father one day left and never returned. Left thus alone they were forced to struggle for themselves in order to obtain the bare necessities of life—a little rice and some clothes and a few faggots for a winter's fire. Although the future seemed dark and hopeless, still the innate cheerfulness of the young girl kept up the spirits of both. When she was fourteen years old it chanced that a missionary came to the town in which she lived. Now, this was an event not to be missed—the coming of a foreign missionary! So in company of several others she went to the Mission to see "the sights". They had never before witnessed any of the ceremony of the Christian religion—but the contrast between it and their own was marked. The missionary, seeing the group of children, spoke to them a few words of a wonderful girl-Mother who lived long ago but whose beauty was not dimmed, nor could it be, by the passage of time. He told them of her goodness, her tenderness, her loveliness, and of the many beautiful virtues which as so many jewels adorned her. And then they went away, carrying with them a new and beautiful ideal, something that unconsciously lifted them up beyond the dismal clouds of paganism.

But though the mind feast on treasures however high, the body still clamors for attention. Life was hard, money was scarce, so at seventeen years of age this pagan girl was espoused to a worthless fellow, who, in great part lacked even the commonest natural virtues. His love for her was that of an owner for a piece of property—but what is mere love against the wishes of pagan fathers. In this state of betrothal, living in the house of her future father-in-law, to physical hardships were now added moral ones for which paganism has no antidote. Meanwhile her thoughts constantly reverted to the picture in her mind of the Maid. The tiny seed, urged on by the waters of tribulation, began to put out roots, and she went to the Mission frequently to take part in the prayers, and also to ask, from time to time, more questions. And as the truths of this new religion were unfolded before her gaze, her innocent mind realized to the full the actual degradation of the religion of her fathers, and she was attracted powerfully to this newer religion of Love.

But if the grace of the true God was waking her to her state, so too, the devil redoubled his efforts. Force was often used to make her consent to the marriage, but each time she came out the victor. To these sufferings were added fears in her mind for the welfare of her mother, who, in a large measure depended on the marriage of her daughter for the sustenance of life. Soon she finished her days of instruction and the saving waters were poured on her head, infusing into her soul a strength that was sorely needed. And she resolved to consecrate herself to God. But how was she to accomplish this? Torn by two loves—one the strongest natural love for her mother—the other for her new-found faith, she wondered whether she would be left to suffer a life of misery with a pagan or whether she would realize

OUR LADY OF CHINA

OUR LADY, Queen of China,
Is sweet of face and mild;
She meekly holds for worship
The King of Kings, her Child.
Upon His head a crown is,
Within His breast the Dove;
His hands are wide in pity,
And bright His eyes with love.

Our Lady, Queen of China,
Is handmaid of the Lord.
She bears for Him the sceptre,
Who felt for Him the sword.
With singing heart she praises
The Word Who came to dwell,
While chanting lips of China
Re-echo Gabriel.

Our Lady, Queen of China,
Is royally arrayed
In robes that love has chosen
And woven of brocade.
She reigns, a queen and mother,
The world's and China's own,
Between her fragrant lilies,
Upon her lacquered throne.

That wine be poured from water,
A good wine for the last;
That men may hear the Angelus
From bells for Buddha cast;
That yellow grain find saving
And yield the Living Bread,
To the one Queen of China
May China's vows be paid.

her heart's desire. The final struggle was soon to take place, for her future husband unexpectedly returned home and all things were to be prepared for the marriage. There seemed to be no loop-hole through which to escape. But just when things appeared to be hopeless, a missionary came to her town for his yearly call.

It was a very disturbed and disheartened girl that poured out her story to him, a story that revealed rare courage amid numberless trials in the quest of an ideal—almost a parallel to that of Sir Galahad and the Holy Grail, at least in its aspect of perseverance. If the missioner was troubled by the apparent hopelessness of the case he was equally cheered by this shining example. The priest interviewed her mother, whose only reason for desiring the consummation of the marriage was that she might have food and a roof over her head. Knowing that the future husband was at home the girl refused to return to the house, and other Christians took her in for the night. But to the missionary was left the task, seemingly impossible, of making the other parties concerned see the whole affair as the girl saw it. However, through all the ages man has proposed but God has disposed, and by dint of much explanation the father-in-law was won over. The Blessed Virgin had again triumphed over the forces of evil. To describe the effect of this sudden relief for the girl would be impossible. Arrangements were made to have her placed in a convent, and the mother cared for among the Sisters. And thus closed a chapter in the book of deeds that are worked in silence, unknown to the world.

DID NOT PAY DEBTS

"VICTIM of the Depression hangs himself!" That might be the at-home caption telling of a suicide which took place here a few days ago. In Sungyang the suicide would be more correctly understood as a victim of "Face". To lose "face" in China is just about as bad as losing one's whole head, and this poor fellow felt so badly over his failure to pay his debts that he did away with himself. His creditors obtained a warrant for his arrest if he failed to pay up some forty odd dollars before the close of the Old Year. He had no hope of borrowing, he was faced with a jail term of indefinite duration; he had a wife and two children who would have to struggle along on starvation rations. Result: his body was found in a lumber godown. Just another of life's tragedies—the penalty of "losing Face" by having to admit his inability to meet his debts before the dawn of a New Year. To allow debts to extend into another year is just "not being done" by the Chinese in good standing, and the law is strictly enforced, too. "Pay up or go to jail"—or, perhaps, you may happen to own some furniture, some livestock, a large supply of rice, or some surplus clothing—very well, it won't take creditors very long to "seize" some of your possessions, and then they'll call it square. Just yesterday I had a young lad come to me in tears to inform me that unless he received some alms from me he was due to lose his shoes and cap. That wasn't so good, with the snow coming down, so I helped him "over the New Year" with his 100 Dong Pah. And, of course, the God of the Kitchen comes into his own at the New Year, too. Firecrackers are set off in reckless abandon to welcome him back, and as soon as a new picture of this deity is placed over the fireplace, then "all's set" for a Happy New Year.—Rev. J. L. Beal.

YES! WE HAVE NO BANDITTI!

A thrill now and then is good for the best of men. And a false alarm is sometimes worse than the real thing. Fathers Amyot and King have had a whole week of "disturbance" through unfounded rumors of bandit attacks. Even rumors start things moving in Wong-Da. In the midst of the New Year's Festival, a sudden fear sent half the inhabitants of Wong-Da scurrying away from their homes.

By REV. WM. K. AMYOT

THUMP! Thump! on the street door. "Hey, Pock-Face! Pock-Face! Get up! Get up!"

Sleepy answers came from our old cook. More shouting of his nick-name. Then indistinct but excited voices could be heard down in the kitchen. The squeaky door swung open and the cook pattered across the front yard to open the side gate.

I rolled over and was just thinking how I'd "bawl him out" for having visitors call on him at such an hour, when light peeped through the cracks in my room wall and someone was tapping on my papered-bamboo window. The light tapping echoed like a drum. Then the catechist's voice: "Wer Kung! (my unworthy Chinese name) Wer Kung! Get up! Get up!" So the cook was not having visitors after all! I was rash-judging the poor old fellow. Then it must be a sick call.

I was half out of bed as the voice continued: "Too-fee! Too-fee! the bandits are coming! Get up! Get up!"

I noticed that it was quiet outside; there was no firing of guns that I could hear. I wondered at the time what our "garrison" of 17 soldiers was doing to earn their rice, letting the bandits come in with-without making even a noise. There was no time to sing Harry Lauder's famous song, but I certainly was "as cauld as I cud be" by the time I reached the door and admitted several excited persons who hastened to assure me that the bandits were in town — and they weren't ordinary bandits, either. They were most certainly Reds—Communists!

Wenchow Pagoda

"Where are they? How close?"

"They're right here! Not far away! Hurry, hurry!"

With that they moved off and took their lantern with them, but not before I had a squint at my watch and saw it was just 4 a.m.

I went and thumped on Father King's door. "Wake up! bandits are coming!"

A sleepy voice replied: "What's that?"

"They say bandits have come. Get up!"

"Aw, you're kidding! It's not morning yet, is it?"

A few things tipped over as he reached for his equipment. He was up. I went back to my room for the keys to the chapel and tabernacle in case there was reason for the alarm.

Outside it was semi-darkness. The stars were out, the bare ground was frozen hard, the air was just crackling it was so cold—although it really was only a few degrees below freezing. The whole town appeared quiet enough even now. The gleam of lanterns could be seen on the eaves here and there—the news was going the rounds.

There seemed to be no immediate danger so we went down to see how the cook was making out. He had the kitchen stove going — and we were grateful for its warmth.

"What's the news? How many are there?" we asked him.

"Two men armed with long knives were seen heading this way."

We laughed; but he was as serious as an owl. "How far away?"

"Oh, close!"

"What are the soldiers doing? Afraid of two men?"

"Show-foo-tee—I don't know", he answered, and smiled. He was a soldier once himself. So we received the first "version".

"Well, that doesn't sound very dangerous, Father King. Let's go up to the chapel and say our Beads. Later we can 'shan-fuh-tz' (think plan, as the Chinese say); if anything is going to happen we could not be in better company."

By this time things were beginning to stir around town. Canon crackers and pop-bangers were going off all over the place, and the sounds echoed and re-echoed up the chill valleys. Dogs were barking, and cocks were crowing to add their measure to the racket. We could see joss sticks being lighted and set up before the pagan homes to ward off the "vey" or evil spirit from them. The noise increased with time until it sounded like a real battle in progress. The Chinese are great for making noises—the din was supposed to frighten away the devil and leave the town in peace.

Just as we finished our prayers the catechist returned and we listened to version number two.

"90 or 100 bandits are coming, and sure enough they are Communists and will burn the whole place down. Ordinary bandits just seek money, but those Reds always destroy. They are coming from 'Tah-Jung', the largest town up near the head waters of the Jui-an River, about 120 li south of here and about the same distance from Fukien province. They are now only fifteen li (5 miles) away. What are you going to do?"

"Well, 15 li is quite a distance, so we are going to get some more sleep before we celebrate Mass. Then we're ready for whatever comes." The listeners expressed astonishment.

Before we did go back to bed, however, we thought we might as well fall in with the general sentiment and take some precautions. We sent our catechist to hide a complete Mass kit in the home of one of our Christians, and then tried to make up for lost sleep till 6 a.m.

In the meantime, large numbers of townsfolk were already in flight as we could see by the lanterns bobbing hither and thither like fireflies up the mountain sides. Those who had any money had taken flight at the first sign of disturbance—they fled in terror at the prospect of having to hand over their cash or perhaps their sons to be held as hostages for ransom. The poor moved out of town because of the wild rumors that the on-coming bandits were out for blood — had even slain mercilessly as they came along, according to the exaggerated stories. They were not going to stay and be pressed into service as carriers of booty for the bandits. No, sir! they were getting out while the going was good. Very vividly did it bring to mind the words of Our Lord: "Then let them flee to the mountains . . . but pray that your flight be not in Winter." It means something when there's no house to go to, only the bare mountain sides, and it's cold.

When we got up, firecrackers, bangers, and powder-shots were still going off, with the noise of brass gongs and drums thrown in for luck. And the bandits hadn't arrived yet. We celebrated our Masses and heard confessions of a few who were present. Nothing had yet occurred to cause us any undue alarm—there had been no firing of any sort. Still, we decided to play safe and consumed most of the Sacred Hosts.

We waited and waited. Our morning meal was partaken of as usual. We were beginning to feel the suspense. Why the dickens didn't those bandits come or else tell us definitely their "visit" was called off. The sun was now well risen. Still no banditti. People were gathered in excited groups. There was no tax on words, and you can rest assured that the "facts" of the threatened invasion lost nothing in the telling. The number of the marauders rose apace—200, then 300, and finally 500. Time dragged on till noon. In came our catechist. Now for some news!

"Yes, there were over 300 . . . but they weren't real 'Too-Fee'. They were soldiers who were foraging in the country round about because they could get nothing to eat up in Tah-jung . . . they had started out heading this way . . . they had been seen by some travellers . . . were immediately taken to be Reds . . . Runners had been sent to relay the news to the next town from us."

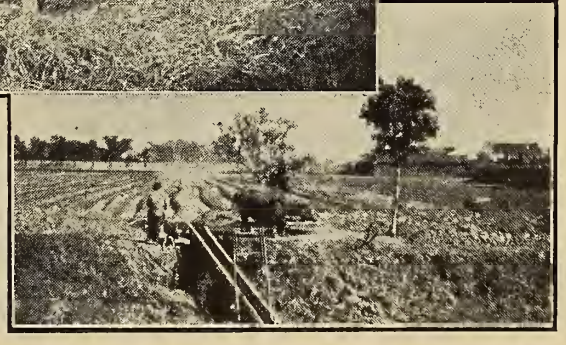
And so—it was all nothing more than a case of "mistaken identity". Later in the day the "refugees" straggled back to their homes with their belongings. The danger was over for today at any rate. A Mr. Gee had first brought news of the banditti. Everybody was scared. Now everybody is happy again — except poor Mr. Gee, and he fears the people may take revenge on him.

So ended quite happily our first bandit scare in Wong-da. If noise counts for anything it was a big success, eclipsing even the Chinese New Year itself.

BEGGARS IN CHINA.

There are many specimens of humanity in China that, through destitution and in the bare struggle for existence, have to go through want and hunger and intense suffering both of mind and body, but for real degradation and acute acquaintance with the pains and penalties of poverty there is no one to be compared with the beggarman in this land.

A beggar here is really poor, and always close up to the border line across which is starvation. Besides, he is nearly always diseased. A beggar would fail to charm the solitary cash that is usually thrown at him, unless he had some glaring disease that would excite pity. The stock-in-trade of the begging fraternity is some hideous sore, or twisted legs or sightless eyes, or some abnormal deformity that disqualifies the person from gaining a living by manual labour. And then, too, the hovel into which he crawls when night drives him from the streets is something unspeakable for its wretchedness and discomfort. The beggars' camp is filthy, and so unsavoury that it may never be pitched within the precincts of the city, but is always erected in some open space outside its walls.—Sidelights on Chinese Life.



ZEAL FOR MISSIONS.

Whilst the circulation of "China" is confined especially to Canada and Newfoundland, it has quite a number of readers in the United States and European countries. That its influence extends beyond our own borders is proven by the following quotation from the "Madonna", organ of the Sodality Union of Florida. We quote a report from Holy Rosary parish, Jacksonville, appearing in the "Madonna": "One of our spiritual activities for Lent is to hear Mass and receive Holy Communion seven times for the conversion of pagan souls in China. This is in response to an appeal made by a Canadian Missionary in the Prefecture of Chuchow, China. His article, 'A Call to Arms', appeared in a recent issue of 'China'."

SCENES LIKE THESE ARE FAMILIAR ENOUGH IN CHINA

The harvesting of rice is the life's work of millions. Here the rice is being cut and threshed at once.

Blindfolded, hitched to a Chinese "irrigator", and driven round and round, the powerful water buffalo operates a machine which causes an endless chain of small vessels to descend into the water below, fill up, ascend, and empty into the ditches above.

GREGORIAN CHANT IN CHINA

Gregorian Chant has been known in China for more than six centuries, having been introduced when the first Catholic missionaries went there to preach the teachings of Christ. John de Monte Corvino, Franciscan and first Archbishop of Cambalec, in his first letter from Pekin in 1305, says that he was able to form a boys' choir, bringing together a group from six to eleven years old whom he instructed and baptized. Besides Latin, he taught them the ceremonies of the Church and the rubrics of the Office. These lads learned their music so well that in the city which never before had seen a Catholic priest they, like a convent of little monks, would rise daily at a fixed hour and would raise their silvery voices to psalm the praises of God; they sang them so well, in fact, that many times the Emperor was delighted to go and hear them.

Blessed Odoric of Portu Naone, a Franciscan missionary in the thirteenth century, tells us: "Once upon a time when the Great Khan was coming to Pekin, our Bishop and several of our Friars and I went out to meet him. After a journey of eleven days, when we were coming near him, I planted the Cross in a position where it might be seen by all; then we commenced to sing, all of us, with loud voice, the 'Veni Creator'. The Great Khan heard us and called to us to approach".

Even before these two great missionary figures we have records of Gregorian Chant in the Far East. Father William Ruysbroeck, who was sent as a Delegate of the Pope to the Great Khan of Tartary, in one of his letters recalls the audience of January 5, 1255, and says: "When we approached the Great Gate of the Palace, we intoned the hymn: A Solis Ortu Cardine; it was during the Christmas season".

It is no wonder then, that the missionaries in China today continue this excellent tradition, especially so since the Chinese take so well to the Chant of the Church.—(Fides).

Father Venadam's interest in Gregorian Chant is well known. He is shown here with his Lishui choristers who sing Gregorian numbers in wonderful style. Everybody is satisfied when Father Arthur wields the baton.

Through an Oriental Window

By REV. VINCENT MORRISON

Sungyang, Che.,
Feb. 22, 1933.

LOOKING out through my window today I see the mountains covered with snow and a dense fog filling the valleys below. It is cold for this part of the Province, 8 below freezing. Such a temperature at home would not cause any inconvenience, but conditions in the homes here are so different. Houses open to the winds, with mud floors and straw roofs, and no heating apparatus, are not just comfortable. It is a mystery how the poor people keep themselves warm at all, but they have their own methods. For one thing, they do not have surplus clothing lying around their house; all they possess they put on, and it is amusing sometimes to see the attempts they make to twaddle along, resembling at times an animated rag pile. When old Sol shines out they are not slow to gather in the open to enjoy its cheerful rays. And then there is the "Ho Lu"—or home-made portable stove. The ashes and coals left over from their cooking operations supply the necessary heat for the life-saving "Ho Lu". Westerners would consider this a very primitive heating system, but the Orientals have used this method from time immemorial and are skilful in its use. It seems to suit their parsimonious way of living.

On such a day as this scarcely anyone is astir in the early morning. At 6.30 our church bell rings out the Angelus, and about 7 o'clock a few Christians besides the personnel of the Mission arrive for morning prayers and Holy Mass. Not till after mass will they have their breakfast—but that never requires much preparation. They eat most sparingly, and when finished a meal they carefully put the fragments aside, wash their bowl and chopsticks, and then sup a bowl of tea. On many occasions I have watched the Chinese at their meals and I have yet to see them allow even as much as one grain fall to the floor. Frugality is a virtue with them of necessity. I have seen a husky boatman rowing his boat against the stream, pulling it over rapids, and working mightily, and yet all he had for his meal was two bowls of rice and a single vegetable. Following a strenuous day's work they just roll themselves in a blanket and sleep soundly on the hard wooden floor of their boat. At dawn they are preparing again for another stretch of an always difficult journey.

We of the Western world with our advanced knowledge of science and the arts create for ourselves needs of which the Chinese would never dream. We must have luxuriously furnished dwellings, possessing all modern conveniences; we must have motor cars, cinemas, vacations, and many other things that merely make life "easier". Here in our district the Chinese have not even a well-equipped hospital. Our Sisters Juletta, Angela, and Catherine visit the Franciscan Sisters at Mr. Lo Pa Hong's new hospital in Shanghai. Our Sisters in Lishui are the Grey Nuns of the Immaculate Conception, whose Motherhouse is in Pembroke, Ontario.

Western "comforts" are known to them only in picture form. Invariably when they see pictures of "foreign" articles their first question is "How much did it cost?" They could never hope to raise enough money to buy anything but necessities. Rowing boats, carrying stones, planting rice or beans, are not occupations to give one a fortune. The average Chinese thinks that foreigners must be immensely wealthy to have cars, etc., and still buy "rice" and clothes for their families.

What a wonderful change would Christianity make in the people here! The hardships of their pagan lives would be mitigated so very much if they were partakers of the blessings of our Faith. But it is not an easy task to bring them into the Church. The Chinese stick to their (to us) old-fashioned ways in everything, religion included. Our hope for the future lies with the young whom we can gather into our Catholic school here. Through their influence we can reach their pagan parents and relatives and dispose them to willingly accept the Catholic Faith. Pray God to bless our pagans, our catechumens, and especially our schools.

ANOTHER MISSIONARY SLAIN IN CHINA

A Fides telegram from Pekin, dated March 27th, reports the first violent death of a missionary at the hands of bandits since 1931, no missionaries having been killed by outlaws during the whole of 1932. The victim is a Franciscan priest, Father Otmar Stimpfl, of the Prefecture of Yungchowfu, Hunan Province. He was 43 years old, and had been in China since 1921.

AT SUNGYANG

IF "Music hath charms" (which I do not doubt), it would not be a bad idea if some of the "charms" were somehow incorporated into the Chinese version of "Music". At least, that's how I feel about it after four years of dismal failure trying to appreciate the varied sounds that I am told make up Chinese music. Well, let me tell you something more about those "Evenings in Sungyang" which got mention in the January issue of "CHINA".

You may remember that workmen employed in construction work here at the Mission were "kept in" at nights, and to while away the time we used to have some "musical memories" several nights a week. Now I can endure a Chinese amateur fiddler as a soloist, but when it comes to "harmonizing" with two working it just "gets" me—if you know what I mean!

About 6.45 p.m. all hands would be on deck waiting with their long pipes for the opening number. Let me say that I possess a real up-to-date Orthophonic through the kindness of Father Stringer. Not being a lover of the Chinese style of music I have only "foreign" records—but all good. After about the fourth night one fellow suggested bringing along some Chinese records. It registered 100% with the workmen so I dared not veto the suggestion. "Klu-Klae" was the first piece put on, and the loyal Orthophonic balked badly. Father Des' machine lost face very much. A very faint sound was the only result from the soundbox. I tried everything from freewheeling, changing gears, and even putting it in reverse, but nothing doing—it just wouldn't come across. Hurriedly I put on "The World is Waiting for the Sunrise"—it relieved the situation and restored face to the machine and its owner. The evening programmes invariably wound up with "The Turkey in the Straw."

The Mission house at Sungyang is fast nearing completion. I am consoled to see so many people attending devotions and the instructions in Catholic Doctrine. If we had a priest in the home-town of some of our workmen, I am sure we would secure many conversions.

LITTLE FLOWER'S ROSE GARDEN

Edited by FATHER JIM

CONDITIONS OF MEMBERSHIP

The only conditions of membership in the Rose Garden are: (1) To say every day the Prayer for the Conversion of China; (2) To go to Holy Communion once a month for the Intention of Missionary Vocations. Certificates and pins will be sent to all members.

THE LITTLE ROSEBUD.

A Rosebud fell at the feet of God
A softly-flushed, bedewed young flower,
Whose fragrance gave to Paradise
A strangely sweet, ethereal odour—
The plea of a fervent prayer.
And God, looking down on it, smiled and said:
"Why, here is a rose for My little Flower!
For to Therese alone is given
The task of dropping them from Heaven,
And well does she love her mystic labour!"

So Therese came at His loved call,
And, radiant with joy at her task
Of letting the rosebud fall,
To His most mighty Hand held fast,
O'er the brink of Paradise to bend
And on its mission of mercy send
Her flower, kissed, and beautified.

Far down on earth, a weary priest
Whose heart was sore, with work long-spent,
And soul borne down by discouragement,
Received the mystic rosebud from the hand
Of a yet sweeter Flower.
He, knowing well from whom it came,
Felt in his heart the mighty flame
Of God's great Love, and her dear power
To send him strength, renewed, to labour,
Then strove, refreshed, about his work,
Sweet in his soul, healing all hurt,
Gratitude and love
For God's Own Flower.

—Edna C. Kearns.

The beautiful poem printed above came to me with the following letter from Outremont, P.Q., and I thank the sender for both.

"Dear Father Jim: My little nephew, one of your 'Buds' is so enthusiastic about your Club that I have become very much interested in the good work it is doing by encouraging the children to pray for our Catholic Foreign Missions.

"Please accept my sincere congratulations on the good work wrought by your 'Garden' in interesting our young people in the Missions.

"Lately, I chanced upon a short poem which seemed to me to be so well suited to your 'Garden' that I have taken the liberty to send it to you just as copied by my nephew, who is very fond of it.

"Yours truly,
—Mrs. L. S. M."

My Young Friends:

I am not going to write a letter for you this month, but I will let you read instead a letter I received from a missionary priest of our Seminary who is now studying in Rome. Last summer, during his vacation, he had the privilege of living many weeks in Lisieux, acting as chaplain to the English-speaking visitors to Carmel, the Convent where the "Little Flower" lived and died. I wrote to Father Doyle and asked him to tell the "Buds" something about his visit. Here is his letter:

"Dear Father Jim: An article for your 'Rosebuds' on 'Impressions of Lishui' is more than I care to attempt just now. I should not know where to begin, and before ending I should probably get stuck in the mud up behind the crypt of the beautiful new Basilica the world is building in honor of the Little Flower.

When a famous shrine is mentioned one naturally thinks of miracles, and it is well known that the 'Little Flower' does obtain physical cures, but during my time in Lisieux I did not come into contact with any such cures; but I do know of many spiritual cures. There were also those who came with broken bodies, hoping to find relief from their sufferings at the tomb of St. Therese of the Child Jesus, and after fervent prayer took their departure, with their bodies still broken but with their hearts full of gratitude to God for permitting them to suffer for love of Him.

It was also my pleasure to meet several persons who really understood and lived the 'Little Way' taught by St. Therese, the way of confidence and self-surrender, and who knew that

'To live of love, 'tis not to fix one's tent
On Tabor's height and there with Thee remain,
'Tis to climb Calvary with strength nigh spent,
And count Thy heavy cross our truest gain.'

One of the unforgettable memories I have of Lisieux is of the thousands and thousands of persons who received Our Lord in Holy Communion in the Carmel chapel, proving that Petite Therese is still drawing souls to God, teaching them to love to be united with Him in this great Sacrament of Love, for as the Patroness of Missionaries herself tells us: 'It is not to remain in a golden ciborium that Jesus comes down each day from Heaven, but to find another heaven—the heaven of our soul, in which He takes His delight.'

That the 'Little Flower' is fulfilling her mission of doing good upon earth, teaching souls to love the good God, is very evident to those who visit Lisieux during the summer months and see there the crowds of pilgrims who flock to her tomb in the Carmel chapel; perhaps a few come through curiosity, but with rare exception all remain to pray and to beg her intercession.

I need hardly assure you, Father Jim, that your 'Rose Garden' pages hold much interest for me, for I see in them the expression of devotion to the 'Little Flower', a devotion that finds practical expression in praying for the Misssions which were always so dear to her in life and which must be doubly dear to her now as the Heavenly Patronesss of all misssionaries.

I pray that Saint Therese will continue to protect you and all your dear 'Buds'.

Faithfully yours,
(Rev.) Gerald Doyle."

I am sure the members of our Club appreciate this letter from a misssionary priest. I received it months ago, but kept it hoping that Father Doyle would change his mind and write a fully descriptive account of Lisieux and incidents connected with the Little Flower's life there. I still have hopes, Father—and I know the "Buds" will "second the motion" now.

Yours for a Happy Month of Mary,

FATHER JIM.

LUCKY AT OSHAWA.

The members of our Club at St. Gregory's School, Oshawa, sent me this letter which came from Father Venini quite a while ago. You'll agree that they are lucky getting such a letter all for themselves from a veteran missionary in China. Like the good "Buds" that they are they want to share it with you all, so here you are:

"My dear children: It is a long time since I received the parcel of beads, and other things, which you so kindly sent for your little Chinese brothers and sisters. The parcel arrived here during my absence. It happened to be in the rainy season and your parcel was well christened. It was left on the floor in my room, and during the night time the mission compound was flooded under two feet of water. Luckily, most of your gifts were not afraid of a good ducking but so much moisture did not do those coloured paper caps any good. I am going to distribute your gifts at my new mission in Kankou, away up among the mountains. The youngsters who will come to school there will be nearly all pagans, and your gifts will help me to win their confidence.

But now you must continue to help us with your prayers. I know that you are doing this always, especially since so many of you are members of the 'Rose Garden'. But I want you to help those particular children in a special way. I am going to send a picture of my school children, and I want each of you to choose one child for whom you will say some extra prayers every day, asking his or her Guardian Angel and the Little Flower to bless him or her and bring about their conversion and the conversion of their family.

"Many thanks for your gifts, and now may God bless you and all the members of that wonderful 'Rose Garden'.

"Sincerely yours in Christ,
"Father Venini."

"Enclosed is our cheque for five dollars", wrote Mark Kiely, President of the Crusade Unit, Our Lady of Perpetual Help School, Toronto. Mark picked seven of the "ten best words" that time.

"You will find enclosed a cheque for two dollars as a small mite box contribution from the pupils of St. Joseph's School, Port Arthur." This from Teresa Miro, Secretary, Crusaders. I may as well confess to the Port Arthur Buds that I lost the group picture sent me some time ago—but perhaps there are more pictures to come, and next time I'll make sure they get better treatment.

"We are writing you those few lines to ask you to thank all the buds who have written to us. We certainly enjoyed their letters, and we hope they will write again soon. Please thank especially the bud who sent us the nice box of fruit." I should have found space for this before; it is part of a letter from the two young ladies at Provincial Sanatorium, Charlottetown, for whom I made a special appeal for pen pals some months ago, Phoebe Des Roche and Annie MacIsaac. I hope that the return of the fine weather will bring both of you back your health again.

"I would like to be a member of your Rose Garden. I am 15 years old, and if send us a mite box I and my brother Aidan, aged 10, will try to help the missions with it, and also by our prayers and Holy Communions. Yours truly, Wm. Power, Bell Island, Nfld."

"Sister says that we must begin by doing things right by subscribing to 'China'. Since we are 'Buds' we want to help a bit, so you will find enclosed our subscription. We are proud to call ourselves the 'Lafontaine Buds'." And Father Jim is proud to have his "Lafontaine Buds" among his faithful correspondents.

Fairville, N.B. "I am sending you a picture of my schoolmates in Grades 3 and 4 in St. Rose's School. They all want to become members of your Club. Father Sharkey came to our school one day and showed us lovely pictures of China. We enjoyed them so much we all wanted to see more. He wrote his name in Chinese on the blackboard. It looked funny and nobody could read it at all. Lois Heenan."

I hope your acquaintance with Father Sharkey will prompt you all to remember him daily in your prayers that his work among the Chinese in Vancouver may be very successful.

I was glad to hear again from Michael and Arthur Sampson, Fox Hr., Nfld. Both of them would like to hear from sanctuary boys in Canada.

"Fourteen boys and 16 girls in my class wish to enroll as members of the Little Flowers' Rose Garden. Enclosed is a postal note, an offering from our class for the missions. Please send us a mitebox for our classroom. Miss E. C. M., teacher."

I very heartily welcome those newcomers from the Separate School, Kapuskasing, Ont., and I trust they liked their badges, etc.

Father Jim enjoys his work with the Rose Garden very much—except when he has to prepare "copy" for publication. What worries him then is the fact that he has to disappoint so many who would like their letters mentioned. Before me now as I write there must be no fewer than 300 letters that have come in since the last "China" was issued. If you have written a long time ago and find your name mentioned only months afterwards, you will know that the mail has been jumbled up and thus the "old timers" on the "waiting list" have had a sporting chance of being mentioned. I want to be fair to everybody, and so the only way is to take them as they come after the "shakeup". And I am not using my own hat for the shake-up, either. Remember how close the photographer came to getting me once? He got my arm and my hat that time—and many requests came since for "a full page picture". If it ever does appear, I think it will have to be by the jig-saw puzzle way.

"I am writing just to ask you how you are, and to send you one dollar for the Seminary. And please ask some of the buds to write to me. Helen Ouellette, 339 King St., Dundas, Ont."

Even if I were feeling pretty sick, your letter would help to make me get well in a hurry, Helen. Thanks for your gift.

Six new buds from Welland, Ont.: Shelia Williams, Sophie Ladika, Marcelline Clark, Jennie Nicholas, Audrey LaBatte and Lena Valella.

Buds who have asked for pen pals: Rita O'Reilly, 227 Kendal Avenue, Oshawa, and Florence McAdam, 40 Victoria St., Glace Bay.

To Jackie and Margaret Page, Winnipeg, and to Francis M. Decoste, Mabou, N.S., I am very grateful for their gifts to the missions.

Laverne Paul sends us four new members from Belleville, Ont.: Phyliss Asselstine, Claude Paul, Carmel De Cote and Pauline Paul.

When it comes to real workers for the Foreign Missions, we've got to hand it to these boys from Grade V, at Oxford School, Halifax, N.S. They are all members of the Rose Garden. Perhaps some of these boys will one day be telling readers of "China" about their missionary experiences in Chuchow.

NONSENSE

"Daddy," said Willie, "I dreamt last night that you gave me a sixpence."

"Well, as you have been a good boy lately," replied his daddy, "you may keep it!"

At a rugby match between Scotland and Wales two spectators were interested in another, who, during the whole progress of the game, never uttered a word, and displayed no excitement or sign of partisanship.

"It's a funny thing," said one of the men. "He can't be a Welshman or he'd have been shouting his head off."

"And he can't be a Scotsman," said the other, "because he's bought a program."

A bow-legged man was standing before a very hot stove, warming himself. A small boy watched him intently for a time, and then said:

"I say, mister, you're standing too near the stove; you're a'warpin'."

Manager—"Have you seen the cashier this morning?"

Clerk—"Yes, he came in without a moustache and borrowed the railway time-table!"

A man visiting a country town went to the local barber for a shave. The barber made several slips with his razor, and each time he would paste a small piece of paper over the cut to stop the bleeding.

When the operation was over, the victim handed the man half a crown.

"Keep the change, barber," he said, "It's worth half a crown to be shaved by so versatile an artist. Why, you're a barber, butcher and paperhanger all in one."

The Congressman's sister was accustomed to keep an eye on him while at home. On this occasion she called him up at Washington by long distance.

"What have you been doing?" she demanded.

"What do you mean?"

"Don't try to fool me. I read the papers. Yesterday they said the Speaker didn't recognize you."

—Christian Observer.

Auntie—"I see you like to ride on your uncle's knee pretty well, don't you?"

Nephew—"Not bad—I had a ride on a real donkey yesterday."

Customer—"You're a young man to be left in charge of a chemist's shop. Have you a diploma?"

Obliging Assistant—"No, madam; but we have a preparation of our own that's just as good."

"Generally run down, sir " queried the druggist; "slightly seedy and want a good toning up?"

The pale-faced customer nodded.

"Well, I've the very thing for you, Jenkins's Juvenator. Three doses a day and more if necessary. Fifty a bottle."

"No, thanks," said the pale patient.

"But, my dear, sir, it's the rage of the day. Jenkins's Juvenator is the greatest discovery of modern science. It's the rage of the season. Every one is rejuvenating, you might say."

"Yes, but I think I'd rather try something else," replied the customer.

"Nonsense," pressed the druggist, "I tell you Jenkins's Juvenator will have more effect on you in a single day than any other medicine could have in a month. It cures everything from coughs to corns. What is your objection to it?"

"Why, nothing, only I'm Jenkins."

A negro was asked to supply a tame turkey. The customer was insistent that it should be tame, and not wild. When he came to carve the turkey he found it full of shot and he reproached the negro for having supplied a wild bird.

"In stric' confidence," explained the negro, "dem shots was intended for me, not de turkey!"

Tramp—"But, lady, every Christmas for twenty-five years I've received something from this house; since before you were born."

Miss Fortyodd—"Oh, well, that's different. I'll see what I can do."—Dublin Opinion.

"The roof is so bad that the rain comes through on my head. How long is this going to continue?" wrote the angry tenant.

"What do you think I am—a weather prophet?" replied the landlord.

Wife—"We really should get a new car this year."

Husband—"What, when I'm still paying instalments on the car I exchanged for the car I sold in part payment of the car I've got now?"

A Chinese newspaper contains this letter from an applicant for work:

"Sir: I am Wang . . . I can drive a typewriter with good noise, and my English is great . . . My last job has left itself from me, for the good reason that the large man has dead. It was on account of no fault of mine. So, honorable sirs, what about it If I can be of big use to you, I will arrive on same date that you should guess."

Hotel Keeper — "Mr. McTavish, come out here and look at this marvellous rainbow."

Cautious Tourist—"How much extra is it?"

"What sort o' minister hae ye got, Geordie?"

"Oh, weel, he's no' muckle worth. We seldom get a glint o' him. Sax days o' the week he's invees'ble, and on the seventh he's encomprehens-'ble!"

The futurist painter was visiting the house of his only patron.

"Oh, by the way," said the host, "did you hear about the burglary here the other night?"

"No. Did they get much?"

"No. Not as much as they might have done. A couple of clocks, some silver, and—you know that picture I've just bought from you? They cut it out of its frame and——"

"Did they?" cried the delighted artist. "My fortune's made! This is just the advertisement I've been looking for for years!"

"And went off with the frame!" continued his patron sadly.

Rastus—You say anything to me, big boy, and I'll make you eat yo' words.

Mose—Chicken dumplin's, hot biscuits an' watermelon.

Teacher (to her class)—"What is an Indian's wife called?"

Pupil—"A squaw."

Teacher—"And what is his child called?"

Pupil—"Squawler."

Little Jim had eaten an enormous tea at the Sunday-school treat, and had quite alarmed the lady who served him.

"My dear lad," she exclaimed, "you really must not eat any more or you'll be ill. You're too small to eat so much."

"It's all right, mum," replied little Jim. "I'm not so small inside as I look outside."

Jones—"I did not marry beauty, old man; I did not marry wealth or position; I married for sympathy."

Brown—"Well, you have mine."

Absent-minded barber (after the shave)—"Hair dyed, sir?"

Customer (very bald-headed) —"Yes, it died about five years ago."

The Parent—"I never told lies when I was a boy."

Young Hopeful—"When did you begin, father?"

A MESSAGE

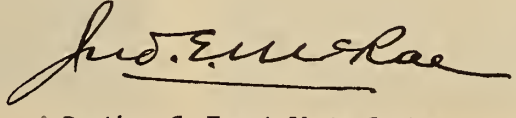
To the Readers of "China"

Scarboro Bluffs, Ontario, June, 1933.

Dear Friends:

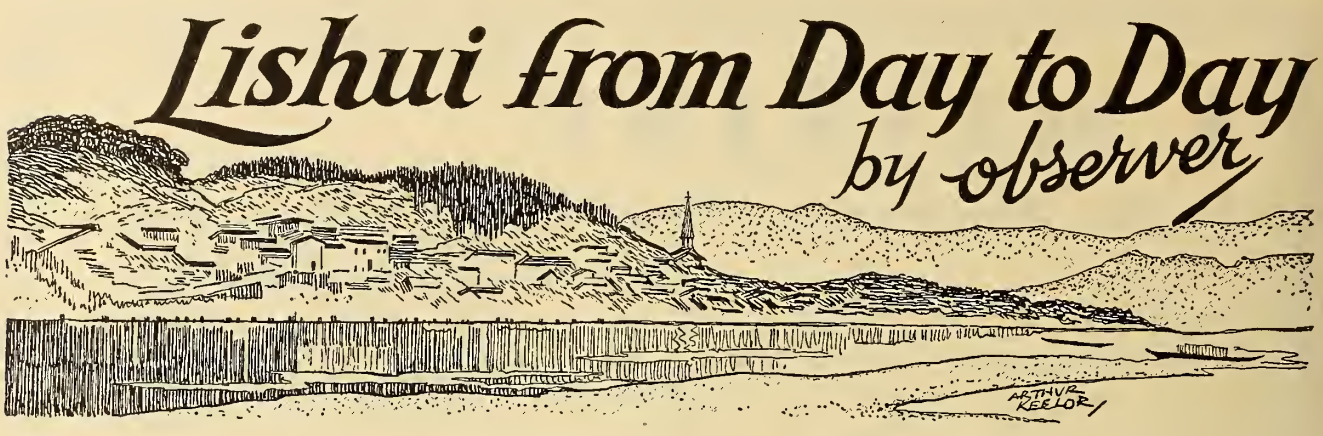
Owing to prevailing conditions we have not been able to follow out our plans to provide accommodation for students for the Missionary Priesthood. For two years we have struggled along under difficulties, but such is our sense of responsibility to the work in which we are engaged that we cannot longer postpone taking steps to care adequately for the vocations which God has inspired for our missionary work. Once more we lay the facts before you, our friends, and invite your sympathetic consideration of our needs. Here is our position:

Every available room in our Seminary is occupied; long ago we converted our lecture hall into students' rooms, and in some cases we have had to move necessary room furnishings out into the corridors to make space for two students in a single room; our chapel and our refectory are too small to comfortably accommodate all our students. Under such conditions we are now closing another scholastic year. We have resigned ourselves to the thought that our contemplated building operations will be impossible for some time to come unless general conditions improve. And yet, our letter-files hold proof that many well-qualified young men are seeking admission to our Seminary for next September. Unless we make provision for taking care of those worthy applicants we may cause irreparable loss to foreign mission enthusiasm in Canada, with consequent terrible results to the souls in pagan China, whom those very young men may be destined to bring to salvation.



We have in the past appealed to young men to become missionaries, and now when so many have responded to a Divine Vocation, we are forced to refuse them admittance to our Seminary because we have no place in which to put them and no means for their support. Unwilling to turn away these generous youths from our door, or to delay indefinitely the fulfilling of their high and noble ambitions, we appealed to our Bishops, and are now able to announce a way out of our difficulty for the time being.

We are not sending any priests to China this year. Five students now with us will begin their theological studies at Brignole Sale College in Genoa in September, thanks to free burses offered our Seminary last year. That will give us room for five new students, but many more have applied for admission.



A Canadian Seminary has offered to take care of a number of our theologians for $300.00 a year, or $1,200.00 for the entire course of each student.

We ask for immediate generous financial assistance from the Catholics of Canada and Newfoundland to enable us to accept this offer. Unless our friends send us the necessary money we cannot do otherwise than refuse applicants admission to our Seminary after the summer vacation.

In the name of God, and in the words of our Holy Father the Pope, we appeal to the readers of "China" to consider our need: "That even one soul should be lost through our tardiness, through our lack of generosity; that even one missionary have to halt because the means fail which it may be we have refused him, is a responsibility of which we have not, perhaps, thought too frequently in the course of our life."

President, St. Francis Xavier Seminary.

Reports from the Chuchow "Outposts"

PI-WU-KA.

(Father Boudreau)

FATHER BOUDREAU is on the front line alone, and at the present time (April) besides making his regular missions, is preparing to build a new church. This has been made possible by the generosity of a friend in Newfoundland and after almost interminable delays (not all of which are yet at an end) a start has at last been made.

In the March "China", Father MacGillivray, after his first visit to Pi-Wu-Ka, described Fr. Boudreau's church as "the loft of a shed and not even a good loft". So you can imagine what it will mean to him to have a "respectable" little church, thanks to the kindness of our charitable anonymous benefactor.

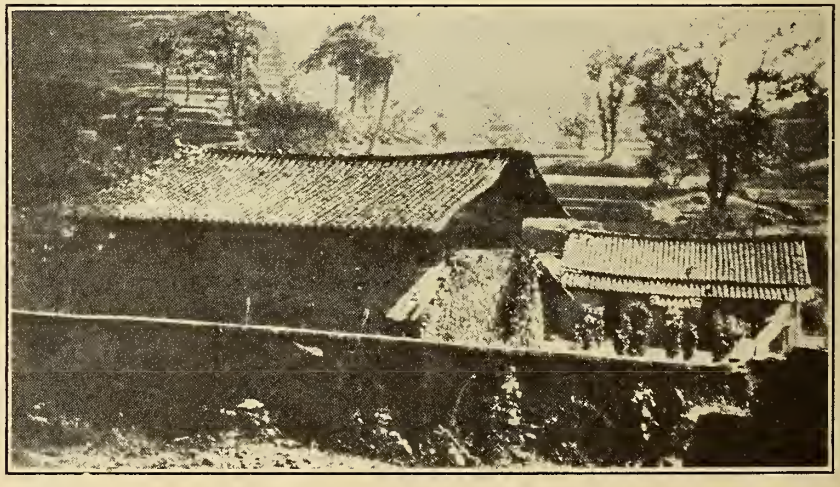
As the work proceeds buying "trees" is a seemingly endless business, and Fr. Boudreau had just returned from one such fruitless expedition when he last wrote. "You spend the whole day arguing and bargaining, and at the end the nett result is some tea and cigarettes. 'You foreigners have plenty of money' they will tell you." The lumbermen usually want the most exorbitant prices from the foreigner, especially if they feel that his need is urgent. And the missionary very often must be his own architect, contractor and building inspector all in one.

SUNGYANG.

(Fathers Morrison and Beal)

FATHER BEAL is making the Sungyang missions while Fr. Morrison holds the fort at the home base. The former has just written from Nandong, a village over the mountains from Sungyang: "I have a very gratifying report to make for Nandong. Yesterday I had the pleasure of admitting twelve to Baptism, and by the Fall I expect to have twenty more. I am leaving on a fifty-mile hike tomorrow and will arrive in Yanchinuen Thursday night, which means doing 25 miles a day over cobblestones. I am enjoying good health, but would ask you to send along a dozen aspirins. Have to cross the river several times before getting back home."

WONG-DA.



(Fathers Amyot and King)

COMPLETELY recovered from their recent bandit scare the priests at Wong-da are continuing their efforts to make the mission residence more or less habitable, and Fr. Amyot has been busy of late vaccinating all and sundry against the dreaded smallpox. They even have glass in the windows now, and a room apiece; and the rain doesn't come through the chapel roof as much as heretofore. Even at that the Wong-da "chapel" would make Fr. Boudreau's "loft" look like Rheims Cathedral. In time we hope to be able to provide Fr. Amyot with the wherewithal to erect something better, but times of depression have reached even as far as China.

TSINGTIEN.

(Fathers Gignac and MacDonald)

ENCOURAGING, indeed, is Fr. Gignac's brief account of his latest mission tour. "I returned from my mission two days ago," he writes, "and what a success it was! God was with me and even favoured me with ideal weather. Went to a place called Chu Tsee, about 90 li from here, and found one Christian family. This was the first time a priest had set foot in that town. This family had been baptised in Wenchow about twenty years ago. During my stay there the pagans gathered in crowds and begged to hear some Catholic Doctrine. After the Christians had said some prayers I told

The Wong-Da Mission when Fathers Amyot and King took possession. The "chapel" is upstairs and the priests' rooms beneath. An outer stairway has since been built so that the people do not have to pass through the priests' rooms to reach the chapel. The smaller building at the right serves as a kitchen, residence for cook and catechist, and does duty as a schoolroom for 12 pupils.

Here are Fathers Wong, King, Serra, and Gignac in the shade of a big camphor tree just outside Lishui.

the story of Creation and the Fall, the coming of Christ and Redemption. The catechist then preached for forty-five minutes, and many expressed the wish to be received into the Church. How I should like to be able to send a catechist there and open up a chapel! Certainly this is virgin soil. I was much touched by the appeal of the pagans for more visits to them in the future.

"The chapel in Doo-Tse-Kan-Dow is coming along fine. There are about fifteen who come every Sunday for prayers. The catechist has opened up a little school and 18 children attend; practically all are children of Christians. The Mayor of the town is a Christian and he is enthused over it all."

KANKOU.

(Father Venini)

FATHER VENINI reports bandit activity in his part of the world. Two villages, one forty and one fifteen li from him, were burned by the marauders, but he is satisfied that Kankou is scarcely worthy of their attention, being but a small village with not even one rich person living there. He has established himself right in the heart of a pagan district with only a very few Christians for a start, and we shall watch Kankou's progress with great interest.

LUNGCHUANG.

(Fathers Stringer and Wong)

FATHER STRINGER has just sent along his diary. I hope the readers of "China" will be given an opportunity to peruse its contents some day. Fr. Serra accompanied him on the Lungchuang missions, having been formerly parish priest there and knowing the territory well.

One of the "high lights" of the account was the story of what they found in Shiao May. The bandit chief, leader of the Big Knife Society, and one of the few Christians in the district, had taken possession of the Mission compound, and when Fr. Stringer and Fr. Serra arrived there was consternation in the bandit ranks. This man's son had been recently executed by the soldiers and he had fled for a time. He and his gang were ordered out, bag and baggage. "This leader," Father Stringer writes, "is quite old and thin and I wondered what there was about him to frighten anybody. It is not himself but the power he is supposed to have. He is afraid of us, at least." The members of the Big Knife Society take a kind of pill which is supposed to render them bullet-proof, and the ordinary folk have a superstitious fear of them. A short time ago a soldier, armed with a revolver, allowed himself to be "cleft in twain" by one of them because he was afraid to fire. But let Fr. Stringer resume: "The stories about Christians and Christianity in these parts are very many —and bad—all due to a few scandalous Christians. I am certain that those of us who are working here now will, in a lifetime, do little more than clean up, and those who follow us will have an opportunity to branch out."

SONG OF THE CITY.

By Mary Rose Parent

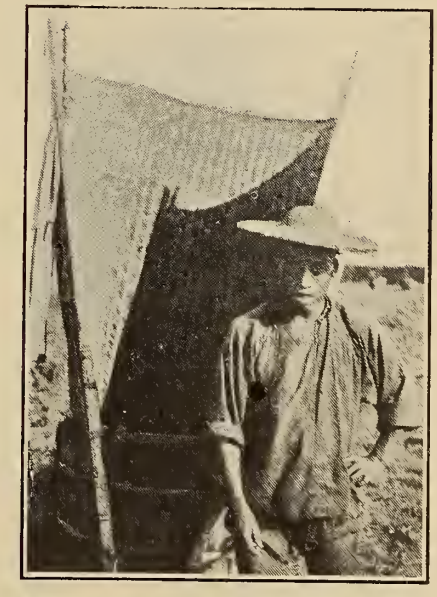
In my little town, back home,
I was—well, I was I!
I knew—and they all knew me—
Every passer-by.

Here, the day long, though I search,
Wistfully, the crowded street,
Never an old-time face I see—
Nary a neighbor meet!

In my little town, they knew
Which my door-step—I knew theirs.
But to me—and millions more—
All alike — these million stairs!

Still . . . I slip away from crowds
(Where I'm terribly alone!)
And step into my Father's House . . .
There—I am at home.

At Lishui dispensary work is entering on its busy summer season with many outside calls for the Sisters to attend cases of meningitis. The poor people use carrot soup as the only cure they know, but when notified in time the Sisters can treat the afflicted successfully.



AT THE SEMINARY.

The Devotion of the Forty Hours was held from May 12th to 14th. Adoration each day was concluded with a Holy Hour preached by the priests of the Seminary.

A Novena of Benedictions of the Blessed Sacrament will conclude on Pentecost Sunday. This is one of the several Novenas made at the Seminary each year for the intentions of our benefactors, living and dead.

Examinations will occupy our seminarians from May 27th to June 2nd. Then the Annual Retreat will be held, closing with Ordinations and vacation on June 10th. Five students who have completed their two years of philosophy here will go to Genoa, Italy, in September to make their theological studies.

Mr. Roland Roberts (Victoria, B.C.), and Mr. Craig Strang (St. John's Nfld.), will be ordained Sub-Deacons on June 10th. Minor Orders will be received by three of our students.

Westerners will be interested in this Chinese threshing machine. The sheaves of rice are beaten up against the straw "superstructure" and the grains fall into the tub.

"Let's Go Places"

WITH FATHER STRINGER ON A CHINESE RIVER BOAT

YOU hop on the Trans-Continental for Vancouver, and I will "embark" on a river boat for Lungchuang. You leave Toronto as I leave Lishui, and we will arrive at our respective destinations about the same time, although I shall have made only ninety miles while you have travelled more than two thousand. That will give you some idea of the "speed" in these parts. You just go to the station and buy your ticket—here I send the servant down to the river, where on one bank just below the bridge, there is a whole line of watercraft varying only in size.

When the servant returns he has with him a "lauda", as the Chinese call their boatmen. "How much?" He names his price and you name yours, and then squabble a bit before striking a bargain. As an afterthought you casually mention that your price includes rice; the chiu-dia (wine-money) or tip will be settled when the trip is over. Generally, one hires a boat all for oneself, but as an alternative one may go "by freight", that is, take pot luck and travel in a boat loaded with merchandise. Even when you hire a "private car" the boatman will want to include some extra baggage to balance the boat properly. And these boatmen surely can "take it". The final instruction is that the journey must commence as early as possible in the morning.

The "Early" Start.

Morning comes; the baggage is transported to the boat. The lauda is waiting, all smiles. He invites you to take off your shoes. Then you seat yourself comfortably and graciously nod to him as if to say, "Let's go, James!" and—what!! The lauda hasn't had his breakfast yet? Didn't you state clearly that you wanted to leave as early as possible? Why hasn't he had his breakfast? He smilingly replies: "Yes, I didn't have my breakfast!" That's the simple reason. If a man has not had his breakfast he just has not had his breakfast, and that's all there is to it. So you compose yourself as best you can. Breakfast over, you breathe a sigh of relief. That half-hour didn't drag so very terribly, after all. Now—but where the deuce is he going now? You call to him, and he, wholly solicitous for your welfare, turns around and hollers that he has a few vegetables to buy for the trip, or maybe it is only a package of cigarettes. To give way to thunder and lightning desires would avail you nothing: when that lauda is ready to go he will go and not a thing can you do about it.

The Boat.

While he is off buying some things and you are cooling down, take a look round. You will be impressed by the cleanliness of the boat. If you chanced to enter the lauda's home, it would doubtless be as squalid as any of its neighbours. In the house you act as the rest do, but here in his boat you dare not throw your match ends on the floor, nor your ashes either. There is a tin of some kind for that. Even the crumbs that may fall are quickly wiped up. On entering the boat you had to remove your shoes, and the boatman washed the soles and turned them up in the sun to dry.

But here comes your boatman. A few minutes' delay while he does a little "deck swabbing" before pushing off. As he poles out into the current he chances to meet some friend lauda who is just arriving, and then begins a series of broadcasts which everyone can hear but to which nobody pays attention. "Where are you going? Who is your passenger? How much is he paying you?"—and so on till distance intervenes.

Rapids!

Now you are going along slowly. Your lauda will be rowing or poling according to the depth of the water. You watch the scenery as it doesn't whiz by. Villages and hamlets are nestling in the valleys and looking quite picturesque—from the distance. A distant rumbling grows to a roaring sound. Your boat picks up speed. Rapids! The lauda manouvers a bit, steers clear of a hidden rock which tries in vain to impede the torrent. Now the boat is bouncing and bobbing and sometimes rolling a bit dangerously in the swirling angry waters. Many of the rapids along this river end in a right-angle turn. If you shouldn't make it—well, goodbye!

Like all who really know the water, the lauda takes no risks. As a bad stretch comes in sight he rolls up his trousers and goes overboard at the stern, holding back the boat to his own wading-speed. His hold on the boat never loosens, not even as the water rises to his waist or he goes under to the armpits as he steps in a hole. Slippery stones make him stumble a bit, the current forces him to quicken his pace, and now he is floundering quite badly. A few thumps and a little scraping —he didn't miss that rock! No damage done, however, and as he gets into calm waters he climbs aboard again and resumes his rowing.

"Your move", says the little fellow as he moves a game nearer to the checker championship—or sumptin'!

Amazing Stamina.

The vitality of these boatmen is marvelous, sturdy as rocks. In the summertime the work in the water is somewhat of a cooling relief, but when there is a raw north-east wind blowing, or a flurry of snow and the water cold as ice, then you realize what admirable constitutions those men have. They endure it, for trips have to be made. Imagine how you would fare in their place. Plunging into icy waters, then climbing out and poling or rowing your boat exposed to a biting wind. There surely must be some extra vitamins or heat-giving elements in rice, for that is their main diet. Some can afford a little meat, but the majority are satisfied with the fat pork with which they cook their vegetables. The last few trips I made my lauda had no meat, but how he did put away steaming bowls of rice and bean-curd!

"Get out and push" means something to the boatmen on a Chinese river. But as Father Stringer tells us, "they can take it" and come back for more.

Lower view: A beauty spot between Lishui and Pi-Wu-Ka. Pulled in near the shore are sampans and bamboo rafts, while the ferry is half way across the river.

Each boat is equipped with necessary kitchen utensils, a stove, a funnel-shaped iron pot, a pan, a pair of tongs for handling the charcoal. The stove could be likened to one of those hanging flower-pots you often see. It is made of clay, and fits into a framework. It stands about a foot high. No matter how muddy or dirty the water is, it must be used. The rice is washed in it several times before being boiled. Then the vegetables are cooked, and finally he "puts the kettle on" and we are ready to eat. Going downstream during mealtime the boat is left to drift along, otherwise it is anchored at the shore by means of a pole.

Superstitions.

And, by the way, you must never leave your chopsticks across the top of your bowl when finished a meal. Superstitious belief has it that it means the boat will tip over. Some interpret it to mean one hasn't had enough to eat. The former interpretation is common with boatmen, for, as all believe, the river has its host of devils who are always waiting an opportunity to torment some poor fellow. Not long ago I was told that in another part of the country several laudas had asked for baptism merely to break a "curse" that was thus heaped on them. Another form of "curse" is to have someone throw a piece of straw into your boat. In a country so steeped in devilish superstitions one cannot be too cautious.

Perhaps in making a journey you may wish to reach a certain spot by night. You call to your lauda, asking whether he can make it, or how far he can get today. Horrors! You should not do that! Now you've gone and put some pesky water-devil wise. He will surely canter on ahead and prepare a fiendish welcome for you. If your lauda answers in a loud voice, very much louder than is necessary, just remember that other ears are listening. Don't be surprised if he stops ten or twelve li on either side of the place he hollers out: one has to be smart to outdo these devils, and what a chuckle your lauda has when he views in imagination the dismay written on the devil's face when we do not arrive at the spot chosen to trouble and torment us. Sometimes it is strange how mishaps occur to confirm the pagans in their superstitious beliefs. Once, I asked a boatman to reach a certain spot by night. He said he would, and he kept his word. As he moored the boat he slipped and fell in the water. When he came to the surface he had the same unconcerned countenance as when he fell in. The evil spirit that had arranged that little episode was not going to find out whether or not he had ruffled this lauda.

The End of a Day.

After supper you string up your mosquito net. The lauda doesn't need one. He takes his recreation or has a chat with other boatmen while you try to sleep, and it is strange how one sleeps after a trip on one of those boats; not even the noise of boilers being hammered close to one's ear keeps sleep away.

Sometimes bad weather is the order of the trip. It means a rest

The GLORY of the MISSIONS

By RT. REV. W. C. McGRATH, P.A.

Here we present a letter from our Mission Superior in China received by the students at the Seminary on the eve of their summer vacation. The relations between the priests on the Missions in China and those preparing for similar work at the Seminary are kept very iutimate through the exchange of correspondence. The letter here published contains wisdom that is profitable not alone to the seminarians but to the readers of China in general, since it gives them to understand something of the sacrifice made by those young men who are preparing themselves for life in China. To young men contemplating entering the Seminary it gives a sound spiritual outlook on what lies before them as missionaries.

A CHINESE proverb has it that "a journey of ten thousand miles starts off with a single step." It would be quite a task to answer individually all the letters that have come to me from those at the Seminary, so I will address this one to you all, and it will serve to bring to you my sincerest good wishes for a very happy summer vacation. At the close of another year of Seminary life for you I feel the urge to pen some of the thoughts that come to me as I reflect on the happy associations of days spent amongst you. As we gather together here in Lishui we often recall persons and events that figured in our lives at China Mission Seminary. One by one the students pass in review, and it cheers us all to hear that our "little family" has now grown appreciably in size and that the same old spirit still animates all its members.

Over here we are waiting for them, more aware now of just what awaits them when they have said goodbye, one by one, to happy Seminary associations, and have left behind them a tradition that will continue to be our pride. And as we think of them all we cannot but utter a prayer that the Sacred Heart will ever unite them, and unite us all, in that precious bond of charity whose golden links will reach from Genoa to Scarboro and from Scarboro to Vancouver and Chekiang. After all, boys, there is really no separation worthy of the name. For those who are living members of the Mystical Body of Christ there is neither height nor depth nor dreary stretches of ocean waste. We are all one in Him and all very close to one another, closer indeed than members of the same family at home who may have fallen victims to the only real tragedy in life, the tragedy of sin that could separate them from Him who is All in All to every one of us.

Of late we seem to have at times another conception of China, one that might have been hidden in the background during our moments of heroism and chivalry of younger days when our only thought was to save souls for Christ. That is still our only desire, but already, in spite of the loneliness and occasional disappointments of China, we have come to feel that the very darkness and gloom and forbidding atmosphere of the paganism that surrounds us must needs drive us—there seems to be no better word—ever closer to His Sacred Heart. That, after all, is the reward of China, the reward a hundredfold in this life, that Christ must come to mean more to us possibly than ever before. And whether it be His Will to bestow upon our efforts success or that apparent failure which is often the portion of those He loves best—well, that is in His hands.

A snap of Monsignor McGrath on the day he welcomed Fathers MacGillivray and McNabb to Lishui.

I can never forget the first impression I received when our boat was steaming up the river to Wenchow. For the first time we got a glimpse of the towering mountains and the winding river and realized that somewhere in beyond that great range of hills, scattered in different little pagan towns, were the boys who but a few short years before had been companions in class and on the recreation field, and had passed cheerfully, happily, through the few Seminary years that separated them from China. At first it seemed an overpowering thought. Those boys, together developing their spiritual, intellectual and physical powers, a few swift years of life at its human best and then—this; scattered away in remote little places amid the towering hills of China. It was a picture of life for all of us. A few short years at the Seminary and then China till the end. My dear boys, do you think creation ever held up a nobler picture for the scrutiny of God on High? Everything that life holds cheerfully given up for Him. Even were never one single soul reclaimed from the darkness of paganism and ushered into the bright light of God's love, then this would be success indeed, the greatest and noblest succeess of which poor human nature, aided by God's unfailing grace, is capable on earth. That is the glory of the Missions, the glory of renunciation for the sake of love. So greatly does God prize just such a sweet surrender of our will to Him that He deems all the evil in the world, past, present and future, not too great a price to pay.

Have I made myself clear? Perhaps not. But you can picture to yourselves, can't you, a perpetual stream of human creatures flowing into Heaven since creation's dawn. That might have been. Were there no free will and had God destined for us even a lesser Heaven, it would have been indeed. But He decreed otherwise. Judge for yourslf how precious in His sight must be the voluntary offering of free souls when the awful price paid was something He did not deem too great. I do not mean only the awful price paid on Calvary. I mean the price the world—willy nilly—has paid ever since the creation of man and will continue to pay till the end of time. All the evils in the world today, all the injustices of history, the suffering, the murders, the massacres — these things might never have been. And at the end who knows what part of the human race will have used that gift of free will to give themselves to Him? Yet was all this deemed better than the eternal salvation of men who could not turn away from God. Think then, my dear boys, of how precious in His sight must be the immolation you are going to make of yourselves, the giving up of everything, the offering of your young lives solely for His sake and to bring something of His love into the hearts of men. That, if I have made it at all clear, is the very essence of what it means to be a missionary. It somewhat shatters, perhaps, the old conception, so often, and, to my mind, so unwisely repeated, that of millions of pagan souls falling into Hell and that of heroic young men standing in the gap to save them. We do not know how many pagan souls go into Hell. We are not required to know. I never could see why it should be deemed necessary to make a tyrant out of our loving Father in Heaven in order to spur us to the best that was in us. The whole point is that those souls do not know Him, cannot love Him until they do, cannot render Him the service of free creatures which he prizes most of all things in creation. That is our work, to try to bring His love into their souls, to give back to Him in this way the souls for whom He died because only in this life are they free to accept or reject Him, only in this life can they begin to render to Him the service that is His.

You have heard people urge, on the other hand, that God is merciful and that He will condemn no man without his having had a chance. You have heard, and you will hear, people urge it as an objection against your missionary vocation that many of those pagans may get to Heaven anyway, through invincible ignorance, so what is the use of trying to save them. God help us. Must we do one of two things, either make God a tyrant and consign them all to Hell (as if we could possibly know) or save them through invincible ignorance and thus—as it were—penalize God for His very mercy. Even if they should be saved as pagans, it is not the way God wants them to be saved. He wants their love, as He wants our love, and that longing of His Sacred Heart should be enough for us.

My dear boys, I have wandered far afield, perhaps, but I know you will understand. We must have a real conception of our sublime vocation and not be deterred or dissuaded or, above all, misled, by the false attitudes even of well-meaning friends. Never let your understanding of your great vocation be marred by the thought either of mock heroics or mere humanitarianism. Keep God always—if you will pardon the phrase—"in the picture", and remember that the great driving force behind all missionary work and missionary sacrifice is nothing other than the love of God, His love for you and His burning desire for the love of the hearts of men. No missionary vocation, that is a real one, and that will stand the wear and tear of the inevitable disillusionment of China, can be built upon any other foundation. Thus will you learn not to regard objective results and success as synonymous terms.

THE LATE DR. O'GORMAN.

The Catholic Press of Canada has already given its tribute to the worth of the late Rev. Dr. John J. O'Gorman, whose lamented death occurred when our last issue was at press. "China" begs its readers to remember in their prayers the soul of this deceased priest whose career was a glory to the priesthood in Canada. As pastor of Blessed Sacrament Parish, Ottawa, Dr. O'Gorman did much to aid our mission work. On many occasions his pulpit was gladly offered to make known the needs of China Mission Seminary, and two of his parishioners are now priests in our Chuchow Prefecture. It was due to the good offices of Dr. O'Gorman that the Grey Sisters of the Immaculate Conception were secured for missionary work in Chuchow. Dear to him in life, the Foreign Missions were remembered in his will, and he bequeathed one thousand dollars for the support of Catechists in Chuchow.

THE STORY of WAY SING

WAY SING was his name, a little pagan orphan boy, a pitiful child derelict on China's sea of human misery. In life he was a stranger to childhood's joys. Now he is happy in Heaven.

Eleven years old, his father and mother lost or dead, he had been ekeing out a bare existence by begging from door to door. At night he slept on his bed of straw in an old abandoned temple. This is childhood for many in China today.

This winter was an unusually cold one in this part of China. Snow on the roads, thick ice on the muddy pools. In the mission residence we piled firewood into the little stove to keep Chekiang's penetrating dampness from the marrow of our bones. For let me tell you, because I know, it is worse than Winnipeg's famous dry cold that touches forty below.

But Way Sing never saw a stove. And the cold found him in his temple-shelter, asleep on his bed of straw. He awoke one morning to find both feet frozen solid. Immediate attention would have saved his life. But what did be know of such things! Attention, immediate or otherwise, had never come his way.

He kept on going as best he could. Both feet turned black and still he crawled from door to door. Pagan neighbours took pity on him, collected some Dong Pah (Chinese coppers) and sent him in a rickshaw to the dispensary. It was gangrene, of course. Take a look at the foot in the picture above.

But it was a happy day for Way Sing in spite of his suffering; happy because the charitable, competent care of the Sisters alleviated his pain; happier still in a way he now knows full well. A few days ago he died—a Christian. From that wasted little body that had known no home on earth a white soul sped to its true home in Heaven.

Thus do the Grey Sisters consecrate their young lives to the care of God's abandoned little ones in China. Ten thousand miles from their home in Canada they have found in their Christlike work a happiness which this world can neither give nor take away. "As long as you did it to one of these, my least brethren, you did it to Me."

THINK IT OVER!
You cannot take any of your worldly possessions with you to the grave.

HAVE YOU EVER
thought of the great good you could do for the salvation of souls by leaving some of your possessions to be used for the education of students for the Missionary Priesthood?

HERE'S A TITLE

ST. FRANCIS XAVIER SEMINARY
Scarboro Bluffs, Ont.
for the education of young men for the Chinese Missions.

FROM FATHER MORRISON.

Writing from Sungyang in April, Rev. Vincent Morrison pays a tribute to a fellow-priest recently deceased. He says: "The sad news just came to me of the death of Rev. John B. MacIntyre, at home familiarly called Father John B. He was the Parish Priest of Tracadie and Corran Bay for 20 years. His was a heart of gold in which burned the fire of charity, self-denial and mortification. No one ever went to him in need and came away empty-handed. For the missions he had a special interest and prayed and worked much in their behalf. Personally I owe a great deal to him for all the generous assistance he and his parishoners have given me in my work here in Sungyang."

A NEW CURE FOR BANDITRY

The Headman of Certain Villages Executed.

A business trip through the country regions of considerable parts of Anhui and Shantung reveals interesting facts as to the attitude of the common people of the countless villages of these populous regions.

While newspapers are read rather sparingly in the villages, there is a general idea of what is going on in China, though little realization as to the extent to which every man, woman and child is concerned. For the most part life goes on much as it has for generations, each community knowing little of the others, and not caring very much what happens to China in Manchuria or elsewhere. There is in the large towns, county seats, etc., a degree of realization of the deeper currents that threaten to revolutionize the state and its industries.

Banditry is not so serious as in past months. In the regions of Shantung, visited recently, numerous counties have been visited by soldiers appointed to the task, and on the head men of a given village admitting there was banditry in their region, they were summarily shot. This has led to great care on the part of their successors in all the surrounding villages, for the head men are thus made responsible. In one county seat twenty-one village elders were shot in one day, one of them a woman, and it is strongly suspected that thus some bandits were eliminated as well as a few others who were figure-heads, as far as law and order is concerned.

In west Anhui the communist menace seems to have passed for the present, though the scars of communist wounds will remain for many a generation. In one county a third of the population is reported dead or missing as the result of bandit-communist activities within the past year. Hostages by the hundreds, carried away by the communists, have perished.

The foreigner is seemingly welcomed throughout the regions referred to. Not for a generation has there been the present friendly attitude—certainly not to this extent. There seems to be the disposition to "Prove all things, and hold fast that which is good". Yet there is a difference as compared with three decades ago, when there was a surface politeness, and the foreigner was treated as a guest, while the present-day attitude is more discerning, and the visitor from abroad is valued at what he is and what he represents. Whether merchant or missionary, if he plays the game with his fellow men, he will find a satisfactory niche, and fellowship and friendship follow to the profit of both sides.—(Shanghai paper.)

There is an important message for you on page 83. Read it.

MURDERERS PUNISHED.

Shiuchow.—The bandit leaders who murdered Bishop Versiglia and Father Caravario while on a mission journey three years ago, have at last been apprehended and executed.—(Fides.)

"LET'S GO PLACES."

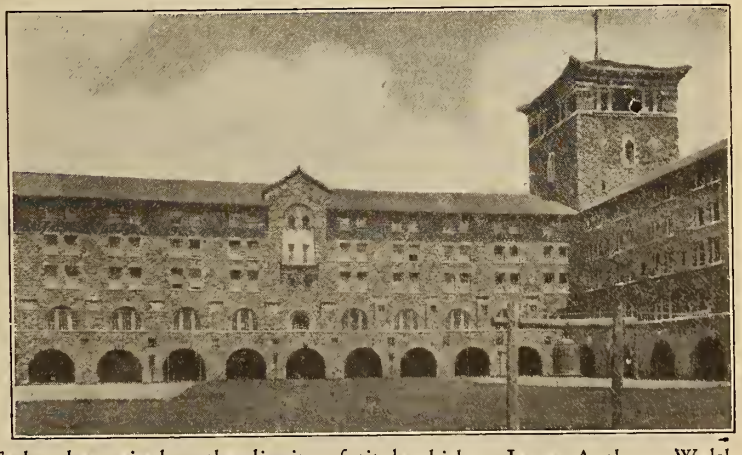
for the lauda, but not so for the passenger, cramped up as he is with nothing to do but listen to the rain as it bounces off the bamboo roofing. The boatman doesn't understand your impatience to be going, and to you the storm doesn't seem to be sufficient excuse to be idle. As a rule, rain alone will not stop him, but when the river is running high and the wind is brisk he does not like to move. Flat-bottomed boats have a weakness for tipping over.

Thus the missionary in Chuchow travels by boat from place to place. Oftentimes, with favourable weather, a journey is not too unpleasant, and the country is a bit attractive in some places. After several days "on board" one is glad to do a little "cross-country" hiking. And there is a bit of variety that adds the necessary "spice" to life.

POPE TO CONSECRATE FIVE BISHOPS.



The Holy Father will consecrate five new Bishops, natives of mission lands, on June 11th. Three of them are Chinese, one Indian, and one Indo-Chinese.

It is expected that four Chinese Bishops will be in Rome to make the Holy Year visits and assist at the Consecration. They will be accompanied by Bishop Renault, of Suifu, Szechwan, a part of whose territory has been assigned to one of the new prelates, Bishop-elect Ly, whose mother was killed during the Boxer Uprising in 1900, and her name is among the martyrs proposed for beatification.

POPE HONORS FOREIGN MISSION LEADER IN U.S.

Bishop-Elect Walsh, who is to be consecrated in Rome, June 29th, by Cardinal Fumasoni-Biondi.

A portion of the Maryknoll Seminary Cloister.

The Holy Father has raised to the dignity of titular bishop James Anthony Walsh, founder and Superior General of the Maryknoll Missionaries. The honor conferred on Father Walsh has been prompted by his notable activities over a period of 30 years towards promoting the foreign mission movement in America, now arrived at such important proportions. "China" extends heartiest felicitations to Maryknoll's new bishop.

LITTLE FLOWER'S ROSE GARDEN

Edited by FATHER JIM

CONDITIONS OF MEMBERSHIP

The only conditions of membership in the Rose Garden are: (1) To say every day the Prayer for the Conversion of China; (2) To go to Holy Communion once a month for the Intention of Missionary Vocations. Certificates and pins will be sent to all members.

Dear Boys and Girls:—

I want to tell the members of our Rose Garden how very much I appreciate all they have done during the past year to help the Missions by their prayers and their self-sacrifice. I think it is a splendid thing for thousands of young boys and girls to be linked together under the patronage of the Little Flower, Patroness of Missionaries, in such a great enterprise. I pray that God may bless you all—always. To our little missionaries I wish the fullest measure of success in Examinations, and I hope vacation for all of you will be very pleasant. Keep up your fine mission work during the summer, and don't forget that Father Jim will be on duty all the time and anxious to get your letters as usual. FATHER JIM.

Margaret Mary Nolan, Souris, P.E.I., seems to have a way to attract pen pals. Just 14 on her list the last time I heard from her.

Regina has a little lamb, and Audrey has a big doll, and our Rose Garden has two very happy looking "Buds" whose names are Regina Campbell, Riverville, N.S., and Audrey Byrne, St. Gregory's School, Oshawa. Perhaps there are other members of our Club who have interesting snaps of themselves for our column.

AID FOR MISSIONARIES.

Listed below are just a few of the many Spiritual Bouquets that have come from members of our Rose Garden to help our Chuchow Missionaries save souls in China. They are from Form 1C, St. Joseph's High School, Toronto; Buds at Loretto Convent, Coleraine, Ireland; Girls of Grade 6, Mt. Carmel School, New Waterford, N.S.; and Pupils of Room 9, St. Rita's School, Toronto.

FATHER JIM'S MAILBOX.

"We have read the interesting articles in 'China', and have decided to help the Chinese Missions by sending this spiritual Bouquet. In our mite-box we have collected $6.00, which you will find enclosed." Pupils of Room 9, St. Rita's School, Toronto.

Kathleen Leonard has been doing some effective missionary work amongst the pupils at Loretto Convent, Coleraine, Ireland, and has secured 23 new members for us. Thanks, Kathleen!

Helen McHale sent me names of 39 girls in Form 1C at St. Joseph's High School in Toronto. Welcome amongst us are those young ladies. The Entrance Class at the same school sent five dollars for the ransom of a Chinese baby, Lillian Yolande.

"We are enclosing a letter to be sent to Father McNabb in China, and for the Missions we are sending the contents of our mite-box." Leo MacMillan, Sacred Heart School, Ingersoll, Ont.

Betty Cummings and Ray Devins were introduced to us when 51 new members joined our Club at Holy Name School, Toronto.

"We receive 'China' in our school, and it has inspired us to help the Missions. We are sending you the contents of our mite-box, and glad we are to have the opportunity to help in the great work among the heathens in China." Myrtle Fagan, 13, Jr. IV. Class, St. John's School, Perth, Ont.

Betty Ronan, for Grade 7 and 8, and Gertrude MacDonald, for Grades 5 and 6, Mt. St. Bernard's College, Antigonish, N.S., wrote nice letters to ask membership in our Garden. In each letter was five dollars for the MacPherson Burse. Well done, Mt. St. Bernard's!

Kathleen Martin, writing for the Buds at Holy Cross School, Lafontaine, Ont., says: "We are sending five dollars for a Chinese baby whose name is to be Loretto Rose. We raised the funds by bringing eggs to school and selling them. We are sending you a few eggs to sample." That's what I call good business, Buds, and I was tickled to get the package of "eggs". At first I suspected a plot on my life, but the "insides" of those eggs looked like good candy on further examination. And the drawings on the egg-shells were real works of art. I'm all for a boost in the egg-market after this!

R. I. P.

In December, 1929, Phyllis M. Harrington became a member of our Rose Garden. On May 2nd, 1933, she died in the Hotel Dieu Hospital in Kingston, where she had been preparing to be a nurse. She was 18 years old. A convert, she had a very special devotion to the Little Flower, and was a very active member of our Club. A letter from her companion in Ottawa, Frances O'Malley, told of the death of Phyllis, and I want all the Buds to say a prayer for the soul of our deceased friend. May the Sacred Heart of Jesus have mercy on her soul.

Keenly interested in the "Rose Garden" are those boys and girls of Grades III and IV, St. Rose School, Fairville, N.B.

FROM THE WEST.

From one of our older members out West came a very beautiful letter, part of which I give you: "Two years ago to-day I received my badge and certificate, and now I have something nice to tell you. I am going to join the Sisters of the Immaculate Conception, and it is my earnest hope to be sent some day to the foreign missions. Through reading 'China' I first became interested in the missions, and if God gives me perseverance in the vocation I have chosen I shall have a great deal for which to thank your lovely little magazine. . . . I wish to thank the 'Gardener' and the 'Buds' for the prayers they have said which may have had a share in directing my vocation. I hope to share still in all your prayers, although no longer able to take an active part in the doings of your beautiful Club." Father Jim has been very pleased on many occasions to get nice letters from Buds telling of their plans to enter the Convent. As Sisters I know those members will often remember one of the great objects of our Rose Garden, namely, to pray for mission vocations, and later on in their work as teachers they will carry their mission enthusiasm into the classroom and do much for the work so dear to us all.

GLACE BAY, N.S.

"Yesterday (May 17) was the anniversary of the canonization of our Patroness, St. Therese. I know she is pleased with you and your lovely Rose Garden. How glad I am that I joined it. It is good to see so many boys members, too, and the Little Flower must be glad to have all those boys and girls praying so much for the Missions." Part of a letter from Mary Molloy, 11 Water St., Glace Bay, N.S. Mary thinks Father Jim has "black curly hair, blue eyes, and a well-shaped head and face, height about 6 feet." My hair did curl a bit, and my eyes went black, and my face nearly dropped six feet when I noticed the punctuation between "face" and "height". If "descriptions" keep coming in perhaps the only way out is to publish that eagerly-awaited "full view".

SUDBURY SCORES AGAIN!

I have had occasion to mention Sudbury buds so often lately that some will think Sudbury is "my old home town". Well, I guess I would feel pretty much at home among so many young friends up there if I ever decide to go for a good hike. However, here's a letter I want the other buds to see; it is from Beulah Fluvian, St. Aloysius' School. "Dear Father Jim: Here's a letter from your little willing helpers over here in Sudbury. We enjoy your letters very much and look forward to them eagerly. In our last letter we told you we would try to send a dollar for the missions. We, the Senior Third Class of St. Aloysius' School, have succeeded in our intention, and we also send you a spiritual bouquet to help save some of the many souls in China. We are trying very hard to keep up the good work of the Little Flower's Rose Garden, and with the grace of God we will succeed in doing much good. With best wishes to all the buds from your members in Sudbury, I am, etc."

"UP IN THE AIR."

Our younger readers will be glad to know that another of our Missionaries has written some nice things to me in appreciation of the work they are doing as members of the "Rose Garden". Part of a letter from Father Morrison, Sungyang, has this:

"Solicit the prayers of your little 'Buds of the Rose Garden' for our Sungyang Christians that they may be strong in the Faith, and for our catechumens (those preparing for Baptism) that they may persevere in their good resolves, and for our pagans too, that they may be well-disposed towards the priests and the Church.

"Perhaps the young boys may like to know that here in China there is a good deal of kite-flying takes place. As I look out now I see on the hills a great number of kites of all shapes and sizes. This is the season for them here, and many people get great fun out of it. Some of their kites have to be managed by three or four men because of their size. They go in for fancy shapes, too, principally 'dragon' and 'butterfly'. It is the custom not to fly kites after the Festival of Ching Ming. That's the day on which the Chinese especially honor their dead, visiting their graves and decorating and repairing them. When the family plot is in perfect order offerings of meat and wine are made to the spirits of the dead. There is an interesting superstition behind the custom of stopping kite-flying on Ching Ming Day. At New Year the Chinese beg for Wealth, Success, and Happiness, the three felicities. If these do not come to them by Ching Ming time they place all their cares and troubles on a kite and send it flying skyward. Then they cut the string, showing that they let all bad luck and troubles go to the four winds. But if the kite should later fall on the roof of some house all the bad luck of the flyer will be transmitted to the unlucky owner of that house."

We are very pleased to introduce to our Buds the quartet pictured above. Left to right: William Howes, Bernard and Joseph Everard, and Wilfred Lewis

NONSENSE

"How did Brown's wedding go off?"
"Fine, until the parson asked the bride if she'd obey her husband."
"What happened then?"
"She replied, 'Do you think I'm silly?' and the groom in a sort of daze, replied: 'I do'."

"Take his number," whispered the bystander. "You can get damages for being knocked down by a motor-car."
"Damages! Haven't I got enough to go on with?"

The dear old lady stood on the cliff watching the flashing beacon on the lighthouse.
"How very patient those sailors are!" she exclaimed. "The wind has blown out that light a dozen times at least, and they still keep on lighting it again."

Policeman: "What are you standing here for?"
Loafer: "Nothin'."
Policeman: "Well, just move on. If everyone stood in one place, how would the rest get past?"

Irritable husband (to wife driving a nail): "However do you expect to knock a nail in the wall with a clothes brush? For goodness sake use your head, dear!"

A judge asked a Negro in court if he wanted a lawyer.
"No, suh, I don't want no lawyer, but I suttinly could use a couple of good witnesses."

"How's the boy doing at school?"
"Oh, he's playing half-back," replied the proud parent.
"Good; how about his studies?"
"Ah—still farther back I'm afraid."

Politician: "Congratulate me, dear; I was elected."
His wife: "Honestly?"
Politician: "Why bring that up?"

At a fancy-dress dance for children a policeman stationed at the door was instructed not to admit any adult. An excited woman came running up to the door and demanded admission.
"I'm sorry, ma'am," replied the policeman, "but I can't let anyone in but children."
"But my child is in there as a butterfly," exclaimed the woman, "and has forgotten her wings!"
"Can't help it," replied the policeman; "orders is orders. You'll have to let her represent a caterpillar!"

"I tell you, gentlemen," said the man on the soap box, "if you want a thing well done, you must do it yourself."
"What about getting your hair cut?" shouted an interrupter.
"I'm giving you the bald facts," went on the orator, unperturbed.

"No, your Honor," said the prisoner. "I was certainly not drunk, though I may have been intoxicated."
"Well," said the Magistrate, "I intended to fine you twenty shillings, but in view of your explanation I make it a pound."—Irish Times.

"And how many pigs have you, Mr. O'Reilly?"
"Bedad, an' it's wishin' I am I could be tellin' ye. I've counted iv'ry one o' them except a frisky little spalpeen that just runs around an' won't be counted!"

A postmaster noticed a grim-faced Scotsman tugging energetically at the stamp machine outside the post-office.
"Anything wrong?" he asked the perspiring man.
"Wrong?" echoed the breathless Scott. "I should think there is. I've just put a penny in this machine, and four stamps came out." He again turned to the machine and gave it a violent push.
"But that's to your advantage," said the puzzled postmaster.
"Yes; but look ye here," said the Scot. "I've now gone and put another penny in, ye ken, and naething's come oot. The thing's a swindle."

Smith, wearing a very loud plus-four suit, was indulging in a country walk.
Approaching an old man in a village, he asked. "What are the chief sights round here?"
Looking his questioner up and down, the old man replied: "The visitors, sir."

"Dearest Annabelle," wrote Oswald, who was hopelessly in love. "I would swim the mighty ocean for one glance from your dear eyes. I would walk through a wall of flames for one touch of your little hands, I would leap the widest stream for a word from your lovely lips. As always—Your Oswald.
"P.S.—I'll be over on Saturday night if it doesn't rain."

First Business Man: "I've got a pretty good office boy now, but the little beggar will whistle while he works."
Second Ditto: "You're lucky; mine only whistles."

In a small town in the South there was a lad who had the reputation of not being very bright. People there had fun with him several times a day by placing a dime and a nickel on the open palm of his hand and telling him to take his pick of the two. In each case the lad would pick the nickel, and then the crowd would laugh and guffaw.
A kind-hearted woman asked him one day: "Don't you know the difference between a dime and a nickel? Don't you know the dime, though smaller, is worth more?"
"Sure I know it," he answered, "but they wouldn't try me out on it any more if I ever took the dime."—Penn. Punch Bowl.

"Did you ever hear anything so perfectly wonderful?" exclaimed the daughter of the house, as the gramophone ground out the last notes of the latest thing in jazz.
"No," replied the father. "I can't say I have, although I once heard a collision between a truckload of empty milk cans and a freight car filled with live ducks."

Mrs. O'Reilly: "An' what are ye going to name the baby?"
Mrs. Mulcahey: "We'll name her Hazel."
Mrs. O'Reilly: "What! With twenty-five saints to choose from, ye name her after a nut?"

In a Philadelphia family recently, the engagement of a daughter was announced. A friend, calling, was met at the door by the colored maid, who announced: "No'm, Miss Alice ain't home dis aft'noon; she gone down to de class."
"What class?" inquired the visitor.
"You know, Miss Alice is gwine to be ma'ied in de fall," explained the maid, "an' she's taking a course in domestic silence."

Vicar: "I noticed your husband went out in the middle of the service this morning, Mrs. Breen. Isn't he very well?"
Mrs. Breen: "He's ageing, sir; that's what it is. He's started walking in his sleep now."

A nervous old lady was buying a portable wireless set.
"Now do you definitely assure me," she asked, looking anxiously at the instrument. "that I shan't get a shock?"
"Madam," said the assistant impressively, "I do definitely assure you that you won't get a shock—until you hear some of the programs."

CHINA MISSION BURSES

TO EDUCATE PRIESTS FOR CHINA

A BURSE is a sum of $5,000 (FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS) which, being securely invested, produces sufficient revenue to educate a student for the missionary priesthood. The capital is not touched, but remains intact. The Seminary would have the use of the ANNUAL INTEREST from each FIVE THOUSAND DOLLAR FUND to educate young men for the priesthood in PERPETUITY.

SEVERAL of the Burses already completed have been outright gifts from individuals, but the others have been built up over a period of years by the large and small offerings of our faithful friends. We invite contributions to any of the Incomplete Burses listed on this page. Even the smallest offering will move some Burse nearer to completion, and we certainly have need of such help now. We could never finance the education of all our students on the interest of our Burses as they now stand.

THOSE blessed with an abundance of this world's goods could spend to no better advantage than by becoming the Founder of a Burse for China Mission Seminary. It would be absolutely the most worthwhile monument to leave behind to your memory.

\+ +

YOUR DONATION for our BURSE FUND may be sent either to the Seminary or in care of the "Catholic Record", London, Ont.

Following are totals as on April 30th, 1933, including receipts by "Catholic Record" and China Mission Seminary combined:

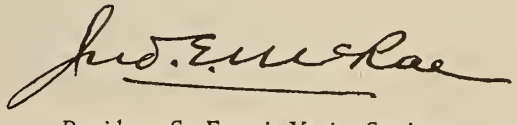
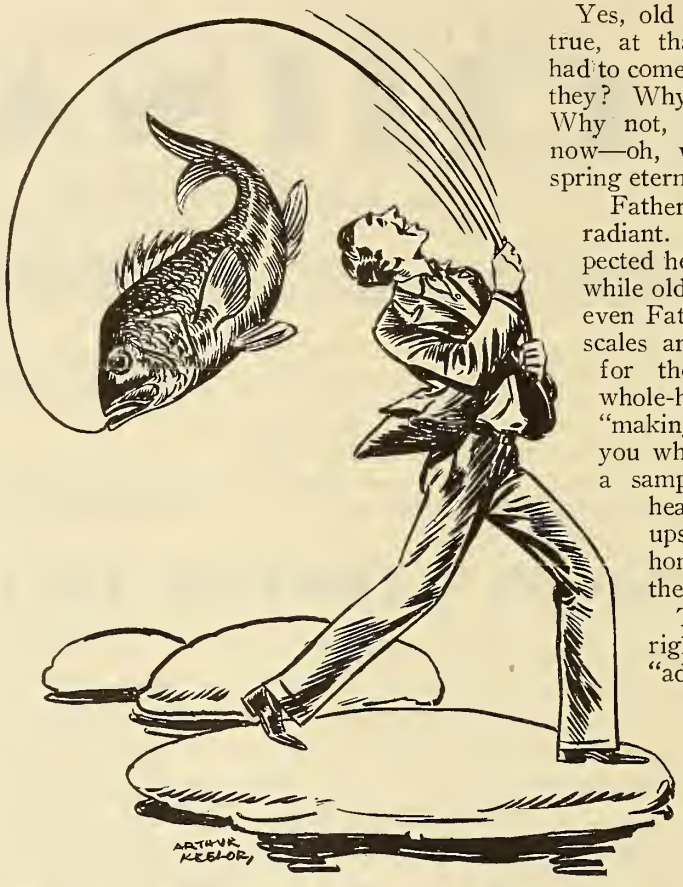
SIMPLY FORCED TO IT

FOR several years China Mission Seminary has been carrying on its work under conditions that would be tolerated by hardly any other institution. The number of students has increased away beyond the capacity of the house. Rooms built for one person have had to accommodate two, and the chapel and refectory have been much overcrowded. Even the lecture hall was sacrificed to provide more rooms for students.



This year a greater number of young men than ever applied for admission. What could we do? We had two alternatives. We must either add to our accommodations or else refuse worthy applicants and lose potential priests for the great work of the conversion of China.

We were on the point of taking the latter course, in fact had almost done so, but realizing the serious consequences of this course of action, and sensing in it a want of trust in Him who said "It is I, fear not" and "O ye of little faith", and, in addition to this, remembering that our work has progressed so very successfully and grown so fast as to point out the hand of God in it, we simply could not bring ourselves to turn down applicants.



We have been forced to our decision to build a modest addition to our Seminary. It will give us twenty additional rooms and a lecture hall as well as increased accommodations in our chapel and refectory. The cost will be in the neighbourhood of twenty-five thousand dollars ($25,000), a sum considerably lower than anyone had thought possible.

On other occasions we have been in dire distress, but help always arrived, and we are confident it will come now also. We are not in debt because, providentially, funds sufficient to carry on, but barely sufficient, have come to us. Our friends must have a part in this new undertaking, and by so doing they will assist us in carrying on what is, after all, the great work of the Church and the strict duty of every individual Catholic: not alone preserving the Faith but spreading it to those who know not its blessings.

The world and its attractions consume far more means than would be sufficient to build many seminaries. Are you using your resources for merely worldly purposes? Why not give a little thought to the question of the meritorious value of your use of God's material blessings? Why not now lay up some treasure in Heaven that will not rust, that moths will not consume? Here, then, is a splendid opportunity at hand in these days when God, eternity, souls, and the only interests that count for anything are all but forgotten.

President, St. Francis Xavier Seminary.

Let's Go Fishin'!

By "Observer"

Missionaries are, after all, very human, and when they get together on a "day off" they have lots of fun. Even if you're not a member of the "rod and line" fraternity you'll enjoy the humor of this story by "Observer."

* * * * * *

"OH, yes, Jaw Kung, plenty of fish in the river, alright, but THE BIG ONES ALWAYS GET AWAY."

"Jaw Kung" is Father McGillivray. The speaker is our old catechist. And if one touch of nature can make the whole world kin that benevolent old gentleman seemed then and there like a long-lost brother.

THE BIG ONES ALWAYS GET AWAY! And this is China! Was he really a prosaic old Chinese catechist or a fisherman from the Restigouche or the Margaree or points East down to Salmonier, Nfld.? Had he been reading wiscracks somewhere? Surely he was trying to be funny this morning, uttering that hoary old anglers' alibi.

But no! Not a bit of it! He is as solemn as an owl. What he says may be funny, but it is certainly lost on himself. BIG ONES! Let him try to tell us something about big ones! What about those 10, 15, 20, 30, 40—oh, alright! — those 7 and 8 pound salmon that we, personally, had seen give a last dying splurge for freedom just as the landing net was about to close over their gills?

But old Wong the catechist is as matter-of-fact as a judge. He just wants to tell us that there are monster fish somewhere in that river that flows by our door, but that to date all efforts to land the big fellows have failed ever since small boy Confucius toted his first little "can" of worms.

"And how big, Mr. Wong?"

"Oh, isseh dengeh (this long)". He stretched his arms wide. About 40 lbs., we figured.

"And why can't they catch them?"

"Oh, it isn't so easy. They're too dee-aw-be (sly). The foreigners, perhaps, might know a way." He was being polite now.

The foreigners, as a matter of fact, did know a way. But first show us the fish. Big forty pounders! Can't you see them? Down in the clear cool depths, heading lazily upstream, lying quiet in the shade of a bamboo grove! On either side the towering mountains of Chekiang. A preposterous setting — for any self-respecting fish!

At that, it may be true. In Hangchow, in the "Sacred Pool", we had seen hundreds and hundreds of big fish. They were in a railed enclosure about 40 by 60 and five feet deep. What they were no Western fisherman could ever hope to tell. They were green, blue, yellow, black and white varieties, and they ranged from three to fifty pounds, that's sure. An attendant was feeding them something that looked like soggy bread, and they were so tame that they came right to the surface to eat out of his hand—almost. And if you think that's just a Chinese fish-story ask anybody who has ever visited any of the numerous sacred pools in China or Japan.

Yes, old Wong's story might be true, at that! These big fellows had to come from somewhere, didn't they? Why not the Chuchow river? Why not, indeed! Perhaps even now—oh, well, doesn't hope ever spring eternal in the angler's breast?

Father McNabb's eyes were radiant. First time we ever suspected he was a fisherman. And while old Wong unfolded his tale even Father Venadam forgot his scales and modes and quilismas for the nonce. He entered whole-heartedly into the idea of "making a day of it". "I'll tell you what we'll do, boys. Hire a sampan, take a lunch, and head about ten or fifteen li upstream. We can come home easily enough with the current."

The old catechist entered right into the spirit of the "adventure". By this time he had produced his own fishing tackle and sorry looking stuff it was. Two tiny hooks made downtown by the village blacksmith; a plain bamboo rod same as those that grow right in our backyard, and about ten feet of thin aenemic looking line. It didn't help his story at all. Surely he had never tried to land an honest-to-goodness fish with that dismal outfit! Alas for home sweet home and rods and reels and casts and lines lying now abandoned in attic trunks! We could have shown the old boy a thing or two if only we had brought that gear along.

"Use a little flour dough for bait," he was saying, "or some fresh green cabbage. Tsay tse ting haw (the cabbage is the cat's whiskers)". Flour! Cabbage! So the fish in China are crazy, too! "But remember," he added, "it isn't easy to catch the big ones in the river. If you really want to be sure of some good fishing I know a place just over the hill there"—he was pointing to the mountain across the river.

Ah! So that was it! He knew a place! Perhaps that old gag was Chinese, too. Just because we had heard it at home wherever we had cast a line certainly didn't prove that it wasn't invented in China, about the same time as gunpowder or the mother-in-law joke. He knew a place. Yes, of course! They all do until you get there.

That night a boatman arrived at the Mission residence to bargain for the hire of his boat and his own services for a day. He wanted about six times the usual amount at first but Father Kam came to the rescue and a fair price was agreed upon. We were to embark next morning at the "Little Water Gate".

PART TWO.

If I were you I wouldn't read any further. We have a splendid joke page this month. New readers may BEGIN here. No, suppose we all begin here. Forget all about the first part and then you won't be looking for fish, and the story won't be such an awful flop. That's it! Let's make it a nice quiet little story about a day's outing on the Chuchow River. Just the highlights! Who wants fish?

1. Stopped about five li upstream at a beauty spot on shore. Took more pictures than Fr. Editor can publish. One of the party, a Father McNabb, says something about trying for fish. No harm to try, we suppose, but whoever heard of fish in this river (that'll fool you).

2. Father McNabb baits hook with some dough he found wrapped in a cabbage leaf on board (however that got there). Father Venadam declares that only a sucker would fall for that stuff. Fr. McNabb now changes bait, using piece of cabbage leaf. Results: the same.

3. All kinds of rafts passing downstream. Many from Shiao May, in Father Stringer's parish about 200 li distant. It takes a wood-cutting gang about a year from the time they wield the axe till they have rafted and marketed their wood downstream. But that's nothing. There are places in Africa where it takes seven years for a raft of wood to reach its destination. Fish not biting—yet.

4. Many wild ducks! Several have been "fishing" (don't be funny) in a rapids nearby, and one of them is unable to fly as a raft comes near, even though there is a slight wind. Fr. McNabb wants to know don't ducks eat fish. "I'm coming back to that place some day", he says. Fr. Venadam is now offering a dollar apiece (Mex.) for every fish in the river, alive or dead. The boatman's little boy jumps into shallow water to chase the duck which is still "battering" but unable to get to wing. However, he can dive and does.

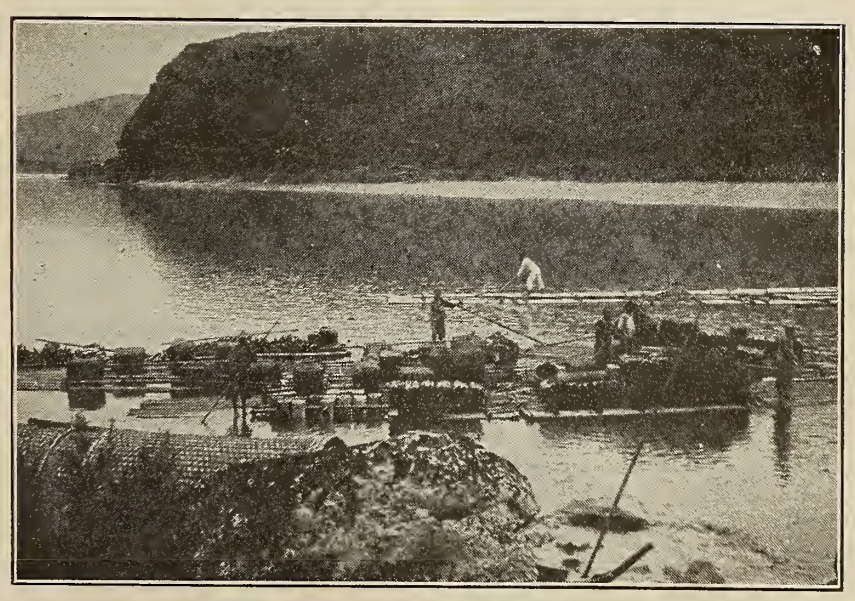
5. There are thousands of ducks all along this river. And, if you get a permit, you can have a gun made to order at the blacksmith's (where the hooks were made). "What hooks?" you ask. (Send stamped, self-addressed envelope. On no account read first part of this story now). The boatman tells us that the gun will cost three dollars. It will be a muzzle-loading blunderbus, and we don't know whether they use gun-caps or the old touch-hole system. The local boys, however, very occasionally do bring a wild bird to the Mission for sale.

6. The boatman is now lighting the fire to cook his rice. We have some real coffee and a few extras provided by the good Sisters. "This is the life" is the general feeling. "Where's Father McNab?" . . . . "Out on that rock, fishing" . . . . "Tell him to come and git it before we throws it out." He says wait a minute because the bobber sank once and it was a fish and "a nice one, too". Must have been a big one because he GOT AWAY.

7. Well, it's a nice restful day, anyhow, after the two months rainy season just passed and before the summer heat which is "just around the corner". The new men will be receiving their "assignments" soon, perhaps to the far away mission outposts, and then we may see each other once a year or perhaps once in two years. So let's make the most of our little day. There will be new men coming all the time now from the Seminary at Scarboro Bluffs. A kind of clearing station, isn't it, our Mission Headquarters over here! Of course, they're all anxious to get right up on the front lines. They're ready to a man for whatever the future may have to bring, and happy about it. We wish you could see how happy they really are.

Oh, I guess we've said enough. "Jaw Kung, come here. Take the 'mike'! A word to your vast 'C H I N A' audience before we finish."

Jaw Kung: "Well, folks, Nova Scotia can beat this place for fishing but we're going to have better luck next time. And wait till we get over the mountains where the real fish come from. I trust, kind friends,——"



"Sez you! Sez you!"

"Pardon me, ladies and gentlemen, that remark came from Father Venadam."

CURE FOR OPIUM ADDICTS.

Ichang—Increased opium smoking in the Upper Yangtze Valley has prompted Bishop Gubbels of the Belgian Franciscans to institute a cure to save Christian victims. The missionary in charge reports a first success with seven.

The method consists in persuading the men to accept voluntary confinement with almost complete deprivation of the drug from the beginning. During the first days of cruel suffering the missionary gave the victims what in substance was a spiritual retreat, appealing to religious motives to fortify their constancy. Once the desire was lost the men were freed under supervision and now are declared permanently cured.—(Fides.)

"Our transportation system is the best and cheapest. Send your freight via the raft route." That might do for a slogan along the Chuchow River, where scenes like this are familiar. No danger of high-powered trucks cutting in on this Chinese baggage-transfer business.

HERE COMES THE BRIDE!

CHINESE believe that certain days are lucky ones for weddings; on such days we may meet two or three processions on our way to school and hear the music of others in the distance. Gay music takes the place of wedding bells in China. Generally eight musicians, and the number may be increased indefinitely, play small wind instruments which look something like flutes.

Following the musicians come four sedan chairs. The first two are occupied by male relatives of the groom, the third by the groom, usually a boy under twenty. The last chair is larger than the others and is more gayly decorated with red paper flowers, and red and green silk streamers. This chair is borne by four coolies, the others by two. On the way to the home of the bride this chair is occupied by a small boy. This, you see, is intended as a good omen—it insures the arrival of a first-born son. All in the procession wear large red paper flowers.

One cannot mistake the home of a bridal pair. The front gates of both the bride's and the groom's house are decorated with large red lattice-work arches and paper flowers, in the midst of which is the Chinese character for "happiness." I have always come upon the scene just too late to see the groom enter the home of the bride, but I have been told that at first the gate is closed upon him.

After the groom alights from his sedan chair a fire is built around that of the bride and the groom walks around this fire three times; all this is done to test the patience of the groom. When at length the portals are thrown open two women relatives of the bride conduct the groom to a bountiful repast, but alas! the groom must forego the pleasure of eating or drinking anything; this, no doubt, is a test of his temperance in eating and drinking. Finally, he is taken into the presence of the bride and her parents. He kowtows, that is, he kneels down and touches his head three times to the ground. After this ceremony, the bride leaves the parental roof-tree, and her future intercourse with the members of her own family depends upon the disposition and favor of her mother-in-law.

When the bridal procession arrives at the home of the groom, the gates again are closed. The delay, this time, is to test the bride's patience. When this has been proved, the gates are opened and the soon-to-be-married couple enter the courtyard; here the bride's apartments are decorated, but those of her mother-in-law are decorated more elaborately. It is to the mother-in-law's door that the pair are led. In the parental presence they kowtow three times and then profoundly worship the heavens and the earth. This last ceremony ties the matrimonial knot forever. After this, however, the bride's patience is put to some severe tests.

The perfect wife is one who does not so much as wink an eyelash when all manner of uncomplimentary remarks are hurled at her. Not until this persecution is ended is the wedding repast forthcoming. On the following day the newly married pair return for a formal visit to the home of the bride. According to Chinese etiquette the parents of the bride do not witness the wedding ceremony.

On the day preceding the ceremony the groom sends gifts to the bride. These are sent in a procession, too; the length of the procession depends upon the groom's vanity and the size of his purse. I have seen some processions, more than a block long, composed of men carrying the gift trays.

A very unusual procession passed our gate the other day. The principle personage was a young woman whose betrothed had died before the consummation of the nuptials. She was leaving her own home to enter that of the mother-in-law. A herald went before her bearing a large placard on which was written the history of the case. It was because of her fidelity to the memory of the dead and of her determination never to marry that this public honor was accorded her. Rumor states that at her death a monument will be erected to commemorate her deed.

OVERSEAS CHINESE HIT BY DEPRESSION.

Nanking. — Chinese residents abroad have been hard hit by the world depression which has thrown tens of thousands out of employment, according to reports to the Central Overseas Affairs Committee. In the course of 1932, 283,890 Chinese, of both sexes, returned to China.

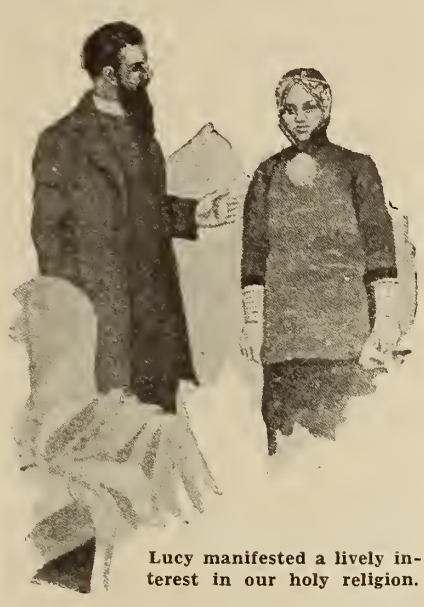
It is understood that the Malay archipelago suffered most owing to the slump in the rubber and tin industries in the Straits and in the Netherlands East Indies. The decline in the price of rice also affected Chinese millers in Siam.

In view of such conditions, the Committee has been holding meetings to devise measures for the relief of overseas compatriots.—Kuo Min.

The costume is a regular knockout, but this "bride" is a boy cleverly impersonating in a Chinese drama.

To the Westerner, a Chinese wedding procession is a strange affair; nevertheless, it serves to call attention to the fact that the educated Chinese has made the Liki or Book of Chinese etiquette an integral part of his daily life.—Sister Carmel, in the "Bugle Call".

Lucy Wong's Conversion



By a Missionary in Loshan, China

THE conversion of Lucy Wong is one of the most remarkable which has come to my notice since the time I first came to China, ten-odd years ago.

Lucy's family is the next-door neighbor to our mission in Loshan. Her father is a fervent pagan of the old school. He ardently believes in all the old superstitions which have proved such a hindrance to the spread of our holy Faith in China. It happened that a son of his died shortly after we had begun laying the foundation of our Church. He attributed this misfortune to the displeasure of the earth spirits, who had been disturbed by our excavations. Thenceforward Mr. Wong has shown himself extremely suspicious, not to say openly hostile, towards the Christian religion. Lucy's brothers, having been educated along modern lines, are pagans of the new school; that is to say, outspoken atheists and avowed foes of the Christian religion.

In spite of these unauspicious connections, Lucy manifested a lively interest in our holy religion from the time when our mission was first established in Loshan. A year ago, when we opened our girls' school, Lucy was among the first to enroll as a pupil. She had never attended school before, although she had already reached the age of 22 years. Among the various subjects taught in school, catechism and bible history became her favorite branches. Her progress in these subjects was remarkable.

Daily, Lucy arose at half-past five in order to attend the early Mass. It frequently happened that on Sundays after attending late Mass, upon returning to her home, Lucy found that the family breakfast was over and that nothing, warm or cold, had been kept for her. On such an occasion, should she ask for any food, her mother would jeeringly tell her to satisfy her appetite by saying more "foreign prayers". Moreover, the girl was daily subjected to petty persecutions on the part of her relatives. She who had formerly been the pet of the family, on account of her gentle ways and sweet temperament, now became the laughing-stock of all the members of her family. Lucy endured all this without murmur. She daily prayed for those who persecuted her. Everything was done to dissuade her from her decision to become a Christian, but on this point the gentle girl showed herself adamant.

When, previous to the feast of St. Joseph, we opened the catechumenate in Loshan, fully a hundred catechumens enrolled in the class of those preparing for baptism. Lucy was of their number. I was edified and inspired in observing the eagerness which she manifested in listening to the catechetical instructions. Whenever I questioned her on any point of doctrine which had been previously explained, her answer unfailingly proved most satisfactory.

When the day fixed for the baptism of the catechumens approached, I thought it advisable to examine each of them separately in order to find out whether they were sufficiently prepared and realized the great consequences of the Sacrament which they were about to receive. When it came Lucy's turn, I asked her whether she had her father's consent to be baptized. She frankly replied that she had not. I then asked her: "Do you wish to be baptized, nevertheless?"

"Yes, Father," she replied; "I am of age, and the law of China allows me my freedom in the choice of my religion."

"Do you realize that your father may disinherit you and expel you from your home if you refuse to obey him in this matter?"

"Yes, Father," she answered, "he may do that; but then the good God and our Blessed Mother would take care of me. Perhaps, later on, the Sisters would admit me to their community, and I should like nothing better than to spend my whole life in spreading our holy religion."

"Very well, then," I said, "since these are your dispositions, you may be baptized. May our Blessed Mother protect you."

To my great disappointment, on the morning fixed for the baptism of the catechumens, Lucy did not appear with the rest of them. As soon as the ceremony was completed, I inquired into the cause of her absence and was grieved to learn that she had become seriously ill on the preceding evening. It soon became evident that she had contracted typhus, and her condition grew rapidly critical.

As Lucy had her sleeping quarters in a little dormitory adjoining our girls' school, as soon as she became ill her mother came to the school and made arrangements to have her daughter carried home. To her great surprise and displeasure, however, Lucy most obstinately refused to leave the school. Repeatedly the girl's mother and other relatives returned to the charge. They coaxed, reproached, and scolded her, all to no purpose. Even with her impaired consciousness Lucy realized that as soon as she returned to her pagan home, her chance of receiving baptism would be gone. For that reason alone she refused to leave our school.

Finally, when it had become apparent that the sick girl's prospects of recovery were very slight, her mother came and announced her intention of having her daughter carried home without further delay, in spite of the latter's opposition. As soon as Lucy's mother departed in order to bring the stretcher carriers to the school, Lucy's teacher quickly notified me of these arrangements. Having procured a bottle of baptismal water, I hastened to the sick girl's bedside and found that, although her mind had been wandering throughout the night, by the

A MISSIO

REV. DESM

THIS letter to you all will, I think, be the most unique piece of literature you ever read. I am what we call "making the mission". That is, since becoming parish priest of Lungchuan, the duty devolves upon me of seeing to our outlying chapels. I have for company Fr. Serra, our Spanish priest, who has had seven years' experience. It is extremely fortunate for me that I have his help on this trip as you will see in the course of this narrative. So pull up your chair and "listen in".

March 2nd.

We left Lungchuan this morning at nine a.m., just two hours too late. We had planned on reaching Shao Mei in one day, a distance of ninety "li" or thirty miles, but our tardy starting out prevented us from reaching our objective. It rained practically the whole day, sometimes quite heavily, but my big Chinese umbrella kept me dry. We stopped at a wayside inn for dinner which consisted, for me, of a bowl of rice, some pork that must have died a long while ago, and some wine that tasted like rotten apples. We hit the trail again and evening brought us to Tso Tien, a place where a Christian family lived in an extra large house. We had thought to stay here for the night but our welcome was so frigid that we lost very little time in making other arrangments. These people once were good Christians, but now—quien sabe?

The father went haywire about eight years before his death. For this number of years he constantly refused the priest. When finally he was on his death bed it was impossible for the priest to reach him before he died. His bad example is greatly responsible for the present state of his family. After making a polite exit we went to the "hotel" and got a room there. You remember Joe's shack on the Island? Much brighter and cleaner than our room. This Christian family said they would go to confession and Communion the next morning so we promised to come to their house at seven.

Fr. Serra and I slept fairly well during the night and a few minutes to seven saw us outside this family's house. But nary a soul in sight. After pounding and yelling intermittently for half an hour, somebody came to and we entered, only to find that their wishing for the Sacraments was so much eye-wash. So we didn't say Mass there, but, breakfastless, struck out and walked two hours to reach Shao Mei. Here we said Mass about eleven and had dinner à la chinois.

March 3rd.

In each Chapel we have a caretaker, at least; if possible also a Catechist. Here there is no Catechist. An old man and his wife care for the place. When we arrived (and it was wholly unexpected) we found seven "squatters" ensconed comfortably. Very soon things began to move. "Get out this afternoon!" That was our ultimatum. They had moved their whole household effects into this Chapel. Talk about nerve! But, again, all because of a renegade Christian. This fellow, baptized in 1906, became the leader of a secret society called "Big Knife Society" and, when no priest was present here he just constituted himself major domo and terrorized all the other Christians. At his beck and call people would come and go. His son was beheaded by the authorities for belonging to this Society, but he himself escaped . Now he is in Lungchuan. I'd wring his dirty neck if I could see him now! To-night all the "squatters" have gone, bag and baggage. Golly, it's too bad you weren't here this afternoon to see the exodus. Then we got busy and cleaned the place up.

While we are here we will have our meals brought from a "restaurant"—four meals for two dollars,—I mean four persons three times a day,—twelve meals for two dollars. For our two Chinese companions we rented beds at six "dong pan" a night,—not half a cent Canadian. I suppose all your tramps would be coming to China for lodgings if they knew this.

To-night no Christians showed up. To-morrow we make the You've heard of "Main Street," Lishui. Here it is—and its principal claim to fame is that from it leads the entrance to the Catholic Mission Headquarters of the Chuchow Prefecture. The building at the left is the Convent, and the Grey Nuns are all set to make a sick call. And the "taxis" are not so slow, either.

R'S DIARY

STRINGER

WE are pleased to present to our readers this intimate record of a three weeks' mission tour of Father Stringer's parish which we secured from a member of his family in Ottawa.

The Pastor of Lungchuan is a gifted writer who, in his many contributions to "China", brings home to us all the problems of the priest on the missions.

The fact that a diary of events in March does not appear till July is accounted for by the length of time it takes mail to reach us from China.

rounds. But I think that if there are five here on Sunday it will be a big congregation. And that out of thirty-seven baptized!! So you can see what this mission or Chapel is like! Well, good-night. I'll write you again to-morrow. Now for beads and bed.

March 4th.

This morning,—oh, what aching bones! Our mattresses are the board kind. It rained a great deal during the night and was quite chilly. At seven we crawled out, washed and prepared for Mass. By the way, I am writing now in a Ka Ting, the open part of the house,—there is no front to this part. Sitting around are a bunch talking everything, and everyone talking at once,—business, religion, politics, etc. This morning at nine-thirty we started out to notify the Christians who live outside the town. We had to walk twenty li to the first one. The sun was almost out and my heavies being still on made things rather warm. About two hours walking at a brisk rate brought us to his house. Our shed there at home is like a room in the Chateau compared to his house. His wife and child are not baptized. Remember there is no resident priest in Shao Mei. Lungchuan, ninety li away, is the nearest priest; so you can see what a job it is to look after the scattered ones. We talked to this fellow for a while. About ten others came to see what our business was. Privacy!! They don't know what it means.

We left here and retraced our way for about ten li and had dinner in a restaurant at the end of a bridge. This took about twenty minutes. Then we hit out again, pipes going with good Edgeworth (God bless Burke). The road was a red clay one and we took quite a bit of it with us, for the previous rains made the walking very slippery. We came to another place where four Christians lived and found three of them had moved to Fukien and that permanently. The old man we did see lived in a hovel as old and decrepit as the house on Rideau St., that we used to say was haunted. Again there was no least hint at a private call, for half the village crowded into the room which was about six by four. Twenty minutes later found us on the road again and climbing a mountain; two feet ahead, slip one back,—that sort of walking for a little distance. We arrived in a village and were directed the wrong way. After walking an hour we found out the error. We had walked away from our objective and to circle round would require three hours. But it was then three o'clock and we were more than an hour away from home, so we decided to call it a day and return as we had still to say our Office. Luckily for us, for we had just returned when it began to rain again.

Already I told you about a man who was the leader of the Big Knife Society and said he was in Lungchuan. Imagine our surprise when we returned to-day and found out he was in town. They must have sent a man to Lungchuan to tell him we were here and were cleaning the nest out. His wife was here when we got back but himself did not show up till later. He is quite old and thin and I wondered what there was about him to frighten anyone. It is not himself but the power he is supposed to have. He told us he would come back after supper but so far he hasn't. He is afraid of us at least. It is impossible to hang anything on him for he makes others do the work —a regular "Al", I suppose. His daughter also came and there was some loud talking done. The old gent took two beds but he says another person did it. He's a crafty customer. This will give you an idea of some of the stuff we have to contend with before it is possible to go about converting the pagans. The stories about the Christians and Christianity in these parts are very many and bad,—all due to a few scandalous Christians. I am certain that those of us who are working here now will, in a lifetime, do little more than clean up and those who follow us will have an opportunity to branch out. You can readily see the great need we have for prayers. Well, this is enough for to-day.

March 5th.

To-day is, in a weatherly way, quite miserable. If it were fine the ones we went to call on yesterday might possibly have come. As it was, they didn't. The head of the Big Knife Society I will call Capone. His wife and daughter came this morning on the sly to take the rest of the things that belonged to them. Mass was going on upstairs in the Chapel but they made no attempt to hear it. When I heard them downstairs I went down and they tried to hide. A few well chosen words regardless of their "Face" sent them scurrying to attend Fr. Serra's Mass.

Last night they came for night prayers but I had been told beforehand just how they would act —that is, appear as warm-hearted Christians only as a stunt to pull the wool over the missionaries' eyes. To-day, the best Christian (and only decent one) asked us out to dinner, and we went. Just before going three men came to the Mission here looking for Capone. Note this point well. Not to his house did they come, but here. The thing is this. Just now somebody has hailed him into Court for being the head of this Society. He has called all his friends together with the intention of holding his meeting in the mission which affords more or less protection because it is foreign.

Our arrival prevented this meeting taking place here. It was another ace for us that the three couldn't be warned before coming here. That way they might have prevented our putting two and two together. I am waiting now for Capone to show up here for we are scheduled to have one hot talk. Well, that is about all for to-day. It is near supper time and I don't expect any more doings, unless "Cap" should come around. When we get this mess cleared up we can go on to our next mission. Great life, isn't it? And all this damnably rotten example retarding good pagans from becoming Christian.

March 6th.

There was no one came for Mass. Any Christians who might want to come are likely afraid of Capone. We had breakfast about nine-thirty and then proceeded to clean up a little. The old caretaker has a room upstairs and when we came it was locked. Yesterday I asked him what was in this room and he told me it held only his things. This morning I happened to notice it wasn't locked so I went in to have a look around. Imagine my surprise when I discovered three more beds in here. That sealed the old fellow's fate: he gets the gate now and right pronto. Although we can't hang it on him he is very likely one of Cap's gang. That makes twelve beds we have found here,—two to a bed means twenty-four inmates, — a nice gang of thieves. Old "Cap" hasn't shown up since yesterday morning. We've got him cold now. Two bedsteads were taken away with his cognizance,—everyone seems to take orders from him. The old gatekeeper, or rather caretaker, at first "couldn't remember" but to-day after we had threatened to call in the police, he quickly got in touch with "Al" and now one bed is back already. To-morrow morning early I am going to return to Lungchuan to get another man. Fr. Serra will stay here and guard the fort while I am gone. Now, can you imagine you would meet such bunk on the mission? No wonder there are none becoming Christians when the oldest baptized are such bad characters! Well, this is enough for to-day,—its quite cold.

March 7th.

Here I'm back in Lungchuan. This morning, rising at five, I managed to get away at six forty-five and three p.m. found me in the city,—ninety li (30 miles) in seven hours.. Maybe we didn't step it! And it rained the whole day,—is yet raining, in fact, at 7 p.m. At Tso Tien we stopped for breakfast in a house where there were a lot of kiddies. The baby was playing with a bowl when it slipped out of its hand,—net result, one less bowl in China. The father and mother couldn't say a reproving word because to do so would be to lose "face" since I was looking on. He just said, "Well, well!" but my, oh my, how he must have felt underneath.

Breakfast consisted of a bowl of rice macaroni and a hard boiled egg cooked in pork juice. After this we felt great and made good time. I had a couple of nut bars (thanks to Kate) and one of them and some peanuts made my dinner. My big Chinese umbrella kept me dry to the knees and for the first forty li I tried to dodge the puddles and little streams,—but that got to be impossible so we just rambled on regardless of what the path-road was like. Carrying an umbrella for seven hours is indeed a stretch. About one p.m. it started to sleet a bit but fortunately it soon stopped, else the path-road would have become very treacherous. As it was I once very nearly took a dive into

POWER OF THE CHURCH IN CHINA

Rome.—The Church's world unity and the thorough discipline of her forces loom as the victors in China, states Archbishop Costantini, Apostolic Delegate to China. They have painted for the Church a glorious page during this last decade and guarantee the future.

"The future is bright," asserted His Excellency with the commanding enthusiasm which has marked his brilliant career as Papal representative in China, "and this because the Church in China presents a strong and powerful front, a oneness with Rome and with the Catholic body throughout the world.

"An English-speaking Protestant leader asked me recently in Peking what happened when various sectors of the Catholics of China were placed under native bishops. Apart from the rejoicing of the faithful that they now were ruled by prelates of their own blood, I replied, all went on as before.

"'But it was not so with us,' said this earnest man. 'The handing over of our churches to the Chinese in most cases spelt for us disaster.' With all consideration for his sincerity, I told the gentleman as delicately as I could the secret of our success—the love which faith has instilled into every Chinese Catholic as into every other Catholic throughout the world for the Vicar of Jesus Christ, his attachment to the heart of the Church in Rome, the long and careful training of every Catholic priest, whether Chinese or Western, which weaves all inseparably into the seamless robe of the Divine Redeemer. Westerners leave and Easterners come into command, but all bow in equal homage before the one great leadership.

"'Ah, true,' he remarked, 'it is your great secret—you have unity!'

"Looking back over the last troubled ten years in China, what shines most luminously, what promises most for tomorrow, is the discipline of our forces. Our organization, buffetted most violently, remains intact. The page which the missionaries have written is from a human aspect a sorrowful one, but from a supernatural aspect refulgent with glory. I feel proud of my connection with the Church's redoubtable battalions in China.

"Almost without interruption for years now we have had priests in bondage among the bandits or communists. Such men honour the Church; their deeds make tomorrow glorious with hope.

"Tomorrow will also see Catholic Action vigorous in China. The Holy See has approved the new statutes for China, and, first at Peking, later at Shanghai, the local leaders gathered about me to express their enthusiasm. Joseph Lo Pa Hong, of Shanghai, is the national president. As Simon Wei, former president in Peking, strikingly explained to me, China's Catholics feel that by this new organization they have become of age; they now enter public life as full grown men to speak confidently for Christ's cause.

"I can assure you, the best of China's Catholics are in every sense full grown men. They will be found ever shoulder to shoulder with their brothers over the world, fighting courageously to advance the Church.—(Fides.)

A MISSIONER'S DIARY

a rice-field. Just now these are all like miniature lakes. The Chinese think we foreigners are veritable dynamos when it comes to walking. My carrier is, I suppose, about the proudest man tonight in Lungchuan. As we were coming down the street his friends asked "Where do you come from?" and he answered, "From Shao Mei"; and then their exclamation of surprise, "Hao Kna!" (That fast, wow!). When I arrived I soaked my feet in hot water, dried out my things and at four p.m. sat down to have a bite to eat. I was hoping to be able to return to Shao Mei tomorrow but the chap I came to get cannot be ready until the day after. So tomorrow I can rest up for the return trip. I do hope it is not raining. If it is cloudy it will suit me fine, for when the sun comes out it is hot enough to slow me down. Anyway, we will make the return trip more leisurely, taking two or three hours longer. I'm for getting to bed early tonight. The bed I was using in Shao Mei is as hard as rock. Tonight I have a spring one and watch me spring! If you like walking on cobblestones just come on over and have a try. We'll take it easy for the first few lessons.

March 8th.

To-day I had a good rest physically, but more or less busy mentally. Since you have read that article, "China Balances Her Budget" you will realize some of the things you are liable to meet. Especially remember the part about the stove. And by the way, one of our priests got stuck the same way, an old stove all shined up. Yesterday, my carrier was telling me some things that another had told him,—how that last year when we were away at Retreat, my cook helped himself to wood and rice from the Mission. Of course, I'll have to wait till the tangle begins to unravel. This carrier was, in American slang, "putting me wise", but if I ever confronted the cook and said the carried told me, then the carrier would certainly "be at a loss" to know how I could ever have heard that he (the carrier) told anything. Nice muddle, isn't it?

Well, anyway, to-day another "little bird" told me that my Sacristan had purloined five dollars and had it marked down against meat. In this case there was something tangible to work on. I got hold of the meat account book and went through it, and sure enough there was five dollars too much. The way it happened is this: my curate gave him five dollars to buy dong-pan (cents). To avoid much writing we buy a lot of coppers, for business here has no currency between cents and silver dollars. He bought the dong-pan where we deal for meat and instead of giving the five dollars to the butcher, told him to write it down in the meat book. Now, you might think that all is cut and dried,—a clear case. But it isn't. For I had heard something else to-day that had apparently no connection with this case. It was that this Sacristan was not going to stay in his new place. (He was recently transferred to another parish). This may be his way ot getting fired. But the second hypothesis seems better and it is this. He took the five dollars all right, told the butcher he'd pay it back to him. The butcher, having a grudge against him, wrote it down so I'd see it. To-night, when I called this butcher and asked him why he wrote it, he told me that it was the Sacristan's order. When he was leaving he told Fr. Curate (in a stage whisper): "Fr. Stringer certainly treated his Sacristan well, but he doesn't know how crooked he is".

Before vacation at St. Augustine's Seminary, Toronto, the Mission Crusade Unit there had a big "Mission Week" on each day of which attention was focused on a particular mission field. Attractive mission displays added interest to each day's "Intention." Picture above was taken on the day set aside for the Prefecture of Chuchow. The students and graduates of St. Augustine's Seminary are noted for their mission enthusiasm.

Little by little it will all come out. If I was not so busy now I could clean it all up but tomorrow I must be back in Shao Mei. And since that means getting up at four a.m. (horrible thought) I'll sign off for to-day. Wouldn't you like to be Pastor with a job like this? Well, now go eat your ice cream and have one for me. I hope your eyesight is holding out. I have no typewriter just now, so you'll have to make the most of this scribbling.

March 9th.

This morning I rose at four a.m. and at quarter to seven we were on our way back. The sun was out all the way, a welcome sight after so much rain. There was nothing unusual on the way and at half-past four we arrived in Shao Mei, tired, but glad the trip was over.

March 11th.

It was very cold getting up this morning. These Chinese houses are fine for summer. From my bed I could just move a couple of pieces of tile and look at the sky. And maybe the old wind wasn't shrieking in all the nooks and crannies. But the sun was coming up so I managed to crawl out. It was very cold saying Holy Mass, especially on the fingers. And my Mass candles,—the wind burns them down nearly a foot every Mass.

About eleven o'clock we hit out in another direction looking up more scattered sheep. We walked about forty li and didn't get back for dinner until four p.m. We met no Christians. One had died; two had moved away, and the fourth was away in Fukien carrying mushrooms. So the trip was visibly fruitless,—but, of course, we preached a "silent sermon". Believe me, we were hungry by the time we got back. To-night it is clear and cool. A beautiful moon is coming up and looks very picturesque against the wooded mountains. My district is much like our beloved Gatineau and that makes me feel so very much at home. Tomorrow about noon, we expect to leave here for Ching Yuen taking two days for the trip. Coming back we'll come by the mountain road, the highest spot in our territory, and also under my care. We climb for three hours. Last year I made it during the summer. The view from the pass is wonderful. It is up and down all the way but the walking is smoother than on the long road.

March 12th.

Fr. Serra waited until eleven-thirty to say Mass in hopes that those four Christians from Tso Tien would come. It was a fine sunny day, but again they failed to keep their words of assurance. Nice Christians, aren't they!

After dinner we started out for our next mission centre called Ching Yuen. It is about one hundred li distant. This afternoon we made forty li. I wish you could have seen the "hotel" we stopped in. Our room was dark and dirty. Our supper consisted of rice, bamboo, meat, and for dessert we had wine and peanuts. After finishing our Office we rolled into bed and smoked a pipe. I slept about forty winks and I guess Fr. Serra slept less. Our servant and carriers were up about four a.m. and we got up about five-thirty.

March 13th.

We walked sixty li and arrived here about three o'clock. I "sprung" a blister on toe and heel of my left foot. A little iodine fixed it up fine and after a wash I felt much better. Coming along the road we tried a new delicacy. This looks like dough. The seller has a big batter of it and weighs out the amount you want to eat. His hands are as dirty as can be with long fingernails. He rolls this dough-like stuff into little balls with his hands and drops them into a sugar bowl, whence you take them out and eat them. They sure did fill the aching void in our tummies. We had an excellent sleep and were much refreshed this morning.

March 14th.

To-day we rested up after our trip. I got a chance to do a little reading. After supper two Christians came along and I asked them if they had calendars. No, they hadn't. Now, a calendar is a necessity here for it takes the place of your Sunday announcements. I got two of them and told these fellows that since they hadn't (?) the five coppers to bring them tomorrow. Then I went to bed and in the morning I found the calendars still there. Can you beat that for being tight and indifferent! If they were pagan they would have to spend fifty times that amount buying stuff for superstitious purposes.

March 15th.

We started out to look up the Christians in the city proper. Where I am now is "Ow Tien" where we have our Chapel. The city is "Ching Yuen" and they are related much like Ottawa and Eastview. We also have property in Ching Yuen. To-day we went to visit what was once the Chapel. I wish you could have seen it,—practically demolished by soldiers who used the boards for fires. Two walls and a roof are all that is left. Some years ago the mission headquarters was moved from there to this present place,—like from Ottawa to Eastview,—because it is much more central for the country Christians. Whereupon the Ching Yuen Christians thought themselves insulted and left the Church.

According to the Register of Christians, there are only three left in Ching Yuen out of quite a few, and not one sick call has ever come from there to Lungchuan where the priest resides! And out of these three we could locate only one. He was baptized as a child and never received much more instruction. He has not made his first Confession and Holy Communion, never was confirmed, and is now over thirty years old. We had dinner with the one Christian family in the place, a cousin of Fr. Kam's. Perhaps later on I may have a chance to work amongst these people. There are lots of kids here and a good chance to open a school.

(Finish the trip with Fr. Stringer in the September "China").

time of my arrival she had sufciently recovered her consciousness to understand the teacher's words: "Lucy, the priest has come and is going to baptize you." At these words a smile of joy overspread the dying catechumen's features. There was no time to be lost, as a bustle outside indicated that the stretcher carriers had arrived. With Lucy's teacher acting as godmother, I poured out the regenerating water pronouncing the formula: "I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." The door opened and Lucy's mother entered the room. She appeared surprised and suspicious of the purpose of my visit but said nothing. Lucy allowed herself to be placed on the stretcher and carried home without a word of protest. She lived but two days thereafter, and even in her delirium she kept on mumbling snatches of prayers among which: "Blessed Mother, help me" was the most frequently repeated.

Our Lucy was given a pagan funeral. It could not be otherwise. Her frail corpse was placed in a huge cypress coffin. The Taoist bonzes chanted their incantations around her for two days and two nights. Heaps of paper were burned before her coffin by her pagan girlhood friends, who wished by this means to supply her with pin-money to spend in the other world; but in the meantime Lucy was kneeling before the great white throne imploring her heavenly Father to grant to them the pearl of great price, the only true and saving Faith.

The little fellow is being "treated", and as soon as that coin drops into the "merchant's" palm there will be one bun less in the basket.

NONSENSE

"Doris thinks no man is good enough for her—she may be right."
"Um—and she may be left."

Diner: "Hi, waiter! Yo've got your sleeve in my soup."
Waiter: "It's quite all right, sir. It's only an old coat; it won't hurt it."

"I hear their engagement was broken off through a misunderstanding."
"Yes, he understood she had money, and she understood he had."

Vocalist—"I'm going away to study singing."
Friend—"Good! How far away?"

Office Boy—"A gentleman has called, sir. He would like to know the secret of your success."
Boss (cautiously)—"Is he a journalist or a detective?"

"A nice sort of a welcome," said the father visiting his son at boarding school. "I am hardly out of the train when you ask me for money."
"Well, dad, you must admit that the train was twenty minutes late."

"Hang it, man! If your car has been stolen, why don't you communicate with the police?"
"I'm not worrying about the car. I'm wondering how they got the thing to go!"

Little Charlie—"You look very tired, mother."
Mother—"So tired, dear, that I feel I cannot move hand or foot."
Little Charlie—"Then I want to tell you I've eaten most of the strawberry jam."

Angus came home looking down in the mouth.
"What's wrong?" asked his wife.
"Aren't we about the most unlucky family in the wurrld?" replied the Scot.
"I don't understand ye," replied his spouse, looking rather puzzled.
"There's a chemist in the toon selling his medicines at half-price, and here are we just back from holiday and all in the best of health!" Angus explained.

"Have you any children, Mr. Smith?"
"Yes—three daughters."
"Do they live at home with you?"
"Not one of them—they are not married yet."

Mrs. Mannerley (to her little daughter, who has just returned from tea with friends)—"I hope you said, 'No, thank you,' oftener than 'Yes, thank you'?"
Mabel—"Yes, I did. I hadn't been eating more'n half an hour before they began saying, 'Don't you think you've eaten enough? Aren't you afraid you'll make yourself ill?' And I said: 'No, thank you,' every time."

A golf professional, hired by a big departmental store to give golf lessons, was approached by two women. "Do you wish to learn to play golf, madam?" he asked one.
"Oh, no," she said: "it's my friend who wants to learn. I learned yesterday."

"Mose, can you explain wireless telegraphy to me?"
"Yessuh, it's like dis. Ef you had a long, long hound' dawg, an' he stretched from Cincinnati to Cleveland, and you stepped on his tail in Cincinnati he would howl in Cleveland. Dat am telegraphy. Only in wiahless you does de same thing without de dawg."

She (at football game)—"Oh, isn't it awful! Why, they will kill that poor boy underneath."
Escort—"Oh, he doesn't mind it. He's unconscious by this time."

A parson was invited to dinner at the house of a farmer. On receiving a generous helping of roast chicken the guest exclaimed:
"Well, here's where a chicken enters the ministry."
The host looked up with a dry smile.
"Well, let's hope he does better there than he did in his lay work."

She had just accepted him, and they were blissfully discussing the "might-have-beens."
"Darling," he inquired in the confident tone of one who knows what the answer will be. "Why didn't you accept that little donkey, Jones?"
"Because," she answered, dreamily, "I loved another."

An American was giving some ilustrations of the size of his country. "You can board a train in the State of Texas at dawn," he said impressively, "and 24 hours later you'll still be in Texas State."
"Yes," said one of his English listeners, with feeling, "we've got trains like that here, too."

Pat got a job at a railway station. When the first train came in, however, he forgot the name of the station, so he yelled out: "Here ye are for where ye are going. All in there for here come out."

"Rastus," said the judge sternly "you are guilty of having stolen two chickens from Mr. Johnson's coop last week. The fine will be five dollars."
"Yassuh, jedge, y'honor," said Rastus, placing a ten-dollar bill on the clerk's desk. "Here's ten bucks, which will pay you' up to an' including nex' Sattidy night."

"My goodness!" exclaimed the stranger, who had dropped into the police court to pass away half an hour; "they've caught a pretty tough lot this morning, haven't they?"
"You're looking at the wrong lot," said his neighbor. "Those aren't the prisoners. They're the lawyers!"

Suitor—"Jimmy, how would you like to earn a quarter?"
Jimmy—"Fine! How?"
Suitor—"Get me a lock of your sister's hair."
Jimmy—"If you'll give me 50 cents I'll get you the whole wig."

Two men were discussing the vexed question of the education of their children. Said one:
"What's your boy going to be when he finishes his education?"
"An octogenarian, I think," replied the other."

"Are you really a duck, doctor?" asked Tommy, of the family physician.
"Whatever do you mean?" inquired Dr. Treatem.
"Well, Pa said you were an old quack," came the unexpected answer.

Injured One (to workman who has dropped hod of bricks)—"Confound you! One of those bricks hit me on the head!"
Workman — "Lumme! You ought to consider yourself jolly lucky. Look at all them that didn't!"

Captain (to Irishman, applying at Liverpool for a seaman's job)—"Have you ever been to sea before?"
Pat: "Were yez thinking I came over from Oireland in a cab?"

She—"Before marriage you said I was your guiding star."
He—"I was in a fog when I said it."

THE BEGINNING

Had you been standing on the great docks at Vancouver fifteen years ago last month you would have seen one of the mighty C.P.R. liners slowly make its way to its berth. Had you watched the passengers descend the gangplank from that liner you would have noticed a tall, white-haired priest come down to the pier accompanied by a young Chinese student. The scene was simple enough, and not unordinary—yet the arrival of that priest was destined to make mission-history for Canada. From that date began the history of Canadian mission-effort in China. The priest was Monsignor Fraser, returning to Canada with the apostolic desire to do something amongst his own people to bring workers to the great mission fields of China.

PROGRESS

Now, fifteen years later, we are witnesses of the remarkable progress achieved by the Institution then founded. When Saint Francis Xavier Seminary begins its scholastic year on the 19th of this month it will have more students in attendance than ever before. The total enrolment will exceed forty, and in addition there will be nine others pursuing their theological studies in Brignole Sale Foreign Mission College in Genoa, Italy. The opening of the school year will be marked by two ordinations to the Holy Priesthood on September 21st, and it is indicative of the wide scope of the territory from which the Seminary draws its subjects that the Ordinandi are from such widely-separated places. Canada gives us our first priest from its vast West with the ordination of Rev. Roland Roberts in Victoria, B.C., and in the East, Newfoundland is represented by its fourth missionary priest, Rev. Craig Strang. The students at China Mission Seminary this year are representatives of practically each of the nine Provinces and Newfoundland, splendid young men who are devoting their talents to the magnificent work of the conversion of pagan China. We welcome them back from vacation, and beg God's blessing on their year of preparation which will bring them nearer their goal of missionary priesthood.

THE CHURCH CATHOLIC

Perhaps it often occurs to people to ask the reason why young men go to the foreign missions. Without wishing to muster the arguments in favour of their heroic decision perhaps it can be best explained in the words of our Divine Lord: "See the countries already white unto the harvest . . . the work is great but the labourers are few." And "You have not chosen me, but I have chosen you."

Some there are—and, unfortunately, their number is too great—who raise objections to foreign mission work in general. Their objections are clothed in apparent solicitude for the welfare of the Church at home: "Over here we have enough to do to look after our own; our needs in this country are so great as to demand all our attention—why busy ourselves at all with the Chinese?" To simply say that those who express such sentiments have not the real spirit of Catholic Faith or do not recognize the purpose of Christianity is not answering them satisfactorily.

Had our Blessed Lord acted on such a policy He would never have become man. Had the Apostles acted on it they would have been content to restrict their labours to Palestine only. Had the great missionaries down through the centuries acted on it, the Gospel never would have been preached beyond their own countries. Those who now favour a policy of "There's China enough at home" are out of step with the policy of the great leader at the Vatican, and they would feel considerably abashed if they were told that they are denying their right to the name "Catholic", for as it belongs to the nature of light to illumine, and to the nature of the plant to develop, so is it essential to the Church to be active in Missions. As long as the Catholic Church claims to be animated by the spirit of God; as long as she claims to be the exemplification of God's plan upon earth; as long as she will obey her Divine Founder and remain faithful to her ancient traditional customs; as long as she is the one Church outside of which there is no salvation, so long, too, must she devote herself to the missions.

YOUR HELP NEEDED

It is all very well to sit back and thoughtlessly draw false conclusions simply because, in our selfishness and lack of true Christian feeling, we imagine that sacrifices are too irksome. Do we forget that Jesus Christ taught as one of his basic principles the need of making sacrifices if we expect to save our own souls, and that unless we seek to take our place in His scheme we are none of His. He came to teach, and ordained His ministers to "teach all nations", and until all nations have heard His word, His work—and ours—is unfinished. The work of foreign missions depends on our co-operation and sacrifice just as much as it does on the actual labour of missionaries in the field. Honestly ask yourself whether you can afford to be unmindful of the efforts the Church is making to bring into the one true fold those who know not their God and who still furnish most promising material for the truths of Christianity.

The Real Tragedy of Paganism

By OBSERVER

How would YOU answer these question?

1. Of the 250,000 pagans who died in China this week, how many are lost?
2. Do you think any of them may have gone to Heaven?
3. If you did think so, would you abandon all efforts to help the missions?
4. Does God want us to satisfy ourselves on such questions before we can make up our minds to help the missions?
5. What do you think of the argument: "Well, if there is any chance of salvation for them without Christianity, I certainly can't see why we waste so much effort, so much money and so many fine lives"?

You probably will not read this whole article. But answer those questions in your own mind. And if you wish to check up to see whether or not we are in accord on the matter, turn to page 121, where you will find our answers.

It is almost ancient history now, this question of the "heresy" of Mrs. Pearl Buck and her difficulties with the Presbyterian Fundamentalists. Most current questions are ancient history by the time we are enabled to comment on them. But Mrs. Buck's liberal statement of the case (just another of the Church's platitudes ushered in as a modern discovery) caused quite a stir over here; almost as great a stir as her arraignment of some of the missionaries of her own persuasion, whom she described as the kind of people who would bore congregations to death at home.

For Mrs. Buck finds she cannot subscribe to the Fundamentalist doctrine. She finds it hard to believe that a pagan, by the very fact that he is a pagan, cannot possibly have any chance of salvation. And her reluctance to believe such things is heralded the world over as a new discovery of religious liberalism. Hardly a priest has since been interviewed by a reporter but the question has been put to him: "What does the Catholic Church think of the possibility of salvation of the savage in darkest Africa or the head hunter in Borneo or the abandoned Chinese pagan baby?" The "amazing discovery" has been made that the Church has always taught that each man will be judged according to the light he has received; that no man will be condemned without a chance.

The Unbaptized Pagan

"Forgive me," says M. M. Halton of the Toronto Star to the distinguished Jesuit, Father Woodlock, "if I revive the old bromide about the unbaptized savage; but how does the Catholic Church account for the soul of the savage anyhow?" To which Fr. Woodlock replies, as any priest would have replied, that "the savage child who dies unbaptized cannot be punished for his ignorance". The savage child who dies unbaptized cannot, of course, get to Heaven, but—well, we better stop right here because it will lead us too far afield. It is with another point that we are concerned, one that we also discovered in the Toronto Star under the Observer column. It crystallizes the whole issue. Under an article entitled "The Heresy of Pearl Buck" the Star Observer poses a question: "Does this view (that some pagans may get to Heaven) CUT THE NERVE OF FOREIGN MISSIONS, as good people PROTESTED forty years ago when this broader view began to make a stir?"

There you have it, something we had long expected to find. Evidently there were "good people" forty years ago who postulated one hundred per cent. damnation of pagans as the price of their own hard-earned money for mission support. If it could be shown —dreadful thought—that a solitary pagan might possibly be saved without Christianity, then the whole superstructure of mission endeavour at home would collapse like a house of cards. They would have every pagan's fate a foregone conclusion from the moment of his entrance into this vale of tears. He was simply to fall into line, take his place in that dreary march past of the countless legions of the damned. To our first question, then, namely, "Of the 250,000 pagans who died in China this week, how many are lost?" the answer for the Presbyterian Fundamentalist would be childishly easy. Simply "250,000".

The temptation to go into this question, as fully and as intrinsically as one may, is almost irresistible. But it would be a digression. Besides, the conclusion would be, when all was said and done, that it was simply an inscrutable mystery of Divine Providence. The point with which we wish to concern ourselves in the rest of this article is that it is utterly unnecessary to try to satisfy ourselves as to how many pagans are lost before we can leave home for China or give a ten-dollar donation to a Mission Burse Fund, or help the Missions in whatever way God wants us to help. A fortiori is it unnecessary to satisfy ourselves that they are all damned eternally. Most emphatically is it not the case that our willingness to help the Missions must be based upon the dismal conviction that every single pagan who ever lived must, if he remain a pagan in life, be banished from the sight of God forever. We have not time in this article to go fully into that phase of the question. The whole point is that, however obscure may be our knowledge as to what happens to pagans after death, there is nothing in the least obscure about what God wants us to do for them while they are alive. Mission work is essentially concerned with LIVE rather than with DEAD pagans, or the fate of dead pagans, or what we think is the fate of dead pagans. To refuse to succour the living until you have satisfied yourself that all the dead are damned is simply to place God on the witness stand and miserable, puny, little human self on the Judge's Bench; it is simply to give evidence of a mind diseased; a mentality that is as mulishly and oafishly stubborn as it is blatantly and egotistically blasphemous.

The Tragedy of Paganism

It all leads to the question, "What is the real tragedy of paganism?" Is it the fact that since this time yesterday 35,000 pagan Chinese have passed into eternity? Is THAT the tragedy of paganism? Most assuredly not. The real tragedy was enacted before their eyes were closed in death. What happens after death is but the result of the dismal tragedy that is pagan life. Whatever be the tragedy of paganism—and that we shall presently show—it is very clear as to what is the tragedy of Fundamentalist Presbyterianism. It is the repulsive doctrine that our efforts on behalf of pagans must be in inverse proportion to our conception of the Mercy of God. Only when we have satisfied ourselves that God is an absolute tyrant must we soar to our greatest heights of missionary endeavour. As long as His loving Mercy might decree some way of giving a chance to a pagan who had never heard of Christianity we must be sceptical about Christ's command to "teach all nations" or "preach the gospel to every creature". Once satisfied as to the hundred per cent. damnation theory, the brave young missionary Horatius, more merciful than God Himself, will step forth to stem that awful tide of helpless, hopeless human misery forever rolling towards the shores of eternal woe. What, then IS the tragedy of paganism? For answer turn to your Butler's Catechism, or whatever catechism you know, and find there the answer to the question as to why God made us. The only tragedy, in life or in death, in time or in eternity, is to have failed to fulfil the sublime purpose for which we were called forth from nothingness. The answer is, in these or other words:

"TO KNOW, LOVE AND SERVE HIM HERE ON EARTH AND AFTERWARDS TO SEE AND ENJOY HIM FOR EVER IN HEAVEN."

It is most decidedly with the "HERE ON EARTH" part of the answer that the missionary is most concerned in his efforts for the pagans. God wants them to know and love Him. From them, as well as from ourselves, God yearns for the one and only thing in creation it is not His to command, the love of poor human hearts. That He must be denied this love two thousand years after Gethsemane and Calvary, and denied it by two-thirds of the human race, THAT is the grim tragedy of paganism. To be themselves bereft of the love of God, which alone can satisfy the ceaseless cravings of their poor human hearts, that is the tragedy that blights unhappy pagan souls. Like helpless, abandoned derelicts they drift aimlessly on the storm-tossed sea of life. If at the end, their real destiny unfulfilled, some of them should be caught by God's Mercy and tossed up on the shores of a safe eternity, surely nobody would use that very Mercy as an argument for abandoning efforts to rescue those who still struggle and perish far out at sea. And if you were as close to paganism as we are every day of our lives, you would realize that there is plenty of ground for pessimism as to the number who will be faithful to the undoubted chance God will give them at some period of their lives. To realize this we need only consider the number who are unfaithful to the tremendous graces bestowed upon every member of the Mystical Body of Christ. In life's stormy and ever uncertain passage towards the eternal shore even the shelter and safety of Peter's Bark avail not to save some souls from eternal destruction. What, then, of those who must brave the treacherous tempests of life's stormy sea with only a frail and waterlogged raft on which to make that dread passage towards eternity! Oh, no! One need be no blind optimist in order to defend the Mercy of God. One need not overstate the case and pretend that paganism is anything but the hideous slavery of Satan that it is. But neither must one acquiesce in the insult to God whereby He is supposed not only not to provide even that frail and dangerous raft, but to hang a millstone round every pagan neck lest they might by chance escape the lurking dangers that beset life's stormy sea.

A Wondrous Privilege

Why is this so, you ask. God could have saved all souls. As far as human minds may dare pry into the inscrutable secrets of Providence the answer is that the salvation of those souls who will freely choose God is more precious in His sight than that of a whole creation which was not free to accept or reject Him, a creation in which there would be no free will. The fact is—and eternity will be too short in which to thank God for it—that we, by our poor human efforts, can reclaim countless souls from paganism and give them back to the Heart of the gentle Man of Sorrows Who died that they might love Him forever. Thus it is that if we fail to do our part in helping the missions, whether that part be to leave all and follow Him, or to work with those who help by prayer and sacrifice at home, then undoubtedly and forever will the Sacred Heart be deprived of the love of souls for whom it bled. Do not ask why it is so. Thank God for the unspeakable privilege of being His co-worker in the grandest work in life.

Our duty in this regard is something not to be lightly esteemed. It is a very serious affair. Upon our efforts will depend whether or not many of those souls will come to know and love Him, but also—let us never forget it—upon our fidelity may depend our own very salvation. We are no mere spectators in this great march-past of humanity. We cannot stand aside speculating as to the eternal fate of pagans, the while we waste our own little chance and our own little lives trying to delve into the unsearchable ways of God. We have but one life to live and time will not pass our way again. Meanwhile there is nothing in the least vague or obscure about Christ's command, and His call to the Mission Field is the most desperately serious thing that can ever make itself heard in any young man's soul. When the rich young man "turned away sad" from the call of the Gentle Master it was for that young man's own salvation that Christ expressed the most concern. His comments have been interpreted by some spiritual writers as casting doubt upon that young man's salvation. Be that as it may; be the eternal fate of pagans as it may, it will avail you or me nothing to add to the tragedy of paganism the saddest and most irrevocable tragedy of Christianity, that in which a young soul destined by God to great things for eternity, turns sadly away to face the great empty outer darkness. Whether the vast majority of pagans—and that means the majority of the human race—be lost or saved, our duty is crystal clear. It is simply to obey the command of Christ to teach all nations; it is to give of the best that is in us even unto death that souls on earth may know Him and in Heaven may live forever in the ravishing raptures of His Eternal Love.

A MISSIONER'S DIARY

as kept by

REV. D. E. STRINGER

March 16th

THIS morning we went to the city of Ching Yuen to nail up what is left of the Chapel there. Next year I hope to be able to build a combination Chapel, school, and rooms for a resident priest. So if you know of anyone with money to spare tell them to send it along.

For dinner to-day we had eel. It was cooked with ginger. The meat was fine, but as for ginger—"I no like." The old "Baron" from Tieu Tang Shau came in to see us. It is about twenty li from here. On our way home we will likely stay at his house overnight. I will write more of this place later on. The weather is holding fine after almost more than two week's rain.

March 17th

It certainly does not look much like St. Patrick's day here. This afternoon we went to a village about five li away to visit four or five Christians. Only one was to be seen, however, as the others were away. In this village is a typical village school. The master is a reproduction of the old time schoolmaster. There was no pretense at discipline. The kids were talking and running here and there. It was the master who located our Christian for us. When we entered the school building, immediately all the kids crowded round. The master told them to scoot but nobody paid any attention and he passed it off nicely without losing face. One kid had almost lost his face for it was covered in big streaks with Chinese ink. And to see him lickin' his pen! The Chinese pen may be likened to our water-color brush. The kid had all his teeth, tongue and lips well darkened, and he seemed to enjoy it. We spent a quarter of an hour with our Christian and when leaving he promised to come to the city Sunday. I am not pessimistic, but—. Then to-night we had quite a little crowd in to listen to my Catechist explain a series of seventeen large pictures I brought along. They do like looking at pictures, and it is a thousand times easier to hold their attention by use of them. The crowd seemed a little more chummy to-night. At first they were very cool.

THIS letter to you all will, I think, be the most unique piece of literature you ever read. I am what we call "making the mission". That is, since becoming parish priest of Lungchuan, the duty devolves upon me of seeing to our outlying chapels. I have for company Fr. Serra, our Spanish priest, who has had seven years' experience. It is extremely fortunate for me that I have his help on this trip as you will see in the course of this narrative. So pull up your chair and "listen in" again as we complete the account of our three weeks' mission trip which appeared in the July-August issue.

March 18th

To-day we rested up and got in some much needed study. About eleven a.m. we took a walk up one of the mountains to have a look-see at the city. Coming back we saw them "fishing" (with a basket and stick) for what is called wine-fish. These are small little ones. When they catch them (and they are caught and kept alive) they are full of mud. A couple of eggs are beaten up and put into water. The little fish are then dumped in and in the course of a few hours, by dint of this egg-purgative, have rid themselves of all the mud. Then they are thrown into boiling wine which kills them and cooks them. I haven't eaten any and don't know that I'm fussy about trying them. Chinese food is one thing, Chinese delicacies are quite another, although they make some very good candy and biscuits. Well, tomorrow is Sunday and I have yet to finish my sermon so this must suffice for to-day.

March 19th

Last night, after the evening sermon (which is given by the Catechist) one family, whose marriages were all invalid, signified their willingness to have them fixed up. This is the first bright fruit of our trip. These people, whose knowledge of Doctrine is so deficient, took wives according to the pagan way. Doubtless they had some sense of guilt, but as no priest is stationed here, they just went ahead. We have to be so careful with such, not to antagonize them or unduly frighten them. We have been here a week and only last night did they open up. Their children are all unbaptized. There are four marriages, two males, two females. The two daughters are married (so-called) to pagans and as both the husbands are away on business, fixing these two will have to be postponed until I come again, which I hope will be before Low Sunday. This morning, after we fixed the marriages of the two boys they immediately wanted to have their wives baptized. However, it will be a year or two before they will be ready for that. This afternoon I will baptize the two children, one five, the other two years of age. Little by little we will get them all fixed up. There has been only eight confessions so far. The man we went out to see on Friday, and who said he would come, did not show up.

After dinner, Fr. Serra gave one of the Christians a pipeful of Philippine tobacco. Well, sir, even all the kids, five of them, had to have their "pull". This evening we are going to dine at a Dr. Wong's home. He is related to Fr. Kam by marriage.

March 20th

There was a pleasant turn-out of Christians to celebrate the Feast of St. Joseph. Six of them went to Holy Communion. The day was quite warm and sunny. The man we went to visit on March 17th and who said he would come on Sunday came to-day. The calendar used in the Republic calls Sunday by a special name and numbers Monday the first day. So our Christian was out a day. His is a marriage which needs fixing up too. When we visited him we didn't do more than speak of generalities. It is strange how wary they are of the foreigner. Most of our Christians have merely a speaking acquaintance with the priest; they, for the most part, lack that freedom which marks our relations with our pastors. It is important to keep in mind that any remarks I make are only to be taken as descriptive of our District. I see so much written about China which does not apply to our part that I know something of the ideas which those at home have. Unless I explicitly state otherwise, I am using the words "China" and "Chinese" in a restricted sense.

When we were going around to visit our Christians the other day I had the Register and my notebook. A veritable army of kids followed us and every place we stopped young and old crowded around. What a chance to do any parochial work! Most everyone thought we were collecting money. Some thought we were taking a census for military reasons; some years ago, when Fr. Serra was calling on a Christian they thought he was a policeman. When they knew he was a priest they directed him to the Christians, even though a few minutes before "no one knew" where they were.

This afternoon we went to Tieu Tang Shau, which is about twenty li away. There is a Christian family, families of sons and daughters too, all living in a regular castle high up on the mountain. Golly, it was an awful climb. Ordinarily twenty li takes about two hours but this walk took three hours and a half. The "patriarch" is sixty-six years of age and rules the roost like an old emperor. He is a bit too strict, however. Anything to be done, any transaction to be made, requires his sanction. His eldest son is thirty-three but he might be thirteen for all the autonomy he has. The big business they engage in is tea growing. He has a regular chapel, not very clean though, holy pictures galore. He likes the notoriety this all gives him. In the household there are fifteen Christians and some pagan servants. I am almost sure the old fellow resents the fact that the authority of the priest is greater than his. However, it does him good to have somebody tell him things for a change. He himself is one of those Christians who like to be called so, but is not willing to see that the others are properly instructed. It was like pulling teeth to make the old chap allow the women to come for night prayers in the Chapel. So I just told him flatly there would be no prayers said until all the Christian members were present. So off he goes to get them, and they came. After prayers I went to bed and slept fairly well.

March 21st

This morning I had the same trouble with the "King" about the women coming to Mass. The men were all present but no women! He's a stubborn old gent. No Christian women—no Mass—ultimatum No. 2. He signed the armistice and we had Mass. After breakfast, by the use of pictures, we gave them their first instruction.

This afternoon I told the Old Man that I wanted the seven baptized adults to come for instruction on Confession. "Yes, yes," he replied, "I'll have them there." Well, after due time had elapsed there was no sign of anyone coming so I went to hunt him up. He was out in the kitchen cutting his toe-nails. I told him it was time for the instruction so he said they would come immediately. Another half-hour elapsed and finally I had four of them together. "But where are the two women?" I asked, "Oh, they are washing clothes!" Well, sir, I told the old fellow in two or three short sentences that they could wash any day but I could not come every day, concluding, "so call them at once". Previously I told the old man to tell the women not to bring the infants. It is difficult to make these people think at any time and all the more so when several lungs are being exercised. But you might as well have told the stones, for bring the kids they did. I let this stand, glad to have them all together. I hope they may have learned a little about the doctrine.

Later the old fellow told me he would like to open a school here. I commended the idea and told him I thought I could get a teacher. I told him too, that he must feed the teacher and I would pay his salary. Later I was told he was hoping I would give him two hundred dollars to add some more rooms to his "castle". I am now going to have

When the seminarians return from vacation on the 19th of this month, their manual labor "exercise" will be continued on their new baseball diamond. The pictures were taken at the close of last term's "muscle-building" periods. A little more excavating, filling in, and tree-transplanting and things will be in order for the popular recreation pastime—and then, of course, the "grounds improvement committee" will think of something else to keep the boys busy on Thursday mornings.

NEW CHRISTIANS of CHINA

Those who have been reared from infancy in the Catholic Faith, and who never have had to endure difficulties and hardships in the exercise of their holy Religion, find it not easy to appreciate the conditions that people in missionary countries have to meet and overcome in order to be faithful to their religious principles.

In our February issue we printed an article on China's old Catholic families by Father Laffan of the Irish Mission, and here we present to our readers, again through the courtesy of "The Far East", a companion article dealing with the new generation of Chinese converts. The heroism of these people in preserving the treasure of their new Faith may well serve as a reproach to lukewarm Catholics of the Western world, and for all of us it provides an incentive to do all within our power to add to the number of China's New Christians.

BY NEW Christians we mean those who have come into the Church lately, or who have not more than one generation of the Faith. From what we have said about the Old Christians and the grim struggle they have gone through in the past against paganism, we can understand to some extent the position of these New Christians. They, too, have cut themselves off from relatives and friends and from practically all social functions and amusements. They, however, have one big advantage the Old Christians did not have: thanks to God, there are dotted here and there all over China at the present time quite a number of Old Christianities. As a rule, therefore, a New Christian has these fine people as neighbors, to lean on when he leaves his own, to give him moral support in the struggle and the isolation that lie ahead of him.

Weak and Strong.

Still, we must remember that these New Christians are literally new in the Faith. The jeers and insults of their pagan relatives and friends, the cutting of all ties with the old order of things — these crosses are hard to shoulder. When a persecution, like the one that has raged recently, bursts on them, it takes a tremendous struggle on their part, and a tremendous effort on the part of the Old Christians and the priest, to keep them steady in their new belief. Needless to say, some fall away, but a number — a much greater number—stand their ground and defy persecution.

Imagine what happens in a new Christianity when the Reds, for example, parade through the town. The pagans join the melée as a matter of course. There is nothing in their religion to prevent them from having a day off with a crowd that is shouting: "Down with Capitalism! Down with Imperialism! Down with Religion! Down with the Foreigners!" The Catholics on the other hand — Old and New — know instinctively that they can have no part in a Red gathering that has for one of its slogans: "Down with Religion!"

A Testing-Time.

As the Red procession proceeds along the street, it stops at each house, and here is just where the Catholics come in for trouble. In China, the people have made it, from the beginning, a strict point to have their household gods, or rather a declaration of their religious beliefs, in evidence in a prominent place in the front room of their house — perfectly visible from the door. If the people of the house are Buddhists, they have the Buddhist gods and emblems. If they are Taoists, they have the Taoist emblems. If they are Catholics, they have the Catholic emblems and anyone can see at a glance what form of religion the owner of the house professes. Imagine, then, the sarcasm, the bitter remarks, the hard, cruel things a reckless crowd of Reds say, when they find one of these Christian houses displaying Christian emblems, where according to their views there ought to be no religious emblems, or at the very most, emblems only of old Chinese pagan religions.

The Catholics have to stand the scoffs and jeers of the crowd of pagan onlookers and of the Reds, and quite often it happens that the affair becomes even more serious for them. They may be ordered to remove the offending emblems at once; or they may be beaten because they are Christians. I could give many examples to show how difficult things can be for Christians—especially New Christians — when demonstrations like those I have mentioned are happening in their districts.

Heroism.

I know a man, a poor farmer, who lives away in the wilds, where there were quite a number of Christians once who relapsed into paganism for a number of reasons. A persecution came; they were remote and isolated; the district became so infested by bandits that the priests were unable to visit them even once a year for quite a number of years. On account of these things the Christians of the district, little by little, fell away from Christianity and began to live again their old pagan life. But the man I mention —Shu was his name—in spite of untold inconveniences, held on to the Faith. And all through the years in which no priest visited his place, he still kept his Christian emblems as carefully and publicly as he had them the day they were presented to him by the missionary who baptized him.

Now, a Red mob, like the one I have spoken of, traveling through his district one day, entered his house and demanded in surprise and anger "why he displayed those things". They referred to his Christian tablets. He replied that he was a Christian and that nothing could induce him to change his mind.

He said to them: "I am a Christian; if you tear down these emblems, I will remain a Christian still. If you beat or abuse me, I will remain a Christian still, and though you kill me, I will never change."

I expect it was the absolute determination of the man that won the day for him. Anyway, the Reds went away and never molested him afterwards.

No Compromise.

There are many other examples I could cite to show that Christians —I am referring to New Christians —have again and again made glorious professions of their Faith, suffering untold torture rather than deny their religion. I know one man whose Catholic tablets were torn down before his eyes. He said to the people who did it: "What have you gained? I am a Christian at heart now, just as much as I was when those tablets were hanging in my house." Then they beat him severely, but when they had finished, he only laughed at them.

"I am a Christian still," he flung in their faces once more.

Then I have met New Christians who have clung so steadfastly to the Faith from the beginning that they seemed to grow to be Old Christians in a very little time. They cut themselves away suddenly and completely from pagan traditions and begin to live deeply Christian lives at once. Some families that I have before my mind now were as truly Christian, in every way, aften ten years in the Church as any of the Old Christians I have spoken about in a previous article.

The Weaker Brethren.

But from all this I do not want anyone to infer that these examples indicate the unvarying rule with regard to New Christians. No; many are weak in the Faith and feel the strain of the Ten Commandments. "We became Christians," some of them say, "but we did not understand that it entailed such complete sacrifice."

In peaceful times, people like these will remain Christian in name at least, and if the priest be continually watching them, overlooking their weaknesses and helping them on, he may, if he cannot make them good Christians, lay the foundation of a future Christianity in their homes. What I mean is that even if the fathers and mothers are weak in the Faith, the priest may be able to instill into their children the spirit which, with constant care in the future may grow to be truly and fervently Christian. But if a persecution swoops down on weak families of this kind, there is scarcely a chance in a thousand that they will survive the onslaught.

"Interested" Conversions.

Persecution brings out glorious examples of heroism in many of our Christians—New and Old—but it also makes ravages amongst the newly converted. In peaceful times these take their cue from the Old Christians who happen to live near them, and hence profess the Faith and treat the priest respectfully. In this their motives are often very human. We are prepared for this. How can we expect people imbued, as they are, with centuries of pagan traditions, to be influenced in the beginning of their conversion, to any great extent, by considerations other than merely human ones? I often think that in the ordinary course of things, human motives do most in turning pagans towards the new religion, and for quite a long time after their "conversion", these human motives still continue to influence them.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The Tragedy of Paganism

1. Nobody knows. All things considered, our opinion, for what it is worth, is that, while not impossible, it is terribly difficult for a pagan to save his soul.

2. Yes.

3. No. We are not required to satisfy ourselves on such inscrutable mysteries of God before obeying the very clear command of Christ to "teach all nations". Whatever be the fate of pagans after death, we know God wants us to help them to know and love Him here and then be happy with Him forever in Heaven.

5. Don't think much of it. Pushed to its logical conclusion it is a question of setting one's own will against that of Christ Himself. We are commanded to share with others the great free gift of faith.

Please remember the Chinese Missions when making your will.

Long-established Christian families in China like this Zee family of Ningpo (among whom there are two priests and a nun) are the greatest help to China's "New Christians", as Father Laffan points out in his article on opposite page. They give the recent converts that moral support which they need so much in the struggle and isolation which they must endure from their pagan neighbors as a result of becoming Catholics.

MISSION EPISODES

By FATHER BEAL, Sungyang

UNDER date of April 14th the Shanghai "Evening Post and Mercury" carried an article by Mrs. Pearl Buck, a Protestant missionary in China dismissed by her own Church for her attitude towards certain doctrines, in which she questions the efficacy of foreign missions among the heathens. Certainly no Christian would challenge the utility of efforts to save souls, but the fact that Mrs. Buck denies, among other things, the doctrine of original sin, excuses her from being classed as a Christian. To the Catholic missionary the all-sufficient reason for his labors is Christ's command to teach all nations.

It is not my intention to dogmatize on this important question, but by presenting a few incidents of my own personal experience to let the reader judge for himself whether or not there is a case for the foreign missions.

The place is Nan Dong, our baby mission forty miles from Sungyang where a chapel-school will soon be erected to provide accommodation for the growing Christian community. Holy Mass is celebrated in a Chinese house, and on Sunday afternoon sixteen candidates present themselves for Baptism. All but two pass creditably the oral examination. Sad but not discouraged these two promise to be ready for the next visitation by the priest. Fourteen souls redeemed by the Blood of Christ are regenerated in the sanctifying waters of Baptism and admitted to active participation in the Divine Mysteries.

Words fail to express the happiness and joy of these privileged souls and the satisfaction of the missionary who was the humble instrument through whom they were brought to know God. Any sacrifice that a missionary may make pales into insignificance when contrasted with the spiritual results brought about through his ministry.

We move to the country just outside the City of Suichang. An old Christian, a paralytic for three years, greets me: "I am glad you came, Father, I want to go to confession." After I heard the old man's confession he told me the man next door was quite sick and had been away from the Church for over twenty years. I called on this neighbor, and making him realize the danger he was in he gladly attended to his spiritual affairs.

Then his pagan wife kicked up an awful row. She implored all the devils and gods of hell to drive me from the sick room, and she roundly cursed her husband for allowing me to come in at all. She went through a pile of superstitious practices, lighting josh-sticks, making kow-tows, etc., and she told me in no uncertain terms to get away quickly and never come back. Quite an amicable person, to be sure, but I paid no attention to her ravings. She flew into a rage when I told her to have a care to save her soul. The poor husband lost heart after my departure and succumbed to his wife's threats. He did not receive Communion the next morning. The paralytic expressed his sorrow for the abuse I received by saying: "The devil is sitting on her heart."

Across several mountains and bridgeless streams I went to our remotest station to baptize five little babies. The ceremony was witnessed by many pagans who afterwards asked to be admitted as catechumens. I placed them under instruction, and will examine them when I revisit this place in the Fall. En route to Uo Shi Kan I passed a night in a pagan village where I was given a tiny dark, stuffy room in the best "hotel" we could find. I expected to get a good rest in preparation for a thirty-mile hike the next day. A veritable army of hoppers came to life and kept me miserably busy till morning. Three late guests arrived, and one of them had "Mrs Grundy" beat every way for loquacity. Despite protestations from other guests she refused to be silent till she had unravelled a four-hour tale of woes. Just an ordinary and perhaps amusing feature of life in such a place.

Just a few nights ago I was summoned by one of the carpenters working here at the Mission to accompany him to his home where his brother lay extremely ill. The city doctors had assured him that all the medicine in Sungyang was powerless to stay the approach of death. For more than three weeks he had been suffering Father Morrison and Father Beal had their share of work and trouble during the past year supervising the building of this new priests' residence at Sungyang. Every time they left on a mission visit new difficulties had to be smoothed out on their return. However, Father Beal looks quite satisfied as he rests on the verandah. Fr. Morrison is standing at the entrance to his new home.

A MISSIONER'S DIARY

it out with him. If he wants to do things right then I'll be reasonable too. If not, he will have to come to the city Chapel after this. (Later) Well, we had it out! I held him to the point, which he didn't like at all. He wanted to go off at a tangent all the time; talk about anything and everything but business. Finally I put a question to him point-blank and caught him in his words. The sons are all willing, he alone is the obstacle. Sometime in the future he may be reasonable. Before we left we had the four male Christians for Confession. The old man wanted us to hear the women out in their part of the house. Naturally, we told him they must come to the Chapel. However, they did not come, as they didn't dare cross the old man's wishes. Some Mussolini, eh?

March 22nd

This morning we baptized the infant child of one of the old man's sons. We got another glimpse of the "King's" despotism. Neither the father nor mother of the child came to the baptism. Remember, the Chapel is right in this house. The old man carried the child. We had, afterwards, another talk with him and I made him a new proposition. If each surrounding family would give about 15 pounds of rice a year I would pay the salary and other expenses of a school teacher. The old man vetoed this proposition also. I am certain that he would resent any higher authority than his own and hence he would sacrifice all to his selfish vanity. About nine a.m. we left to go back to the Chapel in the city. It was purely consideration for him that we went to his house. The reception we got and the difficulties he put in our way while there violated all forms of Chinese politeness. However, in God's good time, everything will come out all right. In the city we fixed another marriage, but it was tough.

March 23rd

Rising about five we prepared for our trip back to Shao Mei. This time we decided to go by the Mountain Road, thus making the destination in one day. Two hours walking brought us to the foot of the mountain. The sun was half shining, making the weather very sultry. We were quite hot before beginning the climb. Fr. Serra was keeping me laughing by his acting up and remarks about the climb we were going to have. At a quarter to eleven we started mounting and the first forty minutes was steps all the way. And oh! how hot that sun was! The next part of the climb took one hour but the slope was more gradual. Finally we reached the pass where a veritable cyclonic wind was blowing. It took my hat for a ride, but I recovered it. It had taken us nearly five hours to reach this pass and from it we could see the city whence we had come. Our carriers with our bedding and stuff were about an hour behind us at this time, so we found a shady spot and sat down to await them.

When they arrived we took the basket and ate our lunch. Two tins of beans, one package of figs, four chocolate bars, peanuts and small cakes, all "urged" down with cocoa All afternoon was spent walking along the mountain ridges and about five we made the descent. We were now about two hours behind time due partly to my side excursions looking for flowers. I succeeded in getting a small plant which will grow to quite a tree and whose flowers are very beautiful. As we went along we began to realize that we were not going to make our destination before dark. About six we heard rumblings of thunder! We had neither umbrellas nor coats. A few vivid flashes of lightning, dark clouds rolling up and gone in a flash was the short twilight. And then the storm broke. Tired though we were the storm gave us new strength and we literally tore along, hardly able to see the stone path. We kept slipping and sliding much like a train which has an attack of the "rolls". The last mountain we climbed brought us within twenty li of the city. Going down this mountain was hard work, steps, steps, steps, and the whiteness of them was turned into darkness, or rather blackness by the rain. Our Guardian Angels kept propping us up. Luckily the brunt of the storm passed to our right and we escaped with but a damping. Finally we arrived at the Mission but our carriers were too far behind to arrive. We ordered our supper from the restaurant, hired two quilts from a hotel, and fixed up some straw on boards. About ten we retired and slept like guardian dogs—one eye open.

March 24th

Hard boards are not conducive to "sleep-ins" so we rose about seven. We at first decided to remain the day here. But our Catechist wasn't feeling too well and we all needed a good wash so we decided to hit for Lungchuan. About ten-thirty a.m. we left in a deluge of rain but this time we had on our raincoats and carried umbrellas. The rain of yesterday had shrunk my left shoe and before we had gone very far it was pinching quite badly. So I ripped a handkerchief and tied it around my toes. This served the purpose quite well. For dinner we bought a few doughy cakes with sugar inside and drank some cold tea. About seven-thirty we arrived at Lungchuan and soon were at home. It was a hard thirty-six hours and we had covered about one hundred and seventy li. All three of us were stiff enough and after something to eat and a bottle of beer we hit the hay.

We had spent nearly three weeks searching and seeking out my flock in these sub-centres. Our spiritual fruits were altogether: Confessions (of duty), 19; Communions (of duty), 17; Confessions (of devotion), 6; Communions (of devotion), 39; Baptisms, 3; Marriages convalidated, 2.

The total number of Christians in the two sub-centres and environs is one hundred and thirty-six. Our three week's work succeeded in netting only nineteen of them! So you can see what is the state of this Mission. And, too, we consider this mission trip as fruitful. Next week we leave again to go to a place one day's journey away. Come on along!

Father McGillivray, of Glace Bay, N.S., no longer needs "lessons" in handling the chopsticks.

CONDITIONS OF MEMBERSHIP

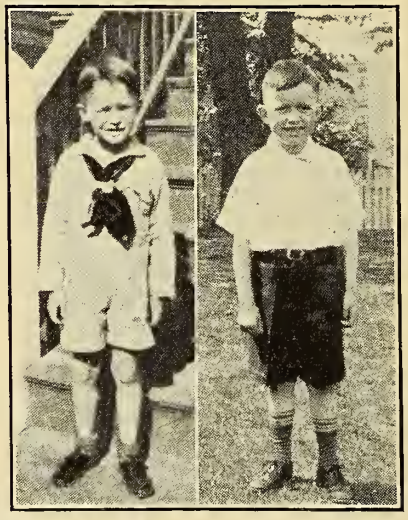
The only conditions of membership in the Rose Garden are: (1) To say every day the Prayer for the Conversion of China; (2) To go to Holy Communion once a month for the Intention of Missionary Vocations. Certificates and pins will be sent to all members.

CALL TO ARMS.

Awake, my soul, awake!
The Call to Arms is here
To strike a blow for Christ our King
And bring His Kingdom near.

Oh, Jesus, Lord, our Captain be,
Lead, oh lead us on
Till pagan souls be won for Thee,
Dear Christ the Father's Son.

—E. F.



St. Agnes School, New Waterford, N.S. "I am writing for the boys of Grade 8. We all liked the badges and certificates you sent us. We are sending you two dollars from our mite-box. Bernard Gouthro."

It took me a long while to get round to it, but I must tell these buds from Dornock how much I appreciated their letters. They are always faithful correspondents. Since the letters to me counted in their "exams", I hope the teacher was as pleased with them as Father Jim was.

Edna Arsenault, Box 725, Summerside, P.E.I., has asked for letters from Mary King, Nfld., and Elizabeth Strong, Windsor, Ont. Alice Gallant, Summerside, 15 years old, also asks for pen-pals.

And here's a real proof of what our young members are doing to help save souls in China. The letter is written by Mary Morrissey and Mary McCann for the pupils of Mt. Carmel School, Mt. Carmel, Ont. "Our school receives 'China', which is read and enjoyed by all of us. Most of the pupils answered the 'Call to Arms' by seven masses and communions. Some living several miles from school have made this sacrifice willingly and generously, even some living four miles from church. We were glad to do our bit and will continue to pray for the success of your missions."

"By chance to-day I came across a copy of 'China' and at once decided to join your wonderful club. Am enclosing money order for a year's subscription to 'China'.—Mary Coady, Lamaline, Nfld." Thanks, Mary.

KEVIN MILLER JIM HANRAHAN

Two great little missionaries of whom we are very proud. Read about them in the letter printed below.

Halifax, N.S.

Dear Father Jim:

Have you room in your Rose Garden for forty-five more buds? We are the children of the Second Grade of College Street School. We love China. We have two camps who try to get ahead of each other in giving money to the missions. We have a big ship on the board and the leader of the winning side is to be captain of the ship and take all his crew to China. Two of our class got up a bazaar one Saturday and sold their toys and candy that their mothers made. They came to school with quite a lot of money Monday. They were six years old. We all clapped them. There was no snow to shovel this winter to make money for the missions. We are sending a spiritual bouquet for the missionaries. We can hardly wait for our badges. With much love.

Your little friend,
JOSEPH WALL.

P.S.—Jim Hanrahan and Kevin Miller don't know we got their pictures to put in "China."

Mount Saint Vincent,
Halifax, N.S.

Dear Father Jim:

We are the Juniors of Mount Saint Vincent and we are in the primary division. There are seven of us. We have been very anxious to buy a Chinese baby, so we thought we would have a little play and invite all the Sisters and girls. The girls were to pay five cents but we let the Sisters come in free.

We made up the play all ourselves and we also made the costumes. The name of the play was, "The Witch of the Mountain." In the play there was a very bad witch; the witch stole the valuable birthday present of Lady Huntingdon. The Fairy Queen and her fairies helped to find the thief. At last they found her and Lady Huntingdon got her valuable birthday present back again. We received five dollars and now we are going to send it away and buy a dear little Chinese baby.

When the baby is bought, if it is a little girl, we should like to name it Therese Marie, after the Little Flower, because she liked the missions, and if it is a little boy we should like to call it Joseph Marie ,after the Little Flower and Saint Joseph.

The Juniors have heard so much about the dear little babies, how they are thrown away, that we wanted to save one so that it could be baptized and go to Heaven with our Lord.

Yours sincerely,
The Juniors of Mount Saint Vincent,
SARAH LAKE,
Grade 5.

Dear Buds:

I am very happy to greet you all again at the beginning of another school year. Letters during vacation were not so numerous as usual, but I know you're going to make up for that now, and I want to hear from you all and have your pictures, too. The two letters you have just read from Halifax tell you in the best way how much is being done for the Missions by our younger members. Let's all be mission workers this year in school. Sincerely,

FATHER JIM.

A PAGAN or CHRISTIAN CHILD

(The writer of this little article in the "Far East", Father Hugh F. Sands, will be remembered by members of our "Rose Garden" as the Irish Missionary who spent many long months as a prisoner among Chinese bandits. His release was brought about largely through the prayers of little missionaries the world over.)

HOW different is the pagan from the Christian child! "Of course, of course," you say. "Everyone knows there is a great difference between a pagan and a Christian child." Oh, this is a truth that many theoretically know, but few—very few—vividly realize.

What is the difference anyway?

The Snare of Paganism.

One day, just a year ago, necessity and bad weather forced a crowd of us—Chinese fellow-prisoners and myself—to bundle together in a cold and wretched loft. Much snow had fallen. Food was scarce. The birds of the air were hard beset. Some venturesome sparrows made reckless by hunger came to eat the rice that was set to trap them. Two were caught.

Their captors immediately proceeded to torture them. They tied each at the end of a long, thin piece of wire, soaked it with kerosene and set fire to it. Slowly the unfortunate birds were burned—very slowly. The thing lasted for almost an hour. And I thought of the words of the psalm: "Our soul hath been delivered as a sparrow out of the snare of the fowlers. The snare is broken and we are delivered." But the difference between those captive sparrows and their free companions is not so great as that between the pagan and the Christian child.

The Shelter of Christ.

Only a few months ago, a friendless beggar waif came to our door here. He was a pagan and had no one to recommend him. He was taken in. The months passed. All the time he seemed in a sort of trance or dream. Food and clothes were given him, and a measure of kindness. He had even a bed—not a very good one indeed, for we have no luxuries here—and a roof over his head. This might seem little to a Western child. But to him it was so great that he always seemed to think it was merely a pleasant dream—a dream that might break at any moment. And break it did.

Death and Heaven.

A week ago this child—for he was only seven—took ill. For a while we thought it was just a cold he had. Then one evening I saw he was much worse than he had been. He knew a little doctrine—not much.

I asked him: "Ja dzi (his name was Shu Ja Dzi), would you like to be baptized?"

He answered, "Yes."

He had been present when I baptized eight on Christmas morning and so he knew what to be baptized meant. An hour later he was baptized, too, and we called his name Joseph.

But his sickness and his dream continued—continued for two days more. Then the dream was broken. Death came and little Joseph awoke in Paradise. And that awakening in Paradise is another difference between a pagan and a Christian child.

MISSION EPISODES

from a complicated form of smallpox. The carpenter, although yet a pagan, realized the advantage of a visit from the spiritual father.

A drizzly rain made walking difficult in the dark, narrow cobblestone streets, and the home of the sick man was at the furthest end of the town. My escort, with a look of anguish on his usually cheerful face, was urging me to step faster.

A pitiable sight met my gaze as I entered the hovel which was this man's home. In the corner of a dark, malodorous room lay the form of a once good-looking man, now practically unrecognizable with his face and body covered with black sores which emitted a stifling odor. When I asked that an opening be made in the wall to allow some fresh air to enter it was objected that the wind would carry the disease to others. I didn't feel as if I could last long in that room, so under such trying difficulties I explained the principal doctrines of our Faith and baptized the dying sufferer.

The following morning I said mass for his intention. It seemed hopeless to ask for his cure considering the unhealthy and unsanitary quarters he was living in. Be that as it may, I am convinced that a near miracle was worked in this case, because in the afternoon a messenger came to announce a partial recovery had been effected and the patient was resting comfortably. It is beyond me how these people survive even one night in such surroundings. A Westerner subjected to similar treatment would most certainly have gone down for the count. For the past four days I have visited this new Christian, and apart from other things he seems to be greatly worried as to whether or not his good looks are a thing of the past. Although I give encouraging answers to his questions I know full well that he cannot escape the inevitable disfiguring pock-marks.

I will make use of this opportunity to thank my many friends in Canada and the United States who have assured me of their daily prayers and sacrifices offered for our Sungyang Mission. God will surely continue to bless our efforts and reward those good friends who are thus sharing in the noblest task given to mortals to perform.

NONSENSE

First Man—"It is said that the average woman has a vocabulary of only 800 words—a small stock."

Second Man—"But think of the turn-over."

Old Farmer—"So you want to marry Sarah. But she is my only daughter."

Young Man—"Oh, that's all right, sir; I only want one."

Sambo had been back to the land of his ancestors with an English expedition, and was telling some friends of his adventures.

"When I saw dose lions I turned on my heels and ran," he said.

"That was not very brave of you," remarked a listener.

"Well," replied Sambo, "I remembered that the earth is round and ran off to attack him in the rear."

Hubby — "Here is five dollars. Don't you think I deserve a little applause for giving it to you without being asked?"

Wife—"Applause? Why, darling, I think you deserve an encore."

An eccentric old gentleman left a legacy to three of his friends on condition that each put £5 into his coffin. The first, a Dundonian, placed five sovereigns in the casket; the second, a Glaswegian, put in a five-pound note; and the third, an Aberdonian, deposited a cheque for £15 and took out the change!

Solicitor to plaintiff (under cross-examination)—"How far were you from defendant when he assaulted you?"

Plaintiff—"Two feet five and half inches, sir."

Solicitor—"What is the explanation for the accuracy?"

Plaintiff—"My wife told me to measure the distance. She said some fool would surely ask the question."

"And what happens to little boys who tell lies?" asked the benevolent old gentleman.

"They get in for half-price," replied the young football enthusiast.

The following was a verdict by a jury in a lawsuit against a railway company:—

"If the train had run as it should have been run, if the bell had rung as it should have been rang, if the whistle had blown as it should have been blew—both of which it did neither—the cow would not have been injured when she was killed."

"Any luck at the races, Alf?"

"Sure! Found 'alf-a-dollar as I was comin' out, so I didn't 'ave to walk 'ome."

He had been reading knightly romances and grew dissatisfied with the present unromantic state of the world. He believed it his duty to inject some romance into the daily grind.

On a rainy, muddy day he sallied forth to perform some knightly errand. He saw a pretty girl about to step from her car on to the dirty pavement. Hastening forward he spread his coat under her dainty feet.

She looked at him in surprise.

"Well, of all the darned fools!" she exclaimed.

Woman—"I gave you ten cents last week and you look as disreputable as ever."

Beggar—"Well, lady it's deuced hard breaking into the smart set with one thin dime."

"Mike," said Flanagan. "How do you tell the age of a fowl?"

"Oi can always tell by the teeth," said Mike.

"By the teeth," exclaimed Flanagan, "but a fowl has no teeth."

"No," admitted Mike, "but Oi have."

A modest Scotchman, in speaking of his family, said:

"The Douglas family is a verra, verra auld Scotch family. The line rins awa' back into antiquity. We dinna ken hoo far back it rins, but it's a lang, lang way back, and the history of the Douglas family is recorded in five volumes. In aboot the middle of the third volume, in a marginal note, we read 'Aboot this time the world was created'."

Police Inspector (to little Binks, who has reported that his wife is missing): "So you want us to find her?"

Little Binks: "Er,—no—thank you."

Inspector: "Well, why do you come here?"

Little Binks: "Because, if she came back and found I hadn't done anything about it, she'd half kill me!"

Irish Sailor (writing from Australia)—"Dear Mother — We gain a day coming here, so that my letter is posted a day before it is written, but as we lose a day coming back, we shan't be in England until the day after our arrival."

Much-travelled man (to acquaintance watching hotel fire): "Nothing to get excited about. I took my time about dressing; lighted a cigarette; didn't like the knot in my necktie and retied it; that's how cool I was before I left that blazing structure."

Bystander: "But why didn't you put on your trousers?"

It had been a very convivial reunion dinner, and when the time came for the guests to depart Smith and Jones found that their last train to the suburbs had gone, and they were faced with a five-mile walk home.

About an hour later, just as they had passed a church which had chimed out the hour of two, Smith broke a long silence.

"Does your wife miss you when you are late on such occasions as this?" he asked.

"Very seldom," his friend replied. "There are still two large lumps on the back of my head where she hit me the last time."

The general knowledge class had been discussing forms of government. At length, the weary teacher propounded the question, "Well, Simpson, what is the difference between a King and a President?"

"Please, sir, a King is the son of his father, but a President isn't."

"Sure," said Pat, rubbing his head with delight at the prospect of a Christmas box. "I always mane to do my duty."

"I believe you," replied his employer, "and therefore I shall make you a present of all you have stolen from me during the year."

"Thank ye, yer honor," replied Pat, "and may all your friends and acquaintances trate you as liberally."

"Ma boots were guaranteed for four months," said Mac to the bootmaker. "An' I've only had 'em six weeks, an' they need easing."

"But they seem to fit."

"Aye, they're fine on me, but tight for ma brother on night shift."

An American and a Jewish traveller were in the same railway carriage.

"I wanna tell, and let it soak in," said the former, "the village where I hail from hasn't a Jew. Get me?"

"Yes," replied the Jew, "that's why the place you came from is a village."

"I believe your friend Jones is taking up law?"

"Yes; his wife has been laying it down for some time."

APPRECIATION OF OUR FAITH

Oftentimes, people are unduly careful to boast of their connection with this or that organization. A woman, perhaps, will positively be "thrilled" to belong to a certain club because it has the reputation of being just the last word in social affairs; a man may pridefully emphasize his blue-blood ancestry; a soldier may glory in his attachment to a certain division of the army, or a young man may consider himself in the preferred class of humanity because he has graduated from a certain swanky college. All, in their own way, have a reason to be boastful of their attainments, and no fault can be found with them. It is natural that they seek to impress others with their accomplishments, no matter how much room there is for doubting the real valuation of their claims.

* * * * *

There is a society, an organization, which can verify its claim of being the best in the world. Its membership includes almost four hundred million people, and it dates back nigh two thousand years to its founding by no merely human person. Every individual member of that divine institution has a right to be proud of his association with it and a duty to live up to its requirements.

* * * * *

Perhaps it is for want of reflection that Catholics do not sufficiently appreciate their membership in the Catholic Church. Proud, indeed, have they reason to be when they consider the past history and the present position of their Church. She stands alone today in a topsy-turvy world as the champion of eternal values, the one solid fortification against which the gates of hell are not prevailing; the winds of irreligion and the floods of immorality assail her in vain; she stands before the world for what she really is, Christ ever living among men. Such a Church necessarily excites our love and our admiration, and should excite our appreciation for the gift of Faith which makes us her active members.

* * * * *

The Church deserves our loyalty because of what she does for us. In the beautiful words of Moehler (quoted from a translation of his "Symbolism") "The Church is the living figure of Christ manifesting Himself and working through all ages, whose atoning and redeeming acts it, in consequence, eternally repeats and uninterruptedly continues. The Redeemer . . . is eternally living in His Church; and in the Sacrament of the Altar He has manifested this in a sensible manner to creatures endowed with sense. He is in the announcement of His word the abiding teacher; in Baptism He perpetually receives the children of men into His communion; in the tribunal of penance He pardons the contrite sinner; and strengthens rising youth with the power of His spirit in confirmation; breathes into the bridegroom and the bride a higher conception of nuptial relations; units Himself most intimately with all who sigh for eternal life, under the form of bread and wine; consoles the dying in extreme unction; and in holy orders institutes the organs whereby he worketh all this with never tiring activity."

* * * * *

Deserving our loyalty for what she does for us, the Church merits our support in the task that lies ahead of her. She is the divinely appointed custodian of the souls of men; nothing less than the salvation of the world is the work with which she is entrusted. "Preach the Gospel to every creature". The blessings purchased by the Redeemer are hers to dispense, and her missionary activity through all the ages is the pledge of her faithfulness to the Divine commission.

* * * * *

Thus it is that the Church and missionary effort are inseparable. As long as the Catholic Church will obey her Divine Founder she must devote herself to the missions. To quote Rev. Herman Fischer: "The work of the foreign missions is not, as it is so often thought to be, a work of supererogation. It belongs to the very essence of the Church. It is part of her life, which manifests itself in outward activity. The progress and expansion of the Church was in the beginning, and is now, entirely dependent on her missionary efforts. Missions among the heathens were at all times, and always will be, the unfailing barometer of her vitality."

* * * * *

Viewed in this light, it will readily be acknowledged that support of foreign missions is a duty devolving on every individual Catholic since the missions have a sound claim to the general support of the entire Church. Catholics without number will be found to voice their praise of the missionary army of their Church and to acclaim the priests and sisters in Foreign Fields as examples of selfless devotion to Christ, but a far lesser number will remember their own obligations as members of that Church whose solemn duty it is to propagate the Gospel in every land. Again to use the words of Fr. Fischer: "Foreign Missions are not outside our sphere of interest; they are a domestic concern of our Church; a family affair of our Catholic people." This being the case, we feel justified in appealing to the Catholic people of Canada and Newfoundland for a more active interest in our missionaries and their noble work. Reminding you that Mission Sunday occurs on the 22nd of this month, we leave you with the suggestion that you do something to aid our Building Fund whose object is to provide a training-school for our young missionaries. A mission seminary is the "indispensable fountain for the nourishment of our foreign missions."

What Price Neo-Paganism?

By OBSERVER

1. Give the origin and accepted meaning of the phrase, "Kill the Brute".

2. How do you account (or do you) for the blood howl of the mob; the insistent demand for the killer instinct in its idols of the ring?

3. Is it, in your opinion, just mild hysteria or a "throw back" to the cave when the sweet young thing at the wrestling bout shrieks at her favorite pachyderm to "break dat arm off an' trow it up here"?

4. Does this mentality indicate a trend towards paganism?

5. Are there more sinister signs in other directions?

Incident No. 1. Recent Wrestling Bout in Well-known American City.

Let us not mention names. For practical purposes we can call the loser the Denver Dinosaur and the winner the Sabre-Toothed Tiger from Tennessee. Of course there are no sabre-toothed tigers in Tennessee, but does that really matter? How many "Panthers" are there in Utica or "Balkan Lions" in the Balkans? The newspaper account of the bout went something like this:

"That last knee to the stomach hadn't done the Dinosaur any good. He was writhing on the canvas while the crowd howled for his blood. But Sabre-Tooth—'Attaboy, Tiger!'—knew his public. Grabbing his now glassy-eyed victim by the hair, he dragged him to a standing position. Another well-placed knee to the mid-section, followed by two wicked haymakers to the jaw, and the boys were reaching for their hats. There wasn't any more."

Now, personally, we haven't one little thing against the Tiger. "Bad men" of the rasslin' game are made, not born; made exactly to the order and specifications of the boys, and we needn't go into that thoroughly aired question. As far as we know, Tiger may be the President of his home-town S.P.C.A. It is the reaction of the crowd to this type of bout, fast becoming popular, that provides interesting subject matter for the alienist or the uplifter.

Incident No. 2. Wife-beating Bout in Our Not-So-Well Known Lishui, China. Daytime.

"Mrs. Wan Lung was now unable to rise from the ground. She was almost unconscious from the heavy blows of the bamboo pole in the hands of her infuriated husband, but the crowd of bystanders realized, of course, that it was none of their business. After all, a man's little domestic quarrels are his own affair. Some of the foreigners in Lishui who afterwards heard of the episode expressed a rather curious view, which shows their utter inability to understand things Chinese. They were reported to have said that it was a strange thing to them how a crowd of able-bodied men could stand round and see a woman beaten almost to death."

The above as it might be reported by our Chinese daily.

Now, dear reader, we're not indulging in an outburst of moral indignation. "Missionary in China 'SCORES' modern sport." Not at all! You don't imagine we're really worried over the wrestling game. But in a mildly interested and detached sort of way we should like to put a few questions.

1. How much farther will the mentality of certain elements of the "sporting fraternity" need to travel before just such a wife-beating contest may be billed as a HEADLINER at some American arena?

Horrors! you exclaim.

Horrors! we agree.

2. What will remain on the card should the good old strangle fail to satisfy and the kick-in-the-face-for-good-measure no longer afford a thrill?

3. What more, short of the dying gladiator act, can the wily promoters dig up out of the bag of playful little wrestling tricks?

4. As we go to press, just how far removed are some of the boys from the "panem et circenses" psychology (whatever that means, you say) and the "thumbs down" movement for bigger and better thrills?

5. Could it possibly be that some of them have reached a sort of crossroads where a sign points "THIS WAY TO PAGANISM"? Could it be? We're asking you.

But elsewhere there are signs that are more disquieting for anybody who would permit himself to be "disquieted". And they are not connected with sport. The "boys" are still jolly good fellows in spite of the growing liking of some of them for the smell of newly spilt blood. Theirs is certainly no formal revolt against Christianity. Their noisy approval of what to some may savor of savagery can in no wise be construed as a "rah, rah, rah" for the forces of militant aetheism. So let it not really disturb our serenity if they continue to glory in gore. There are many "polished" and "cultured" gentlemen who wouldn't be seen at a wrestling bout, but who are working quietly yet indefatigably for the overthrow of much—if not all—of what we hold sacred in our civilization.

One school of what passes for "thought" comes right out in the open with aetheism as a "platform", just like free trade or the full dinner pail. The other school disgorges "best sellers" and is satisfied merely to take the starch out of the moral fibre of Christendom, with every man for himself in the sauve qui peut that may ensue. The latter class would probably disclaim any intent of setting up paganism. They are concerned with the new freedom. But if we were to be asked for our little list of public enemies numbers one to ten, or public menaces or perils that "have arrived" we should select friend Theodore Dreiser, a decided heavyweight of the latter class, as an outstanding member of our "All America". Sinclair Lewis, too, would make the team, with possibly Bertrand Arthur William Russell, F.R.S., as guest artist from over the sea. Nobody would ever dream of suggesting either Gus Sonnenberg or Bull Martin. Such a list, no doubt, would qualify us for an insane asylum in the view of the literary four hundred. But we have our own little lowbrow and Victorian ideas as to what makes best sellers sell. And if it were sheer literature, then dreary Dreiser would never crash the home-town public library.

There are those, we say, whose undisguised platform is aethesim and who would cheerfully erect a pagan society on the smoking ruins of Christian civilization. Just what sort of pagan society? As far as we can gather by comparison, the paganism of China seems to be about the least objectionable sort of paganism the world has ever known. Let us suppose, then, that the paganism with which the "Neo-pagans" would supplant Christianity would be no worse than the paganism that surrounds us over here. Let us suppose! But it is really an impossible supposition, a thoroughly Utopian "ideal". No mere natural and "unenlightened" paganism could ever sink to the depths sounded by a thoroughly perverted and depraved Christendom. It would take the product of a decayed Christianity to reach an all-time new low in the annals of human depravity, something, thank God, the world will never see. For nothing that was never any better can become quite as bad as something which has once been very good and fallen from its high estate. No mere fall, for that matter, can be quite as hopeless and irreparable as a calculated plunge from the pedestal to the sewer. If you doubt it, once more "take" friend Dreiser, what he defends. It takes a product of Christian decay to find glory where many a Lishui pagan would only acknowledge shame. Take him. Multiply him by one hundred million and then open the cage. Imagine, if you will, for one hideous moment, a civilization in which the mentality of a Dreiser would provide a sort of accepted norm of morality, a mentality "incapable of being damned because in all its weary centuries it has never attained the use of reason."

We say that the paganism of China is about the best paganism the world has known. Then let it show forth a contrast in regard to two matters which even some of the Neo-pagans profess to hold sacred, that is,

Regard for Human Life.

Respect for the Dignity of Womanhood.

When we speak of regard for human life some of our readers will indulge in a cynical smile. China may drown baby girls, they will say, but the enlightened West goes in for slaughter on a far grander and more scientific scale. The world war will be trotted out, possibly, and fingers will point to the glorified powder magazine which is present-day Europe. But it isn't the INDIVIDUALS of any Christian country who want war and destruction or who hold human life cheap. It is not the mere cannon-fodder who have anything to say about the matter. Look at the reception accorded by the League of Nations Assembly (of one) to the protest of the maimed and disabled veterans of the last war. As for the politics of the nations and the principles of human-vulture munitions manufacturers, what place has the gentle Christ or His Christianity in any or all of their treasons, stratagems and spoils! No, the individual Christian still has a sublime concept of the sacredness of human life. The individual pagan has not. Supposing we resume our stories:

Incident No. 3. In Christian Surroundings.

Some years ago a small fishing schooner was wrecked, during a blinding December snowstorm, on the Little Gull Rock in Jude Reach, Placentia Bay, Newfoundland. Nearly three days later, from the hills of Oderin, about two miles away, a boy on the lookout for ducks espied a dark and unfamiliar object on this rock. With the help of his long "spyglass" he identified the object as the inert form of a man and immediately ran to summon help. Willing hands soon pulled a dory to the scene, and in due course a young, frail-looking man, Michael Dermody by name, was being nursed back to health. During the long nightmare of terror, while icy waves washed over that rock, he had seen both his father and his uncle carried away to their watery graves. Yet he lived to tell the tale, thanks to a vigorous constitution and the spontaneity with which his rescuers rushed to the scene once they became aware of his piteous plight. Not for a moment did any of those fishermen think that there was any other course of action open for any man worthy of the name of Christian. Gladly would they have risked their lives, as you would risk your life, dear reader, under such pathetic and desperate circumstances. But why? Is that a natural thing to do? Is that altruism ingrained in human nature as such or has it been superimposed by the charity of Christianity? Was it ever thus, when Christians were fed to the lions or children to the fires of Moloch? In China it wouldn't have been done. A man lay dying on a bleak, sea-swept rock and anybody would tell you that only a yellow-livered cur would refuse to lend a helping hand. They wouldn't say so over here. Let us just re-set the scene.

Incident No. 3. Transferred to the Coast of Chekiang.

A boat approaches the rock. The Chinese boatman notes with regret that the man is lying unconscious. That's just his usual tough luck, he tells himself, because now how is he going to know whether or not the man will pay the rescue price. For without rescue price, gentle Christian reader, the sharks can have that man as far as the pagan boatman is concerned. They feel his pulse. Yes, he is alive. He stirs feebly.

"One hundred dollars, do you hear? One hundred dollars or you stay there and die." And stay there and die he will unless that boatman sees some chance of getting his price.

Michael Dermody may still be alive and may even read this story. If so, he will thank a kind Providence that he came to grief on Christian shores rather than on the coast of China.

SUPERSTITIONS of PAGANISM

I. Fooling the Devil

— By —

Rev. D. E. STRINGER

THE other night I was interested in what had all the earmarks of an acrobatic show. Not far from us lives a butcher—seller of umbrellas, tea, lamps, biscuits and so forth as a side-line. He had not been well for some time lately, due, as he supposed, to his soul which had gone travelling. Now when one's soul decides to leave its habitation one cannot simply say "Come back!" and back it comes: and this for the simple reason that a devil has got hold of it, and you must parley with him. This entails quite a lot of ceremony and not a little cunning. To this end you call in the sorcerer.

He puts a table at the door of the house and places on it food for the devil—rice in several different forms, and wine; all is prepared as though four people were to sit down to a meal. Resting on top of this table is a smaller one on which is a lantern and a small rice-measure. Incense sticks are strewn about in profusion, and lighted. Thus the stage is set for the drama.

Standing between the house and this contraption the sorcerer begins his work. In a singsong manner he recites the proper charms, waving his arms about the while, and bowing at stated intervals to the tables. This is the invitation to the devil to partake of the tasty meal prepared for him—to get him in good humor, as it were.

After the invitation has been accepted (a fact which the sorcerer seems to know with certitude), the devil is invited into the house. On the floor, and already prepared by an assistant, is a plate of food and a bowl of water with a chopstick lying across the top of it. The devil, in order to feast on the plate of food, must cross this bowl of water, and hence the chopstick is placed there to act as a bridge. While the sorcerer speaks all the honeyed words he can think of, inquiring after the health of the devil, belittling the quality of the food, the assistant "accidentally" tips over the bowl as he snatches away the chopstick. "Now, what bad luck," says the sorcerer to the devil, "for your bridge is destroyed!" Now the devil is in a fix, but he doesn't seem to realize it. As he gets on with his meal, he evidently has an unguarded moment. At that precise moment the sorcerer quickly overturns a large pot, previously prepared, and which thus effectively covers the plate and cages the devil. Things move rather rapidly now. Seizing a stick and straddling the upturned pot the sorcerer begins to beat it, the strokes penetrating through and bouncing off the hide of the devil within. "Give back the soul!" cries the sorcerer. At this stage the assistant acts as mouthpiece for the imprisoned devil. At first he denies any knowledge of what the trouble is all about. More beatings, "Give back the soul!" After a suitable time of denial and refusal to comply has elapsed, the devil gives in. The assistant then takes the rice-measure and puts into it a garment of the sick man and tells the wayward soul to return into it. It receives a sound lecture for its misdemeanour and is told to return into the sick man. Then the sorcerer asks the sick person whether or not he feels better, and on receiving an affirmative answer, the pot with the devil in it is taken to the river and his satanic majesty thrown in.

Need anything be said of the degradation to which paganism thus reduces its adherents?

ONE will not be long in China before noting the multifarious uses of paper. It is cut and pressed and stamped and fashioned into a bewildering number of uses. It serves the purpose of glass for the windows of what many call "home". It is used in place of bandages in treating the sick; and this for a very definite purpose, for it is by no means unknown that cloth bandages all too soon found their way into an already highly patched garment.

Word of Inspiration

No Salvation for China Except in Christ, says Gen. Chiang Kai-shek

By PASCAL M. D'ELIA, S.J.

General Chiang Kai-shek, it will be recalled, was received into the Methodist Church in Shanghai on October 23, 1930. While he was in Hunan last year leading the anti-Communist campaign, he accepted an invitation to visit the Hunan Bible Institute in Changsha. On November 2, 1932, accompanied by Mrs. Chiang, Gen. Ho. Chien, Chairman of the Hunan Provincial Government, and by Miss Ho, daughter of the latter, he motored to the school, where there are actually over 90 students, boys and girls, receiving Biblical training.

The visit opened with the singing of a religious hymn, in which the Lord was asked to protect China and the Chinese people, and to help in "the spreading of the Christian doctrine everywhere so that everybody may be converted to the Gospel". All the audience joined in the hymn, the students and the professors as well as the four distinguished guests. After the singing, General Chiang was invited by the Principal of the Institute to address the students. Although the General had not foreseen this invitation and therefore had nothing prepared, still he accepted. His informal speech was written down by one of the listeners, who states that he has not changed a single character, although he has not been able to take down all that the General said. The speech has since then been published by the same author in the January-February issue, 1933, of "Evangelism", a bi-monthly magazine edited by the Hunan Bible Institute (Vol. VI, No. 1, pp. 6-7). The following translation, which has been made as accurate as possible, is based on this Chinese text. It runs thus:

Salvation for the Nation.

"Principal and students!

"It is a great honour for me to come to visit your school to-day. This is a Bible Institute. As soon as I entered into the premises of your school, my soul was moved and my heart was set at peace in seeing such grandeur and so much order.

"It is my opinion that schools like this Bible Institute are very necessary to make the Chinese nation strong and glorious. If there are now people who on the contrary are distrusting Mission schools, this is due to the fact that they do not know them. As for myself I think that schools of this kind are greatly concerned with the peace of the harassed Chinese nation and the welfare of their poor people.

"Naturally there are very many ways to save a nation, but the indispensable thing is to have a model. I realize that the Jesus taught by Bible schools may be taken as a model in saving a nation. If Jesus saved mankind, it is because he earnestly strove to reach the goal he had in view and finally reached it, thanks to his charity, his sacrifice, his disregard of everything else, and his heedlessness of his own dangers and trials. If, therefore, we want to save China now-a-days, we must needs make use of the spirit of Jesus and of his self-denial.

"Education in China is at present time in great danger. There are teachers who do not know what education is, and there are students who do not realize what they have to do as students. Nay, more than that, there are people who, ignoring the meaning of shame, are intemperate and spiritless. If we let things go along this line, education in China will be in great danger. To-day we have lost our morality and wiped out our sense of shame; to restore them, we need the work of schools of the type of this Bible Institute.

"I hope that you, students of Bible schools, will convert the youth and the students of the whole country through the personality of Jesus, and save the nation and the people through His doctrine. This is your duty. I hope you will be able to fulfil this duty of saving the nation and the people. Following in the footsteps of Jesus, save the nation, save the people! If you have the spirit of Jesus, you will neither be ashamed of Bible schools nor of being students of Bible schools. This is my hope."

Undoubtedly Christians in China, Protestants as well as Catholics, feel very grateful to General Chiang for such plain and encouraging words in favour of Christian education and Christian propaganda in China. Pronounced before a Chinese gathering composed of young men and women who are devoting themselves to Evangelical work in China, they have a momentum which should not be under-estimated. Would that his words might spread far and wide and reach the other leaders of the Chinese nation! They would convince them that China's welfare is at stake, if they would consent not only to refrain from any unkind and undue restrictions on Christianity, but also to foster and develop Christian teaching and practice in the country.

THE TOWER OF KINHWA

Monsignor Fraser's camera got this beautiful snap of a pagoda in Kinhwa district, where he is now doing zealous work. The article on this page was sent by the Monsignor from the North China Daily News.

SOME OPPOSITES of the ORIENT

There are many things "different" which a missioner in the Orient much adopt, and which change his viewpoint considerably. This mental mutation seems to take hold of one almost imperceptibly and to work itself into one's make-up. It must be so: "When in Rome, do as the Romans do" has its complement over here, and the continued effort to get the point of view of our people gradually brings a spontaneity of judgment along Oriental lines, which cannot but have its effect on one's mental processes.

Here are a few of the things which the newcomer to the Orient hesitates not to label "wrong", but which he gradually comes to realize must be classed "right", from the Oriental viewpoint.

If you wish to send a telegram, you are urged to hurry and get it off before nightfall, as it costs considerably more to send a telegram by night. In writing any sort of manuscript or letter, the prescribed form is always in vertical lines instead of horizontal, and from the right hand margin of the paper toward the left. The same holds true of addressing an envelope, with this in addition: you begin, not with the name of the person to whom it is going but with that of the country in which he resides, then follow the state, city, street address, and, finally, the name of the recipient. The address would read thus: U. S. A., N. Y., New York, 467 W. 59th Street, Mr. John Smith. All books, on the same principle, begin from the right hand cover (the back of a book for a Westerner), and progess to the left hand cover.

In stating the points of the compass: north, south, east, west, become east, west, south, north. Any compound of these, such as northwest, southeast, and so forth, is always put in just the reverse order: westnorth, eastsouth, and so forth.

There was a time when people back home used to talk of "putting up" the automobile for the winter. I could hardly restrain a smile when one of the natives here, speaking of an auto-bus line, solemnly explained that it ran only in the winter. I was just exclaiming mentally, "Another 'opposite' of the Orient!" when the casual explanation followed that a frozen river furnished the only roadway to the town in question.

When you buy a large quantity of merchandise at home, you expect to get it proportionately cheaper. We were doing a little pipe-fitting for ourselves over here, some time ago, and had to purchase quite a number of various fixtures from a native hardware store. Having previously ascertained the price of the respective pieces, we sent a man to the store to bring back the desired number. He returned with the report that the price had gone up as soon as the proprietor learned of the quantity we wished to buy. We investigated, and found this to be actually true, and a reliable native volunteered the information that such was the practice here. I have found instances contrary to this since, but it was true in the case cited.

In caring for bees in the West, the operator is careful to put on a bee-net, gloves, and so forth. In the East, or in Korea at least, the beetender strips to the waist as the necessary precaution for the operation; the idea seeming to be that the bee becomes excited and irritated when he discovers himself in the folds of a garment, unable to find his way out. You reply, of course, "But why let him get in?" Ah yes, but you're a Westerner!

When putting a horse in a stall, the Korean backs him in. If you ask why, you will be answered with, "Well, when are you usually more in a hurry — when putting your horse away, or when taking him out?"

The Western clock has now come into pretty general use; but I am told that the old clocks used to indicate how many of the hours of the day remained, not how many had passed. Thus, when our clocks would be striking two, theirs would be striking ten.

The Oriental blacksmith sits down at his work, and stands when he wants to rest; the carpenter saws and planes by pulling the respective tools towards him instead of pushing them from him.

In the hot weather at home mothers who wish to relieve their babies of the discomfort of clothes in public may take off the shirt but, usually, the body below the waist is covered with little pants or trunks.

Here, just the opposite happens. It is quite the common thing, sometimes even in cold weather, to see the little ones playing about in the streets with jacket covering the chest and shoulders, but entirely unhampered by any covering below the waist.

Again, in winter, Western ladies who wish to keep the head warm have the crown of the head covered. Here, however, the neck, chin, and mouth are wrapped with a knitted scarf, which some times goes up as high as the lower part of the ears; but the entire top of the head remains uncovered. This holds for unmarried women who have not yet donned the white linen turban of the Korean housewife. Once this is put on, it usually remains the constant sole head-covering, winter and summer.

The most marked difference between the Eastern and the Western mind, however, is undoubtedly the indirect method which characterizes Oriental thought process, and its expression. If there be any possible way (and I have yet to note a case where it is impossible for an Oriental (whereby a point to be discussed, or an end to be attained, may be approached in a roundabout manner, through another topic, or even through another person, then it is an Eastern axiom to approach it that way. To the American mind especially, direct even to bluntness at times, this is not only a stumbling-block, but a real hardship and trial.

Why a man who has come to tell you, for instance, that some one of your Christians has done something or other which needs your attention, should first consume one or more of the morning hours (which you hold so precious for study and desk work) talking about all possible variety of subjects, before getting to the one which is in the back of his head, and about which you know he has come to talk, is indeed an exasperating riddle to a poor Western missioner who has not been blessed by the Lord with more than his share of patience. And the hard part is: here is a man who may have something really important in regard to the work to communicate to you; if you interrupt him or approach him with a direct question to expedite the business, he is very likely to close up like a clam, and to withdraw without mentioning what he has in mind.

I have know an actual instance of this. A young missioner, intent on getting the language, along with attending to the other duties, arising in the little mission station, had settled himself at his desk after breakfast, and was just nicely "getting started", when the door opened (without a warning as usual), and in walked one of his Christians. "Another m o r n i n g knocked in the head!" said he to himself, as he arose with a smile to greet the venerable sire.

Filling his pipe, he sat down with the visitor, feeling sure that the latter must have something of consequence to say, as he had come from quite a distance. After a few general sentences; an exchange of courtesies, inquiries after the Christians of the man's locality, and questions as to how the crops out there were likely to turn out, the missioner felt that he had done pretty well, and that it would not be a mistake to get down to business. So he casually inquired, "Well, what's on your mind to-day?" His caller's face took on a blank, nonplussed expression; and when it finally dawned on him that the missioner had asked about what business he had come, he smiled ever so sweetly, and hastened to assure him that there was nothing special on his mind, he had come only to have a little visit with the Father. After a few more sentences, he withdrew. The priest returned to his desk puzzled; he felt sure the old fellow had had something to say to him which had not come out.

No permanent street address has this Chinese shoemaker. If your shoes are in need of repairs just step right up when you meet him in the street, and he'll serve you while you wait—with one shoe on, like the customer in the picture.

An hour or more passed by. The missioner went out into the yard to read his Breviary. He found the visitor of a short while before walking about restlessly, a short distance from the house. He gave the priest the usual salute, as though meeting him for the first time in quite a period, and so evidently wanted to talk, that the priest invited him to come in again, determined to hear him out this time.

So, he made no interruptions, just continued to be interested; and, though the dinner hour was considerably past when the interview closed, the old man had finally got around to the real object of his visit, and departed happy, a concrete example of the necessity of dealing with Easterners by Eastern methods.

There is at one of our missions a little orphan whose pagan name was Imbo (he has since become Antonius). He is about six years of age, and as bright as well could be. On a certain occasion, he heard that one of the Fathers had received a

LITTLE FLOWER'S ROSE GARDEN

Edited by FATHER JIM

CONDITIONS OF MEMBERSHIP

Hello, Everybody!

Isn't it just great to be back in school again? I suppose lots of you are wondering if Father Jim really does imagine it IS great to have to stay in school the best part of every day, and then have to do horrible old home-lessons at night, and all the other things that make us wish holiday time had never ceased at all. Of course I do think it's great. When I was a boy in school I didn't think that, of course, but now I know that school days are the best and happiest days. "Oh, yes, where did we hear that before, etc., etc." Well, anyway, I'm not going to have an argument about it, but I want to tell you all about some letters that came to me just as summer holidays began. They were written by pupils at Immaculate Conception Convent, Pembroke, Ont., following reception of membership certificates in the Rose Garden. They told me of the way they celebrated the Feast of the Canonization of the Little Flower. The Life of the Patroness of our Club had been read to them by their teacher, and each pupil in turn afterwards wrote a "Tribute" to the little Saint and composed a prayer; their writings were laid at the foot of the Saint's statue in the Chapel, and later on each pupil wrote about it to Father Jim and sent me a copy of their "tributes" and prayers.

I thought so much of these letters (each one of which I read in detail) that I felt there and then amply rewarded for any trouble the editing of this column occasions. Moreover, it pleased me so very much to notice the sincere and practical devotion these young Buds had developed towards the Patroness of the Missions. I am persuaded that this little missionary Club of boys and girls is fostering a similar devotion in many schools throughout Canada and Newfoundland. Interest on the part of the teachers (such as this Sister in Pembroke Convent, the Motherhouse of our Canadian Sisters in China) can go a long way towards making Foreign Missions part and parcel of the life of their young charges. Have your teacher tell you something about the Foreign Missions as your celebration of Mission Sunday on the 22nd of this month. And don't forget that October 3rd is the big Feast of Saint Therese of the Child Jesus.

Yours for the Missions,
FATHER JIM.

A Welcome Gift

"Enclosed please find money-order for ten dollars, the result of mite-box collection at St. Mary's Convent, Peterboro. Wishing the Seminary every success, and assuring you of a share in our prayers every day.

Yours sincerely,
THE PUPILS."

Glad to Get This Letter

"Dear Father Jim:

We began a Spiritual Bouquet for your Chinese Missions to send when we would ask to be accepted as Buds in your Rose Garden. One pupil, Alice Doucet, had drawn a rose which was chosen as an appropriate card on which to put our offerings. The next day this same pupil was taken ill with spinal meningitis. We then decided to make another Spiritual Offering for your Missions in order to obtain her cure. God willed otherwise, and He took her soul to be a bud in His own heavenly rose garden. Will you please ask your buds to pray for the repose of her soul.

We enjoy Father Stringer's contributions to the "China" and we are interested in the buds who try to find out who you are. If you do not soon put your name and picture in the "China" we shall imagine you to resemble Daddy Long Legs. How dreadful that would be! Shall we continue offering incense to an Unknown Father Jim, or like the Athenians, until some missionary

THE MONTH OF THE ROSARY

DO you know how October came to be called the Month of the Rosary? You may, but perhaps some other boys and girls who read these pages every month, do not.

On Sunday, October 7, 1571, a Catholic army, led by Don John of Austria, made up of Papal soldiers, Spaniards, Venetians, and Genoese, won a great victory from the Turks at a place called Lepanto, in Greece. Confraternities of the Rosary were, as the battle raged, offering countless numbers of Rosaries to Our Blessed Lady for the triumph of the Church and the cause of truth.

In thanksgiving, Pope Gregory XIII decreed that the first Sunday in October should be kept as the Feast of Our Lady of the Rosary. Later, Pope Leo XIII consecrated the whole month of October to Our Lady of the Rosary, and urged all Catholics to recite the Rosary every day.

The Rosary, as you know, is composed of fifteen decades, or one hundred and fifty Hail Marys and fifteen Our Fathers. Boys and girls are usually satisfied with the "beads", or the shorter rosary of five decades.

The custom of counting prayers on strings or chains is so very old that we cannot find out when it really began. Indeed, the common English word "bead" really means prayer. Instead of our Rosaries being called beads, because they are made of little round things strung on a string or chain, the little round things are called beads, because they were first so strung together to count prayers.

The French sometimes call the Rosary a "Crown", and the Germans called it a "Wreath of Roses". This is really what the Rosary is — a wreath, or crown, of prayers, fragrant and beautiful as roses, offered to our Mother in Heaven.

It takes only a few minutes to recite Rosary or beads. If you will try to remember, you can do so every day. Make a special time for yourself. At bed time, in the morning, or just after lunch, whatever time is most convenient, make a habit of saying your beads. Give these few minutes to honor the Mother of Our Redeemer, lovingly, generously. She is our Mother too, and will not be outdone in generosity.

comes to make you known to your buds whom you keep in the darkness of ignorance?

We ask God to grant you, dear Father, and the Chinese Missions, every success, and to your buds goodness and success in their school work. Will you remember us for these intentions in some of your Masses?

Yours respectfully,
Pupils of Grades 8, 9 and 10,
Rustico Convent, P.E.I."

The spiritual bouquet sent by these pupils was one of the most beautifully done I have ever seen; each rose petal and leaf was inscribed with the record of some spiritual act, and in the centre of the rose was a tiny little picture of our Little Flower. It is scarcely necessary to inform these Buds in Rustico that I have often remembered them in my masses, and especially the soul of their dear deceased companion.

Real Little Angels

"Dear Father Jim:

For a long time we have been interested in your Rose Garden, so today we are sending our names as Rosebuds of the Little Flower. We are members of the Guardian Angels' Sodality at St. Ann's Academy, Victoria, B.C., and from our fees we are sending $3 as a small offering to this cause of the Foreign Missions in China. We shall say every day the prayer for the conversion of China, and we hope that some day the many Chinese here in Victoria will have a priest to teach them about Our Lord as Father Sharkey is doing in Vancouver. Very sincerely yours, the Members of the Guardian Angels' Sodality."

Now, who would blame Father Jim for wishing to get letters, when they contain such wonderful missionary enthusiasm as that? The 55 new Buds from St. Ann's Academy are pleasing additions to our Western forces. No doubt these young Sodalists will be present at their Cathedral this month when Victoria will see its first foreign mission priest ordained by Bishop Murray.

Thirty-four new members have come to us from Senior III. Class, St. Joseph's Girls' School, Ottawa. Welcome, and thanks for your fine spiritual bouquet, girls.

Long Letter Wanted

"Dear Father Jim:

Knowing how busy you are I will not expect a very prompt answer, but when you do write please let it be a long letter. I love my certificate and badge very much. I'll not forget you and the missionaries in my daily prayers. Agnes O'Flaherty, 511 Magdalen St., Montreal."

Agnes, if I did what I would like to do all the Buds who write me would get a long letter in reply, but that is out of the question. I remember you all in Holy Mass every day, and in that way I thank the Buds for their mission interest.

Not To Be Left Out

June K. Durante, Wilmot Valley, P.E.I., thinks she couldn't remain just a reader of our club news without joining up herself, so we have another Bud asking for correspondents.

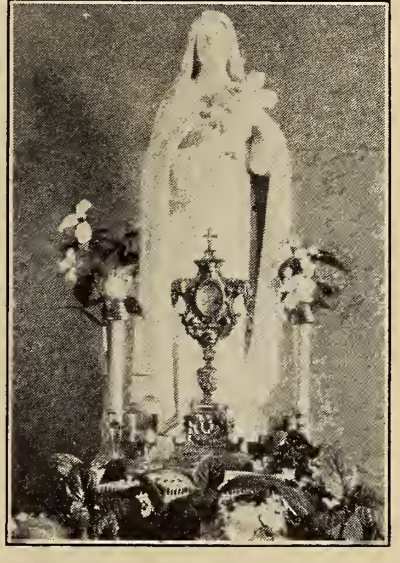
Margaret Doyle, 18 Shannon St., Toronto, had a birthday on July 20th, and is 11 years old. She has two brothers and one sister, goes to school at St. David's, Toronto, and wants to have letters from pen-pals of her own age.

Four Sisters

"Dear Father Jim:

My sister Marie became a Bud not long ago. She has interested me in praying for those courageous priests and nuns who risk their lives to save souls in China, so I want to join your Club, too. My other two sisters, Rita and Eleanor, know the conditions for becoming members and they want a certificate and badge also. We would all be delighted if some other Buds wrote to us. Our address is 140 Queen St., Kingston, Ont."

This letter is from Sheila Lentz. I bet there's a scramble for "China" when it arrives in a house with four Buds present. Here's hoping the postman will have some mail for 140 Queen St., very soon.



Going to Enlist Others

A little donation to help the missions came from Jeanette Yelle when she asked to become a member of our Club, and she says she is going to try to have others join at her school, St. Alphonsus', at Edmonton, Alta. Jeanette lives at 11923 82nd St., Edmonton.

Three Pals

Geraldine Eno, Anita Fortier, and Mayme Collison attend Sacred Heart School, Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., and they wrote a nice little letter when joining our Club. The "Soo" has given us lots of support, and we are thankful.

Dorothy White, 124 Oak St., London, Ont., is just eight years old, but she surely writes a neat little letter.

The Feast of our Patroness is celebrated on October 3rd. Picture above shows statue of Little Flower in our Seminary chapel decorated for the Feast. The reliquary shown before the statue contains relics of the Saint, piece of bone, hair and garment. It was a gift to the Seminary in 1927 from Archbishop O'Brien of Peterboro.

She reads the letters of our Rose Garden all the time. I hope your brother George got those Chinese stamps all right, Dorothy.

Not Going to be Stingy

"Dear Father Jim:

This is my first letter to you since I joined your Club, but it is not going to be the last. I am very proud of my badge and certificate. Margaret Gerrier, one of my school chums, is getting loads of letters from pen-pals and I believe I will be a little jealous if some do not write me. I have pen, ink, envelopes, and lots of writing paper, and I will not be stingy with them. I would like to get a letter from Mary King. Sincerely, Doreen Gillis, Box 595, Summerside, P.E.I."

I have an idea that Doreen is going to need lots of writing paper from now on.

A Friend of "China"

"I wish to join your Rose Garden. I am 15 years old. I think 'China' has been coming to our house since it was first printed. Bernardette McCaffrey, Luskville, Que."

Bernardette, I feel like saying something to you for not having become a Bud long ago.

A good old Irish name has Mary Burke, 1 Cottage Lane, Glace Bay, N.S. Mary is 11, goes to St. Anne's School, is a Handmaid of the Blessed Sacrament, saves stamps for the Missions, says three Hail Mary's for the missionaries every night, and she wants her name in the "letters wanted" column.

Here's an Idea

If Sister Dolorita doesn't read this, things will be all right for Marie Donovan. Marie sent me a lovely letter which she tells me was written during arithmetic class—but Marie had all her sums finished, and said lots of nice things about her teacher, anyway, so all's well. And I won't give Marie's address, for there may be several Sisters Dolorita and several Marie Donovans, and there won't be any scoldings due anybody.

Margaret Lucas, 44 Locke St. N., Hamilton, Ont., was encouraged to become a Bud when she saw the nice certificates and badges received by some pupils in other classrooms. Thanks for the compliment to our Club, too, Margaret. Agnes Lucas, her sister, followed her good example.

A Long Walk to School

"I wish to join the Little Flower's Rose Garden. I am a girl eight years of age. I have a mile and a half to go to school. I can go to Mt. St. Patrick's Church but attend Adamston Public School. Our teacher teaches us catechism. The games we play at school are Fox and Goose, Hide and Seek, Tag, Chicken and Hawk, and Blind Man's Buff. The next time I write I will send a picture of myself. Your little friend, Mary Lillian Gough, R.R. 1, Admaston, Ont."

Don't forget that picture, Mary. I hope there will be many others send me their pictures, too."

SUPERSTITIONS OF PAGANISM.

brations in honor of some one's birthday, red paper is used. New Year Greetings are written on red paper. But one sees paper at its best on the Feast of Lanterns. Birds, beasts, reptiles—and in this age of progress, airplanes; umbrellas, houses—in a word everything possible is made in paper for this big feast, and made, too, in the form of a lantern, lighted within by a candle. It is really a beautiful sight, and unfortunately I have seen it but once; for it is also an insight into Chinese character.

Yet even such a material thing as paper cannot escape the blight of superstition. The next life, in the opinion of many, is somewhat along the same plan as this present one. Clothing, food, money and a place to live in are all considered necessary in the life to come. And hence paper images of these articles are made and sent to the nether world by burning them—thus is the essence or substance of the things transported thither. But this practice has an origin of a quite different character.

Years and years ago, before Columbus and his Faith gave us the New World, a certain Chinese merchant found himself overstocked with paper. Being an ingenious fellow he cast about for ways and means of ridding himself of his surplus in a profitable manner. Together with his good wife they arrived at a possible solution; one, at least, which would be worth a trial. A coffin was made, and a small hole made in it. Then the merchant took "sick" and as quickly as he decently could, "expired". Amid much lamentation and crying he was laid away and the proper ceremonies performed. The neighbors who came to condole the poor widow were loud in their protestations of sympathy, but before long they noticed that she was carrying on in a rather strange manner. She was burning pieces of paper. Now that may have been a very good way of getting rid of too much paper, but to the thrifty neighbors there were many other and useful purposes to which it could be put. "But why are you doing so?" someone finally asked. She seemed reluctant to answer: but such innovations could not go unexplained. Then the "secret" came out. For three days she was to burn paper and the third day her husband would arise from the dead. (One might here wonder whether or no there is a devil-inspired parody in this.) The townsfolk must have watched such a proceeding with awe and growing excitement; but what their reactions were on the third day would be impossible to describe—for the "dead" man "arose".

Such is the reputed origin of the paper-burning superstitions of today. I suppose that the next time the stunt was tried the dead stayed dead because he really was dead. And gradually, or all at once, the idea came about that if he wouldn't come back from the dead he might want to use some few things if they could be gotten to him. And so today they burn the representations, and the souls of the nether world are grateful; at any rate one feels as though one has done a duty in a creditable manner—which is no small accomplishment.

Prayer to Christ

By Father Lynk, S.V.D.

Eternal Christ, who art God's light,
Pray, let me be Thy little lamp,
To light the path for pilgrim's feet
In life's night, dreary, dark and damp.

O Christ, who art God's melody,
May I not be Thy little song,
Unceasingly from dawn to dusk
To sound for Thee all my life long?

O Christ, who art God's gardener,
Pray, let me be Thy little field,
That under Thy benignant care
A hundredfold for Thee may yield!

O Christ, who art God's only Son,
May I not be Thy little child,
To play before Thy holy face
With heart serene and undefiled?

O Christ, who art the living God,
Pray, let me be these little things,
That make me great in Thy dear eyes,
Because Thou art the King of kings.

box of candy from America; and here is the dialogue which took place when he came into the house looking for a piece of candy. Remember that the lad's sole end was to procure a piece of candy.

Imbo enters, salutes the Father in his best form, and gazes wistfully about, looking for an "idea-starter" among the objects in the room.

"Father, won't you buy me a clock?"

"What do you want with a clock?"

"Then, get me a Breviary like yours?"

"Why, what good would it do you?"

"Buy me a talking-machine?"

"No!"

"Buy me a stove, won't you?"

"No!"

"Then, a tobacco pipe?"

"You're too small to smoke."

"Well, then, Father, please give me some candy?"

You can imagine the mirth when we discovered what the lad was actually after. We said between chuckles to one another afterwards, "They surely begin at an early age over here to make a science of indirect approach!" — Rev. Father Cleary, in "The Field Afar".

WHAT PRICE NEO-PAGANISM?

Magnificent contrast, you exclaim. But, of course, it couldn't be true. Do you think so? Then read Incident No. 4. Once More the Coast of Chekiang.

For over twenty hours Fr. Tai of Haimen and a pagan boatman have been clinging to the bottom of a boat overturned by a typhoon. There is no sign of rescue. The boatman, benumbed by the cold, can hold on no longer and slips quietly into the China sea. Fr. Tai is alone, hope almost gone. He feels that he cannot last much longer when suddenly a Chinese junk approaches. A small boat puts off to approach the waterlogged sampan, and from a distance of about ten feet the boatman makes his demands. He asks an exorbitant sum and Fr. Tai can only capitulate. Being Chinese, he knows full well just what would follow his refusal.

We have several other true stories, such as those of flood time, when people stand on the bank salvaging logs and boards and letting drowning children pass downstream, but this article is insufferably long. This is paganism. That is pagan regard for the sacredness of human life.

Respect for the Dignity of Womanhood.

Here we can do little more than state the obvious fact that Christianity alone enthroned woman upon the pedestal she occupies in Christian lands. Show me one pagan land today where woman is much better than a slave. Need we speak of India with its child marriages and its Suttee, or burning of widows upon their husband's funeral pyres? Egypt of old dominated by the shameless Isis! Babylon, Greece and Rome with Ishtar and Ariadne and Venus, glorified symbols of carnal lust! It was from out this mire that Christianity rescued womanhood.

Incident No. 5. Sinking of the Titanic.

WOMEN AND CHILDREN FIRST! Whence that chivalry and gallantry of the sea which sends brave men to their doom that the weak and helpless may live? The Christian world still thinks with shame of the one coward who escaped dressed as a woman.

Incident No. 6. Any 100% Chinese Shipwreck.

Men first, last and always. A mad scramble in which the fittest will survive and in which women may look out for themselves. Were there space we could tell you stories.

Yet in Christian lands there are some women for whom the Christian heritage has been tried and found wanting, some who find a growing attraction for the mysticism of the East. Mysticism it may be, indeed, when viewed from the shores of America. But we have a somewhat closer perspective over here, and take our word for it that there is nothing in the least "mystic" about the lives of three foreign women whom we know to be living among the mountains of Chekiang. They have sought, and found, the mysticism of the East, and whenever one of them gets as far as the Convent at ——— it is a disillusioned and heartbroken creature who pours her story into the ears of the kindly sisters. One now wiser but sadder young French lady was married some years ago, in Paris, with great éclat, to a Chinese whose father was an Admiral. It was a swell affair, attended by some of the "very best people". Upon arrival in China she discovered that there had been some slight mistake; a few slight mistakes. First of all his father wasn't an Admiral, that is, not exactly. He owned a sampan, and there are only about 2,000 sampans on our little river alone. He also had another wife, or two, in China.

Another French lady is even now selling cakes in a small Chinese village near here. She, too, has found her mysticism, but it turned out to be a far cry from the Rue de Paix. And there are probably many more aspiring young mystics in Christian lands whose souls are cramped by the repressions and inhibitions of a narrow-minded Christianity. Not at all unlikely since Brahminism and Buddism became the vogue with some of the high-minded descendants of the fifty thousand who came over on the Mayflower and since bejewelled Rajahs became the object of the American maiden's prayer. Over here, unfortunately, we are a little short on Rajahs, but the supply of "Admirals" is virtually inexhaustible. So to those spiritual-minded young eagles who pine in the Christian cage we might say, "Go East, young woman, go East". It isn't really our personal funeral if you live and learn when hope has fled.

Regard for the sanctity of human life and reverence for womanhood are but two of the precious gifts of our Christian heritage which make society safe even for those who would fain encompass its downfall. As long as they are in Christian surroundings they enjoy a sort of a senatorial immunity from attack by their very own forces of destruction. It is still comparatively safe for Mrs. Neo-pagan to walk down the boulevard, and if little Willie Atheist falls in the well the average passer-by will at least make an attempt to fish him out. And thanks to the narrow-minded stubbornness of die-hard Christianity, even dear doddering old Grandpa may spend an evening on his verandah—at peace with the world—without the haunting dread of being impounded by the dog catcher and "delivered" to the nearest lethal chamber. Christianity will continue to save the world because "the Gates of Hell shall not prevail", but if the Frankenstein monster of Neo-paganism were ever to pierce civilization's first and only line of defence it would be rather pathetic to see to what extent the new school's theories of a vicarious sort of respectability would avail to save them in the tooth and claw jungle free-for-all that would ensue.

Monseigneur Hubert Otto, of the Scheut Belgian missions, recently celebrated on the one and same day the 60th anniversary of his ordination and the 57th anniversary of his arrival in China. Monseigneur Hubert Otto was ordained priest at St. Jean de Latran, at Rome, in 1873, by Cardinal Patrizzi. Three years later he arrived in China, and for 57 years he has not left the Mongolian steppes. He was nominated Apostolic Vicar of Kiangsu in 1890, which post he resigned in 1918. Monseigneur Hubert Otto is now 83 years of age, and continues to instruct neophytes for many hours every day.

NONSENSE

Gunn, the big-game hunter, was telling his stay-at-home wife all about his encounter with the Bengal tiger, and how he had finally shot it.

"Yes," he wound up, "it was a case of the tiger or myself."

She looked up at him proudly. "I'm so glad it was the tiger," she sweetly replied, "otherwise we wouldn't have had this lovely rug."

"They tell me your engagement is broken."

"Yes, and Bill behaved abominably."

"But I thought you broke it yourself?"

"So I did, but he made absolutely no fuss about it."

Old Colored Mammy—"Ah wants a ticket fo' Florence."

Ticket Agents (after ten minues of weary thumbing over railroad guides) —"Where is Florence, Madam?"

Old Colored Mammy—"Settin' over dar on de bench, suh."

Mrs. Brown (concluding argument with neighbor): "Every time I look at you, Mrs. Smith, I feel I'm doin' the Government out of entertainment tax."

"Now," said the teacher, "which boy can name five things that contain milk?"

"I can," shouted a freckle-faced youngster. "Butter and cheese, an' ice cream an' two cows."

"Mrs. Upton's pet dog has been run over; she'll be heartbroken."

"Don't tell her abruptly."

"No. I'll begin by saying it's her husband."

Barber: "Haven't I shaved you before, sir?"

Customer: "No, I got that scar in France."

Heck: "In England to 'take orders' means to enter the church."

Peck: "It's slightly different over here—you enter the church, get married and then take orders."

Country Cousin (after prolonged inspection of building operations)— "I don't see the sense of putting statues on the top of your buildings."

Friend — "Statues? Those aren't statues. They're bricklayers."

"McTavish is an excellent judge of whiskey, isn't he?"

"Aye, a gran' judge—an' a merciless executioner!"

Dora had just returned from Sunday school, where she had been for the first time.

"What did my little daughter learn this morning?" asked her father.

"That I am a child of Satan," was the beaming reply.

Little Willie—"The teacher says the world is round. If I wanted to go east I could get there by going west, then, couldn't I?

His Father—"Yes, my son. You'll be a taxi driver when you grow up."

In a quiet country town a commercial traveller entered the general store. Going through to the parlor at the back, he came upon the proprietor and a friend engaged in a game of checkers.

"Mr. Jones," he said, "there are two customers in the shop."

Jones did not raise his eyes from the board. He merely nodded and whispered: "That's all right. Keep quiet and they'll go away again."

Hungry and tired after his long walk, Weary Willie at last came to a wayside cottage.

"Please, ma'am," he said to the kindly woman who came in answer to his knock, "could you spare me an old coat?"

The cottager looked down at the tramp's garments.

"But, my good man," she said, in tones of deep surprise, "the one you are wearing is nearly new."

"I know, ma'am," said Willie, despairingly. "It's this coat that's ruining my profession.

"My dear, listen to this and tell me what you make of it!" exclaimed the elderly English woman to her husband, on her first visit to the States. She held the menu almost at arms length, and spoke in a tone of horror. "'Baked Indian pudding!' Can it be possible in a civilized country?"

The objector to prohibition spoke bitterly. "Water has killed more people than liquor ever did."

"You are raving," declared the teetotaler. "How do you make that out?"

"Well, to begin with, there was the Flood."

"Didn't you ever contemplate matrimony?"

"Yes, boy; but always from a safe distance!"

Pat was buying a clock.

"This," said the persuasive assistant, "is an eight-day clock."

Pat scratched his head in wonderment.

"What be an eight-day clock, mister?" he asked.

"One that will go for eight days without needing winding," explained the assistant.

"Begorrah," smiled the Irishman, "how long would it go if you wound it?"

Terence—"'Tis a fine lad ye have here. A magnificent head and noble features. Could ye lend me a couple of dollars?"

Pat—"I could not. 'Tis my wife's child by her first husband."

Customer: "Are these shoes worth repairing?"

Shoemaker: "Oh, yes; I can put new soles and heels on them, and also new uppers. The laces seem to be all right."

Lady Visitor to Marine Sentry: "How many sailors work in the navy yard?"

Sentry: "Oh, something like a third of them, I suppose."

"Yes, our new cook isn't bad; but one thing against her is she always boils eggs too hard."

"You're lucky. We can't get our cook to stay as long as that."

Minister: "I hear, Paddy, they've gone dry in the village where your brother lives."

Paddy: "Dry, mon! They're parched. I've just had a letter from Mike, an' the postage stamp was stuck on with a pin."

"I suppose you know the Millers are moving?"

"Why, they've only been here six months. People were just getting to know them."

"Yes. That's why."

"I think Uncle Jack is going to take us for a drive."

"You'd better go upstairs and wash your face."

Willie: "Hadn't we better find out for sure, mother?"

CHARITY TO THE MISSIONS

IT IS reasonable to suppose that many of our readers were surprised at our decision early in the summer to add to our accommodations at the Seminary. Knowing only too well the difficulties that lay in the way of raising sufficient revenue for the purpose, the natural question to be asked was: "How do they expect to pay for it?" To be candid about the matter, we had nothing to encourage us as to the future beyond the remembrance of the dealings of Divine Providence with our work in the past. But that encouragement was sufficient. The success of our missionary endeavours during the past fifteen years has clearly indicated the favour of God. We know that we are engaged in a work that was so dear to our Divine Saviour as to merit His last thought on earth, for His last consuming care was for the propagation and spread of that Gospel which He had come on earth to make known to man. Judged by merely human standards, we have been unwise in venturing into debt at a time of universal economic crisis, but our venturing has not been motivated by any merely human considerations. What we have done is for a spiritual purpose, nothing more nor less than the spreading of Christ's Kingdom on earth by the training of young apostles who will dedicate their lives to that end in China.

ALREADY we have had consoling evidences that our trust in Providence is being rewarded. Here are a few instances:

(1) Let us quote a letter from a benefactor. "Enclosed please find cheque for five hundred dollars to be divided as follows: twenty-five dollars for each of twelve Burses, and two hundred dollars for your Building Fund. I hope this little donation will lighten your worries even a wee bit. Not being rich in this world's goods, I want to make use of what I have to do good in this way while I am living."

(2) Francis J. Murphy, of Toronto, has handed us five thousand dollars to establish a burse, a gift which represents years of careful savings.

(3) From the estate of a deceased friend, whose name we do not even know, comes a bequest of five thousand dollars to aid our Burse Fund.

IT IS well to consider the significance of the above contributions. A lady has some hundreds of dollars over and above what she deems necessary for her own comfortable subsistence, and she is mindful of the tremendous amount of good she can do by aiding in the work of educating priests and providing a home for them during their period of training. She has rendered an important service to her Church in helping to spread the Word of God, and we cannot question the fact that she has earned for herself the blessings of the Almighty.
